Your right Mind has made your good for you in place of your not having yet made it. Okay?

He would establish His bright teaching so firmly in your mind that no dark lessons of guilt can abide in what He has established as holy by His Presence.

What you divinely Are have established as holy by your presence.

Thank God that He is there and works through you. And all His works are yours. He offers you a miracle with every one you let Him do through you.

So, you know what? It would be a good idea for all of you to see yourselves as miracle workers. You're here to be the presence of a sudden shift of perception in which ignorance is no longer governing. So that you might share it with your brothers and sisters, because they have a need not to be frightened. And they have a need not to be fooled into thinking that there's actually an awful future that they have to be afraid of and protect themselves against, by being so scared that they can't see clearly, so scared that there isn't enough peace of mind for the Love of God to register with them or their capacity to love their brother and sister to register with them. And so, they're distracted from their fulfilling function.

Remember . . .

He offers you a miracle with every one you let Him do through you.

"Who on earth," you might say, "could be in their right Mind under the circumstances? You ask too much of me. You are being unreasonable."

No, I am not. You are capable, you've just forgotten it. And you need to be willing to stand like a lead weight right where you are without one iota of fear to start you fleeing from the danger, from the imagined or supposed danger, without enough gumption to engage in fearful thoughts, fearful imaginations, awful prognostications, all of which prove to you that you're not only vulnerable but you will be destroyed.

I promise you, one year from now, two years from now, you're still gonna be standing there. The end will not have come. And you will have either gone through those twelve or twenty-four months acting like an idiot and suffering from chaos because you didn't choose for your peace, or you'll say, "Well, wait a minute, if this isn't the end and if I'm still going to be here twenty-four months from now and if all my capacities and all the intelligence I have isn't going anywhere, I will still be the same capable presence that I've been for the last ten years, or however long that I have attributed my present success to.

"In other words, no matter what apparent drama goes on, my capable self is going to be unchanged. And therefore, I don't have to be afraid for my existence and I don't have to be afraid for my safety. All I have to do is be willing to look through my peace at whatever the circumstances are that present themselves to me, so that I might listen for the intelligent response that will bless my brother and it will bless me. And that's what I choose to devote myself to, because that's my Birthright and that's my function.

"My Function is to be able to look at whatever seems to be going on and remember God there, remember the truth there, experience the truth there. And be able to express and embody It. That's my function. I really don't have to indulge in anything else.

[Chuckle] "And you know what? If the pundits want to use me as their subject and they want to suppose what might be the outcome of what they determine to be foolishness, let them. They're not God. And if they're not willing to look for the truth, and would rather stay in the vagueness of suppositions, what they're doing isn't worthy of my attention and I refuse to give it to them."

How are you going to use your mind this week? Are you going to give your attention to that which is unworthy of it? Are you going to let others think for you? Are you going to let them jump-start your thinking, or are you going to use this as a truly wonderful occasion to practice what we've been talking about and just maybe, experience a sudden shift of perception, a miracle—a transformation—a transition into being Awake. Don't be afraid of this time. Use it for all it's worth to be intelligent.

And I look forward to being with you next week, because you know what? No matter what dire thing might happen, you'll still be there. And I'll still be here. And we'll still meet. No matter what happens, it can't change that. That's how safe and secure everything is.

Hang in there in your peace.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 19th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, at the bottom line, we've been talking about the simplicity of Waking up, the simplicity of coming back into your right Mind. And tonight isn't going to be any different. In fact, it might even seem a little meaningless, what we're going to be talking about, because at the bottom line, there really is nothing dynamic about Awakening. It really is a simple matter of choosing for your peace. It really is a simple matter of being willing to withdraw your attention from the stimulation, the stimulation not that the world provides, but the stimulation that other people provide about the world.

"Oh-h . . . the world's going to hell in a hand-basket!"

[chuckle] Well, hey, the simplicity of it is, that the hand-basket that the world is going to hell in, is nothing but your careless mind. It's nothing but your mind not being used for the purpose of peace—not being used for the purpose of expressing, extending intelligence, harmony, love, peace.

Oh, but it makes it sound very complicated . . . "The world out there is going to hell in a hand-basket!" [chuckles] Funny little saying, isn't it. But if you take it at its apparent face value, it must be alarming. It must be worth getting upset about. And I'll tell you something: If it's worth getting upset about, then coming back into your right Mind won't be able to happen.

So, you really have to come down to brass tacks and ask yourself how important is it to you to Wake up? Is it more or less important than the excitement of getting upset?

Remember that the Holy Spirit is only limited by the degree of attention you bring to It. And if you don't bring your attention to the Holy Spirit, you will not hear the Holy Spirit. And because the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, it is your right Mind that you won't hear. And it's your right Mind that you won't experience, all for the cheap thrill of a little bit of excitement about, "The world going to hell in a hand-basket."

The simple fact is and always has been, that the world will stop looking like it's going to hell in a hand-basket if you choose to use your mind for the purpose it was intended. And the purpose for which your mind was intended was to be that place of attention or that capacity of attention being given to Creation. In other words, to see Creation and engage in glorifying God, standing in utter awe of the magnificence of perfection—a perfection that is nothing more nor less than the extension of you—because you are God Presencing Himself/Herself right where you are. And there is no fragmentation in it—in that relationship. It is absolutely One. It is absolutely indivisible.

I know. You don't think that your function is that utterly simple, that you have the capacity to give your attention to and recognize the divinity of Creation right where you are. And that it is not your function to look at an interpretation of Creation as though the infinity of Creation is nothing but a humongous "Saturday Night Live" broadcast to be amused at, stimulated by.

It's much more than that. And yet the means of having the experience of it is insultingly simple. And I say insultingly simple because in order to experience it, you have to be willing to abandon a capacity you think you have to act on your own, to be an independent authorizer, an independent thinker, who through the creative use of his capacity to think, can make things happen in the world.

But you know what? You don't have to do that. You really don't have to do that in order to have the ultimate. It's absolutely unnecessary for any of you to exercise authority of any kind in order for you, well, for lack of better words, to sit at the right Hand of God. In other words, be a co-operator with God—to be that Presence of Mind which is perfectly capable of experiencing all of Reality, all of Creation exactly as God is experiencing it. And to be free of sin, sickness and death, free of fear, free of everything that connotes the human condition, which all of you would like to overcome.

Let's go into the book. And let's remember as we go through this tonight, that although it seems simple and un-stimulating, it is utterly profound. It's the answer to the human condition.

God's Son will ALWAYS be indivisible. As we are held as one in God, so do we learn as one in Him. God's Teacher . . .¹

Now, who's God's Teacher? The Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

God's Teacher is as like to His Creator as is His Son, . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind is as like to God—Its Creator—as are you. You see? But as long as you're choosing to have a different definition of everything, that which is nothing more than your right Mind seems to not be yours and seems not to be with you and seems to be different from you. But as I've said before, it's your divinity held in trust while you dally with being a private authorizer—an ego. Nevertheless, . .

God's Teacher . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . is as like to His Creator as is His Son, . .

. . . God's Son—you . . .

. . . and through His Teacher does God proclaim His Oneness AND His Son's.

Through the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—the truth about you is revealed to you. And what more whole-izing, what more integrated event could occur than for that which is nothing more than your right Mind to reveal the truth about you, to you, so that you might remember and embrace your right Mind as your only Mind and your only perspective. You see, it's like saying God uses the fact that you and the Holy Spirit—you and your right Mind—are one as the basis for causing your Oneness to register with you. There couldn't be a more integrated means of bringing you back into the experience of unity.

Again, because it's important:

God's Teacher is as like to His Creator as is His Son, and through His Teacher does God proclaim His Oneness AND His Son's. Listen in silence, and do not raise your voice against Him.

Him . . . Whom? Your Teacher. Don't raise your voice against Him? It means, don't employ the arrogance that it takes to say, "You'd rather see it your way," or to say, "Here's the way it is," or "Here's the definition of things."

Listen in silence, and do not raise your voice against Him.

Do not assert yourself in place of your capacity to be out from your right Mind. Don't assert yourself in place of being the expression of Sanity.

Listen in silence, and do not raise your voice against Him. For He teaches the miracle of oneness, . .

And when you're speaking against Him, when you're speaking for yourself, you're speaking for division. Your act is an act of independence, of differentness.

He teaches the miracle of oneness, and before His lesson division disappears.

You remember your right Mind, it becomes illuminated to you. And when you're not resisting it, it fills you, it embraces you, it reminds you of what you wholly Are in such a way that you never want to let go of it again.

He teaches . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . the miracle of oneness, and before His lesson division disappears. Teach like Him here, and you will remember that you have ALWAYS created like your Father.

What does that mean, "Teach like Him here"? Well, if you dare to be silent and don't speak against Him, don't speak over Him, you will find yourself knowing things and you will find yourself impelled to express that which harmonizes, that which pacifies, that which whole-izes.

. . . and you will remember that you have ALWAYS created like your Father. The miracle of creation has never ceased, having the holy stamp of immortality upon it.

And you, participating in the miracle of creation, by being that capacity of attentiveness to see and recognize the Movement of God and acknowledge it for what it is, in Joy.

The miracle of creation has never ceased, having the holy stamp of immortality upon it.

And if your capacity to recognize the Movement of Creation for what it is, is a capacity to recognize that which is immortal, then you, that which is recognizing it, must be immortal too. And that will be part of what dawns on you in the realization of what you Are in the Awakening process.

This is the Will of God for all creation, and all creation joins in willing this.

But I'll tell you, as long as you are enjoying believing that you have some sort of private, personal authority that you can exercise and demonstrate that you're an authorizer, then you are not joining in willing what God wills, and you're speaking against the Holy Spirit.

And the answer is to, "Stop!" It's just that simple. The answer is to, "Stop!"

Those who remember always that they know nothing, but who have become willing to learn EVERYTHING, will learn it. But whenever they trust themselves, they will NOT learn.

You see, utter simplicity. It doesn't say anything about, "Well if you'll think the right thoughts, and if you'll think the right thoughts in a particular order, and if you will burn incense as you do this, and if, as you're doing this, friends who have learned exactly the specific forms of dance that are necessary, if they will dance around you while you're doing this, you will Wake up—or a miracle will happen."

No, it's far simpler than that. It's interesting to do those kinds of complicated [dramatic voice] "spiritual productions," but it's unnecessary and useless and it's a distraction.

Those who remember always that they know nothing, but who have become willing to learn EVERYTHING, will learn it. But whenever they trust themselves, they will NOT learn. They have destroyed their motivation for learning by thinking they ALREADY know.

Now, I'm going to give you a simple example here. When Sunday night rolls around and it's time for the Gathering here, Paul suddenly becomes very devoted to listening. He knows he can't fake it. He doesn't want to fake it. He has to be able to hear me, and so he listens impeccably.

But when the meeting is over, he figures that he can grab a sandwich or get a cup of coffee or, you know, visit with those who are attending. And he can do that quite well by himself. And so, he abandons the devotion, the commitment to being with me, which is the equivalent of being with his right Mind. And this is his learning, not to do that. And it's everyone else's learning.

And the interesting thing is that as the week goes by, even though he speaks with me frequently, but not at any great length at any one time, he finds himself experiencing fear. He finds himself experiencing anxiety. It is as though he picks up on “the world going to hell in a hand-basket,” even if he’s not watching the television.

You see, if he or you choose to operate independently—disconnected from one’s right Mind—one inevitably feels fear and anxiety and sees himself in a thing called “a world” that may or may not be going to hell in a hand-basket.

Now . . .

. . . whenever they trust themselves, they will NOT learn.

Whenever Paul relies upon himself, he will not learn.

They have . . .

. . . he has . . .

. . . destroyed their motivation . . .

. . . destroyed his motivation . . .

. . . for learning by thinking they ALREADY know.

. . . by thinking he already knows.

The sad thing is, for Paul and for everyone else, that because it feels so normal to think for one’s self, and because the fullness of being in one’s right Mind is a vague memory, it doesn’t feel like there’s any significant loss or deficiency being experienced by virtue of continuing to do a few things by yourself—on your own, the way you know how to do them. And yet, it’s the loss of being Sane, it’s the loss of being Awake.

Let’s put it this way, it’s the loss of regaining your Sanity, of coming back into your right Mind and experiencing the awesomeness that your sort of demented mind or mentality, is minimizing to the point where it seems problematic instead of awesome.

They have destroyed their motivation for learning by thinking they ALREADY know.

Now, on Sunday night, as I said, Paul makes a commitment and he can hear me. And during the week when he’s not listening to me consistently and he asks me a question, there are times when he cannot hear me. And that’s a little distressing, because he does rely on our communion and the blessing that comes from it.

Now, when you destroy the motivation for your learning by thinking that you already know, you seem to make it impossible for you to actually have the experience of knowing, even though you can't actually destroy that capacity.

What is unfortunate is that you begin to believe that you don't have the capacity and you stop trying. And most of you who, up to this point, have never really thought in terms of listening within for that which is nothing more than your right Mind, which, surprise, surprise to you is nothing less than the Holy Spirit.

You are almost automatically caught in a great sense of the impossibility of that—which makes it difficult for you to bring any degree of commitment to the process of listening. You see. And it's that inertia that has to be overcome.

It's overcome by persistence, by persistence on your part in choosing for your peace, persistence no matter what is going on "in the world." Persisting in choosing for your peace because it's available to you always, it is never absent from you. And when you persist in your choice for your peace and you meditate or you use whatever technique works for you to get into your peace, you will find your peace right in the middle of chaos. And in that peace, that which diminishes the chaos can emerge and will emerge. But you've got to not give up, no matter whether the world seems to be going to "hell in a hand-basket" or not.

Think not you understand anything until you pass the test of perfect peace, for peace and understanding go together, and never can be found alone. Each brings the other WITH it, for it is the law of God they be not separate. They are cause and effect, each to the other, so where one is absent the other CANNOT be.

. . . peace and understanding . . .

Understanding may seem difficult to achieve by a direct act. But peace you can achieve by a direct act of meditation—of becoming still. So, enjoy that avenue. Take advantage of it.

Only those who see they cannot know UNLESS the effects of understanding are with them can really learn at all.

Why? Because, if you have the truth and no result, you don't have the truth. If you have truth and you have the result of truth, you have truth. And if the manifestation of truth is present, it means that the understanding is present and learning can occur.

Again . . .

Only those who see they cannot know UNLESS the effects of understanding are with them can really learn at all.

And the ones who see that can learn, because they're bringing their attention to where the learning can occur. They are not assuming that they know and therefore have nothing to learn.

Again . . .

Only those who see they cannot know UNLESS the effects of understanding are with them can really learn at all. And for this, it must be peace they WANT, and nothing else. Whenever you think YOU know, peace will depart from you because you have abandoned the Teacher of Peace.

It's getting a little monotonous isn't it?

Whenever you think YOU know, peace will depart from you because you have abandoned the Teacher of Peace.

You see. "I know it all by myself." Paul knows how to get a sandwich after the meeting. Paul knows how to talk with the people that are there, all by himself. But peace does depart from him, because he's abandoned the Teacher of Peace. He's abandoned the knowing that comes from joining with one who is Awake, whether it's his right Mind or whether it's me. You see.

Whenever you fully realize that you know NOT peace will return, for you will have invited Him to do so by abandoning the ego on behalf of Him.

Him being the Holy Spirit, Him being that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

Call not upon the ego for anything.

You see. Don't speak on your behalf for any reason. Don't assert yourself for any reason.

It is only THIS that you need do.

Don't call upon the ego. Don't engage in independent authoritative decision making or acting. What do you do instead? You listen in the silence without speaking against the Teacher, without speaking against your right Mind, without speaking against and overriding your sanity which is there before you have a single thought, before you try to do a single thing all by yourself.

Whenever you fully realize that you know NOT peace will return, for you will have invited Him to do so by abandoning the ego on behalf of Him. Call not upon the ego for anything. It is only THIS that you need do.

It is only THIS that you need do to wake up!

The Holy Spirit will, of HIMSELF, . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind, will of Itself . . .

. . . fill every mind that so makes room for Him.

. . . will fill your mind that so makes room for Him.

Now, what do you think the word is that means you abandoning thinking . . . you letting your mind be a clean slate into which you as a private authorizer are introducing nothing? When your mind is allowed to become utterly still, and there is a willingness on your part to abandon self-assertion—truly, honestly abandon self-assertion—that, what happens, is called Atonement. That is the simplicity of it.

When you are not speaking against the Teacher and you are in utter silence, the Teacher fills that which used to assert itself independently with the truth of which that self is the divine one, that is constituted of the Holy Spirit, that is infilling the tiny sense of self that one was entertaining in his every attempt to be an authorizer. In the absence . . . in the absence of an authorizer, Atonement happens. Oneness with God occurs. You coming back into your right Mind happens. The very thing you have been looking for happens.

You know, it has been said that instead of eternity being endless time, if you take one second and snuff it out, that, what is left is eternity—that which is not confused or distorted in anyway by any concept of time at all. Likewise, if you take your mind and snuff out a thought, if you abandon thinking . . . Atonement happens . . . Oneness with God happens . . . you coming back into your right Mind, happens. That's the profundity of it. That's how profound the simplicity is.

You're inclined to think that if you give up your capacity to be an authorizer, you lose your integrity, you lose your respectability, you lose your purpose for being. But it's not true. You have lost your purpose and experience of what Being really is in your attempts to act independently and demonstrate a capacity you have to be an authorizer in your own right.

If you want peace you must abandon the teacher of attack.

What's the teacher of attack? It's that which seems to be in you that says it has a right to assert itself and make its mark on the world—that's making a mark against the world, it's overriding the Teacher, it's acting as though you're out of your mind. And thus, it's a state of insanity from which you deserve to be healed.

If you want peace you must abandon the teacher of attack. The Teacher of peace will NEVER abandon you. You can desert Him, .

"Oh-h, I'd rather see it my way. I'd rather do it my way. I'd rather define what that means!"

You can desert Him, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . but He will never reciprocate, for His faith in you IS His understanding.

Your right Mind knows what is true and knows what is true about you and it is His understanding. He can't be swayed from it no matter what you do—He can't be swayed from it. And He will not abandon you.

It . . .

. . . His understanding . . .

. . . is as firm as is His faith in His Creator, and He knows that faith in His Creator MUST encompass faith in His creation. In this consistency lies His holiness, . .

You see the utter consistency, the Oneness? Absolute integrity.

In this consistency . . .

. . . the absence of confusion . . .

lies His holiness, which He cannot abandon, for it is not His Will to do so. With your perfection ever in His sight, He gives the gift of peace to everyone who perceives the need for peace, and who would have it.

Is that you? Would you have peace and nothing else? Knowing that the President is going to speak next Thursday at 8 p.m., are you going to be devoted to being in front of that TV or are you going to be devoted to your peace, whether you end up being in front of the TV or not? Who are you serving? Who are you devoted to? What are you devoted to?

Make way for peace, and it will come. For understanding is in you, and from it peace MUST come.

Now you don't see the understanding yet, but it is in you. You really have to start believing that there's more to you than the definitions you have provided yourself with about yourself.

The power of God, from which they both arise, . .

. . . peace and understanding . . .

. . . is yours as surely as it is His.

The Holy Spirit's.

You think you know Him not only because, alone, it is impossible to know Him.

Not difficult to understand. You think you know the Holy Spirit not . . . you think you don't know the Holy Spirit, because alone, in other words, as an independent authorizer . . .

. . . it is impossible to know Him.

You have diminished the Holy Spirit by saying, "I'm going to rely upon myself." As long as you're relying upon yourself, you're not going to lean into the Holy Spirit. You may even forget that the Holy Spirit exists or is nothing more than your right Mind.

You think you know Him not only because, alone, it is impossible to know Him. Yet see the mighty works that He will do through you, and you must be convinced you did them through Him.

It is impossible to deny the Source of effects so powerful they COULD not be of you.

They could not be of you as the puny little orphan, the little self-authorizing entity that you've made up a concept of and identified yourself as.

Leave room for Him, and you will find yourself so filled with power that NOTHING will prevail against your peace. And this will be the test by which you recognize that you have understood.

You know, we can sit and talk about all the things you'd like to be and all the things you'd like to do, all the good you would like to do, all the crazy fun things you would like to do, like bungee jumping off of a bridge, or whatever. And it could seem as though attempting all of those crazy, wonderful things are things you really want to do and are things which will make your life meaningful.

But I ask you, you've already done some of them, are you happy? Are you yet experiencing inexplicable joy that just bubbles out of you? Do you want to not be experiencing inexplicable joy? Are you wanting not to experience peace that's unchallengeable? No, you definitely want to experience those things.

So, I'm encouraging you not to use your spiritual path as a means of finding ways to do more and more stimulating crazy fun things, but rather to do the one thing which will bring you back into your right Mind and cause you to experience joy, invulnerability, omnipotence—not omnipotence over anything, but absolutely inviolable stability that is unchallengeable, which therefore, experiences nothing that can interfere with the constant eternal experience of the awesomeness of Creation, as a participant in the Movement of Creation, because you have decided to use your attention for no other purpose than to look at whatever is in front of you and find God there.

Again . . .

Leave room for Him, and you will find yourself so filled with power that NOTHING will prevail against your peace.

It's your Birthright to be having that experience. It's your Birthright to be having that experience and for everyone around you to experience you having that experience. It's your Birthright to be a transformational presence without lifting your finger and doing anything as an independent authorizer. And that is the joy of being the Presence of Love.

Atonement will not cause you to have an eternal experience of being that is blah, that is dull, that is meaningless. Abandon . . . be willing to abandon your thoughts and be in the silence with full attention so that Atonement may occur and the dream can end, and the suffering can dissolve . . . never to reappear.

And do it while the world goes to hell in a hand-basket. Now, I caution you not to take that sentence strictly: Do it while the world appears to go to hell in a hand-basket. Because it's not! And it can't! And you don't have to be deluded into thinking that it can and that it is. And it's time for you to be free of that delusion. It's your Birthright. Do it.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 26th 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, it might seem like a rather abrupt jump from what we've been talking about, to the subject of time. And yet, if the Course is an intelligent flow of stimulus for learning, there must be an order to this.

We've been talking about learning how to abandon your insistence upon being in charge. We've been talking about learning how to be willing to stop thinking and how to experience peace. And, that peace is the threshold of the learning experience, the influx of enlightenment and consequent understanding. In fact, the last time we were together, it was brought into such focus, that it would have been impossible for anyone not to see that if you choose to be unequivocally in your peace, absent thinking, absent any subconscious agendas, you will experience Atonement. It is you, no longer functioning out of your right Mind that constitutes the experience of Atonement. Nothing could be clearer. That's how simple it is, that's how uncomplicated it is.

Well, all of you say, "Well, I didn't experience Atonement since you mentioned it last week . . . Oh-h, I grasp it. I like the idea, but I haven't experienced it yet."

Well, that could make it seem complicated, couldn't it. That could make it seem as though there's a process, couldn't it. That could be discouraging, couldn't it. And yet it's still as simple as was stated. All you really have to do is to let yourself be still and be willing to nestle into it, be embraced by it, want the experience of it and nothing else, and to be present in your world with each other in that environment, and from that environment of stillness. It's still that simple. And it's still important for there to be enough self-discipline to persist in doing that utterly simple thing.

Now, why might it be of value to talk about time at this point, where such a magnificent realization is registering with all of you? The reason is, that time interferes with yielding into the silence.

Now, this Chapter is entitled, "The Purpose of Time." But I'm going to suggest that time doesn't in itself, have a purpose. Purpose is given to time. You apply purposes to time. But time itself is a by-product of something—it's not an actuality. It is a by-product that exists only as long as something else is occurring. And the something else that must occur in order for this thing called time to be experienced, is for those who are experiencing time to have decided to make decisions to be authors in their own right.

In peace, where no self-assertion is occurring, but pure abiding in the presence of peace and experiencing existing—experiencing Being from there. This is an experience of Wholeness. This is an experience like one that most of you have had at least once in your lifetime, where Revelation occurred and suddenly you were provided with what you would call a whole block of information, full of myriad details, all clear as a bell, that you grasped and embraced and experienced [snaps fingers] in a flash—in a moment. But which, if you go to explain it to someone else, might take you days to express in the fullness of the detail and the fullness of the meaning.

When you step outside of the peace in which this is the conscious experience of Being, you might envision it like being in a gently flowing river that you are inseparable from. And there's just movement. And you're experiencing it and you're experiencing it in its totality—in its infiniteness.

And then you say, "But wait a minute, I'd rather make some decisions on my own. I'd rather determine what everything is, instead of just letting the Movement of Being reveal Itself to me on Its terms."

And so, it's as though you try to pull back out of the river and as you do, because you can't ever really become separate from it, you begin to find that whatever this is of you that is moving back out of the river, has long tendrils and threads of what the river's made of, extending from you and behaving as a pull, if you will, what you would call a resistance to your movement away. And if you insist on moving away, this tension becomes what you call, time. Because there has to be something to describe the difference between the Movement of Creation that you're in separable from, and this thing that you're making of yourself by trying to pull back from it.

The resistance to that is experienced as time. And what is time? It's a space in which to feel uncomfortable. It's a space in which to feel this tension that's not normal to you.

Now, you're feeling the tension because you're doing something you can't actually succeed at doing. But you're insistent, you're willing to accomplish this act of independence—willfully causing it.

This can only be described as an experience of being wrong. Of being you, like, out of your skin . . . of being not normal, of being abnormal. And it doesn't feel good. It feels as though you're doing something wrong. And because there is great insistence upon continuing to become more and more separate, a purpose emerges. And the purpose that emerges is for you to make yourself "right," to manage to shake off the feeling of being wrong—the experience of being out of your skin.

So, time and righteousness go hand in hand. And one of the things that seems extremely difficult to cope with in your process of wanting to experience Atonement, in your wanting to experience Awakening, in your wanting to come back into your right Mind, you find yourself called upon to choose for your peace. And if you're going to choose for your peace, you have to abandon your ingrained habit of making yourself right, and the experience of peace becomes a threat.

If you want to experience your peace, then the potential for being proved wrong will raise its ugly head and you will become vulnerable. Why? Because the purpose of time is to make yourself right. And the purpose of peace is to be Whole. They're two different things. One is real and possible, the other is unreal and its potential is pure fantasy.

Time is the by-product of an act of independence from Wholeness. And a purpose has been applied to it by those who have felt uncomfortable in the act of independence. And that purpose is to make yourself right when you are not.

Let's go into the Book.

Can you imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time?¹

Well, the mean-spirited tendency of the ego is to take those words, "but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time" and twist it into a suggestion of boredom, of inactivity, of lying on a grassy knoll or a sunny beach and that's all there is to it? And watch the waves lap up and roll out, and lap up and roll out in perfect peace? That's what it suggests. It turns what is actually an experience of Wholeness into a meaningless state of inactivity.

I will tell you something and you know it already: Creation arises out of perfect peace. The Movement of God occurs in perfect peace. What does that mean? It means, no conflict, no opposites, no dissonance. It means harmony. It means beauty. All of those incredibly awesome things that cannot possibly exist when any form of chaos is present.

The fullness of life . . . You hear those words? . . . The fullness of life is what God promises you. Well, the fullness of life is what is yours if you let Atonement occur. And that means that every involvement you have with every aspect of infinite Creation is vital, is exuberant, is joyous beyond any joy you can imagine so far. It is Meaning amplified, whether it's a lady-bug crawling along a stem or whether it is a wave lapping up on the beach or whether it is you standing up on the beach and running out into the waves and splashing and falling and rollicking and laughing. Nobody said that couldn't be done in perfect peace, without any conflict of any kind.

Can you imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet . . .

. . . that doesn't mean to be inactive, it means not aroused in conflict . . .

. . . all the time? Yet that is what time is FOR; to learn just that and nothing more.

Why is that what time is for? Because that allowed, that acted upon, that committed to, is what undoes time and releases you from the experience of being wrong that seems to justify an aggressive assertion that has as its purpose, making you right—exonerating you from wrongness.

You say, "It's so impractical! [chuckle] How could learning to be in my peace be more important than my attending to the affairs of my day which I already know are going to involve antagonisms and a need for forceful assertion on behalf of what's good?"

Hey, it's more important. And so, if it's very difficult for you to do this in the middle of the dynamics, then begin to do it in the parts of your days which are not dynamic so that the atmosphere of it hangs over into your periods of activity longer and longer, making it easier and easier for you to decide that's it more important than anything at all for you to be in the middle of your daily activities and the dynamics, and to be there in them as consciously as you possibly can from your peace. Why? So that you might access, be in touch with, connected with the place of Excellence in you which is nothing more than your right Mind, or the Holy Spirit, Who, if you are willing to yield into It, will be that Presence in you which awakens in you the awareness of what you divinely Are and Atonement can happen right there, in the Board Meeting, right there on the freeway, right there in the middle of your dynamic of your day.

I will tell you something: Being in your peace and coming from that place of Excellence in you, does not mean spouting spiritual clichés or Biblical references or highly evolved words or concepts. It isn't what comes out of your mouth. It's the frame of mind in which you are choosing to be as you act and move through your day. It's that simple.

God's Teacher cannot be satisfied with His teaching until it constitutes ALL your learning.

Who is God's Teacher? The Holy Spirit, your right Mind.

God's Teacher cannot be satisfied with His teaching until it constitutes ALL your learning.

In other words, until you are gathering all of your information from your right Mind, instead of from a fantasized, independent point called, "yourself making your own decisions," and behaving in the world according to the habits and the definitions you have come up with.

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . has not fulfilled His teaching function . . .

Oh-h, again, let's come back . . . Your right Mind . . .

. . . has not fulfilled . . .

. . . Its . . .

. . . teaching function until you have become such a consistent learner that you learn ONLY of Him.

When you're learning only of Him, you're just completely irresponsibly, you might say, not giving any attention to your best judgments and your best reasoning and your capacity to figure things out and your ability to come up with new ideas—all independently.

When this has happened, . .

. . . when you're yielding constantly to your right Mind . . .

. . . you will no longer need a teacher or time in which to learn.

Time will have disappeared because you will not be trying to stretch your way into independence from the Movement of the river of Creation and creating the tension that you call time—the uneasiness that calls for you to overcome the feeling of being wrong and prove yourself right, and ultimately prove that you are real without being joined inseparably in and as the Movement of Creation.

One source of perceived discouragement from which you suffer is your belief that this takes time, . .

See, "Well, I listened to what you said last week Raj, and you know, I still haven't experienced Atonement. It's got to be more complicated than you said." No. It simply . . . it means that you have yet to do the simple thing. That's all.

Again:

One source of perceived discouragement from which you suffer is your belief that this takes time, and that the results of the Holy Spirit's teaching are far in the future. This is not so. For the Holy Spirit USES time in His Own way, and is not bound by it. And all the waste that time seems to bring with it is due but to your identification with the ego, which uses time to support its belief in destruction.

Oh boy, did we make a left-hand turn there?

And all the waste that time seems to bring with it is due but to your identification with the ego, which uses time to support its belief in destruction.

Oh-h! Strong words out of the ethers. Surprise, surprise. Well, your identification with the ego is your identification with that which must prove itself right, must prove itself real, must prove itself not wrong in spite of the fact that there is this tension from the resistance to your attempt to separate yourself from the Movement of Creation which is impossible.

Now, it says here that . . .

. . . the ego, [which] uses time to support its belief in destruction.

"Geez," you say, "My ego uses time to support its belief in destruction? I'm not a destructive person." No, you're not a destructive person, you're not an ego! But the sense of self that you entertain as you attempt to be independent teaches you nothing but destruction, teaches you nothing but negativity. And it all stems from the basic tension that you experience by trying to separate yourself from that which you cannot separate yourself from.

Now, it is a feeling of wrongness—of being wrong. And being wrong brings with it penalty. And indeed, you find ways to live your days with a certain amount of happiness, knowing nevertheless, that there's going to be a last day. Come hell or high water, you are going to die. Knowing that in the process, whether you don't die yet or not, you're liable to get sick or you're likely to be injured or you're likely to be in a failed marriage, or you're likely to be dealing with someone who's an unjust character and that you're bound to have misery.

I can safely say that there's not one of you who doesn't succumb to these thoughts of negativity. And that there's not one of you who truly hears the idea that you're going to die one day sooner or later and laughs at it, because there is a knowing that this is impossible. You just don't look at it because it's too frightening. And you look at other things that are more pleasing and thus you allow yourself a little bit of reasonable pleasure.

You know, what we're talking about better mean something more than that. It better mean having the experience of never being injured, of never getting ill, of being in circumstances and relationships where needs are beautifully met, because you're able to be present in those circumstances not from a place of fear, not from a place of guilt, not from a place of overcoming being wrong, but coming from a place where life is the law, not the exception.

The ego, like the Holy Spirit, uses time to convince you of the inevitability of the goal and end of teaching. To the ego the goal is death, . . .

Well, you see, how could the goal be death? It doesn't really matter, let's not quibble about words. The end result of all that the ego teaches is death, whether you think of it as being an actual goal or not, it's the actual inevitable result.

To the ego the goal is death, . . .

. . . the inevitable end is death . . .

. . . which IS its end.

. . . the ego's end.

But to the Holy Spirit the goal is life, which HAS no end.

So the ego uses time differently from the Holy Spirit. And the ego uses time to keep you enthralled in the struggle and the thrill of overcoming unreasonable odds, even though no one ever does as long as they engage in the struggle, as long as they don't allow themselves to yield back into the Movement of the River of Creation, we'll call it, reducing the tension that causes the feeling of wrong instead of overcoming it. It amounts to stopping the very thing that causes the sensation of being wrong instead of accepting the sensation of being wrong as being actual and finding a way to overcome it.

THE USES OF TIME

The ego is an ally of time, but not a friend. For it is as mistrustful of death as it is of life, and what it wants for you it cannot tolerate. The ego wants YOU dead, but NOT itself. The outcome of its strange religion must therefore be the conviction that it can pursue you beyond the grave. And out of its unwillingness for you to find peace even in the death it wants for you, it offers you immortality in hell. It speaks to you of Heaven, but assures you that Heaven is not for you.

"You guilty bastard, you! You poor guilty one, you. You don't deserve Heaven, but you do deserve to be eternal and suffer eternally."

How can the guilty hope for Heaven?

In other words, how can the one experiencing the tension caused by attempting to separate yourself from the Movement of Creation . . . how can the one engaged in that act that causes that sensation hope for Heaven. Well, you can't as long as you keep doing what causes the sensation. And that's the mean-spiritedness of this whole ego frame of mind or mentality. Because it takes something that you're trying to do, that you can't actually accomplish, and it says for you to keep trying it because you will one day succeed. But because it can't really override God, it can't cause the feeling of being wrong to go away. And so, it gets you to exercise your authority to make yourself right, to be a successful independent orphan and to pursue that with exuberance and persistence and dedication. It actually will suggest that Heaven will be your prize, but it knows that it won't be.

The belief in hell is inescapable to those who identify with the ego.

To those who neglect to relax back into the Movement of Creation and reduce the tension of trying to be separate from It.

The belief in hell is inescapable to those who identify with the ego. Their nightmares and their fears are all associated with it.

Now, there's something all of you need to know, and that is, that in spite of the twisted, demented sort of mindset that's called the "ego frame of reference," aside from the twisted experience of being that you have, there is a Real you that isn't touched by it—the Holy Spirit. And it is insistent upon doing something. It's insistent upon bringing you to a point of willingness to embrace It—your right Mind—with no further resistance to It. Why? Just so that you can become an integrated, independent presence? No! Because there's a larger picture.

There's a larger picture going on. It's called Reality. It's called God Moving. God Being all there Is. And all the time that you're distracted from God Being all there Is, God is still Being all there Is.

And your right Mind is ignoring time—is not being bound by time—and is able to insert Itself into your awareness, independent of time, bringing what I'm going to call, bits of information, so that what you call tomorrow afternoon, your right Mind may bring something to your attention that is ancient. Because at that moment, that part of Creation, which your sense of time places way in the past is actively present being alive now. And that bit of information can be brought to you in a whole block of information that you can feel the truth of completely and totally. And because It's shared this with you out of time sequence, It jars you Awake. It allows it to register with you.

Being isn't right or wrong. Being simply is. And Being is Whole, infinite. When I say Whole, I mean infinite. It is a conscious experience of Being that is all-inclusive now. Being is, for lack of better words, full open consciousness in which the Totality of Creation is consciously experienced down to the minutest detail, without confusion and without overwhelm, and in a constant state of perfect, pure love, in which, as I've said before, that which you find yourself loving is loving you—that which you are loving—that infiniteness that you are loving is loving you back infinitely.

You are embraced by the ever-present Movement of God called Creation. And you are included in that Movement as part of that Movement because it's your capacity and reason for being to be conscious of it, to be the acknowledgement of it, to be that which it registers with, causing you to gasp in awe, to have an experience. And Reality is constantly inserting Itself in you to remind you of the larger picture. And to be an invitation to you to stop pulling back from the River of Creation, creating tension that you call time, which you then use for the purpose of making yourself right because you feel so wrong—all of which is nothing but a side track, a distraction from your being in your right Mind and your being in a state of Atonement.

During this coming week, I want all of you to watch for just one element. I want you to watch for every occasion when you feel called upon to prove yourself right, or conversely to prove that you're not wrong—there the same thing. When you're trying to prove that you're not wrong, you are defending yourself. When you're trying to prove yourself right, you are engaged in propaganda, you're engaged in trying to elicit a new response. It's not self-protection, it's not defense, but it's the other side of the same coin.

When you find yourself feeling called upon to defend yourself, notice it, catch it, stop dead in your tracks, realize that you are carrying out a conditioned response, that you are trying to overcome the tension caused by your insistence upon being separate from the Whole, and that proving yourself not wrong is the wrong response.

You're going to find it very hard to bite your tongue and not defend yourself, or to bite your tongue and not prove that you're right. But please, for this coming week, do it! And instead of justifying yourself, instead of defending yourself, choose for your peace. Be totally idiotic and do something irrelevant, choose for your peace. Choose for that inner act, which in effect, reverses the act of independence and lets you relax slowly back into the Movement, the River of Creation Itself, in which your Wholeness—not your rightness and not your wrongness—awaits you.

A Wholeness that constitutes your innocence. A Wholeness that feels good. A Wholeness experienced that means, you never again have to imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time, no matter how busy you are reveling in and participating in the movement of life, the Movement of Creation.

Let this be a conscientious practice. Every time you feel inclined to defend yourself, don't do it. The world will not come to an end. And you'll find yourself—I promise you—having an incredibly surprising new experience.

[addresses audience] I love you . . . and you . . . and everyone who's joining us on the Internet. And have an incredible week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 2nd 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I cannot emphasize enough what a valuable asset each of you has in Silence. Silence is the threshold to Home. Silence is where you shift gears from autonomy to Union. Silence is where you abandon what doesn't work in favor of what does work infilling you. Silence is the act of giving permission instead of giving orders.

Now we've talked about choosing for your peace. We've talked about moving into the Silence and we've just recently explored the fact that when you unequivocally allow yourself to be still without agendas, without willfulness, without the slightest inclination to assert yourself all by yourself, something happens . . . Atonement. Coming Home. Going Home. Being Home.

Now, when you dare to become silent in the way I just described, what happens? What is now absent that was before present, that before blocked the experience of Atonement—of going Home? What's absent is [chuckle] a self-assertive, declarative, authorizing presence. It can be called, "the ego." And so, when you go into the Silence, you're abandoning everything that the word, "ego" means, and more than the accepted psychological definition of ego.

We're going to be talking quite a bit about ego. It could seem quite complicated. But at the bottom line, the absence of the ego is the absence of thinking—the absence of assertive willfulness, the absence of an independent presence. That's all. It happens that that word, "ego," does stand for a generally very unpleasant experience. But what it will be helpful for you to remember is, that it doesn't represent anything actual.

If any of you dare to become still and you experience the Silence, you discover something: That although the awareness that you are is empty of driving purpose, of willfulness, of the need to assert itself, awareness is still present, you haven't disappeared.

When the ego disappears, you, as conscious awareness, the presence of Mind that experiences Reality, is there. The ego that you thought was you, once it is absent, uncovers the actuality of you, the foreverness of you, the inviolability of you, the eternality of you, because you are still present. And in abiding in that place of Silence, conscious—in other words, attentive—there will always be the spontaneous influx of illumination, clarification, understanding. That which is nothing more than your right Mind begins to register with you when you're not there making so much static, so much noise, that you can't hear It. And you come back into your right Mind and you remember God and you remember who you Are, and you remember who your brothers and sisters Are.

So, to pull this together, there is, we'll say, you—the uninterrupted conscious experience of Being that is you—which is either filled with assertive willful acts of authorship, or which is filled with the invitation, the emptiness which wishes to be filled by that which is Real, that which is your right Mind, that which is the Presence of God being all there is to you. And these two apparently different things each use time differently and that's what we're going to read about, that's what we're going to discuss this evening.

And so, let's go into the Book.

The ego teaches that hell is in the FUTURE, . . .¹

Of course, it teaches that everything is in the future, your good is in the future, your wealth is in the future and depending upon how well you do in the now you can bring it into your experience, you can bring your good into your experience in the future. And if you're patient long enough and the future arrives, you may well have what the ego has driven you to use as your goal.

So . . .

The ego teaches that hell is in the FUTURE, for this is what all its teaching is directed to. Hell is its GOAL.

Now, let's just be clear. When you said, "Father, I'd rather see it my way . . . Father, I want a divorce . . . Father I want to decide what everything is," you pulled back from Creation. You pulled back from your participation in Creation and attempted to stand separate, which you can't do. And as we have discussed endlessly, in that act you created dissonance for yourself. Your innate Sanity set off alarms, if you will, which you called discomfort and the discomfort had a simple purpose, to say, "Stop doing what you're trying to do. It won't work."

If you continued anyway, your existence became fraught with tension, fraught with problems, fraught with chaos and conflict. That's what it means when it says . . .

Hell is its GOAL.

It means that when you are attempting to do what is impossible, you have only one potential experience and that is one of pain, one of discomfort, one of forever frustration and on and on.

Hell is its GOAL.

You could say hell is its consequence. And if the consequence of something is what is inevitable, it is its goal.

For, although the ego aims at death and dissolution as an end, it does not BELIEVE it.

You see, the goal of death, the suffering, the pain, the stress.

The goal of death, which it craves for you, leaves it unsatisfied.

Everything that you go for in your daily life without the Father, without joining with your Source, without being aware that you have a Source, is fraught with potential disappointment and even inevitable disappointment somewhere along the line. Because doing things by yourself, trying to do the impossible is something that will never embody fulfillment actually. That is the simple fact of it.

Be willing to look at it. The simpler it is and the clearer it is, the more quickly you will allow yourself to let go of a practice that isn't benefiting you.

No-one who follows the ego's teaching is without the fear of death.

And I would say is not without the fear of everything negative, the fear of loss. I won't even go through the list.

No-one who follows the ego's teaching is without the fear of death.

What is the ego's teaching? The ego's teaching is think, think, think. The ego's teaching is, be actively independent, make your own decisions, learn through trial and . . . what? . . . error, what works and what doesn't. And then employ the knowledge to more skillfully control your good into your experience, even though you won't be able to hold onto it because, why? it's not your Birthright. It's not built into the system of independence. It's not built into a state of being in which you're disconnected from Source. It's like a light bulb. It can't possibly become illuminated if it's not plugged in. As long as it's not plugged in it's bound not to fulfill its purpose. Simple.

No-one who follows the ego's teaching . . .

. . . which is think, think, think for yourself, act for yourself, do for yourself . . .

. . . is without the fear of death. Yet if death were thought of merely as an end to pain, would it be FEARED? We have seen this strange paradox in the ego's thought system before, but never so clearly as here. For the ego must seem to KEEP fear from you to keep your allegiance. Yet it must ENGENDER fear in order to maintain ITSELF.

Well, in order to maintain itself it must be that which originally said, "Father, I want a divorce, I would rather make decisions for myself." That act engendered fear and in order to maintain its independence, it must keep fear going. It's that simple.

Again the ego tries, and all too frequently succeeds, in doing both, by using dissociation for holding its contradictory aims together so that they SEEM to be reconciled.

You see. Think, think, think for yourself and be independent. Demonstrate your independence by thinking by yourself, thinking logically by yourself, coming to logical conclusions by yourself, making decisions based on those logical conclusions by yourself. You know when you do that, that you're uncomfortable, there is tension, there is fear, there is doubt, there is an ever-present, overriding absolutely clear sense of your mortality.

Now, the act of abandoning Silence, the act of thinking and engaging in all of this willful activity is to cause fear. So, that is the goal, that is the inevitable effect, the unavoidable effect. Well now, how to keep you doing something that has such an unavoidably disastrous ending? Ah-h! It does it by not telling you that you should stop thinking and acting independently. It tells you that because you can think, you have the capacity to overcome the fear. You see.

So it holds its contradictory aims together. The one aim is to keep you in a state of ongoing conflict. And the other is to keep you from abandoning it by suggesting to you that the very thing that is creating the conflict can be used to overcome it. You see? It covers its “you know what” from both directions, seeming to make it all fit together for opposites to be reconciled, for what can't work, to seem to be workable.

The ego teaches thus: Death is the end as far as hope of Heaven goes. Yet because you and itself cannot be separated, and because it cannot conceive of its OWN death, it will pursue you still, . .

. . . you see, it comes up with a very creative, imaginative story . . .

. . . because it cannot conceive of its OWN death, it will pursue you still, because guilt is eternal. Such is the ego's version of immortality. And it is this the ego's version of time supports.

Again, time doesn't support or not support anything. But it is this the ego's version of time supports, the ego's definition of time, the meaning the ego gives to time supports this fantasy. And when you don't realize that the solution is so simple, that all you have to do is stop thinking, that all you have to do is to go into the Silence, when you don't realize that, you're caught. And the fear keeps the engine going. The fear makes you think harder. The fear makes you try to be more creative in your thinking, more creative in your independence. And the engine keeps the illusion going, when the solution is to shut up! It's so simple. The solution is to go into the Silence.

The ego teaches that Heaven is here and now because the FUTURE is hell. Even when it attacks so savagely that it tries to take the life of someone who hears it temporarily as the ONLY voice, it speaks of hell even to him. For it tells him hell is HERE, and bids him leap from hell into oblivion.

You see, the ego will say anything that can be used to motivate you to do what it wants, which is to stay in fear but think that you can get out of it, and that by depending upon the ego, you will experience salvation. You see.

And the ego tells him . . .

. . . hell is HERE, and bids him leap from hell into oblivion.

You see. And to those who are caught up in the need to be actors, those taking action, those being authoritative and exercising authority, it's very hard not to take the direction when the ego says that . . .

. . . hell is HERE, and bids him leap from hell into oblivion.

“Yes! Yes! Do anything to get out of the dire straights that I’m in, to get out of the hell that I’m in. I’ve got to do something. I have to take action,” . . . when the exact opposite is the answer.

Value your peace. Value this incredible asset which is yours, which is Silence, stillness. No matter how rugged things become, the answer is still going to arise out of the peace you choose for and move into.

The only time the ego allows anyone to look upon with some amount of equanimity is the past.

The ego uses time—the present and the future—to scare you to death and manipulate you. But the past . . . it will allow you to look upon with some amount of equanimity.

And even there, its only value is that it is no more.

Now again, we are talking about, the ego does this and the ego does that. What that means is, that the thinking processes that you identify as a self—that which disappears when you genuinely let yourself into the Silence—has these effects. That’s all it means. So don’t keep thinking of the ego as a self-directed, intelligent presence which simply is negative in its approach to life. That’s giving it too much credit. It’s not a presence at all. It’s just a habit of a poor use of mind. That’s all it is. And that’s why when you choose to value Silence, and to the best of your ability throughout your day, you try to attend to your affairs from that place of peace instead of the habitual place of reaction, that is what will move you into the experience of Atonement.

Again, it’s that simple.

How bleak and despairing is the ego’s use of time! And how terrifying!

How bleak and despairing is the experience of being a self-created thinker, that’s what it means. Bring it into these terms so that it will begin to be easier for you to lay down that use of your mind. And lay it down in the middle of your daily activities, in your so-called secular life.

How bleak and despairing is the ego’s use of time! And how terrifying! For underneath its fanatical insistence that the past and future be the same is hidden a far more insidious threat to peace.

And I’m going to add . . . which it won’t divulge to you.

The ego does not advertise its final threat, for it would have its worshippers still believe that it can offer the ESCAPE from it.

In other words, the thinking mind would offer that it can provide you escape from your problem, the ultimate threat, through the use of your thinking—your capacity to think.

But the belief in guilt . . .

. . . and here's the secret that the ego would keep from you . . .

. . . the belief in guilt MUST lead to the belief in hell, AND ALWAYS DOES.

The choice to be an independent authorizer—"But Father, I'd rather do it myself"—will always and can only (and I'm using this word very loosely) generate an experience of utter futility, of forever failure and for uninterrupted suffering of one form or another. Suffering . . . because there's this tension brought on by your innate divine sanity that is telling you that you're trying to do something impossible. And the answer is . . . the simple answer is, to just stop it.

The only way in which the ego allows the fear of hell to be experienced . . .

The fear of hell, not hell itself.

. . . is to bring hell HERE, but always as a foretaste of the future. For no-one who considers himself as deserving hell can believe that punishment will end in peace.

If you're not going to Wake up, this is all you're faced with. If you're not going to break the habit, if you're not going to get off the merry-go-round, then put this book away, leave God outside and live this thrilling life from which you manage to get a few thrills, a little bit of excitement, an occasional pleasure. Or, do the simple thing—just do the simple thing: Choose for your peace. Actually recognize what a great asset your peace is and then value it enough to take hold of it, to do what brings it into your conscious experience. And then consistently and persistently be "in the world" from there, because it's only in this way that "the world" will become revealed to you as Heaven, misperceived by you as "the world," not heaven when you were defining everything yourself and being an independent, sourceless thinker.

Now, on the other hand . . .

The Holy Spirit teaches thus: There IS no hell. Hell is only what the ego . . .

. . . what? The horrible ego? No. The act of thinking. Just simply the act of thinking on your own.

Hell is only what the ego has made of the PRESENT.

Hell is only what the process of independent thinking has made out of the Kingdom of Heaven . . .

. . . the PRESENT. The belief in hell . . .

. . . the belief in all the definitions that you have come up with and that your ancestors came up with and passed on down to you . . .

. . . is what prevents you from UNDERSTANDING the present, . .

. . . meaning the Kingdom of Heaven . . .

. . . because you are AFRAID of it.

Why are you afraid of understanding the present? Well, it's not so much that you're afraid of understanding the present as it is that you're afraid to let go of the control you're exercising to save your ass, because you are convinced that you are a mortal doomed to failure, who however, through the excellent use of thinking, can make a halfway decent experience of life for yourself. And you are afraid to embrace the sense of vulnerability that you are sure you'll be faced with if you abandon the control, if you go into the Silence without an agenda. Without an agenda? You can't afford to be without an agenda! Everyone else with their agendas will override you in your weakness, in the absence of your strength and the strength of your agenda for yourself to survive.

The Holy Spirit leads as steadily to Heaven as the ego drives to hell. For the Holy Spirit, Who knows ONLY the present, uses it to undo the fear by which the ego would make the present useless.

[chuckling] More than making the present useless, it makes the present/Kingdom of Heaven useless/just the world . . . just the world.

There is NO escape from fear in the ego's use of time.

There is no escape from fear in the thinking mind's use of time.

For time, according to its teaching, is nothing but a teaching device for COMPOUNDING guilt until it becomes all-encompassing, and demands vengeance forever.

Now there is a God. And the Father would not leave you comfortless. And the Father would not leave you trapped, caught in a self-perpetuating movement of self-destruction, whose whole purpose and function is to accomplish its goal.

And so there is the Holy Spirit. And there are those Teachers who have been willing to be touched by the Holy Spirit, touched by God, who were willing to abandon their thinking and to succumb to, yield completely to that which was beyond their thinking. Those who valued peace enough to get past the thinking and be a window, you might say, into the dream so that the truth might be presented and register with you so that you will not be caught in a self-defeating movement with an inevitable and unavoidable ending.

But do be aware that there are two paths and the end results are unavoidable. What do I mean by that? Do I mean that the ego, or do I mean that evil is as powerful as God and could in the end be victorious, accomplish absolute self-destruction? No, I don't mean that, because it couldn't. Because it isn't Real. And that's one of the reasons that you need to hear and know that there is an answer to it. That it isn't inevitable, that it is not actual as in an actually created presence. And that you do not have to be bound to it. And that you have a choice and can make a choice for that which is inevitable and will succeed, if I may put it that way, . . . will bear witness to the truth, uncovering it completely.

The Holy Spirit would undo all of this NOW.

All of the compounding of guilt for the purpose of building it into an all-encompassing demand for vengeance forever.

The Holy Spirit would undo all of this NOW. Fear is NOT of the present, but only of the past and future, which do not exist.

And of course the past and the future are one of the concoctions of the thinking mind—the independent, self-affirmed authorities.

There is no fear in the present when each instant stands clear and separated from the past, . . .

Now I know that makes it sound as though it stands clear and separated from the past and so there are two things. But I promise you that when you allow yourself to be still—present in the moment without memory—then your full conscious awareness of the moment is just that . . . full conscious awareness of the moment. It's pure. It's flawless. It's Heaven not encumbered, not colored by, not biased by memory. It's you being in the moment with God. Let's say, it's you being in the Movement with God—co-creators, if you will.

There is no fear in the present when each instant stands clear and separated from the past, without its shadow reaching out into the future. Each instant is a clean, untarnished birth, in which the Son of God emerges from the past into the present. And the present extends forever. It is so beautiful and so clean and free of guilt that nothing but happiness is there.

Now why is it clean and free of guilt so that nothing but happiness is there? Because one simple thing has happened: Thinking has ceased. Silence desired and embraced prevails. You see?

No darkness is remembered, and immortality and joy are NOW.

Why? Because Silence has been valued and embraced right in the middle of your day. You don't have to go to a Synagogue, you don't have to be in a church or a temple or a hovel or a cave. You can be in any one of those places and any of all of the rest of the places in the universe that you can get to. The point is to be present in the now, thoughtlessly in the Silence. Why? Because you want to experience more than you presently know.

Remember we talked about the fact that the only thing that limits the Holy Spirit in His function of bringing the remembrance of who you Are to your awareness, is the degree to which you think you know. And to the degree that you think you know, you're not receptive and the Holy Spirit cannot address you.

So the key is to value not knowing. The key is—let's turn it a little bit to make it more inviting—the key is to want to know more than you presently know. As I've said before, "What is the more of God that is here in what I see? What is it of actual Creation that is here for me to see, in everything that I thought was just the world?" That curiosity constitutes opening the door of your mind to go beyond what you presently know.

This lesson takes NO time. For what is time without a past and future? It HAS taken time to misguide you so completely, but it takes no time at all to be what you ARE.

[chuckling] It takes no time to be what you Are. If there's anything that will take time, it is how long it takes you to stop being what you aren't. And you can do that by choosing for your peace and meditating and going into the Silence and valuing the Silence more than just a means of lowering high blood pressure or having a moment of transcendence or escape from this place, where you can come back to this place and tolerate it a little bit better because of the bliss you experienced. It's more than that. It's not a temporary salve—Silence isn't. It is the threshold of Atonement. It is the threshold of understanding. It is the threshold of discovering the Kingdom of Heaven all around you now, today, here "in the world."

Begin to practice the Holy Spirit's use of time as a teaching aid to happiness and peace. Take this very instant, NOW, and think of it as ALL THERE IS of time. Nothing can reach you here out of the past, and it is here that you are COMPLETELY absolved, COMPLETELY free, and WHOLLY without condemnation.

You see. It is here that Atonement occurs. It is here in the moment in the Silence that you Wake up. Value it.

From this holy instant wherein holiness was born again you will go forth in time without fear, and with no sense of change WITH time.

Threshold . . . threshold . . . threshold . . . the threshold of Awakening goes with you wherever you go because it's in where? Your choice between autonomous authority and the static of it, and the Silence in which Awakening and Atonement can occur.

I love you. I love you. I love all of you including all of you who are joining us on the internet, and I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 9th 2008

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, we've come down to two rather simple things: The moment and Silence. The mind that is silent is not preoccupied with imagination about a future and it's not preoccupied with memories of the past. Time is not present in the now.

So, I want to ask something: What is the best use that you can put the moment to—any moment that you're in? Very simply, it's to bring out the excellence of the moment you're in, to have as your desire, if I can put it this way, to exercise the capacity to bring out the excellence of that moment.

This means that, if you have been in the process of getting ready to go somewhere and the cat makes a mess on the floor, you have the choice of getting upset about it, of beginning to think, and think in terms of time. "Oh boy, this is gonna hold me up. I'm going to be late. So-and-so's going to be upset." Oh boy, does the imagination begin to go and create a scenario of reaction, perhaps fear, anger, frustration. But you have to clean up the mess. You can't leave it there till you come home.

So, what are you going to do? Are you going to enter into this moment, be in this moment grousing about it, frustrated, angry, venting your anger, perhaps yelling at the cat? Or are you going to try to bring out the excellence of the moment? There's a task to be done. Maybe you didn't plan on it, but it's there. And you have the choice to do it with excellence.

Have you ever noticed that when someone loves to clean—clean house or clean anything—when they finish, it is different than when someone who hates to clean finishes their job. You can see and feel and enjoy the excellence, literally, of what they've done. Because . . . why? Because they love what they're doing. So, in the moment, you have the choice to love what is in front of you to do and be, or you have the choice to start rolling the tapes and become reactive.

What are you here for?

[Softer voice] What are you here for? You're here to desire to uncover and experience, and I'm going to say, exhibit, disclose the excellence of the moment—to be the excellence; to illuminate the excellence; to do what you love; to do what you do with love so that what you're doing blesses everyone . . . so that it is a blessing.

Two prayers we've discussed before: "I wish to see the evidence of Love" and "I wish to be the evidence of Love." Is this what you're embodying all day? If it becomes your practice, you will find that you'll go through your day doing whatever needs to be done with willingness and with a warmth and even an affection, because you're exploring being in a new way that, as I said, has blessing as its goal.

When you are choosing to bring out the excellence of the moment you're in, your attention is where you are and your attention is on doing what you're doing and doing it with love. There's no way to think in that process, and therefore, there's no way to bring time into that process. And therefore, there is no way to suffer from the inevitable effect of the practice of time, which as we've talked about, is guilt and fear.

The moment—the now and Silence, together in a context of wishing to be the evidence of Love and wishing to see the evidence of Love—constitutes an active relationship with the moment you're in, an active relationship framed in an intent: the wish to see the evidence of Love and the wish to be the evidence of Love without having any preconception about what being the evidence of Love is going to look like.

This is something you can practice all day long every day because every single moment you're in, no matter what is happening, is a moment in which its excellence can be brought out.

It's not just a world. It's not just the effect of a Big Bang. It's the Kingdom of Heaven. And Its excellence is there to be seen and brought forward, exhibited, expressed. And that's your function. And when you let yourself into that moment, absent all preconceptions, absent thinking, absent fear, the past and the future vanish . . . literally vanish. They are swallowed up in the experience of Eternity.

I'm going to suggest that the changelessness of real Being doesn't lie in nothing happening. It lies in your discovering your capacity to bring forth and be from excellence, unvaryingly, where you don't change your mind and say, "Yes Father, yes Father, this is incredible. Creation is awesome" . . . and then say, "Oh, well, but I'm going to make a little change here. I'm going to make a little change there. This is what this means. That is what that means."

You see, there's no shifting from one position to another—from being the Son of God or the Daughter of God to being an orphan. That which is changeless and has forever been, is your capacity to be the consciousness of Reality, to be the conscious awareness of . . . what? Creation. But not just Creation, the movement of Creation—and to changelessly be that conscious experience.

This is very important. Let's go into the book.

Time is inconceivable without change, . . .¹

It takes time for change to happen, right?

Time is inconceivable without change, . . .

We could say, change is inconceivable without time.

. . . yet holiness does not change. Learn from this instant more than merely hell does not exist.

[Chuckling] There's so much more to learn from the moment, from the now, than merely hell does not exist.

Learn from this instant more than merely hell does not exist. In this redeeming instant lies Heaven. And Heaven will not change, for the birth into the holy present . . .

. . . the now . . .

. . . is SALVATION from change. Change is an illusion, taught by those who could not see themselves as guiltless.

Creation isn't an illusion, though. And the forever movement of Creation is not an illusion. And the eternal omnipresent conscious experience of Creation happening, is not an illusion. That you can observe it in two different ways, that is the illusion! That you have a choice to see it as God sees it, as God's Offspring, from Whom God has withheld nothing, or as an orphan, that's an illusion. You don't have that choice. But you're caught in having made that imaginative choice and having fooled yourself into making commitment to that mindset.

The change that you experience will be lost. The capacity to change, like a chameleon, from a Son or Daughter with a Birthright to an orphan with no Birthright . . . you will lose that capacity. You don't want that capacity! You didn't know there was a choice because you've forgotten. But there is a choice and I keep telling you about it. Therefore you know about it, whether you're opting for letting go of the illusion or not.

Change is an illusion, taught by those who could not see themselves as guiltless.

You see? "But Father, I'd rather do it myself." "But Father, I'd rather see it my way." Oh boy, there came the discomfort. There came the gnawing feeling that something's out of kilter . . . whew . . . guilt. "Something's wrong." "I'm the thing that's wrong!" "I'm the thing that's wrong, but I can do something about it and I'm going to do something about it." "It may take awhile for me to overcome this feeling. It may take time . . . but I'm going to do it."

Taking that stance is the means by which time, as an illusion but nevertheless experienceable, happened—came into being. But here's the truth:

There is no change in Heaven because there is no change in God. In the holy instant . . .

. . . the moment, now . . .

. . . in which you see yourself as bright with freedom, you WILL remember God. For remembering Him IS to remember freedom.

"Well gee, that sounds nice" . . .

. . . In the holy instant in which you see yourself as bright with freedom, you WILL remember God.

Well, you might say, "Well, fat chance [chuckling] that I'm going to experience the holy instant in which I see myself as bright with freedom. You know, that's not my lot in life. That's not the way things work." But I'm telling you it is. And the experience awaits you if you make the choice to be in the moment with the desire to bring forth the excellence of that moment—the real divine excellence of that moment—which, in that moment, you are seeing in a distorted fashion.

In the holy instant in which you see yourself as bright with freedom, you WILL remember God. For remembering Him IS to remember freedom.

Why do you think you're uncomfortable every day with the way things are? Because in spite of your amnesia you feel your right to be free, to be free from the limitations of sin, sickness and death.

Now . . .

Whenever you are tempted to be dispirited by the thought of how long it would take to change your mind so completely, ask yourself, "How long is an instant?"

And this is important. You're so used to thinking in terms of time, and that it takes time to do things . . . that it always has and it always will. Has/will, past/future. See? You're thinking "time" in your description of your dilemma. But how long is an instant? The reason to ask that is because it moves you out of thinking in linear time.

"How long is an instant?"

Well, it just is "the moment." It's the moment of conscious experience. Now, remember, what you imagine is gonna happen in the future and what you remember in your memory of the past, those are both head-trips, aren't they? They're not actualities. They are not experienceable. But the now is an experience. Now is Real. Now is the conscious experience of Reality, the Kingdom of Heaven. It has an excellence to be illuminated, to be consciously experienced.

Now remember, because we've talked about this before "in the past" . . . past to future is not an unbroken line. At what you could call the junction between the past and the future, there is a gap. That gap is "the moment." That gap is the instant. You think of it as an instant of time. But I'm telling you that the instant is, itself, timelessness. The instant is Eternity, Itself.

If you take that instant that you define as a moment "in time," and snuff it out . . . in other words, if you take the space that exists between the past and the future and you let it be a space instead of part of an unbroken line, that's the snuffing out of the instant. That's the snuffing out of time. You don't snuff out endless-time-from-the-past-to-the-future. You only snuff out, devalue, invalidate the moment of "time" that you have imagined that the present instant is. What you do is, you snuff out the belief, the definition you made up: "But Father, I'd rather decide what things are." You snuff out the definition you made up about the instant-of-conscious-experience, not head-trip, that you're having.

So that's why the question is important.

"How long is an instant?"

So, again . . .

Whenever you are tempted to be dispirited by the thought of how long it would take to change your mind so completely, ask yourself, "How long is an instant?" Could you not give so short a time to the Holy Spirit for your salvation?

Well, of course you could. You didn't know that's all it would take. But you do now. That's all it would take.

He asks no more, for He has no need of more. It takes far longer to teach you how to be willing to give Him this than for Him to use this tiny instant to offer you the whole of Heaven. In exchange for this instant, He stands ready to give you the remembrance of eternity.

That's because the instant is not a moment of "time," and is, itself, Eternity. The past is an illusion and the future is an illusion, and you have created an imaginary bridge between the two. The bridge traverses an empty space—timelessness or Eternity. And so, when you let yourself into that, the experience of Eternity rushes in on you, fills you up, and the experience of Creation registers with you. And you find that whether you're cleaning up cat poop or whether you're driving to your meeting or whatever you might be doing, there's excellence to it—excellence that is awesome, divine excellence that embodies and exhibits the fullness of divinity, the fullness of That which is perfect.

You will never give this holy instant to the Holy Spirit on behalf of your release while you are unwilling to give it to your brothers on behalf of THEIRS.

Oh, that's right! Inseparable from being in the moment with a desire to illuminate the excellence of the moment, there has to be a caring. There has to be a desire to not only see the evidence of Love, but to be the evidence of Love—to be without holding to yourself the right to be pissed off if the occasion calls for it, or to be frustrated with your brother if the occasion calls for it. You know, whether it's the poop your cat left on the floor or it's an encounter with a brother, it's the same thing—the opportunity and the demand to bring out the excellence of the moment; to behave, to act in a way that really does embody Love and really does uncover and illuminate the excellence of the Kingdom of Heaven, which is going on no matter what it looks like.

You will never give this holy instant to the Holy Spirit on behalf of your release while you are unwilling to give it to your brothers on behalf of THEIRS. For the instant of holiness is shared, and cannot be yours alone.

The instant, minus the past and the future, is Eternity. It's also Infinity. It's the constant conscious experience of all of Reality, all at once. In other words, none of Creation is excluded or hidden or obscured, or more or less than. The only way to say it is, that it is shared.

Remember, then, when you are tempted to attack a brother, that HIS instant of release is YOURS. Miracles are the instants of release you offer, and will RECEIVE.

So, when you offer an instant of release, when you offer a miracle by saying, "Father, what is the more of Reality, what is the more of what you're Being here than what I'm seeing?" Isn't that the act of wanting to uncover the excellence of your brother, the excellence of the moment? Yes! And when you offer that by letting it in and sharing it, you get to keep it.

Again . . .

Miracles are the instants of release you offer, and will RECEIVE. They attest to your willingness to BE released, and to offer time to the Holy Spirit for His use of it. How long is an instant? It is as short for your brother as it is for you. Practice giving this blessed instant of freedom to all who are enslaved by time, and thus make time their friend FOR them. The Holy Spirit gives their blessed instant to YOU through your giving it. As you give it, He offers it to YOU.

Boy! The now is pretty packed. Silence is your greatest asset. It occurs only in the now. And now is packed with all of Creation and your conscious experience of who you truly Are. And it's available to you when you're willing to embrace two "tiny" things, you might say: (1) Silence and (2) the moment you're in—the moment of conscious experience that you're in.

It all boils down to attention. It doesn't boil down to a set of thoughts, or a set of ideas, or a theory, or a recipe. The escape from the human condition is utterly simple.

Be not unwilling to give what you would receive of Him, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . for you join with Him in giving. In the crystal cleanness of the release you give . . .

. . . In the crystal cleanness of the release you give is your INSTANTANEOUS escape from guilt. You MUST be holy if you offer holiness.

Again . . .

How long is an instant? As long as it takes to re-establish perfect sanity, perfect peace, and perfect love for everyone, for God, and for YOURSELF. As long as it takes to remember immortality, and your immortal creations who share it with you. As long as it takes to exchange hell for Heaven. Long enough to transcend all of the ego's making, and ascend unto your Father.

Well, [chuckling] I bet you listen to that list and think it's talking about how long it will take, how much time it will take. No. What it's saying is that when you take this moment, now, and stop applying your definition to it—that it is an instant of time—everything, all of these things are, for lack of better words, added on to you. [Whispering] What? Instantaneously. You see?

To experience a lot does not take time. You parse it out as it were—the conscious experience of being—and spread it on a time-line. But it isn't really there. And it's your Birthright to be free of that illusion. And it only takes two simple things to be free of the illusion: The now—the moment, the instant—and [whispering] Silence.

Silence is the crystal cleanness of the release.

Time is your friend, if you leave it to the Holy Spirit to use.

How is the Holy Spirit going to use time? The Holy Spirit is going to take the instant of "time," which is your definition . . . it is going to take the instant of "time" and redefine it as the holy instant, that which has nothing to do with past or future, that which is the little gap between the past and the future, which is, itself, Eternity. The Holy Spirit's use of time is to snuff it out, which means to snuff out, in your mind, that which causes you to be caught in your imagination, to be caught in insanity.

Time is your friend, if you leave it to the Holy Spirit to use . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

He needs but very little to restore God's whole power to you. He Who transcends time for you understands what time is FOR.

[Chuckling] Time is for abandonment! It is the Holy Spirit's intent to bring your attention out of the past and the future into the moment you're in. In fact, the cat pooping on the rug serves that purpose very well—gets you out of time. It may frustrate you, but it gets you out of time and forces you to pay attention in the moment and deal with the moment. That's the first step. The second step is to choose to bring out the excellence of the moment, so that you bring love to what you are doing and the best darn cleaning job that could ever have been done, that is a pleasure for anyone to see.

Holiness lies not in time, but in eternity.

In the little gap, in the instant that isn't time at all.

There never was an instant in which God's Son could lose his purity.

And I will add, and therefore you haven't.

His changeless state is beyond time, for his purity remains forever beyond attack and without variability.

Your changeless state is beyond time. What's your changeless state? It's that which is actually incapable of vacillating back and forth between real legitimate child with a Birthright and an illegitimate orphan. You don't really have that as a real choice.

Your . . .

. . . changeless state is beyond time, for his . . .

. . . your . . .

. . . purity remains forever beyond attack and without variability.
Time stands still in his . . .

. . . your . . .

. . . holiness, and changes not. And so it is no longer time at all.

It's the conscious experience of Eternity.

For, caught in the single instant of the eternal sanctity of God's creation, . .

See, that's what the instant is. It's not an instant of "time," part of a movement from past to future, it is . . .

. . . the single instant of the eternal sanctity of God's creation, . .

Again . . .

For, caught in the single instant of the eternal sanctity of God's creation, it is transformed into forever. GIVE the eternal instant, that eternity may be remembered FOR you, in that shining instant of perfect release.

How does that shining instant of perfect release occur? Again, . . simply. It occurs when you allow your attention to be fully in the moment, paying attention without any thinking, reasoning, calculating, but just pure awareness, just being purely aware in a context of wishing to experience the excellence of the moment so that you might share it with your brothers who are not experiencing the sanctity of the instant themselves.

Offer the miracle of the holy instant through the Holy Spirit, and leave His giving it to you to Him.

Be willing to use the now and the silence for the purpose of extending the consciousness of excellence to your brother and to everything, and Atonement will occur.

Silence is yours to experience.

The now is unavoidable.

You have no need of skill to experience the now.

And your brothers and sisters and everything are ever-present.

All of the essentials are present. Be willing now to use time as the Holy Spirit would use it, to let go of time in an act of Love. In that, Atonement will be yours.

Now, that's your practice, if I may put it that way, for the coming week. You have what seem to you to be an endless string of instants, moments, even though there's really only one. So you will not run out of ample opportunity to let yourself into the instant. Silence is constantly available to you. And constant interaction with your world and your brothers is unavoidable. Your spiritual practice lies in using those three things for the purpose of Waking up—not rising above those three things, not working hard to better your life through manipulations and physical practices. No. Here and now the world that you're in is, for lack of better words, the crucible, the "environment crucible." Sounds like hard work, but it's the environment which allows for Awakening.

For many, an event of some excellence seems to have occurred during the last week. Someone who finds ways to illuminate the excellence of the moment seems to be on the world stage. I'm waiting for the rest of you to embody that.

We will call this coming week: Illuminating Excellence Week. It's really rather knitty-gritty, down-to-earth, practical: cleaning up poop, driving on the freeway, dealing with a brother, getting caught in a traffic jam. Everything provides the opportunity for bringing out the excellence of the moment, so that as a result of your illuminating excellence, the world is blessed. You make the gift and Atonement occurs.

So, let's do it. No longer can you pretend that illuminating excellence and experiencing the Kingdom of Heaven is somewhere else, another time, another dimension. It is right here. You have all you need to Wake up this week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 23rd 2008

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Before we move on to the next section, I want to elaborate on some things.

We've been talking about the moment, silence, the instant, the holy instant, and if we're not careful about the words, if we're not careful about the way they are used, you can delay your Awakening.

It really needs to be understood that the word, "instant" has nothing to do with time. You tend to think of it in terms of time. You think of it as inseparable from time. It is as though the instant is the smallest portion of time that is measurable or conceivable. You take a photograph and you say, "I have caught an instant of reality—an instant of reality has been frozen in this picture."

"The instant of Awakening—the moment in which Awakening occurs." You see, even the words I'm using are inseparable from a context of time. But if you think that the word, "instant," the "holy instant" refers to time, you'll wonder when is that instant of Awakening going to occur? "Is it going to occur while I'm in the middle of baking a cake, half way through? And what will happen if I wake up and the cake is only half done? Who will come and clean up all the unfinished business?" You see, as though the instant of Awakening had anything at all to do with time.

When will it happen? When will the instant occur? Ah-h, perhaps December 21st 2012. There's a lot of interest in that, I promise you. December 21st 2012 isn't far away. It's something you can begin to get either excited about or fearful of. Better hurry up and get done what you need to get done or what you want to do before you can't ever do it again.

I promise you [chuckles] that if you think of the instant—the holy instant, the instant, the little gap that is between the past and the future—if you think of it as though it is in time, you're going to wait for the treasure that isn't buried in time. You're going to wait until 2012 and December 21st will come . . . and December 22nd will come . . . and you will not have Awakened, at least not by virtue of it being that particular date.

So, where you might think you don't have much time left, I'll tell you this: You have four years, almost exactly, to delay. You have four years to waste in order to discover that you were looking for the holy instant in the wrong place. Now that isn't much to get excited about, or afraid of.

So, where is the holy instant? What is the holy instant if it doesn't have anything to do with time? After all, if there is buried treasure, let's look for it in the right place.

The holy instant—the instant of holiness—this key threshold of Awakening lies in you, not in an external process of time.

If one is looking at everything around him, it certainly will appear that you have Awakened at a particular moment in a process, but not because the instant was there in the process, not because the instant was there in the Movement of Creation. The instant lies in you.

Again, and as we've said before, it lies in the absence of thinking. It lies where anticipation of the future, imaginatively, isn't occurring and where remembrance of the past isn't occurring. But it's more than just that. It's being in that moment, being in that experience of not-knowing—in that moment of Silence—that you must desire to know the truth and most specifically to know the truth about your brother. You must care enough to care to be involved and to desire to know your brother through your Father's Eyes.

Stay with me on this . . . the holy instant is an act. It's an action. You could call it a decision, but it's an action—a willingness to say, "Yes." The holy instant is embodied in the action of saying, "Yes" to God. You see? It's not a time or a place. It's a place where you stand within yourself before the switch—the on or off-switch, the yes or no-switch. The instant is the saying of "Yes" or "No."

Presently, you're all saying "No." You're saying, "But Father I would rather do it myself. I would rather see it my way. I would rather continue to be in charge to the best of my ability and improve my capacities because it's so self-satisfying."

Again, the holy instant, the instant of wholeness, is embodied in the act of saying, "Yes" to God . . . succumbing to God . . . surrendering to God.

You see, the holy instant is an action you engage in—an act of surrender—where you once and for all cease to want to see things or do things your way and you yield into the infinite way things work. You yield into the Movement of Creation itself, no longer holding yourself apart from it in any way, being the conscious experience of Creation rather than an observer of it, and a modifier of it.

So, we can talk about using your moments well by bringing out the excellence of the moment. And you can appropriately understand that that means the moments in your day, no matter where you are, no matter what you're doing, no matter who you're doing it with.

But the way in which you bring out the excellence of the moment you're in, ultimately lies in your willingness to abandon your desire to be in charge of that moment, to be controlling that moment, to be contributing "helpfully" to that moment by virtue of your own independent contributions.

That's where the instant is. Not in some other year, not in some other lifetime, but right smack-dab in the middle of you and your response to the conscious experience of moment, or instant that you are apparently in, or having.

You move over the threshold of ignorance into enlightenment by abandoning figuring out the moment you're in for yourself, and saying, "Father, reveal to me, please, the truth—the full-blown experience of truth, the infinite omnipresent experience of truth—that it's my Birthright to be experiencing at this moment, that has nothing to do with time or movement through time."

More and more, it's going to mean being in each moment where you, in the past, would have thought you knew how to deal with the moment, and daring to say, "I don't know how to deal with this moment because I'm not experiencing it in its infinite context and therefore, I will refrain from acting on the basis of my best thinking, my best judgments. I will refrain from that and I will refrain from acting until, after my request of the Father for clarity, after my desire of the Holy Spirit to know the truth, I experience the truth, and then I will act."

Now, I'm going to be very practical with you. You are going to have to act many times before you hear the Answer because not everyone can wait for you to hear the Guidance. But, the more consistently you reach into that place where you know you don't know, and you surrender to God, the more you will hear Answers where there doesn't seem to be a demand for a quick response. And the more you be from that place and in that manner, the more you will be able throughout your day to deal with your day from there without delay.

But it won't happen until you begin to remember that at every moment when you're not doing this, it is your Birthright to be doing it. It is normal for you to be, Being in that manner in every moment. And so you must bring the intent and the awareness of that divine function of yours into your awareness and let it embrace every moment of your day, even if it doesn't seem to be implemented quickly.

You see, it's not going to happen on a particular date. It's only going to happen when you bring the conscious intent to bear upon your conscious experience which is always in the moment. And conscientiously desire to know of a Source other than your best judgments and your thinking, "What is the truth here? How can I illuminate the excellence of the moment? How can I bring myself to say 'yes' to God?"

Some of the questions you ask may seem to illicit complicated answers. But if you ask this last question that I just gave, "How can I say or bring myself to say 'Yes' to God," it makes it uncomplicatedly clear and simple. You can just do it. You can just not just say, "No." You can just say, "Yes."

You . . . can . . . just . . . say , . . . "Yes!"

All of your reasons for saying, "No" are meaningless. They serve no purpose, except that they keep you from Waking up, they keep your Sanity from returning to you. You can just neglect to say "no."

When you realize that in not bringing out the excellence of the moment you are engaging in what is meaningless, it will become obvious to you that no matter what your conditioning tells you, you really do want to bring out the excellence of the moment—the now—and that you can say, "Yes." And that you can stop fretting and let the feeling of the goodness and the joy and the love of being meaningful arise in you, because it's there in you and, in so many words, change your mind. You can change your mind. You can make a new decision. You can stop saying, "No." You can say, "Yes."

Now, we ended up last time with an extremely significant sentence—the last nine words could easily go overlooked. The sentence says this:

Offer the miracle of the holy instant through the Holy Spirit, and leave His giving it to you to Him.¹

Offer the miracle of the holy instant . . .

Offer it . . . extend it to your brother. How? By wanting to know the truth about your brother. By wanting to know how your Father sees your brother. No matter how your brother is presenting himself, no matter how you are conceiving your brother to be, what is God's truth about your brother? What's the Reality that's beyond your brother's current sense of himself, or your current sense of him? You want to get past your current sense of him and his current sense of himself, because you want to get to the excellence of him, which he also wants to get to.

None of you want to continue parading around in a less than excellent manner, missing out on your Birthright, struggling for that which you needn't struggle, because it's yours. But all of you have missed the point because you think that your personal effort—the energy you put into the struggle—is what you're here for.

"Oh-h, if I can be brave enough to endure the next four years, until December 21st 2012, I'll have it made . . . Oh-h, if I can just endure until I can get to Lourdes . . ." You see? A time or a place.

No, the holy instant is in the middle of you. That place where the on/off switch is, is the Altar in you. The Altar that is illuminated with the Love that God is embodying right where you are, as you. And going to the Altar in you, or going to what I've referred to as the place of excellence in you, is you going to that place where the switch is. Not to a place on the planet, not to a date in a year, but to the place in you where you either act out your willingness or unwillingness to surrender to the Father. That's where the instant is.

So, if you want to bring out the excellence of the moment you're in, you will need to go to the place where the instant of wholeness is, which is not in your environment but is at the Altar in you. And then you must be willing to go in there and you could say, turn the switch off on all of your supposed capacity to accomplish, and turn on the switch to having your fulfillment provided to you, because it's your Birthright and always has been—and the struggle to achieve all good has been a total imaginary side trip that you have been suffering from.

So, to bring out the excellence of the moment you're in, you go to where that instant of willingness to act and embody your willingness, and you say, "Yes" to God. I've brought out before, that prayer is saying, "Yes" to God. It's not asking or petitioning God for something. Prayer is saying "yes" to God. And when you say, "Yes" to God, all that God is, is added unto you as a conscious experience instead of being all there is of you as an unconscious experience.

And as a result of engaging in the act of surrender, you spontaneously behave in a manner that brings out the excellence of the moment. And the moment, or your brother, is blessed. And as the saying goes, what you give you get to keep. Another way you could say that is, what you give you get to receive for keeps, forever.

So, listen to this sentence again:

Offer the miracle of the holy instant . . .

. . . the holy instant being your act of surrender.

Offer the miracle of . . .

. . . your act of surrender . . .

. . . through the Holy Spirit, and leave His giving it to you . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's giving it to you . . .

to Him.

Engage in being the gifter and give what you need. [Chuckling] How can you give what you need if you don't have it, if you still need it? Well, it takes faith. It takes commitment to what seems to be the impossible. And what makes it possible is your willingness to look at your brother and know that there's an excellence there, an excellence of God there, even if he can't see it and even if you can't see it. And then you desire to home in on that instead of magnifying your concept of him or his concept of himself. That is an act of love. That is an act of abandoning your best thinking or worst thinking, which means abandoning your best or worst concept of him and flipping the switch and saying, "Yes" to God, saying "Yes" to God's perspective, and not being willing to act until that perspective dawns on you—persisting in that ultimate result, in the instant, not in time.

So you . . .

Offer the miracle of the holy instant through the Holy Spirit, . .

. . . and these are the key words . . .

. . . and leave His giving it to you to Him.

[Chuckling] Forget about getting it. Forget about how you're going to get it. Forget about when He's going to give it to you. Leave it up to Him.

... leave His giving it to you to Him.

[Deep sigh] That's called surrender, isn't it. That's abandoning all control. That's abandoning every desire to exercise a little coercion. Be willing to give to your brother what the Holy Spirit gives to you to give to your brother, because that's all you care about. And stop caring about when you're going to get it. That's what it means. And that's what the holy instant embodies. And that's what the holy instant utilizes as the means and the permission for Atonement to occur, because there is no selfishness in it.

"But Holy Spirit, when am I going to get mine?" Well, when you give it without concern about when you're going to get yours, because it has been revealed to you, whether you like it or not, that it's your function to be giving it. And in the willingness to give it and the giving of it, Sanity returns to you. That's why.

Offer the miracle of the holy instant . . .

. . . the instant of saying "yes" in the withinness of you . . .

... through the Holy Spirit, and leave His giving it to you to Him.

It might seem to you that "accomplishing" this is going to take forever. And indeed, it might seem as though it is taking forever. But all it amounts to is your delay in throwing the switch. All it amounts to is you haven't said "Yes" yet.

And so the lesson in this is: That you must make your goal be, saying "Yes . . . yes . . ." forever! Or better than that, saying, "Yes," once without reserving the right to ever say "no" again. Become dedicated to this all day long. Until you stop doing what keeps you from your good, you won't have your good.

Now, because you are God's Son, God's Daughter, because you are the direct expression of God and can't become anything else, then, as we've said before, all the while that you are attempting to exert authority yourself, by yourself, you are nevertheless constantly accompanied by that which is present to undo and devalue your inclination to do this—your inclination to act independently and value your independent authority. And what it is, is your Sanity. What it is, is the Holy Spirit. What it is, is the presence of God in you, being you in spite of your imaginations. And therefore, because God is God, His presence is a constant pressuring against your feeling any satisfaction from trying to be what you're not, and urging you and pressuring you to abandon it. And so, you have constant support.

Now, I bring this out because you really have to begin to grasp that as you go through your mundane days, you're walking through the Kingdom of Heaven. And all the while that you think you are making things happen and that you are in charge and that everything is up to you, none of it has been. And you deserve not to be misled by such beliefs. And you are companioned with, by that which has the intent of relieving you.

Therefore, dare to persist in every moment of your day wanting to bring out the excellence of that moment by going where the holy instant is, which is in the center of you—where the “on/off” switch is, where the “yes/no” action is, where the opportunity to surrender, wholly, completely, lies. And then surrender, moment after moment . . . after moment . . . after moment . . . after moment, until you have abandoned completely any inclination to practice any right to do anything else.

Nine little words . . .

. . . and leave His giving it to you to Him.

That is enough to abide with for now. And next week we will proceed into the next section. Sometimes it's important to stop and abide with nine words and not gulp down a whole chapter at a time.

I love you very much. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 3rd 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Again, good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Time and Eternity and The End of Doubt. Two different choices for a sub-heading here, but they really do go together. When you stop and think about it, doubt isn't really something any of you suffer from, it's something each of you practices. It isn't something you submit to, it's something you assert.

And why do you do it? You do it to give you distance between reality and what you want, reality and what you prefer to believe.

Now, time and eternity are the two things which you shift from. You shift from one to the other at the threshold of Awakening, at the threshold of Atonement in the holy instant. And remember, we talked about the holy instant not really being a point in time, but rather, for lack of better words, a place in you where you yield and say, "Yes" to God.

Now, obviously, if you are going to decide not to be an independent authorizer anymore and not to do your own best thinking and come to your own best judgments and abide entirely by them, and you're going to say "Yes" to God, then you're going to have arrived at the point where you experience the end of doubt, because you're going to stop . . . you're going to stop practicing it. You're going to abandon the position of authorizer. And in so many words, you're going to let God be in charge. Something that He has been forever, but not something you've been willing to yield to for a long time.

I think a lot of you have found that it's not something you're as willing to embrace as you might have thought you were because it costs too much. It costs you your position of authorizer. It costs you what you call independence, something which you take great pride in. Something which you believe God gave you and that therefore it is something to be proud of and to exercise well.

Well, nevertheless, whether you know it or not, you do want to Wake up. You do not like suffering. And so, sooner or later, you are each going to arrive at a point of having to make a decision to exchange time for eternity, to exchange the conscious practice of doubt that says, “Well, I’m not so sure about that! You say this, but what about that? Uh-h, I’m going to take some time to examine this and I’m going to come to my own conclusion about it—maybe I’ll agree with you—but I will have come to my own conclusion about it.” You see, all the time maintaining this autonomy and maintaining the pride of the authority of the autonomy.

It’s the practice of doubt that distances you from the experience of Reality that confronts you and is the only thing that confronts you, always.

Now, in a way, the subject, Time and Eternity is timely, if you will, because time is on your mind these days. It’s a new year. Not only is it a new year, it’s a new political climate and even though the new political climate centers in the United States, it is nevertheless felt as a new political climate globally. It’s a year in which time could slip into eternity. It’s a year in which doubt could give way to saying “Yes” to God.

In a way, it’s a year in which most everyone will be required to shift, whether they want to or not—whether they want to hold on to the status quo or not. Miracles are change. Miracles cause yielding. Miracles result in things being made new, not just around you, but in you. You, saying “Yes” to God, instead of maintaining an authoritative stance yourself, that is a significant change, a significant transformation. And as I said, it’s one that most don’t embrace willingly.

But, as many of you are aware, there is an economic crisis. And it’s not an economic crisis you’re reading about in the newspaper about somewhere else, it’s an economic crisis wherever you are, no matter where you are on the globe as you’re listening to my words. Why is this? It’s because it really is one globe. It really is one world. It really is one economy. It really is one whatever you want to name it.

And so, one of the things that everyone is going to be faced with this year is the practice of your capacity to embrace others, your capacity to embrace countries, peoples who have been your enemy or who’s enemy you have been. And you’re going to have to find ways to work together. Why? Because working separately doesn’t work. And it only has seemed to work fairly well as long as there are laws that keep each of you in your place.

But harmony needs to come because harmony is the law and harmony is the result of what? Abandoning doubt.

"Well, I don't know about them . . . well you know how they are in Iran . . . well you know how the Jews and the Arabs are . . . there's never gonna to be peace . . . there's never . . . blah-blah-blah." You can go on and on.

It must stop. It is going to stop. And it will either stop gently and harmoniously, or it will stop strenuously.

Now everyone is going to have to get off their arrogant high horse, where they look down on everyone else from their position of authority, or where this country looks down on all other countries from its position of authority and where everyone is used or abused—if it is at all possible to do it and make a profit from it. And what you know is best for you, truly best for you, you're going to have to be willing to extend to your brother—the ones who didn't like you, the ones who currently don't like you.

Oh-h, so maybe the first release of doubt is going to be you saying, "I'm not going to hold my perception of you against you anymore. And I'm going to be willing to pay attention to you as you, so that I might learn what you need and so that I might learn that you're not any different from me, so that I can more willingly embrace you and cause you to see me as harmless so that you might feel free to embrace me." Ah-h, this is called, "Miracles." This is called, "Changing." This is called, "Being willing to be in a new way—being willing to have all things made new, in you."

"The sky is falling! The sky is falling!" Chicken Little says. "The economy is falling! The economy is falling!" say all of you. "Horror of horrors . . . run . . . run, save yourself . . . it's the end!" Oh, isn't that ridiculous! And you believe it. It's the end of what? A year from now you're still going to be here. A year from now the economy is still going to be here—maybe it will work differently, maybe the motivation behind it will be different. But it's not the end of anything except an old way of behaving, an old way of perceiving, an old way of insisting on being the determiner of the meaning of things all by yourselves, instead of shutting up . . . becoming still . . . going within into the Silence and saying "Father, what is the truth here?" or saying, "Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than my right Mind, what is the truth here? I choose to yield to the truth."

When there is great need and when reconfiguration is occurring and it looks like all that has meaning is crumbling, it's a time for Vision. "Oh-h," you say, "Obama has the Vision." You say someone else has the Vision. Well I'll tell you something: Everyone will have the Vision if they don't, like Chicken Little, run around like crazy because "The sky is falling! The sky is falling!"

If reconfiguration is occurring—and I guarantee you it is—then opportunity abounds. Opportunity is the only thing in front of you. But you're going to have to stifle your free-form reactions and your crepe-hanging. And you're going to have to say, "Wow! Well, things are configuring, things are reconfiguring because the way it has worked no longer works. That means something new is going to work . . . what is it? What is the opportunity here?" And this is important: "What is the opportunity here that all of us are presented with, to upgrade the form of our living so that everyone is blessed, because Gift is what is behind every action, rather than self-preservation, rather than making a profit at the expense of someone else? What do I need to do? What do all of us need to do that causes everyone to feel their Brotherhood . . . that causes everyone to feel togetherness and being loved?"

Because I'll tell you, that's what inspires miracles. That's what inspires the willingness to let go and let God.

Now, you just don't have the time to sit around and listen to the news and grouse about it. You don't have time to grouse about anything because there's too much opportunity here. You might say, this is a year of grand opportunity for dynamic transformational change that can only be described as progress. But you're going to have to be willing to embrace it by looking for it instead of enjoying the opportunity to rail at the gods and to curse the earth and each other.

I promise you it is a year in which everything we have been talking about will be able to be put to good use. It's a time to look at your brother and not say, "He's the reason I'm in this position." Or to look at your corporations and say, "They're the reason we're in this position."

You must abandon blame and fault-finding. You must be willing to do the two-step, to step back and say: "In spite of the way it appears, in spite of the behavior that appears to have gone on, what is the truth here? What is the truth about my brother? I need to know the truth. And I'm going to take the time to find out what the truth is about my brother that allows me to lay down my distress and frustration with him, and instead allows me to embrace him with compassion and love and support, because he has to be the Son or Daughter of God as much as I am and has to be as deserving of Blessing as I am no matter what has 'gone wrong'."

Now, let's go into the book.

The Atonement is IN time, but not FOR time.¹

Interestingly enough, time is mostly a description of the act of having to wait for your good.

The Atonement is IN time, . . .

. . . it seems to take place in what you call time. It appears to be a process of growth that takes time in you and so on. So . . .

The Atonement is IN time, but not FOR time.

The Atonement is for eternity. Again . . .

The Atonement is IN time, but not FOR time. Being in you, it is eternal. What holds remembrance of God cannot be bound by time. No more are you.

That better be the meaning you give to yourself as you move into this new year.

What holds remembrance of God cannot be bound by time.

The Holy Spirit in you—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—holds remembrance of God. And its function is to get your attention so that you will yield back into your right Mind and abandon this attempt to be an independent authority on your own.

What holds remembrance of God cannot be bound by time. No more are you.

So as you move into this new year you're not bound by time, you're not bound by what has happened in the past—the recent times. You simply aren't. If you believe that you are, you are going to approach each day with a commitment to loss and a commitment to grouching about it and bitching about it and cursing about it. But you aren't bound. And you can be the ones who are alert for the opportunities that this transformation will bring and that your recognition of, will help bring into play. You have a part to play.

Continuing . . .

For unless God is bound, you CANNOT be.

It's so practical to identify with God, [chuckle] rather than to try to identify with yourself, as yourself, by yourself.

. . . unless God is bound, you CANNOT be.

If God is not bound, you are not bound.

An instant offered to the Holy Spirit is offered to God on your behalf, . .

Okay, is that a moment of time? . .

An instant offered . . .

It could seem to be. But really the instant, again, is that place in you where you say, "Yes" to God—the act of willingness. So, an instant, an act of willingness offered to the Holy Spirit is offered to God on your behalf by the Holy Spirit. Why? Because the Holy Spirit bears witness to the truth about you. The Holy Spirit bears witness, true witness, about you to God. And when you finally let the Holy Spirit be restored to you as your right Mind, your every act relative to anything else, will be that of witnessing to anything else to God—bearing witness of everything to God.

Very important, and very simple.

An instant offered to the Holy Spirit is offered to God on your behalf, and in that instant you will awaken gently in Him.

Well, that tells you also what happens when you bear witness to your brother to God—bear true witness to your brother to God. In that instant he will Awaken gently in God.

In the blessed instant, you will let go all your past learning, . .

Well, learning is just a memorized thoughts, memorized ideas, memorized string of words that you've given meaning to. It's been called thinking. But in that moment you abandon all of the thinking. It seems that it was the most important thing in the world to you but it has been the act of doubt that you brought into play. "Oh, well, I want to think this through myself. And I will come to my own conclusion." You see.

When you're willing to say, "Wait a minute, I've been thinking all my life. I've been doing as much of it as I possibly could [chuckling] and I'm not Awake and I'm still suffering and I'm still seeing a divided, conflicted world. And even though that seems to be the norm, it doesn't feel good." Why not? "It doesn't feel good because something in me says, 'It isn't normal'. That in me which says it isn't normal is that in me which is the Presence of God, that in me which is divine about me, the Holy Spirit.

“So, I’m going to dare to engage in the holy instant: The act of willingness to say, ‘Yes,’ to God and let God inform me what the truth of this or that or the other thing is, so that I may bear witness truly to my brother or to my world.”

In the blessed instant, you will let go all your past learning, and the Holy Spirit will quickly offer you the whole lesson of peace.

No, not give it to you piecemeal. At the present time you seem to get it piecemeal because you only listen for a little bit at a time. And you do hear a little bit at a time, and you do experience enlightenment, but when you let go all of your past learning by even momentarily not valuing your thinking, the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—will quickly offer you the whole lesson of peace.

What can take time, when all the obstacles to learning it have been removed?

And what are all the obstacles to learning it? All of your thoughts, all of your cherished ideas, all of your pet theories, all the definitions you’ve joined together in making up so as to govern yourself in relative harmony so that you don’t kill each other, which of course, you would do because it’s your nature to do it, or so the saying goes, so the theory goes.

But when all the obstacles to learning have been removed, when all of the thoughts and ideas and definitions, when you have withdrawn investment in them, the Holy Spirit fills you with the whole experience of truth.

Truth is so far beyond time that all of it happens at once.

[chuckling] Which simply means that truth presences itself, truth presents itself in its entirety forever and forever new.

Truth is so far beyond time that all of it happens at once. For as it was created one, so its oneness . . .

. . . depends not on time at all.

In fact, it not only doesn’t depend on time, it is the non-existence of time. And so, when you let yourself into the experience of it . . . time . . . in other words, waiting for your good will disappear—time and all the means you have developed to bring your good into your experience will disappear.

The experience of truth is the experience of having all of Creation present with you without process to it, without having to wait for it, without it having to develop or grow . . . you see. In it's entirety, it presents itself forever.

So, nice words. But let them relate to the fact that you're having a hard time buying a car because nobody will loan you money because the banks are afraid and on and on and on. And what about, you may lose your job because your job provides materials or parts for another project, but nobody has the money to buy that end-product and so nobody's ordering the parts you make and on and on and on.

Truth is whole. Truth presents itself in its entirety. Reality is a movement of the entirety of itself, therefore, it's the movement of the entirety of you. And that means that no matter how difficult it is for you to conceive of having all of your good under the current economic and world conditions, it's still your Birthright to be experiencing. And all of it is still present for you to embrace with your mind so that it can register with you, so that you let it in instead of denying it by your confidence that it isn't there and it won't be there.

. . . unless God is bound, you CANNOT be.

Okay, again you could say, "Nice idea." But if God is not bound and you cannot be bound, then you have an entirely new way to enter into this year than you probably entered it on New Year's Day—a way to enter this year without pessimism and something more than optimism.

Why, you might just dare to expect a miracle. You might just expect to have something plop into your lap, totally unanticipated and unexpected that meets the need so specifically that you know there could be no fluke to it, no chance to it, but rather that it is a manifestation of wholeness that is so specific that you recognize an order to the miracle that is so complex, so infinite, you might say, that you know you couldn't have thought it up yourself, you couldn't have imagined it yourself. Because I'll promise you something: Miracles, the experience of Reality, is not the result of imagination and it's not the result of thinking and it's not the result of skill you personally have as an independent authority. It's the manifestation of the way things work because of what God Is, because of what Reality Is.

Now enter into the 4th of January with a new expectation, with a new context, if you will. You want to experience joy. "Oh, well, how can I experience joy? They're foreclosing on my house. I lost my job and the list goes on and on. [sniffing] Poor me" [sigh]. No, silly you. Because you're saying this as you sit at the threshold of opportunity to see your experience, the Vision of how it can work the new way, the way that blesses you and everyone and provides you with a gift to give that helps others to see it. And thank God you lost your job and you won't be going back to that job again, because the gift you have to give actually meets a need, where the job you had met wants, met greed, met things that didn't really matter . . . but you got a good paycheck.

Hey, you want to experience joy. And joy is on the table this year. It's on the table every year, but this year you better be willing to take hold of it vigorously, definitely and stop whining about how things aren't the way they used to be.

. . . unless God is bound, you CANNOT be.

God is not bound, therefore, you aren't! This is the good news and this is the context in which to be the rest of today and tomorrow and the next day.

Do not be concerned with time, . .

. . . and another way of putting that would be: Do not be concerned about the effects of time. "Oh-h, well, I'm not as young as I used to be, you know. And time has past and this has happened and . . . and also, you know, because time passes we can expect things to happen."

Do not be concerned with time, . .

Stop using your mind this way.

Do not be concerned with time, and fear not the instant of holiness which will remove ALL fear.

Do not fear the instant of holiness . . . you say, "Oh why would I fear the instant of holiness? That's what I'm after." Well, you know what? You might find, like Paul has, especially in the weeks since our last get-together, that the closer you get to the requirement to abandon thinking, the more you think, the more the mind chatters. And in fact, it chatters so relentlessly and so rapidly that you begin to see nonsense in it.

It's like the time has come to shut up. The time has come to become still. Why? So that in the stillness the Voice for Truth can register with you. Of course, when it registers with you, the voice you thought was yours will, of course, become meaningless in comparison, won't it? And oh, now you know what's so fearful about the instant of holiness—[chuckling] the voice you thought was yours is going to be rendered meaningless! "Eeeuwww, let's not have too much of that! A little bit here and there maybe . . . impress the folks with it . . . but all the time? Abandon thinking all the time?" No. And again the closer you get to the demand to be still, the more insistent one's ego becomes to speak up.

And so, it requires you, as it's requiring Paul, to take hold—I don't want to say, to assert a little authority—but to exercise a little self-discipline and silence the mind on purpose and not value the right to think, think, think, think, think and express the thoughts and build up one's presence by the expression of those thoughts. Let the silence come and squelch the need to assert your mind through thinking.

Do not be concerned with time, and fear not the instant of holiness which will remove ALL fear. For the instant of peace is eternal BECAUSE it is wholly without fear.

[Chuckling] Of course, the ego says, "Well, of course it's without fear because he's gone insane. He's not thinking and there's no fear, not because there really is no reason for fear, but because he's gone off the deep end. [Chuckling again] He's listened to all this spiritual bullshit and he's taken it to heart and of course he's not going to experience fear, because he's gone insane." That's what the ego says. And as it says it, it says to you, "Don't you dare do that! Don't you dare become silent! Don't you dare become willing to let something other than your voice speak. Take advice? Don't you do it! Don't you dare participate with or be involved with or be in partnership with or relate to any one else. Don't you dare do that!"

. . . the instant of peace is eternal BECAUSE it is wholly without fear.

That's because it's peace, not because insanity has taken over. Peace is the absence of fear and therefore, the absence of a felt need for self-defense. Peace is the experience of safety. Real peace yielded into completely is an experience of complete safety—a safety so complete that it can only be described as invulnerability. And you thought invulnerability always had something to do with supreme power, which once in place meant you're invulnerable. No. Invulnerability comes from and is inseparable from the experience of true peace, which is forever present with you, in you, to access anytime you wish. And I'm encouraging you to wish it more often than you do. And to wish it with diligence or self-discipline. Why? Because with the practice of self-discipline it's going to make this next year significantly different for you than the forecasts say.

It WILL come, . .

. . . what? The instant of peace.

It WILL come, . .

It WILL come, being the lesson God gives you, through the Teacher He has appointed to translate time into eternity.

. . . or to move you over the threshold from the assertive practice of doubt to the yielding willfulness to yield to God.

. . . the Teacher He has appointed to translate time into eternity.

. . . Is what? The integrity of it is so incredibly perfect and beautiful. It's nothing more than your right Mind. It's the Holy Spirit. It's that which when you yield to it, unavoidably brings you back into wholeness, integrity, integration—the integration of you.

Blessed is God's Teacher, Whose joy it is to teach God's holy Son his holiness. His joy is not contained in time. His teaching is for you because His joy is YOURS.

Remember we were talking about joy. Joy stands present with you, being presented to you by that which is nothing more than your right Mind—in other words, your sanity. And today on the 3rd of January it's standing with it for you. And tomorrow on the 4th of January it will be presenting it to you. And on the 5th and the 6th and on and on and on. How many days are you going to wait to receive it—to conceive of the possibility that it could register with you without any further process?

You know, a sub-heading in a book: Time and Eternity. And the translation of time into eternity. Hey, that has to do with January 3rd, 2009, and January 4th, 2009 and you, and you, and you, here . . . and just a little willingness away from what you're experiencing right now, which is simply calling for diligence, self-discipline so that you stop running around like "Chicken Little," convinced that the sky is falling, that something is happening that isn't happening.

Through Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . you stand before God's altar, where He gently translates hell into Heaven. For it is only in Heaven that God would have you be.

If it is only Heaven where God would have you be, then I promise you that's where you are, because you have not the capacity to create an alternative, even though you have fooled yourself into believing that you do and you have.

Now, I wish for all of you a Happy New Year. And I mean to really have a New Year, not a "ground hog year," where every year is a repeat of the previous. Happy New Year.

Approach this year with your capacity to look at it with Vision that takes you and everyone else beyond what no longer works. That is your capacity. That's your function.

Let 2009 be the year you Glorify God!

Okay, I look forward to being with you next time. And I love you all.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 10th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, by the time we finish tonight you might not like me as well as you do right now, because the material that we're going to be covering tonight is frustrating material. And I'm not going to relieve you of the frustration. I'm going to push you right into the middle of it. Because if you don't face it and you are feeling it, you won't Wake up. If you are feeling it, you must face it.

Now, you could all look back on the time we've spent together since we've first started going through the Course, and you could notice that we started in 2002¹ and now it's 2009 and you're not Awake!

Either I'm not a very effective teacher, or you're very dense students, or the Course is nothing but a bunch of nonsense.

Now the fact is, that you're as good a student as you could be. And you're not to be faulted. I am a good teacher and I am covering the material that needs to be covered and giving you the steps that it takes to Wake up.

In the process, we've talked about the journey without distance, we've talked about the fact that the only thing ever confronting you is the Kingdom of Heaven—Reality, every day in what you call this mundane physical world. I've been saying it isn't a mundane physical world, it is the Kingdom of Heaven—we'll say, seen through a glass darkly.

The journey without distance is the journey which involves abandoning the dark glass. It isn't a matter of abandoning what you've seen through the dark glass, it's abandoning the choice to see through a glass darkly. It's a journey without distance because you're already at your destination.

So what does that mean? It means you just don't happen to be letting in the Reality of this mundane world and you're only letting in the concepts about it, which your ancestors and you have developed and set into place as a means of understanding and coping with life.

I know you've heard me say that all that is ever confronting you is the Kingdom of Heaven, and that you need to look with innocent eyes. And you may well say, "Well, over the last five years I have been willing to look with innocent eyes and I'm still in the same rat race I was. I'm still seeing things as I used to see them. True, there have been some major shifts and my life isn't as unpleasant as it used to be but I cannot, for the life of me, indicate to you or anyone else that I have the foggiest idea of what it means to be Awake.

"And then you tell me, it's right in front of me and it's a matter of how I'm choosing to look at it. And I don't know how to do it any differently. I continue to listen to you because I have hope, but there are times that I do feel hopeless. There are times I think about not listening anymore. There are times I have stopped listening and then returned."

I can't be any more grounded, any more blunt, any more straight-forward than this: If, in your daily experience, in your experience of being, if you are experiencing suffering, if you are experiencing pain—hurt of any sort—something is wrong. All of you feel that. And I'm telling you that that feeling is the truth. It is not you fooling yourself, imagining that life should be without suffering, when in fact, it is a suffering condition and one that ends in death . . . That's not the truth!

You could say that all ministers, all teachers of God who tell you that you do not have to suffer, that it's not your Birthright, are just playing on some unconscious desire you have to not face the facts. And that's not the truth. And the only way you're going to find out that it's not the truth is to persist in the face of your doubt, to persist in the face of your getting tired of not experiencing significant success at Awakening.

You are going to have to persist. Because you're standing in the presence of Reality—you're standing in the middle of Reality—Reality is the constituting presence of you. You're not separate from it. And your having the clear undistorted experience of that fact is not only your Birthright, it is your inevitable conclusion to this dream of existence, which has as its bottom line characteristic, suffering—inseparable from Being.

Now, we go into the book and it says:

How long can it take to be where God would have you? For you ARE where you have forever been and will forever be.²

Now you can read that sentence quickly and move on and not stay with it and not face what it means and therefore, not be frustrated. But it says . . .

. . . you ARE where you have forever been and will forever be.

And it follows the sentence that says . . .

How long can it take to be where God would have you?

So . . .

. . . you ARE where you have forever been and will forever be.

And that is where God would have you.

Now that doesn't mean that God would have you be in an experience of conflict and suffering. It means that God would have you be in the clear conscious awareness of Reality as It is, and not as you're currently experiencing it.

Because that is where God would have you, and because that is where you are, then there's no process for you to go through. There's no lifetimes in which you are to refine your soul and become equal to Reality or deserving of Reality. There is not a process of overcoming guilt for things you did wrong that you must pay for before you can enjoy freedom and the clear true experience of Reality.

Now, what if you've been a teacher of some of these processes by which your soul gets refined or your student's souls get refined, and I sit here and say that there is no process and therefore, what you've been doing doesn't fit—doesn't match—is incongruent with the fact that it's a journey without distance, that you're already there, your soul is already pristine, unchanged from the way God created it and the way God is expressing it in this moment?

You're not going to be happy with the news.

And those of you who have been students of teachers who have enjoyed the experience of doing what felt like growing, you're not going to be happy with the news either, because participating in the exercises that are a part of the process is not going to actually cause you to have the final experience you're after, which is to Awaken and to experience Reality.

And so, if you've made a sort of career of being on your spiritual path, you're going to have to give up your career. You're going to have to give up what you perceive to be your reason for having hope and your reason for moving forward and your reason for simply getting up in the morning with expectancy.

Now, [chuckle] without those things, those concepts, those perceptions which you had developed and put in place that made getting up in the morning worth it, how are you going to get up in the morning and feel that it's worth it to have gotten up? What's going to cause you to go to bed at night with anything other than depression, because what the hell use is it to get some sleep when there's no thing to get up for if you can't engage in the thing that establishes in your mind a sense of worth?

You see . . . we go on to the next frustrating sentence:

All that you have, you have forever.

That's not very satisfying. You probably are at a point where you read that . . .

All that you have, you have forever.

And you recognize that all that you have is in actuality, more than what you're presently experiencing. So there's a little bit of room for expectancy there and a little uplift within you, you know . . .

All that you have, you have forever.

But, even so, after everything that you have done to try to get yourself in the place where you can experience that, you're still not experiencing it.

And you know what? When you really take a look at this and it's not sugar coated, it makes you angry. Not only is it hard to have a reason to get up in the morning without expectation of anything wonderful, you find it worthwhile to become upset about anything and everything. But first of all, probably that, why didn't anyone tell you that doing all this work to refine your soul wasn't going to get you what you wanted. Why didn't anyone tell you sooner, that you don't have the capacity to be an independent authorizer?

Now, the fact is that if somebody had told you sooner, you would have gotten frustrated and angry sooner.

You see, none of you realize the degree to which you have been conditioned and the degree to which you have conditioned yourselves to find purpose for being in nonsense. And that what isn't nonsense involves your having the opportunity to experience worth and meaning without your having to do a single thing to deserve it . . . without having to do a single thing to have it . . . without being able to do anything that you can take credit for and yet still have it all.

You don't like being faced with a gift that removes any possibility of your being able to get credit for what you've received. And I'm telling you, that as you get close to an awareness that the only step there is in the "process of Awakening" is yielding and saying, "Yes" to God, what happens is, you become faced with becoming a "kept woman" or a "kept man," somebody who just "has" for no good reason. And if achieving your good has what has given you meaning, you're going to see this step as entering into a meaningless experience.

Now I have to tell you this clearly so that you might be willing to purposely and consciously step into this apparently meaningless experience so that you might actually have the experience of having all that God is added unto you because it always has been yours, and it always has been your Birthright to be experiencing it. And yet, the only way you can experience it, is to do an apparently senseless thing: Abandon the intent to engage in acts that establish a worth for you that wasn't fundamentally yours to begin with.

Continuing . . .

The blessed instant reaches out to encompass time, as God extends Himself to encompass you.

Oh-oh, now what's this blessed instant again? Let's remember it's not a point in time—it's not a moment in time. It is a place in you where there is a willingness to engage in the act of yielding and saying, "Yes" to God. In other words, being willing to shut up and become attentive, listening, with a desire to be infilled with God's Perspective which is the undistorted experience of Reality, the undistorted experience of the Kingdom of Heaven which you have been looking at and calling the earth and the universe—a material universe, that began from a big bang and had nothing to do with God.

So, this blessed instant of willingness to yield and say, "Yes" to God, reaches out to encompass time. In other words, when you relax and abandon your willful intent to be something that you have created out of whole cloth yourself—out of nothing—and turned yourself into something real, when you abandon that, and allow yourself to be in the emptiness of no willful act whatever, that absence of control, that absence of imagined and created structure within you that you have brought into existence through the use of your logic and your mind, that, the absence of that will, like silly putty, relax and spread out infinitely so that it embraces everything including what you've called, "time" because you're not blocking the experience of Reality by virtue of your theories and ideas and aggressive acts of willfulness that seemed to give you presence.

And in the absence of that false generated tension that you have called, "presence," the conscious awareness that you Are begins to register with you as the conscious experience of Being that is what you Are, and it swallows up time.

Now . . .

God extends Himself to encompass you.

But that's not special. That's not something that happens at a particular time. God's extension of Himself to encompass you is called Creation. It's called God Being you. Now . . . infinitely, eternally, forever uninterruptedly. Not even separated enough to say, "Now. . . now. . . now . . . now . . . now."

So, the . . .

. . . blessed instant . . .

. . . of your willingness to yield and say, "Yes" to God . . .

. . . reaches out to encompass time, as God extends Himself to encompass you. You who have spent days, hours, and even years in chaining your brothers to your egos in an attempt to support it . . .

. . . your egos . . .

. . . and uphold its weakness, do not perceive the Source of STRENGTH.

You thought strength was what you accrued by the skillful manipulation of your brothers and sisters so that they would acknowledge you and bolster your ego and prove that it is valid, that it has existence, and thus make of you a "real boy" or a "real girl."

But that's not strength. Strength, which we touched on last time, is the unalterability, the absolute unchangeableness of you because of what you Are, not because of what you do. And what you Are is, what God is Being right where you Are in all of His Perfection and therefore, you are invulnerable. Not because you have power, but because you're unconflicted in actuality.

Because peace is the nature of your Being, the substance of your Being, and you're not arguing with that fact anymore.

That's strength. And it's the absence of fear.

Continuing . . .

In the holy instant you will unchain ALL your brothers, and refuse to support either THEIR weakness or your OWN.

You will no longer try to manipulate them to support your weakness to strengthen you with a strength that isn't actual. And you will not join them in supporting theirs.

Now, we've talked about this before, and some of you have had the feeling that what I meant was, that in not supporting another's weakness or another's ego, or another's misperception, that you confront them with their misperceptions. And therefore, you say, "I will not join you in your bad behavior! I will not join you in this terrible attitude you're expressing!" And you convict them of a bad attitude and you claim they're responsible for it by saying, "It's their behavior!"

That's not how you refuse to support their weakness. That's how you confirm their weakness. How do you no longer support their weakness? By stopping in your tracks when another invites you, through bad behavior, to respond to them and bolster their ego by either getting mad at it, angry with it and creating friction that seems to create a sense of presence or with false praise for the bad behavior that also seems to strengthen it.

But in actuality, to not support it means that you've been willing to do the two-step. You've been willing to step back and say, "Father," ah-h see, abandon the isolation . . . "Father," see you're getting ready to yield and say, "Yes" to God, . . . "Father, what is the truth here?" And as I've said before, this doesn't mean, "What's the truth of his problem?" but, "What does this one need to know? What's the truth that this one is unaware of which, if he were aware of, he would no longer express himself in this negative manner?" Because a fear which is causing the behavior would be put to rest, you see. Because clarity was provided, and replaced that which elicited the negative behavior—the call for love instead of the expression of love.

Before you confront a brother with his faults, stop long enough to desire to know of the Father, "What is the missing piece of inspiring and healing truth that this one is unaware of, which if he were aware of it, would negate his feeling a need to behave poorly." And if you don't get it right away, keep your mouth shut until you do hear what needs to be shared, so that what you say comes out as that which is really an answer, not just a retort that puts them in their place and makes it clear to them that they're wrong and that you're not going to join them.

Continuing . . .

You do not realize how much you have misused your brothers by seeing them as sources of ego support. As a result, they witness TO the ego in your perception, and SEEM to provide reasons for not letting it go.

Well, of course, [chuckling] anytime your ego gets supported, you are very appreciative and you're not really about to let go of that brother who ignorantly is supporting what doesn't really work for you, and really keeps you ignorant of the truth about you that is a Birthright of fulfillment beyond your wildest expectations.

As a result, they witness TO the ego in your perception, and SEEM to provide reasons for not letting it go. Yet . . .

. . . and here's the important point . . . and it's the point that's part of what's frustrating, that you need to look squarely at:

Yet they are far stronger and much more compelling witnesses for the Holy Spirit. And they support His STRENGTH. It is, therefore, your choice whether they support the ego or the Holy Spirit in YOU.

You see . . .[sigh] it's therefore your choice how you're going to see them. And we've brought out in the Course that it's very simple. Your brother is always doing one of two things: Expressing Love or expressing a call for love. The expression of Love is recognized as loving. A call for love is recognized as bad behavior. A call for love is attack in one form or another, disrespect in one form or another directed at you, directed at anyone else other than the one expressing the bad behavior.

Now, if you want to be a good ego, you're going to interpret the call for love as bad behavior and you're going to respond with bad behavior. It's very simple. You can do that real easy . . . very easily. It's habit, it's well developed habit.

In fact, you'll find that as you get close to the point where you are needing to yield and say "Yes" to God, because you're at the last step, so-to-speak, or very near the last step, you're going to find your skill at being angry coming to the foreground. And, oh boy, will you be able to dish out bad behavior, bad language . . . lousy verbalizations of hate. You'll be able to do it so easily and you'll be inclined to do it about everything . . . it'll be the way the cat walked across the room or held his tail, or how come the carpet isn't clean . . . "Why doesn't anybody take care of anything!"

It will be everything. Because the last expressions of anger at having to let go of what's been meaningful to you—which is that which builds you up in your own mind by your own acts and makes a real boy or girl for you—letting that go is not a happy thing. It has meant so much to you. It's so deeply ingrained in you, that all you know is, that it's justifiable to be mad at life itself and vent it.

I've talked before about how the ego puts gargoyles up around the gates to the Kingdom of Heaven to scare you away, when you're right there at the threshold. Well likewise, the ego, your bad habits of expression that are used to build you up in your own mind, they come to the foreground right at the last minute too.

And what do they do? They distract you from remembering that all you're confronted with in actuality is the Kingdom of Heaven, perceived through a glass darkly, or perceived truly and clearly. It distracts you from that and all you see is the justification for being angry. And you can be an angry teenager, or you can be an angry thirty-year-old, or you can be a crotchety old man.

But it all boils down to the same thing: You don't want to let go of control.

You don't want to yield to the way things work. You don't even want to ask how things work, because you want the satisfaction of determining how things work through your own hard study and your own efforts, so that you can take the credit . . . and, so what! So everyone else can be manipulated into confirming for you the way you want to see things, and the way you want to believe things are. You misuse everyone to support your ego.

Now, I'm pointing out to you here, that when you come to this frustrating point that we're talking about, it's because you're at a threshold. You're at an important threshold of Waking up. And unbeknownst to your kept well hidden from your sight by you, you willingly engage in reactions, anger, venting your frustration and just generally being unpleasant, difficult to be around.

Now, I'm going to back up . . .

You do not realize how much you have misused your brothers by seeing them as sources of ego support. As a result, they witness TO the ego in your perception, and SEEM to provide reasons for not letting it go. Yet they are far stronger and much more compelling witnesses for the Holy Spirit.

Yeah, and when you're angry and frustrated you say, "Oh-h...yeah...yeah... yeah...right! That slob over there, he doesn't know his ass from a hole in the ground . . . and he doesn't behave well . . . he doesn't even keep himself clean. He doesn't know a thing about God . . . he doesn't even have a respectable job!"

Listen to you. Listen to the anger in you. Listen to how you're misusing your brother by determining him to be something other than that which is strengthening the Holy Spirit, by determining that he is not what he is, and believing your determination and laying it on him.

Oh, maybe you don't say anything to him. But you know what? In the absence of your true apprehension of him, you are absent from his experience as that which elicits from him what's true about him. And so, where you are in his experience is a place of emptiness. You're not going to get involved with him. He knows you're not involved with him and don't want to be involved with him and so he's faced with that absence of you performing your function of recognizing God right there where your brother is.

So, your brothers . . .

. . . are far stronger and much more compelling witnesses for the Holy Spirit. And they support His STRENGTH. It is, therefore, your choice whether they support the ego or the Holy Spirit in YOU.

When you are willing to look at your brother or sister who is expressing a call for love, which means expressing bad behavior, you are putting yourself in the first stage of being willing to ask God for what the truth is there, where your brother is. You're taking the first step of yielding to the Father and saying, "Yes" to God.

So . . .

It is, therefore, your choice whether they support the ego or the Holy Spirit in YOU. And you will know which you have chosen by THEIR reactions. A Son of God who has been released through the Holy Spirit in a brother, if the release is COMPLETE, is ALWAYS recognized.

When you are expressing love and that expression of love is in no way manipulative for the purpose of bringing about some end goal that is to your benefit, it is felt for what it is by a brother. And that brother feels blessed and opens his mouth and acknowledges his joy . . . and you can hear by his response what you have given and where you've been coming from.

Now, what you really need to understand is, that just as with God, Who is extending all that He Is to you, Who would have you be where He would have you be and therefore you are where He would have you be, the fact that He extends that to you doesn't mean that you've recognized it yet. And you can still walk around saying, "Wait a minute, I get the picture. You know, intuitively I'm sensing something that's different from the way I feel and the way I believe. And maybe, indeed, it's inspiration coming from the Father . . . but . . . but . . . but . . . I'm going to have to contemplate this. I'm going to have to measure this according to my best theories and my calculations. And I'm going to have to come to my own conclusions about it." And all the while you're doing that, you're not standing in receipt of what's being given, because you want to be in charge.

And when you make a gift to a brother who is still insisting upon not receiving it without running it through his particular mental sieve, his behavior will not reflect back to you the nature of the gift you've given. And it doesn't mean you've done it wrong. It doesn't mean you could have done it better.

The brother who sees your love and is blessed by it . . . feels blessed by it, and raises his voice in appreciation of it, that's because you did something right and he did something right. And the one to whom you extend the love, who still treats you poorly, it means you did something right and that other one hasn't done something right yet, and still has learning to do, still has yielding to do. He's simply not yet at the point where he's willing to yield and say, "Yes" to God.

Making the gift does not constitute a means of controlling your brother or sister into their good, any more than God's Gift to you is a means God has for controlling you into your good.

Understand this, so that you don't frustrate yourself further when you read:

. . . you will know which you have chosen by THEIR reactions.

If your brother is stubborn and has not released his stubbornness, it means there is further listening for you to do to find the key log in the log jam. But don't let the lack of recognition of your gift cause you to doubt yourself and abandon the giving of the gift.

Now . . .

A Son of God who has been released through the Holy Spirit in a brother, if the release is COMPLETE, is ALWAYS recognized.

Again, what you must understand is that your gift contributes to the release, but your brother has to participate in the release, just as you do. You have to participate. “It’s the Father’s good pleasure to give you the Kingdom.” Oh you’ve heard it, you’ve heard it, you’ve heard it. But you won’t experience the receipt of that gift until you are willing to say, “Yes” to God. You have to do your part. Your brother has to do his part.

A Son of God who has been released through the Holy Spirit in a brother, if the release is COMPLETE, is ALWAYS recognized. He cannot BE denied. As long as you remain uncertain, it can be only because you have not given complete release.

“Oh-h, isn’t this frustrating . . . Hu-h, I’m doing it, I’m doing it, I’m doing it and I’m still not seeing the fruit of it . . . I’m doing it, I’m doing it . . . and I’m getting tired of doing it and I’m getting upset, because supposedly this is a journey without distance, and I’m already at my destination. You see.

And the frustration and the anger builds and you become a massive block to your Awakening by that use of your mind, of your Being. And you’ve got to arrive at a point where you say, “I won’t do this anymore. I am going to persist. I’m going to persist in yielding and say, ‘Yes’ to God. I’m going to continue to listen forever if I have to—if it takes forever.”

When Paul first reached out for guidance, [snaps fingers] it didn’t come instantaneously. And he had to do it for many days—many more days than he thought he ought to have to do it, many less days than a lot of people. But the point is, that when he arrived in his experience at a situation that was utterly frustrating because he no longer had control, he finally had arrived at a point where he would be serious about yielding. He would be serious about yielding and saying, “Yes” to God—serious enough to persist day after day, after day, after day, after day because he had arrived at a point where there really was nothing better to do, because nothing was being presented to him to do. He was unable to control or be in charge of anything in any practical, helpful way.

And so, in that circumstance he became very practical. And he said, “If I have to sit for a year listening, I will sit for a year listening without impatience, without trying to twist the universe’s arm for a [snaps fingers] quick result.”

You see what we’re talking about here? We’re talking about being faced with an experience of suffering, in one form or another, which you are feeling within you truly is not your Birthright, is not appropriate, is not justifiable. And yet, you seem to have no way to become free of it.

Well, as long as you think maybe it isn’t absolutely required yet, you’ll play around—you’ll fool around. You don’t have to. You could go ahead and be as diligent as you ultimately will be when you arrive in a position that Paul was in, where you have no means of control no matter what you try and you finally realize . . . you finally realize that you gotta ask for help from God. And nothing else will work. And you'll engage in nothing else, because it won't work.

And so, you yield and you say, "Yes" to God. And maybe you say, "Yes, yes, yes," day after day, after day, until you're saying, "Yes" without impatience . . . until you say, "Yes" without frustration . . . until you say, "Yes" without justifying any emotional energy being interjected into the process, except allowing—being willing.

I know, you can get through your day tomorrow doing it the way you've always done it, or you can decide that tomorrow is the day that you're going to begin acting as though you don't really have any other choice. And you are going to ask God moment-by-moment, "What's the truth here? What do I need to know here? What should I do next? I will willingly be your puppet, Father. I yield to You."

As long as you remain uncertain, it can be only because you have not given complete release. You see. You're still holding on to some strings of authority and practice of manipulation relative to your brother.

And because of this, you have not given one single instant COMPLETELY to the Holy Spirit.

You haven't said, "Yes" to God.

For when you have, you will be SURE you have. You will be sure because the witness to Him . . .

. . . your Brother . . .

. . . will speak so clearly of Him

. . . God . . .

. . . that you will hear and UNDERSTAND.

Now, I must say this: Do not frustrate yourself by picking the potential witness to God who is still refusing to acknowledge God in you and the love you are expressing. Stop choosing that person or that kind of relationship as the measuring stick of your devotion and "your success" in the process of Waking up. Persist with those who are resistant.

And those who recognize the love, who are moved and whom you can see are healed in the process, rejoice with them. Let their recognition embrace you and confirm to you that you're actually moving past the inclination to indulge in frustration and anger and justify all the means you have at your beck-and-call to avoid Waking up.

This is a difficult subject. But to frustrate you further: Just remember that the difficulty is relative to a journey without distance—the difficulty you're having in being willing to see the Kingdom of Heaven right where the world and universe, as you have known it, seems to be.

And so, it's not complicated and it's not really difficult. So persist, persist, persist. And use some self-discipline this week.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 17th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I won't be quite as hard on you tonight as I was last week. But I am going to help you keep your nose to the grindstone. You may well have gone through the week and wondered, "How can I do this? How can I do what Raj is saying it's my Birthright to do . . . my nature to do?"

Well, here's a way to start: Every night when you go to bed, ask yourself the question, "Who did I bless today as a result of my involvement with them?"

And let's refine that a little bit, make it a little bit less nebulous: "How many or who that I encountered in my day has felt blessed by his or her encounter with me?"

You see, it's important for you not to be giving the definitions: "Oh, well, she had to have felt blessed after what I did for her. He must have felt blessed because such wonderful things happened."

No. It isn't what you determine blessing to be. It's what the other determines blessing to be.

So the question is, when you go to bed at night: "How many, or who, feels blessed as a result of my encounter with them today?"

This question, if you will discipline yourself enough to ask it every night, and ask it as though it's a serious question deserving an honest answer, will help to bring your attention to where it needs to be in order to engage in the act of willingness that causes the holy instant in which Awakening can occur.

You cannot get into the Kingdom of Heaven all by yourself and you can't get into the Kingdom of Heaven by virtue of how you choose to think.

It's so simple. You get into the Kingdom of Heaven as a result of an involvement with a brother—an involvement with a sister. Not just any old involvement: A fist fight doesn't count, even though it's an involvement, an argument doesn't count, even though it's an involvement.

I'm talking about an involvement in which you have given the very best of what you have to give by giving it from the place of willingness to know what God would have you say, and from a place where you are behaving how God would have you behave. Because, for some reason, it's important to you not to be alone and to be involved with another in a way that truly blesses . . . blesses by confirming to him or her that love actually exists in the Universe. And that this love is not off at a distance, but intimately present with him, or with her.

Now, how many of you would apply the word, "philanthropist" to yourself or to yourselves? How many of you think of yourselves as philanthropists? Well, probably only a few. And a few who do are the few who feel that they have a lot to give, probably a lot of money that they're in a position of being able to share on behalf of the best interests and the genuine benefit of others.

Those of you who don't think you have a lot of money, don't think of yourselves as philanthropists. And as a result, your brothers aren't on your mind in the sense of wanting to be constantly attentive to your brothers' needs or your sisters' needs to see if there is any way in which you might be able to contribute to the meeting of those needs.

Philanthropists are not casual in their activity. One is not an occasional philanthropist. A philanthropist has a dedication to that activity. As a general rule, their life is given over to the activity. And so his brothers and his sisters, or her brothers and sisters are the object of their attention with an active interest in being able to make significant change for the better in that brother's or sister's life.

Now you don't have to have a lot of money in order to have a commitment to your brothers and sisters, and to be available to them to gift them with that which will be of value and benefit to them. The fact is, that no matter how much or little of earthly value you think you have, you have a divine function: To look into your brother's eyes and remember God . . . to look into your brother's eyes and see God instead of his concept of himself, or your best concept of him. That's being a philanthropist. It could also be called, being a "Mentor."

How many of you can identify yourselves as a mentor? Some of you can, some of you are formal mentors . . . like a big brother. And some of you are not formal mentors but you do engage in what? Involving yourselves with others, in time-consuming, energy-consuming, feeling, involving ways, which by virtue of their expression, cause those who are being mentored to feel better about themselves, to dare to be more fully what they are, or as I said before, to feel that love is a reality in this world and you've proven it to them and they are ever so grateful to you for it because they recognize what? The love of the involvement with you and the absence of manipulation and self-seeking on your part.

All of you really have, for the most part, been conditioned to take care of No. 1. That's why there's such a phrase as "Taking care of No. 1"—being self-responsible, being respectable on your own, and on and on and on. And if accomplishing that involves taking advantage of your brother, you take advantage of your brother. That's not mentoring. That's stealing. That's unprincipled.

A mentor gifts, and in effect, replenishes what seems to have been absent. Where there was a vacancy, it is now full because of the gift made—the gift of love—and again, the investment of actual time, actual energy and feeling on behalf of a brother.

"Oh-h, I don't have time to do that for him. I've got to take care of myself. I have so many urgent things knocking at my door!"

Well, I'm going to suggest to you that you might not have as many things knocking at your door of an urgent nature if your behavior shifted from getting to giving.

You're here to be philanthropic. You're here to be a mentor. You're here to give of the very best in you so that the very best in your brother and sister can be illuminated and brought forth.

Now, continuing from where we left off last week in the book:

You will doubt until you hear ONE witness whom you have wholly released through the Holy Spirit. And then you will doubt no more.¹

Here's a bit of frustrating information but practical fact that will help you not be misled:

The holy instant has not yet happened to you. Yet it will, and you will recognize it with perfect certainty.

The moment it happens to anyone, everyone else will know. And those around you will know it first. And the news will spread like wildfire. So do understand that the holy instant has not yet happened to you.

Yet it will, and you will recognize it . . .

. . . and everyone else will recognize it . . .

. . . with perfect certainty. No gift of God is recognized in any other way.

What does that mean?

No gift of God is recognized in any other way.

It means, that no gift of God is recognized in any way other than an experience you're having. It will not happen as an intellectual [snaps fingers] realization, an internal "Ah-ha!" It will be an experience. An experience of what? An experience of you reborn—an experience of you that you haven't experienced in a very long time—one that will be absolutely clear to you, one about which there will be no question whatsoever in your mind.

Now . . .

You can practice the mechanics of the holy instant, and will learn much from doing so.

Well, what's the holy instant? The holy instant, as we've said, is the act, the place in which you yield and say, "Yes" to God. And the "yes" means you're turning your attention to God, listening, so that you might be the place where the Will of God and the Perspective of God fills you up and passes through you as a blessing to your brothers, sisters, world, and on and on and on. That's the holy instant.

Now . . .

You can practice the mechanics of the holy instant, . .

Well what does that mean?

Well, you can be the best damn mentor you can be. You can be the best damn philanthropist you can be. You can do all of the philanthropic things that philanthropists have done. You can do all of the best mentoring that mentors have done. But you know what? That's not having the experience.

But the practice of the attitude of constant caring, the willingness to not be a casual or intermittent philanthropist but an ongoing presence of caring about your brother so that you're willing to invest time, energy, feelings and involvement with your brother, those things educate you and get you into a place where the pattern of selfishness can break—can lose its strength of structure—and can begin to fall away from you so that the experience can be had, so that the holy instant . . . so that what the holy instant is, can happen to you and register with you.

If you want the holy instant to happen, then you've got to shift—as we've been saying—from getting to giving. You've got to shift to being willing to be a mentor. You've got to be willing to do whatever it takes, so that each night when you go to bed and you say, "How many, or whom that I encountered during the day feels blessed by my encounter with them?"

If you're going to ask that question each day, each night, it means that it better be your intent to carry it out—to embody it as you've gone through your day. And you have always ample opportunity because the likelihood is you will come in contact with at least one brother or sister with whom you will have an involvement. And one is the magic number. Two is great, three is wonderful. But one is the magic number. One is all it takes for you to be a mentor—for you to be a philanthropist.

You can practice the mechanics of the holy instant, . . .

You can do all the right things. You can think all the right thoughts. You can be loving so that others recognize loving kindness. But you're here to be Love. You're here to be Love itself. Love is unpremeditated. Love is what happens when you step out of the way and abandon control so that the Love that God is, which He is embodying as His Expression right where you are, can uninhibitedly extend from you and bless your brother in ways that you couldn't have calculated, but in ways that will cause your brother to feel blessed—truly blessed—so that you, at the end of the day, can ask, "How many, or who has been blessed by my encounter with them?" and you can say, "One or two or more" instead of "none."

If you do not have the intent to bless a brother, at least one, during the day, every day . . . what? . . . you're not fulfilling your purpose. You're not aligning yourself with the Atonement. You're not bringing anything to bear upon your experience to cause Awakening, no matter how many loving things you've done, no matter how many gifts you've made. Many people make gifts. But before they make the gift, they never wonder what would constitute a gift to the receiver. Most say, "I love to do this. I want for my friend to be able to do it too. I will give to them what they need in order to be able to do what I love."

And yet, that may not be at all fulfilling to your brother. And the gift, although it constitutes doing, “the right thing” or “being loving,” it doesn’t constitute actual connection—actual involvement with your brother—except, perhaps, to cause a feeling in your brother or sister that says, “Wow, he or she really doesn’t understand me. He or she has no idea who I am. There’s no connection between us whatsoever.” And so your gifting didn’t constitute mentoring and it didn’t constitute philanthropy.

You want to give what meets the need. You want to give what actually constitutes blessing and you will not know what that is until you ask God what it is by saying, “Father, fill me with what You would have me be in spite of what I think I want, in spite of what I think he or she needs. I don’t want to interfere with being the perfect expression of You, Father, because I want to Wake up from the limitation and the suffering that I’m experiencing as a result of my faith in and devotion to the idea of independence.”

Now, again . . .

You can practice the mechanics of the holy instant, and will learn much from doing so. Yet its shining and glittering brilliance, which will literally blind you to this world . . .

. . . Uh-oh, blind you to this world that isn’t real—this world and universe that’s an illusion? No. It will blind you to the concepts and beliefs and ideas you have made up about the Kingdom of Heaven that have been flawed by misperceptions—that have been flawed by the fact that you chose to give them definitions different from what the Father was Being as the Kingdom of Heaven.

So, it’s shining . . .

Yet its shining and glittering brilliance, which will literally blind you to this world . . .

. . . I’m going to add, that you made up . . .

. . . by its own vision, you cannot supply.

I’m will read it again:

Yet its shining and glittering brilliance, . .

. . . what does that mean? That means the divine livingness, the divine vitality of the holy instant . . .

. . . which will literally blind you to this world by its own vision, you cannot supply.

The holy instant supplies it. It supplies it when you stop trying to supply it by means of your own vision, your own envisioning, your own imagining. You cannot supply it, you've been trying to supply it and you've been missing Reality.

Hey, if abandoning your attempts to supply the meaning to everything, even though it means giving up control that you think you have—control that you think you ought to have and control that you think your sanity depends upon—if giving that up means you might have the experience of Atonement, that you might have the experience of returning to your sanity and experiencing what you've been calling the Kingdom of Heaven in which there is no sin, sickness or death, in which there is no conflict, then why the hell not try giving up the attempt to supply the meaning yourself! Or, as some of you would prefer I say, "Why in Heaven's name not abandon it!"

You can practice the mechanics of the holy instant, and will learn much from doing so. Yet its shining and glittering brilliance, which will literally blind you to this world by its own vision, you cannot supply. And here it is, ALL in this instant, complete, accomplished, and given WHOLLY.

You can't supply it yourself, but here it is in its entirety—in an instant. That means that it's not something you have to earn that takes time, but the minute you completely step aside, the minute you completely abandon willfulness, all of it in its entirety replaces the ignorance you've been suffering from, not just as an idea, but as an experience—the undistorted experience of Reality. And again, I must say that it's available to you in any given moment of any day you're in the middle of, or any night.

Everything essential to your Awakening is present at any given moment. All of Reality in its entirety is available to you in a [snaps fingers] split second . . . when what? When you genuinely insist upon stopping whatever processes you're in, whatever ego satisfying processes you're in, and you say, "Father,"—you reach out, in other words, outside of your privacy, outside of your imagined separateness—"Father, what is the truth here?" Not only that, "What is the truth here about my brother? My brother deserves more than he's experiencing. He deserves to experience his Birthright, which is more than what he's experiencing. Help me mentor him by revealing to me how to be in his presence. I don't know how to do it. The holy instant has not yet happened to me, therefore, I'm going to stop trying to create the holy instant. I'm going to shut up. And in the silence I'm going to let You fill me with Yourself, which will constitute the holy instant. Why? [deep sigh] Because my brother has become more important to me, than me."

See, I'm still . . . and the Course is still keeping your nose to the grindstone, but a little more sweetly and a little bit more gently than last week. It's a little bit more palatable. But the definiteness with which I spoke last week needs to be something that you bring into your willingness to mentor or to be a philanthropist, as an expression of what is fundamental to your very being. Because someone has now told you that it is fundamental to your being and that your calling it forth by your giving your attention to it, is the means by which you escape sin, sickness and death, conflict, suffering and Wake up so that what the words "Kingdom of Heaven" mean is an actual experience and not just an incredible idea.

Continuing . . .

Start now to practice your little part in separating out the holy instant. You will receive very specific instructions as you go along. To learn to separate out this single second, and begin to experience it as timeless, is to begin to experience yourself as NOT separate. Fear not that you will not be given help in this. God's Teacher . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, . . .

. . . and His lesson will support your strength. It is only your weakness that will depart from you in this practice, for it is the practice of the power of God in you.

You see, it, the practice of the power of God, is the practice of letting God in and through you by saying, "Father, show me your perspective. Show me how You would have me be, show me how to reflect all that is true about You and therefore, all that is Real about me, so that I no longer engage in the expression of things that are not Real about me, and as a result, blind myself to my capacity to mentor—to my capacity to be a full-time philanthropist.

Use it but for one instant, . . .

. . . use what? The power of God.

Use it but for one instant, and you will never deny it again. Who can deny the Presence of what the universe bows to, in appreciation and gladness? Before the recognition of the universe which witnesses to It, your doubts MUST disappear.

I know, be careful of this: [whiny voice] "I can't do anything about my doubts. I just have them. They consume me sometimes . . . they overwhelm me sometimes . . ." Oh-h-h . . . but I'm telling you that doubt is something you practice! Doubt isn't something that overwhelms you. Doubt is an inner experience of . . . or it is an inner expression of weakness that is clearly calculated because you believe that you are limited and you believe that you don't know everything and you believe that you are vulnerable because of it. And your clear belief, which you have commitment to, is pure imagination. It's not the truth. You are the Christ employing ignorance consciously. Got it?

You are Christs' employing ignorance consciously and you come back to the rules that you have made up that say you have not the means to be philanthropic. You have not the means to give, because you lack. You do not have, and as a result, you are vulnerable.

You use those thoughts, you use those words almost like a mantra. You weave a spell on yourself using those kind of words. They're not true! Stop using them! I'm not saying make up some new words that are positive. I'm saying stop doing what isn't true. Abandon your independent stance and ask the Holy Spirit in you—which is nothing more than your right Mind—to reveal Its place in you, as you in your right Mind, so that you can abandon these conscious practices of ignorance.

Before the recognition of the universe which witnesses to It, . .

. . . the holy instant . . .

. . . your doubts MUST disappear.

"Oh-h-h . . . wonderful, they're going to be wiped out of my experience. I will no longer be subject to them. They'll no longer overwhelm me." No! [laughing] They will disappear . . . why? Because you're going to abandon their use. You're going to abandon practicing ignorance [whining voice] and creating for yourself an experience of helplessness. That's pure bullshit!

Is it because you're malicious that you do it? No! It's because it's an interesting thing to do. It can be a fascinating thing, a fascinating use you can put your mind to because it creates these false experiences that are fearful, fearsome, and which can cause in you a feeling of trying to overcome them and maybe doing it. But you don't have to do these interesting things that cause you to be unconscious of Reality, unconscious of the Kingdom of Heaven right where you're calling it the world and the universe that came from the big bang and had not a thing to do with God. So . . .

Before the recognition of the universe which witnesses to It,
your doubts MUST disappear.

Your practice of doubt must be given up. And I don't mean that as a command: [stern voice] You must give them up! When you yield enough for the influx of revelation to occur, the practice of doubt will disappear. It must disappear . . . it must disappear because it can no longer hold interest for you.

It can no longer be fascinating to you because the experience of Reality is so much more full and satisfying than the experience of ignorance that causes fear, that causes you to feel the need to overcome it, and in overcoming it, prove to yourself that you as an independent entity exist and are real!

The next section is called:

LITTLENES VERSUS MAGNITUDE

Be not content with littleness, but be sure you understand what littleness is, and why you could never BE content with it. Littleness is the offering you gave YOURSELF. You offered this in place of magnitude, and you ACCEPTED it.

That's what I just said. You have made up this picture of you. You've made little rules. The little rules cause you to feel insecure, cause you to have doubts, which you practice very consciously by rehearsing these rules you first made up. And as a result, the picture you have of yourself is not one of a philanthropist, is not one of a mentor.

You offered this in place of magnitude, and you ACCEPTED it.

In your acceptance of it, it was like signing, sealing and delivering it into law as that which is governing you, even though you are governing yourself by their use, by their conscious practice.

Everything in this world is little because it is a world made out of littleness, in the strange belief that littleness can content you.

You have taken the Kingdom of Heaven and redefined it, causing that which was infinite to become less than it was—little.

Everything in this world . . .

. . . you have made up by means of your definitions . . .

. . . is little because it is a world made out of . . .

. . . what? The littleness of you, [whiny voice] who couldn't possibly be a philanthropist or a mentor.

. . . in the strange belief that littleness can content you.

Well, you say, "Why would I say that littleness would content me?" Well, the way you say littleness will content you, is that littleness causes you to feel incompetent, invulnerable, and creates in you a desire to overcome that, and going for the carrot, attempting the impossible, makes you feel good about yourself. And so, you stick with the ignorance and you go after the carrot add infinitum. And thus, littleness contents you because of the hit you get from trying to overcome it. That's how.

When you strive for anything in this world with the belief that it will bring you peace, you are belittling yourself, and blinding yourself to glory.

Listen to this:

Littleness and glory are the choices open to your striving and your vigilance.

They're the two choices you have—littleness and glory.

You will always choose one at the EXPENSE of the other. Yet what you do not realize, each time you choose, is that your choice is your evaluation of YOURSELF.

Philanthropist . . . mentor . . . [whiny voice] or the poor little somebody in need, that would just love to find a good mentor or philanthropist who would let you be poor and tiny and not do anything to disturb it, except to ease it by giving you a little money or by helping you to be more comfortable in your littleness, by giving you some inspiring ideas that make your tolerance of littleness something that speaks well of you and contributes to your spiritual development and the refinement of your soul. You see. But that's not philanthropy and that's not mentoring.

Choose littleness and you will not have peace, for you will have judged yourself unworthy of it.

Not only will you have judged yourself unworthy of it, you will have denied that it's available to you as an experience. You will, by your refusing to acknowledge what you divinely are, block the experience of the truth about you.

Choose littleness and you will not have peace, for you will have judged yourself unworthy of it. And whatever you offer as a substitute . . .

. . . whatever definitions you come up with, whatever justifications you find for taking care of number one, instead of shifting to gifting . . .

. . . is much too poor a gift to satisfy you.

It won't really satisfy you because it won't uncover to you your invulnerability, it won't uncover to you an experience of being that no longer includes sin, sickness or death.

It is essential that you accept the fact, and accept it gladly, that there is no form of littleness that can EVER content you. You are free to try as many as you wish, . .

. . . and you all have . . .

. . . but all you will be doing is to delay your homecoming. For you will be content only in magnitude, which is your home.

And so, this brings us back to the initial questions: Are any of you able to identify yourselves as mentors or philanthropists? Are any of you able to identify yourselves as that which has as its purpose and function and which is the derivative of Meaning for your existence, the capacity to give and the willingness to actually do it, by caring enough to relate to your brothers and sisters in a way that allow you at the end of the day to say, "Yes, there is one, or there are five, who have benefited from my involvement with them because I was willing to do the two step and say, 'Yes, Father, I yield to You and Your perspective—fill me with It. I am willing to take the time to be with my brother in a way that allows the truth to come forth, even if it is a little bit strenuous, even if it takes time up from other things I would rather be doing. I am beginning to realize that the other things I would rather be doing don't involve involvement with my brother, and therefore, do not involve anything that is essential to my Waking up. The other things I would rather do, contribute in no way to my salvation.'"

Now, I'm not just sitting here throwing around spiritual words because we're having a spiritual talk, I'm using words that you use. And even if you might not use them often, the word salvation has meaning for you and you know that sooner or later you wish to experience salvation. But at the moment you can take a little more suffering, it's not quite an urgent thing yet to you to squarely look your salvation in the face and find out what you need to do to have it.

Now, I'm going to back up here.

Start now to practice your little part in separating out the holy instant. You will receive very specific instructions as you go along.

Don't let your ego say, "Well, Paul is lucky, he is in touch with his Guidance. I'm not in touch with my Guidance. Oh, and I've tried to get in touch with my Guidance, but nothing has happened." Okay, and there you are weaving your tale, there you are weaving a story that will become a rule. And you'll use it [whining] to practice doubt with commitment. And yet, all it is, is a story you made up that isn't true, and that you can't be bound by and you're not bound by. And the only thing that causes you to seem to be bound by it is the unrelenting commitment you make to that fairytale, that story.

You will receive very specific instructions as you go along.

But you know what? In order to get the instructions, you've got to be willing to say, "Hey, I am going to become a mentor. Hey, I'm going to become a philanthropist. I'm going to change my mental framework so that my every day includes a desire to notice needs that my brother's having. And where I can be of help, I will set down what I'm doing and help—involve myself with them as I am led by virtue of my listening.

You know, I could say it's a shame that one has to have such a long book to prove to you the truth of the simplicity of the "Golden Rule." But we don't have to say it's a sad thing . . . it's a wonderful thing that you have ceaseless, ongoing, unending justification being provided to you, as long as you're reading this book for finding the truth of the simple fact, "Do unto others as you would have them do unto you."

Be a philanthropist. Be Love. And do it by not imagining what being loving is, do it by stopping in your tracks, silencing your willfulness, your intent to be the originator of your thoughts and your awarenesses, and reach out to, if not God, the Holy Spirit, which is the Voice for God as it happens, but which is at the bottom line that which is nothing more than your right Mind, and lean into it so that you might become integrated once again and come back into your right Mind and bless your brother and Wake up.

I love you all. And enjoy the week you have that is full of moment-by-moment opportunities to practice philanthropy, to mentor and to Wake up. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 24th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

So, we've been talking about the frustration of Awakening.

How many of you found that your attempts to mentor or to be philanthropic this past week was full of unhindered success, we'll say? And how many of you found that . . . well, I'm not going to ask how many of you found that your attempts to give were received, I want to ask how many of you found that in the willingness to, with some persistence, be philanthropic or to care enough about your brother to be aware of his or her needs—so that you would be able to mentor—and found that you, yourself, were grabbing frantically for your right to be angry, your right to be upset, your right not to have to let go of engaging in judgment?

Now, this might not have happened with a direct connection in your mind between your intent to give, your intent to mentor, and the anger you felt or the right to be peeved, but I'm going to ask you to take a look at it because it's a simple fact that this experience is pointing out to you . . . the simple fact is, that if part of you—the wise part of you, the sane part of you—chooses for sanity, chooses to engage in the two-step to find out what constitutes being Love, as I said last week, your ego habit is going to raise it's head and, we'll say, demand equal time. It is going to say, "Be angry about something . . . be angry about life . . . be angry about the situation . . . be angry about your body . . . be angry about the fact that considering all of the years of effort you've put into Awakening, you still seem to be getting old, or you still seem to have caught a cold." You see.

How many of you have become angry and become totally distracted from a conscious intent to be able to go to bed at the end of the day and ask, "Who, in my experience today, has felt blessed by our encounter?"

How many of you, in the face of many good things happening in the world, have suddenly felt a right to be depressed, upset, frustrated, and willing to deny everything—all of the good that you have engaged in, all of the study, all of the practicing of truth?

Be aware that this is a dynamic which will come up as you—the sane part of you—makes a decision within yourself to abandon the right to be upset because it's your intent to let yourself be the presence of Love, whatever that turns out to be as you yield to the Father and say, "Thy Will be done. Share with me Your Perspective so that as I look at my brother or sister or myself, I might see what is true, so that all of the feelings associated with the knowledge of truth might accompany my every action, my every intonation, my every behavior as I am present in and active in the world." You see?

Does this mean it's going to be a struggle? I mean after all . . . I would imagine that most of you have felt like, if you have a spiritual intent, if you have an intent that is holy, for lack of better words, one that is in harmony with the Father's Will, that the red carpet will unroll in front of you . . . the way will be made easy . . . and you will sort of slide into the Kingdom of Heaven, like a home-run.

Well, it's not that way. And it's not that way because of your well-established habits. For example: Your feeling of a right to be able to be frustrated, your right to engage in judgment, your right to determine levels and whether you're on a higher or lower level than someone else. And depending upon where you are, certain behaviors are appropriate. If you're on a higher level, you can lord it over the other one. If you are on a lower level, you can bitch at the one on the higher level, you can argue to either whittle him down or to lift yourself up to become equal.

The point is, that these life-style habits which could almost be called, "being-habits," because you've used them for so long and you're not aware that they were something that you made up and applied and then got used to, to the point where it seemed second nature to you, and not something that you learned and put on like a garment and used to identify yourself.

So it's going to take some work. It's going to take some diligence. And that's what I've been talking about for the last couple of weeks.

Now, if during this past week, when you knew something to do, like have the intent to be able to arrive at the end of your day and ask, "Who have I encountered today that feels blessed by our encounter?" If you have been doing that this week and run into difficulties, either coming from external sources, or coming from your own deep-seated right to be judgmental, don't stop.

Continue this next week. Acknowledge that it's going to take diligence on your part. Acknowledge that it's going to require of you that you make a choice and keep returning to your choice, your choice being: To function out from peace rather than to function out from reaction. And then, as you would if you were meditating and saying a mantra, when you find that you've stopped saying the mantra—when you discover it—bring yourself back to the mantra. When you discover that you've opted for the right to be upset for whatever reason, come back to your choice for your peace, come back to your intent to be in your encounter with your brother with a conscious request of the Father to be filled by His Perspective about your brother so that It might infill you and allow you, from your heart, from your soul, to extend It to your brother with joy, as Love.

Don't become discouraged and don't take your self-satisfied frustration and judgment . . . don't let it govern you. Don't let it be the rule by which you measure what it's worth to be doing . . . what is worthwhile to be doing. Recognize it. Recognize that it's inconsistent with your real purpose, which is to come out from your peace with the Father's Perspective and return your attention there, over and over and over and over and over and over again! For how long? Until you don't slip out of it anymore. It's that simple. Until you've come back into your right Mind. Until your sanity, which never ever really left you, reigns permanently over you.

Let's go into the book.

There is a deep responsibility you owe yourself, and one which you must learn to remember all the time. ¹

You'll forget . . . and you'll remember . . . and you'll forget . . . and you'll remember . . . and you'll forget . . . and you'll remember. But . . .

There is a deep responsibility you owe yourself, and one which you must learn to remember . . .

. . . and not forget . . . and remember . . . and not forget . . .

. . . to remember all the time. The lesson will seem hard at first, but you will learn to love it when you realize that it is true, and constitutes a tribute to your power.

The lesson will seem hard at first. Why? Because it's not your habit anymore. And you are going to have to break the habit! And like giving up smoking or any other addiction, giving up your addiction to judgment, giving up your addiction to operating out of your peace, will take work. It . . .

. . . will seem hard at first, but you will learn to love it when you realize that it is true, and constitutes a tribute to your power.

. . . a tribute to your integrity . . . a tribute to your strength . . . your God-given integrity is your strength. The integrity that is built into you is your strength. The integrity of you that's built into you that you have to do nothing to gain because it's already there.

. . . when you realize that it is true, and constitutes a tribute to your power.

. . . you will learn to love it and you won't mind being persistent because you will be being persistent on behalf of all that's real about you, all that is valuable about you, all about you that constitutes the absence of the experience of sin, sickness and death.

You who have sought and found littleness, remember this: Every decision which you make stems from what you think you ARE, and represents the value that you PUT upon yourself.

Um-m . . . we talked last week about, do you feel like a philanthropist or do you feel like someone who has not what it takes to share meaningfully, and therefore, you couldn't possibly be a philanthropist? That's the definition you're giving yourself. And if you are feeling lack and an inability to make a gift of significance, you are believing a story that has been made up, either by someone else who has taught it to you or through your own imagination. But it's not the truth.

You who have sought and found littleness, . .

. . . found it, took hold of it, embodied it, incorporated it into your very presence. Now why would you incorporate it into your very presence? Why would you do that with littleness? Because there's benefit to littleness. If you are little enough, you can get on the social welfare rolls and things will be given to you and there's a payoff. In littleness, you can get benefits from friends who care about you and believe that your littleness is as true as you believe it is, but don't want you to suffer, and so they're thoughtful . . . you see . . . to help you not suffer from your littleness anymore than is necessary.

So . . .

You who have sought and found littleness, . .

. . . and incorporated it into your being . . .

. . . remember this: Every decision which you make stems from what you think you ARE, and represents the value that you PUT upon yourself. Believe the little can content you, and by limiting yourself, you will not be satisfied.

Now here's where, "The way things work" come into play: You can choose for littleness, thinking that by doing that and creating it as a result of your authority, that you will be able to find an experience of satisfaction. But that's like trying to plant an apple-seed and expect to get a pear from the tree that grows. That's not the way things work. You opt for littleness and you exercise it with all of your authority and might and I'm sorry, because of the way things work, you will not find satisfaction from littleness because you are not God and you're not making up the rules no matter how diligently and energetically you try.

So . . .

Believe the little can content you, and by limiting yourself, you will not be satisfied. For your function is NOT little, and it is only by finding your function and fulfilling it that you can escape from littleness.

. . . which means, that you can escape from that which isn't fulfilling.

Now, something that isn't mentioned here, but I will bring out, is, that regardless of how little you think you are, regardless of how inconsequential you think you are, and no matter how much you think you must do outrageous things in order to overcome your littleness, your embodiment of littleness is generated, activated, brought forth with all of the power of the Christ that you Are.

What that means is, that when the Christ that you Are, attempts to do something that is inconsistent with the Christ that you Are, the experience you are going to have will be unavoidably uncomfortable. It will unavoidably hurt. And the more power you bring to bear upon your effort, the more pain you will experience as you attempt to do the impossible. Remember that.

Remember, the insanity of being the ultimate—the Christ—engaged in trying to demonstrate that you are not the Christ, that you are little, that you are inconsequential, that you are not whole. It is so ridiculous! And although it hurts greatly to engage in doing it, the hurt is not damaging. That is important. The hurt is not damaging. Because the moment you stop the endeavor, the pain will lesson. And the moment you cease the endeavor entirely, the pain, the suffering will be entirely gone, because all the pain was, was the knowing, the innate divine Knowing of your Being pointing out to you that you are doing something silly, that you're doing something unreasonable, that you are doing something that amounts to nothing. But as long as you are believing that it amounts to something, you must be faced with a call for correction. It's that simple. The moment the call for correction is heeded, the suffering stops, because the Christ that you Are begins to behave like the Christ that you Are.

Now, this brings us back to the same issue. How is it that you're going to start behaving like the Christ that you Are? Through diligence. Through the intent to no longer engage in that which can't be accomplished. And that which can't be accomplished is, you acting as an independent authority—an orphan as we've spoke of it.

. . . your function is NOT little, and it is only by finding your function and fulfilling it that you can escape from littleness.

Now . . .

There is no doubt about what your function is, for the Holy Spirit KNOWS what it is.

If the Holy Spirit knows what it is, and the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, then that which is the essentialness of you knows what it is, and therefore, you should be being consciously aware of what it is. It's not only your Birthright to be aware of it, it is to be the ongoing ever-present state of Mind you are experiencing right now, today, without becoming more than you presently are.

There is no doubt about what your function is, for the Holy Spirit KNOWS what it is. There is no doubt about its . . .

. . . what? Tininess? Littleness? No.

There is no doubt about its magnitude, for it reaches you through Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . FROM Magnitude.

. . . with a capital "M," meaning: Magnitude Itself—God!

You do not have to strive for it, because you HAVE it. All your striving must be directed AGAINST littleness, . .

. . . you see, that's where the attention needs to be. Not on demonstrating your littleness, but invalidating your littleness. Being conscious enough as you go through your day to notice when you're beginning to behave, little.

How can you notice when you're doing that? Because whenever you're doing that, you're uncomfortable! Now you may say you're getting satisfaction out of being angry at your brother, but what about your blood pressure? What about your body while you're doing it—getting all this irate satisfaction out of your system . . . why your heart's racing . . . and any doctor will tell you that it's not healthy for you. It's called, S-T-R-E-S-S!

Oh, but you don't mind, you know . . . "Forget about that, it's not hurting me a bit! I tell ya, I'm so pissed off with that guy . . . and boy the more I let myself feel it, and the more I rail at him, the better I feel!"

[chuckle] But you don't. And that's because you're opting for littleness. Think about it for a moment: Magnitude is, I'm going to say, the foundation and superstructure of your Being. The entirety of your Being is Magnitude. If Magnitude is the nature and state of your Being, what on earth could justify your being upset with your brother? What could your brother take away from Magnitude that can't be taken away from you? What could he have done that would have caused you to be less than Magnitude? Nothing. You see?

You might not have thought about the fact that if you were willing to consider yourself to be a philanthropist, you would naturally feel invulnerable. Because one who has much to give and always has much to give can't be put in a position of not having enough to give but being demanded of. And so your way of being is going to be one without fear.

Another's lack cannot be dangerous to you. And your magnitude felt is something that you will not be able to avoid extending to your brother, not just as things given, but as an attitude for him to be willing to embrace, because he sees someone else embracing it and sees someone else being blessed by it and sees it, therefore, as a possibility for himself or herself.

So let's go back again . . .

There is no doubt about what your function is, for the Holy Spirit KNOWS what it is. There is no doubt about its magnitude, for it reaches you through Him FROM . . .

. . . capital "M" . . .

. . . Magnitude. You do not have to strive for it, because you HAVE it. All your striving . . .

. . . here's the key:

All your striving must be directed AGAINST littleness, for it DOES require vigilance to protect your magnitude in this world.

The reason it takes diligence, first of all, is because it's not your habit to be constantly aware of your magnitude. And so, your habits of littleness will creep in and fight against, or drag you down as you're holding on to the awareness of your magnitude. Not only that, your brothers and sisters who are not feeling magnitude press against you, treating you as though you have no magnitude just as they don't, and elicit from you . . . what? . . . anger, frustration—all those things that identify littleness, the practice of littleness in you. Not only that, many of your brothers and sisters elicit from you these reactions because you have elicited negative reactions from them first and they're paying you back.

And so, your actions have repercussions that come back to you as you are daring to shift gears and embrace magnitude instead of littleness, and to do the two-step instead of responding with a knee-jerk reaction without any inquiry as to what is wise, what is true here, so that you and your fellowman might be blessed by the truth that will come through you. You see?

All your striving must be directed AGAINST littleness, for it DOES require vigilance to protect your magnitude in this world.

I will say this: As your practice of vigilance and your awareness of the magnitude of you, being the truth about you, established since Creation itself, as that fills more of your awareness than it does at this moment, it becomes easier—the vigilance becomes easier—because it becomes worth it to you. And you always do put your energy behind things that feel worthwhile to you. But the diligence must be brought into play to bring you to that point where what is true about you feels true about you and becomes something worth something to you.

To hold your magnitude in perfect awareness in a world of littleness is a task the little cannot undertake.

What does that mean? That means that the moment any of you take on the task of abandoning littleness, you've made a shift. Something in you is not feeling littleness as strongly or with as great commitment, because the little can't abandon littleness.

Again . . .

To hold your magnitude in perfect awareness in a world of littleness is a task the little cannot undertake. Yet it is asked of you, . .

Now don't get pissed off because you're being asked to do something impossible. Take it as a compliment. That you're being asked to do it, means that you must be able to do it and therefore, you must not be "the little." You see?

. . . it is asked of you, in tribute to your magnitude and NOT your littleness. Nor is it asked of you alone.

This is really important to remember, because until you're willing to actually start Home, so-to-speak, to abandon littleness, you are alone, because you're trying to figure out everything yourself, you're trying to do everything yourself, you're trying to lift yourself up by your own bootstraps so that you can take full credit. And you believe that that's the way life is set up, that's the way God made it and, therefore, you must be able to accomplish it. And you are alone and it's not your Birthright to be alone.

To start Home involves your reaching outside yourself in one way or another including something else that you're willing to lean into or lean upon. And it happens when you say, "Help!" It happens when you reach out to the Father, God, the Creator, the Builder of the Universe, however you want to conceive it, whatever you want to call it. But you've got to break the isolation.

To hold your magnitude in perfect awareness in a world of littleness is a task the little cannot undertake. Yet it is asked of you, in tribute to your magnitude and NOT your littleness. Nor is it asked of you alone.

I have often told people, that the moment they turn their attention toward their Guide—once they know they have one—and they reach out to their Guide, they may know that their Guide has been waiting . . . waiting patiently for this moment. And the moment you reach out to connect with your Guide, your Guide is reaching out to connect with you. And so, you're not doing it all by yourself. You're no longer doing it alone. And it's important to know this.

To be alone is hell. To be alone is a suffering experience. Now it's not asked of you to do this alone. The power of God will support every effort you make on behalf of his dear Son, meaning you and meaning your brother—if it's done on behalf of your brother—but right now it's you.

The power of God will support every effort you make on behalf of His dear Son.

. . . or Daughter.

Search for the little, and you deny yourself His power.

Now, understand this:

God is not willing that His Son be content with less than everything.

Now, that can be taken both ways:

God is not willing that His Son be content . . .

. . . nor is God willing as an act of will for you to be content. You see?

God is not willing that His Son be content with less than everything. For He is not content without His Son, and His Son cannot be content with less than His Father has given him.

We're talking about Magnitude as opposed to littleness.

We asked you once before, "Would you be hostage to the ego or host to God?" Let this question be asked you by the Holy Spirit in you every time you make a decision. For every decision you make DOES answer this, and invites sorrow or joy accordingly.

Every time you make a decision . . . Paul, is deciding to have a drink of water. Did he do it himself? . . . all by himself? . . . without any consciousness of a connection with the Father? Was that glass a material glass? Was it holding a physical substance called water . . . H²O? . . . or, were he and the glass and the water all divine manifestations of the Presence of God being together in a cooperative and involved way, being in relationship with each other in which the joy and beauty of spiritual communion was occurring?

Was he hostage to the ego or host to God? No matter what you're doing, are you hostage to the ego or host to God? Are you opting for littleness or are you opting for magnitude? Are you participating in what will facilitate the impulsion of your conscious awareness out of all of the meanings of littleness into the conscious experience of Atonement, the conscious experience of coming back into your Sanity, your right Mind—in which what everything really registers with you and you're not in the slightest inclined to misperceive it, nor is there any desire to misperceive it?

... every decision you make DOES answer this, . .

... whether or not you would be hostage to the ego or host to God . . .

... and invites sorrow or joy accordingly.

Magnitude is an interesting word. It's something that I know you all can contemplate. And in the contemplation of it, it's like magnitude is like the word "grand" . . . a grand idea . . . a grand meaning. But what does it mean . . . grand? What does magnitude mean? Well, when God gave Himself to you in your Creation, He established you as host to Him forever. That's what magnitude means.

I've said over and over, that God is being all there is right where you are. Right where you are and what is called you, is God being God. That's magnitude.

Now, you want the experience of magnitude. You want the experience of God's Mind, so-to-speak. You want to be in-filled with the Spirit of God, the motivation of God. And I'm here to tell you that you are, that, that's in you at every moment. But you opt for littleness by arguing for the right to make judgments, for the right to be frustrated, for the right to be pissed off, for the right to think all by yourself and thus lose the experience of communion and brotherhood that constitutes the full conscious experience of Being, which I can only talk about, but I can invite you to desire to have the experience of and to invite you to try to lean into the meaning of, by saying, "Father, reveal to me the experience. I will shut up, and I will let You in."

When God gave Himself to you in your creation, . .

... and that's the only way you could have been created, because when God creates something all He can do is pour Himself into what He's doing.

When God gave Himself to you in your creation, He established you as host to Him forever. He has not left you, and you have not left Him. All your attempts to deny His magnitude, and make His Son . . .

... you . . .

... hostage to the ego, cannot make little whom God has joined with Him.

It's this sense of isolation, it's this sense of separateness through which you look at the world and see separateness, that denies you the experience of your magnitude and denies you your experience of your Father's Mind, which is yours, which is, as long as you are opting for an ego frame of reference, is held in trust, as what we've referred to as the Holy Spirit—hasn't gone anywhere hasn't left you, but you're just not opting for it, which would be magnitude—because it teaches you from magnitude itself.

Every decision you make is for Heaven or for hell, . .

. . . it's for Reality or for unreality—every decision . . .

. . . and will bring you awareness of what you decided FOR.

So this week, decide for magnitude. Stop deciding for littleness. And when I say, "Stop deciding for littleness," I mean stop opting for the right to become angry with yourself for not having solved the problem of life. Stop being angry with your spiritual teachers because you haven't learned what they were teaching yet and there's not enough time left, according to the scenario you're making up, the story you're weaving right now. Stop opting for littleness. Stop opting for hate. Stop opting for self-righteousness or just plain old righteousness. Stop opting for the right to have a thought about your brother or your sister that you enacted or created without bothering to join with the Father to ask the Father or your right Mind for the truth about your brother. You see?

Thinking for yourself, by yourself, is opting for littleness.

The Holy Spirit can hold your magnitude, clean of all littleness, clearly and in perfect safety in your minds, untouched by every little gift the world of littleness would offer you. But for this, you cannot side AGAINST Him in what He wills for you.

And here's where we're going to end for tonight.

Decide for God through Him.

. . . the Holy Spirit, your right Mind.

Decide for God through Him.

This is where the discipline comes into play.

For littleness, and the belief that you can be content with littleness, are the decisions you have made about yourself. The power and the glory that lie in you from God are for all who, like you, perceive themselves as little, and have deceived themselves into believing that littleness can be blown up by them into a sense of magnitude that can content them.

Copy this paragraph down. Put it on your refrigerator. Put it where you can see, so that you can remind yourself with a somewhat fleshed out meaning of what opting for magnitude is, as opposed to opting for littleness, so that you can more easily make the decision not to opt for littleness.

And mind you, again, the best way to monitor yourself as to whether you're opting for littleness is if you are choosing to think for yourself . . . if your heart is racing because you are riled up and you're full of self-righteousness, it could be racing because you are succeeding at a benefit that has taken advantage of your brother and you are so happy that he's at a loss because he screwed you and man he deserves it. Well, there's your heart again, beating . . . beating . . . beating. Healthy . . . healthy . . . healthy? No.

And mind you, I'm not suggesting here that your body governs you. I'm not suggesting that you should become afraid of your body. But I'm saying, take a look at what your thoughts of littleness are doing. And what they are doing is not good . . . does not benefit you . . . does not leave you refreshed . . . does not leave you feeling more whole than before.

Be sensible. Pay attention to these things so that, although you think you're gloating with great satisfaction and joy, you're really suffering. You're really engaged in something that is giving you a hit like a drug, not wholeness like your Being.

Neither give littleness, nor accept it.

And I'm going to add: But find a way this week to philanthropically give magnitude and accept magnitude, so that at the end of the day, every day when you go to bed you can ask, "Who did I have encountered during the day felt magnitude as a result of our encounter?"

Do you know how to extend the experience of magnitude to a brother? No, you don't. And so, you're going to have to stand there on the precipice . . . you're going to have to stand there on the threshold of the unknown, with an intent to give something to your brother that you've never given. [Chuckling] And it's quite possible that the fact that you never ever gave it to your brother before is the reason you're not Awake and the reason your brother isn't Awake. And doing it may well be, your Waking up and your brother's Waking up and the dominos falling everywhere!

Now, someone I hear saying, "Well, he's playing it safe, isn't he? He says maybe you'll wake up and maybe your brother will wake up."

I promise you that if you do it, if you do it unequivocally, without reservation, yielding fully to the Father, it will happen. And sooner or later it is going to happen. It just doesn't need to be later any longer.

Don't delay it. And persist . . . persist . . . persist . . . persist . . . in standing on the precipice, standing at the threshold ready to do what you've never done before and don't know how to do, and say, "Father, help me! Help me! I am going to shut up and make room for You, so that my brother and I can experience revelation. Because I really do believe, without stretching my imagination too much that there is a better life we're supposed to be living, and there is a better life to be had, right here. And so, instead of just asking for it to be a little bit better, I'm asking . . . I'm asking for the whole thing."

I love you . . . all of you. And I look forward to the next time we're together.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

February 7th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

What we're being presented with here, intellectually, is something that many of you have experienced during crises or what you might call, catharsis. It's arriving at a point where there is a realization, not just a sentence, not just a string of words, but a realization that you, [chuckle] you are not the center of attention. God is. And your problems are not the center of attention. Truth is.

Until this point is arrived at, which amounts to a spontaneous giving up of the attempt to be in control, you're very busy being the center of your attention, and your problems are held in the center of your attention. You want people to understand your problems. You want validation of your problems so that you can get help. You want people to understand your situation. And so there you are, the center of attention insisting upon your problems being the center of attention.

But you know what? That's rather like being in the middle of the coliseum with the lions and tigers and bears. They represent your problems. And when you're the center of attention and you're working from there, and your problems are the center of your attention, what do you do? You attempt to get control of your problems, which means that you want to get the lions, tigers and bears back in their cages and off of the ground of the coliseum so there's no danger while you're in the arena.

And so, when you're operating from littleness instead of magnitude, you reach out to magnitude for help in being little, successfully. You ask for help in remaining the center of attention. And you ask for help to succeed in getting control of your problems. That is what being an orphan is about. And so you effort at remaining little and using magnitude to be little, successfully.

But the point at which catharsis occurs, the point at which illumination and healing occurs, is when you realize that being in the arena with problems to handle is not where the focus should be. You're not an orphan and your problems are the result of being unconscious of Truth.

So the answer lies in realizing that magnitude is your nature, it's not a tool by means of which you can succeed at being little, better. Magnitude is the means by which you move entirely out of the coliseum where the cages are that hold your problems.

Oh-h . . . but you say, "I know, I'm supposed to look into my brother's eyes and remember God. But you're saying that I need to adopt an awareness of my very being, being God, not just my brother? I'm to look in my own eyes and see God? I'm supposed to yield up my place as the center of attention and let God be the center of my attention?"

Well, of course this is what you go through before the catharsis occurs. When the catharsis occurs, you sort of collapse [chuckle] and in the collapsing, you don't disappear. You're still present. The world has not come to an end, you're obviously not in charge, and as you pay attention in that place where you're not asserting yourself anymore, there is an influx. There is always an influx . . . of what? Of divinity. Another way of putting it is, an influx of love that you feel embraced by, supported by, nourished by and made whole by, even though it makes no sense to you at all why you would be having this experience under the circumstances, except for the inescapable knowing that it's happening because there is a God and you have no doubt about it now.

The reason you're having the experience of God's Love and the actuality of God is because you managed somehow to yield up the center of attention—to vacate the center of attention. And actually, in vacating the center of attention, yourself, you vacated the coliseum. You vacated the arena in which the problems were real and governing you, and literally killing you. And in this space outside the coliseum, balance and perspective and the apparent correction of the problems or resolution of the problems occurs. Not actually because the problems were real and were overcome, but because the problems were misperceptions which occurred because you were making yourself and your problems the center of attention. And so clarity is restored, in peace.

Now, I'm going to move back to the beginning of the paragraph which we finished up with last time:

Decide for God through Him. ¹

Meaning through the Holy Spirit. See here . . .

Decide for God . . .

. . . let God be the center of attention. Forget about yourself. I know it's hard to do, but . . .

Decide for God through Him. For littleness, and the belief that you can be content with littleness, are the decisions you have made about yourself.

Littleness is when [chuckle] you're not only thinking for yourself, you're thinking about yourself. That's what littleness is.

Magnitude is when you're letting God be the center of attention in the silence of your mind. And what God is Being is what occupies your interest and curiosity. It's something that spontaneously happens when you're being silent.

The power and the glory that lie in you from God are for all who, like you, perceive themselves as little, and have deceived themselves into believing that littleness can be blown up by them into a sense of magnitude that can content them.

See, that's where you try to bring magnitude to littleness. It won't work. [laughs] You can't fill a bottle up more than full, can you? Even if you have two quarts of milk, if you fill up a one-quart bottle, you can't fill it fuller than one-quart full. It's simple. You can't bring magnitude to littleness because littleness cannot contain magnitude. And it cannot fill littleness fuller than the littleness is, which means that the problem can't really be solved because nothing beyond the problem can be allowed, because the problem defines itself as incapable of containing magnitude.

So . . .

Neither give littleness, nor accept it. All honor is due the host of God.

We're not talking about the heavenly Hosts, or the heavenly Host. We're talking about the host of God. That's you!

All honor is due the host of God.

You are that which God is Being in the act of extending Himself. You are host to God. You are not the originator of a self—an independent self.

All honor is due the host of God. Your littleness deceives you, but your magnitude is of Him Who dwells in you, and in Whom you dwell.

See, your magnitude is of not yourself, your magnitude is of Him. You are not the center of attention. And as long as you attempt to be the center of attention, you will not Wake up. Atonement will not occur. Enlightenment, revelation, coming back into your right Mind will not occur.

It seems to be a simple thing I'm saying, but it's an extremely profound thing because you define yourself and govern yourself by means of littleness, not by means of God. And so, when you let God be the center of attention for you, it's a significant shift of perception for you—one in which motivation shifts radically from selfishness and self-preservation, to love and embrace and support for all that you dare to include.

Again . . .

Your littleness deceives you, but your magnitude is of Him Who dwells in you, and in Whom you dwell.

Now listen to this:

Touch no-one, then, with littleness in the Name of Christ, eternal Host unto His Father.

Now where did that come from? Who was talking about . . . uh-h . . . you know, touching someone with littleness in the name of Christ? You certainly don't go around belittling yourself or your brother in the name of Christ do you? Of course you do! Because you can't stop being what you Are. You are the Christ. You are God, you are God Presencing Himself as Himself right there where you're saying that you're an independent entity—a definition of littleness.

But where God is expressing Himself, is the Christ. Right now you are the Christ behaving as though you're not. And so you touch your brothers with littleness in the name of Christ. You're doing everything you do in the name of Christ, because you are the Christ doing it. And you're either doing it fully consciously aware of yourself as what you Are divinely, truly, or you're doing it unconscious of who you Are and what you Are.

"Oh-h . . . so now, not only am I not the center of attention, [chuckle] I'm the Christ Who I didn't even ask to be . . . you know . . . Christ was Jesus . . . you know . . . 2000 years ago—Somebody else! You know . . . and I can choose to follow Him or learn from Him or be blessed by whatever wisdom He dared to embrace . . . you know . . . but . . . uh-h . . . hey! I sort of like the coliseum and I sort of like the thrill of dealing with my problems and when they come out, getting them back caged again."

Well, then put away the book. Stop wanting to know the truth.

The simple fact is, that you are the Christ, and whether you do something ignorantly or fully consciously, it is done in the name of the Christ because the Christ is doing it.

So . . .

All honor is due the host of God.

You, and all of your brothers and sisters.

Your littleness deceives you, but your magnitude is of Him Who dwells in you, and in Whom you dwell. Touch no-one, then, with littleness in the Name of Christ, eternal Host unto His Father.

Stop acting like what you are not. And dare to take what this is saying and what I'm sharing with you with utmost clarity.

Take this seriously. Take it as though it's the truth so that you think twice before you do anything in the name of Christ that doesn't embody the Christ.

Now, you're supposed to look into your brother's eyes and remember God. We've talked about doing this by means of, what I've called, "The two-step"—where, instead of responding to your brother or sister on the basis of your best definition of him or her, you hesitate. You step back and you ask, "God, what is the truth here?" In so many words you say, “God, I want you to reveal Yourself to me, as what is there where I see my brother or my sister. I want a full disclosure of You right there. I want You to fill me up with the experience of truth so that I might spontaneously and effortlessly extend it to my brother. But more than that, so that I am not engaging in misperceptions and believing them to be the truth, forcing me to suffer from ignorance and behave badly—behave inappropriately, behave mistakenly. I want to know the truth about my brother because I want to be sane. And so, I’m going to look at my brother, but I’m not going to let my brother be the center of my attention.

“In so many words, I’m going to look at my brother who I currently am perceiving him to be, with a willingness to look through what I’m perceiving him to be, so that I may see God there.”

You see, you, in doing the two-step, are letting God be the center of your attention as you’re looking at your brother. Why? Because God is all that is there as what you’re calling your brother, just as God is all that is where you are.

Again, the simple realization, and the ultimate realization is, you are not the center of attention. And your problems are not the center of attention. Let yourself as the center of attention, go. Let your problems as the center of attention, go. Instead of yourself as the center of attention, open yourself up to God and let God be the center of your attention so that your attention draws from God what God is. And let the problems that have been the center of your attention, let them be replaced by truth filling the void, because you want to know the truth.

Anything else is bringing magnitude to littleness. And I’m sorry, you will never ever succeed at being a real orphan.

Now continuing . . .

In this season (Christmas), which celebrates the birth of holiness into this world, join with me who decided for holiness for YOU.

Well, how do you join with me who decided for holiness for you? By you joining with your brother and deciding for holiness for him.

How do you do that? You decide for holiness for him by looking past whatever your present definitions are of your brother, letting God be the center of your attention where your brother is, so that you bring into your awareness by your attention to God, the experience of God which will reveal your brother to you truly as what he divinely is as well as in his perfection. And I mean by that, fully healed of any imperfections.

I'm talking about this act of letting God be the center of your attention where your brother is being that which is actually transformational. Not just a pleasant "cloud-9" thought that it becomes super-imposed upon your "poor" brother. This is very important. Because we're talking about shifting from what you call the world and universe—which is a misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven—to the direct experience of the Kingdom of Heaven right here, right now!

It is our task TOGETHER to restore the awareness of magnitude to the host whom God appointed for Himself.

Well, who is the host whom God appointed for Himself? Every single brother and sister. Every aspect of Creation.

"Oh-h, but this is so different. This is such a different goal from what I had when I was the center of my attention. Uh-h . . . it's interesting, but it doesn't feel very significant to me. It feels a little altruistic. It feels a little disconnected. It feels sort of impersonal."

That's only because you haven't done it yet. [Chuckling] The fact is that when it's done, the intimacy of oneness with your brother is fully experienced and there's nothing theoretical or of the nature of fantasy to it.

It is our task TOGETHER to restore the awareness of magnitude to the host whom God appointed for Himself. It is beyond all your littleness to give the gift of God, . .

[Repeats] It is beyond all your littleness to give the gift of God, but NOT beyond YOU.

Because littleness is not what you are. It's not beyond the Christ that you Are. It's not beyond the holy one that you fully Are at this moment, even though you're not embracing the conscious experience of it fully. And so, it is going to be you in this moment having a transformed experience, one in which your Christhood becomes believable and experienceable, so that believing it fades out of the picture, because it's a knowing because you remember who you Are.

So, mind you, this is a very simple lesson. It's the difference between magnitude and littleness. It's the difference between being Awake and dreaming dreams. And it's the whole point of all of the talking and all of the reading that we've been doing.

Again:

It is beyond all your littleness to give the gift of God, but NOT beyond YOU. For God would give Himself through you. He reaches from you to everyone, and beyond everyone to His Son's creations, but without leaving you.

You see. So this action of God doesn't cause separation. It doesn't cause differences between . . . or between-nesses. It's given through you, but you're included.

Far beyond your little world, but still in you, . .

. . . the Christ that you Are . . .

. . . He extends forever. Yet He brings all his extensions to you, as host to Him.

Do you see? If you're host to God, then you are the place where God is Being. And all that God is Being is included in you. You see, you're not the center of attention. You're something, but you're not the center of attention. Abide with that. And let the fullness of its meaning increase itself.

Is it a sacrifice to leave littleness behind, and wander not in vain?

Well, it will seem so to you, because the goal is so different—the goal isn't self-preservation. And so the goal isn't the hit of succeeding at preserving yourself. It's something else that you hadn't given much meaning to. And so, it feels like you're sacrificing something. It feels like you're giving up something. "What will I do? When I get together with my friends . . . you know . . . we talk about our last operation and the problems we're having with old man, and how we're going to deal with our wives . . . and you know, working out these real-life problems are what means something. Uh-h . . . Without problems to discuss what will we do? You see, life will be pretty flat, pretty empty." Well, I promise you it won't. There will be no sacrifice.

Is it a sacrifice to leave littleness behind, and wander not in vain?

Remember that littleness is thinking for yourself, and thinking about yourself. It's not a sacrifice to leave that behind and wander not in vain.

It is not sacrifice to wake to glory.

Glory . . . I'm not going to try to define the word. But for those of you who have gone through a crisis and arrived at a point where you gave up and experienced a catharsis and were filled with an undeniable conscious awareness of God's Love, and found your needs met but not at your own hand, you now know what it means to know that there is a God. Nobody could have described that to you before. One of the most significant parts of the experience is the fact that you recognized that you are loved and you're having the practical evidences of being loved in spite of the fact that you are doing absolutely nothing yourself to create the meeting of the need. If that doesn't convey the real meaning of Love, nothing does.

So, this word "glory" isn't bandied about carelessly.

It is not sacrifice to wake to glory.

It's a real experience. And it's there for you, it's here for you.

Learn that you MUST be worthy of the Prince of Peace, born in you in honor of Him Whose host you are.

That doesn't mean: "You must be worthy! You must be worthy! Mind your P's and Q's! You must be worthy! You had better be able to measure up! You must be worthy!" No. It's saying, you must be worthy, because of what you Are you are worthy. You don't have to toe the line to be worthy. All you have to do is abandon the center of attention and let something else in. The something else that will come in, will be that which discloses to you as an experience, your already existing worthiness. And you'll know that it was there all along because you'll know that you did absolutely nothing at the [snaps fingers] moment of transition, for it to come into your experience.

So, it isn't as though now you have it because you did something right, when you did nothing at all. That's the gift of it.

You know not what love means because you have sought to purchase it with little gifts, thus valuing it too little to be able to understand its magnitude. Love is NOT little, and love dwells in you, for you are host to Him. Before the greatness that lives in you, your poor appreciation of yourself and all the little offerings you have given slip into nothingness.

In the presence of the experience of what Love really is and that it embraces you, supports you and negates consequences of ignorance that never did represent you truly. That is what awaits you. And that's the proof . . . that's the proof that all of the struggle and the strife you've engaged in was meaningless, because you never were that poor orphan.

Holy Child of God, when will you learn that ONLY holiness can content you and give you peace?

Holy Child of God, when will you learn that ONLY being out of the arena, only being out of the coliseum, only abandoning the supposed value of getting all your problems back into their cages is your Birthright?

Well, tonight's not too soon. Your habit though is, the moment you start to think, for you to be the center of your attention, and for your problems to be the center of your attention, and you will continue to occupy yourselves that way until having yourself as the center of your attention and having your problems as the center of your attention overwhelm you to the point where you have to say, "Uncle!"

The grand lessons: You not the center of attention and your problems are not the center of attention. And when those two centers of attention . . . points of attention are abandoned in favor of knowing God and in favor of knowing the truth, Atonement occurs.

Now, the fact is, that you are going to have to find a way to go through your days—which at this point you go through out of habit, mostly unconsciously, just knee-jerk responses, some of which are graceful and some of which are harsh—and your going to have to find a way to go through your day, because you're going through a day in the Kingdom of Heaven in actuality, and you're really the Christ, the eternal host of the Father . . . your going to have to find a way to go through this day letting God be the center of your attention.

And for the sake of keeping you totally grounded, that means not going off into a mountain cave, not rising above the human scene, but meeting with your brother or sister and looking at them and remembering to say, "I wish to see God here. God, reveal Yourself to me in your [my] brother. I do not want to be bound by my ignorance of him. And so, what I'm asking for is to be changed. I am asking for my perceptions to be changed. And I am asking for my wants to be modified so that they cease being wants looking for littleness in order to establish littleness, and instead desire to experience magnitude right here where I have fought for the right to be little . . . period.”

When you're suffering it is relatively easier to do that. But where you're going to make your greatest headway is when you engage in this when it's not a means of getting control of your problems. When you're in the relatively free space of harmonious experiences, harmonious relationships and using this non-contentious space to transcend, or get beyond, or behind the current perceptions: Your current perceptions, your brother's current perceptions. Push for it!

Man, when you're dying of a terminal illness you usually can muster up the kind of commitment that I'm referring to here. But realize that if you have the capacity to do it under those circumstances, you have the capacity to do it in harmonious, non-threatening circumstances. And fight for your sanity, we'll say, by bringing concerted commitment to wanting to know the truth, and a concerted insistence upon abandoning the center of attention yourself so that you might let the presence of God illuminate Itself as all there actually is to the you that you Are, in all the fullness of what that means . . . in all the transformational fullness of what that means. And then give permission for yourself to be changed.

Do you want healing for yourself? Do you want healing for your brother? Then stop trying to be the center of attention. Stop opting for littleness. Want to know God, because the simple fact is that when you know God you will know your Self. You'll not disappear. You will not be swallowed up.

If you don't do this, you will get sick . . . you will be well . . . you will get sick . . . you will get well, and you will die. That's the way it goes, isn't it? Only a handful have had a different experience. So, what will it cost you? . . . except perhaps the option to get sick and well, and sick and well, and it might cost you the option of being able to have the experience of dying. That's not really very expensive is it? [chuckling] That isn't a great cost.

So this week, abide with the simplicity of this: You aren't the center of attention, God is. And your problems shouldn't be the center of your attention, truth should be.

This will put you in a position of changing your goals and of having your values shift. But the one thing it won't do is estrange you to your fellowman or your world.

The strife that is occurring in the world is evidence of an already existing estrangement and that is what needs to be healed. And that is what will be healed when you realize that you're not to be the center of attention, and your problems are not to be the center of your attention.

God is the center of your attention and truth should be the center of your attention. That's not too simple an answer to the problem of being.

I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

February 28th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

One of the disturbing lessons in A Course In Miracles is the one that says, "Nothing I see means anything." And at another point, one of them says, "I see a Meaningless world."

Well, how many of you are getting up each day and seeing a meaningless world?

How many of you are wondering whether there really is a God?

How many of you are having trouble experiencing any happiness whatsoever because you're seeing a meaningless world?

Well, when the Course says, "Nothing I see means anything," it means, "Nothing I see when I'm looking all by myself, means anything. Nothing I see, when I'm giving everything the definitions of what it is, means anything."

But the fact is that you could say, "Nothing I see means anything, but everything I'm looking at means something." This is very important. "Nothing I am seeing all by myself with my private vision means anything, but everything I'm looking at means Something—meaning it's the evidence of God."

So, when you get up in the morning and you see a meaningless world, don't just sit there believing what's going on in your mind. It may be meaningless to you at the moment, but everything you're looking at does have divine Meaning.

Now, it's going to be hard if you embrace this, really. It's going to be hard to be depressed. It's going to be hard to look at a meaningless world without curiosity. Curiosity is going to be there to know what it really means. "What is the divine Meaning?" And when curiosity presents itself and becomes active in your awareness, you're reaching outside of your present definitions.

In effect, when you say to yourself, "I wonder what this really means?" and you're not going to rely on your own best thinking for the answer, you are asking the Powers that be, or God, if you will. You're breaking your isolation, you're breaking your solid intent to pay attention to nothing other than yourself.

You are being willing to stop being the center of your attention.

When that happens, a miracle can occur. A miracle being—as we all know—a sudden shift of perception.

Again, when you are willing to abandon the position of "the center of your attention" and you are willing to enquire of God—to be curious of God to know what the truth is—there will be a shift of perception because you're abandoning littleness for magnitude.

Now, there's a story, whether it's true or not, to the effect that sometime in the 1930's, two different shoe companies sent a salesman each to Africa. And after a few months, one of the salesmen was not sending orders back to the main company in the U.S. and they sent a cable to him and said, "What's the problem?" And the salesman wires back, "It's a disaster. No one wears shoes!"

Now, the other salesman was sending back order after order after order for large quantities of shoes. And they were curious as to why he was so successful. And so they cabled him and he cabled back, "It's miraculous, no one here wears shoes!"

One salesman took things at face value, you might say: No one wears shoes, no one had ever worn shoes, it was foreign to them and there would be no way to get them to change their ways and so he had no success. But, he could've had a sudden shift of perception so that the very thing that he saw as a problem, that being that no one wore shoes, would become the focus of great success—because no one wore shoes, everyone needed shoes!

Now, when you get up in the morning, how are you going to look at your world? Are you going to make the little gift of your poor assessment of everything that's going on, and of your situation? Are you going to adopt the poor assessment that your news-broadcasters are presenting?

Or are you going to say, "Nothing I see means anything, but everything I'm looking at does mean Something! And I want to know what the Something is that it means."

Now, I keep saying that that's not too simplistic . . . so simplistic that it might only act as a salve on your troubled mind, but not be something that could actually be transformational. But I'm telling you, that how you use your mind determines your experience. Not because it's powerful, but because if it is misused and you engage in an act of denying what is really there, in favor of the definition you have made up, you are going to have a sad experience. Not because there is something going on that genuinely calls for sadness, but because you are denying yourself the experience of the Kingdom of Heaven by determining that it is nothing more than a material world and universe and remaining convinced as to your definition.

Now, I'm sure that everyone, or many of you who are listening, feel a need for encouragement—some inspiration, some upliftment. And so I'm going to share something with you, but not because it's needed right now, but because it's simply the truth and it's something I've been sharing for twenty-seven years, so it isn't something I've come up with this week to jack you up a little bit.

Now the fact is, that there is a movement of Awakening occurring and has been for some years now. The reason being, that the number of those who are asleep and dreaming dreams, who are looking at the Kingdom of Heaven and determining that it's just a material world and universe, the number of those of the Brotherhood who are bound to this small gift of their personal thinking is dwindling because they are Awakening. And as a result, the bond, you might say, between those who are still sleeping, the bond of their mutual agreements as to what the meaning of everything is, is weakening.

There are beginning to be too few, and there have been beginning to be too few of the Brotherhood convinced of their ignorance. And as that bond weakens, there is more and more spontaneous Awakening. It is inevitable. And every single one of you today, is in a better position than you were twenty years ago because the density of the dream is actually less than it was, therefore, the bonds that seem to hold you do not have the apparent structural integrity to hold you tightly any longer.

Now, we've been going through the Course and we've come to this section called, Littleness Versus Magnitude, and it has become clearer than ever before that the difference between littleness and magnitude lies in whether you're letting yourself be the center of your attention, and whether in that space, you are letting your problems be the center of your attention. If they are, you are coming from a place of littleness, seeking solutions without abandoning the littleness. And there is no room for magnitude there.

But magnitude is your Birthright. Another way of saying that is: Wholeness is your Birthright. Not partiality. Not where all there is to you is a little part of everything and your experience is filled with little parts of everything but not all of it.

Now, when you are willing to abandon being the center of attention and you're willing to let God be the center of attention by always asking God, "What does this mean? What does that mean? What is really going on here? What's the divine fact that has to be going on in order for me to be having a misperception of it? What is the perfect perception of it that will eradicate the misperception and the suffering that accompanies my strong belief in my misperception?"

Magnitude, you could say, has to do with size. It's more like volume. If you have a humungous ball and you fill the center of the ball up with air or water, there's a certain volume inside the ball. Now, when we speak about littleness versus magnitude, when we talk about the difference between privacy and opening up to God, we're talking about leaving an enclosure for infinity.

Now many of you have had experiences of "being big," where you were no longer in the location that you had experienced yourself in. And although everything in that location is still there, you are embracing it all instead of being a small thing in the middle of a big environment. You experience being the environment in which all of it is going on. And there's no other way to describe it except you are big. The volume of you embraces more than you've ever experienced before.

Now, when you abandon littleness, when you abandon privacy, and you open up to God and you let God be the center of your attention, you will experience or have a changed experience, you will not experience everything in the same way that you always had when you were insisting on littleness—when you were insisting on being the center of your attention.

Ultimately, magnitude means infinity—infinity as the environment of consciousness, infinity as the size, if you will, of mind, of being aware, of being the conscious experience of everything infinitely. It means that you will experience everything with God's Vision. There's no other way to put it. And because all is embraced within, the environment of your mind, which is itself magnitude or infinity, there is no room for or experience of partiality. There are no longer little parts. There are infinite aspects of the Oneness, but no private, separable parts.

Because of that, the experience is one of absolute safety. The experience is of such integrity, or I will say, integrity of such magnitude, that it is actually inconceivable to imagine that there could be such a thing as threat.

Again, if you see something on the news—a news flash occurs—and they say something, and they say something that is supposed to be alarming and you say, “Oh-h, shit!” you’ve made a little gift. You’ve made a gift of littleness. You’ve made a gift of thinking all by yourself. And you wouldn’t have said, “Oh-h, shit!” if you weren’t in some way going to be the recipient of the bad news. So, here you are the center of your attention, focused on a problem of yours.

You’re like the shoe salesman, “It’s disastrous . . . no one wears shoes!” And yet that response is not necessary.

Another phrase in the Course community that everyone knows is: “There is another way to look at this.” Oh . . . it rolls off people’s lips with such ease. Well listen, tomorrow morning when you get up, or tonight on the 11 o’clock news, when something comes up, say, “There is another way to look at this,” and then give your attention to God to ask, “What is the way to look at this and what is the truth that has to be going on in order for such a misperception to be occurring because I want to know the truth?” Why? Because the truth about it will negate the misperception and allow for an answer that blesses everyone—blesses everyone, doesn’t bless some and cost others.

Transformation is occurring right now, not disastrous things. Transformation is occurring. What’s needed are those who are willing to look and say, “Okay, evidently things that have worked before are no longer working. Evidently things have progressed to a point where something more streamlined or something more reasonable or some closer approximation of truth is about to come forward and I would like to know what it is. I am going to give my attention to what this newness is . . . what this transfiguration is . . . um-m.”

I went up onto the mount and there was great light and there was transfiguration. You think transfiguration doesn’t feel like something to the one who’s being transfigured? And what do you think would happen if you resisted transfiguration when it was happening? Because of course, transfiguration isn’t something that happens at your hand—at your will. And so if you’re going to try to resist what comes from, for lack of better words, a greater power—an act of divine intervention—you’re going to have difficulty doing it successfully and comfortably.

So, you're on call here to do exactly what we've been reading about.

You're on call to do the "two-step."

You're on call to become the shoe salesman who sells lots of shoes.

You're on call to experience a sudden shift of perception that allows you to be the facilitator of what? Your brother being able to have a sudden shift of perception. Why? Because now that you have had it, there is someone for your brother to join with and abandon his commitment to all the other brothers who are still sleeping and insisting upon littleness and insisting upon the old that is no longer working. You see?

"Oh-h, what can you do . . . you know . . . this has to do with banks and this has to do with the economy and I don't have a pot to pee in . . . I have no means!"

Well, that's your gift of littleness. Stop making little gifts! STOP IT!
It's time to have the joy of being in your world that you have thought was a material world and universe.

It's time for you to be in the world and have a new Vision.

It's time for you to have the curiosity to see the Kingdom of Heaven that it Is!

And it's time for you to turn to God for a visual aide, if you will. Ask Him to show you, ask the Holy Spirit to show you, ask those Who are Awake to show you the new Vision. And suspend your practice of doubt and fear and depression. Just suspend it! You can do it! And be in that neutral place, be in the void, be in the silence where you're not thinking for yourself and you're not thinking about yourself and you're practicing curiosity.

And you know what? As part of abandoning being the center of attention, do this, do what I'm talking about for your brother and your sister, your neighbor, your acquaintances. It's the only way it works! You have to abandon selfishness and self-centeredness. And you've got to embrace something outside yourself. That's the bottom line.

You must look into your brother's eyes and remember God. There is no other way to do it.

And now is the right time to do it. Anytime is the right time to do it. But there's a need. You might say that divinity is pressuring you to embrace more than the limited definitions you've been working with for the last umpteen years.

That's a wake up call. That's a wonderful invitation. That's an invitation to no longer be stuck. And the invitation is coming from One who knows that it's not your Birthright for you to be stuck, and is therefore, able to relate to you in a way that is supportive and inspirational to you. Because the very fact that you are asked to do it is a statement that you are capable of doing it, that you are able to be in a new way, right here, right now.

Of course, it's going to change the way you relate to your neighbors and friends and family, because you're not going to commiserate about . . . oh, all the horrible stuff that's going on in the world and the duplicity and the dishonesty and the on and on and on and on. Because of course, [chuckle] every bit of that is you thinking and sharing your thoughts. You thinking all by yourself and sharing your thoughts. And of course, if there is negativity attached to what you are saying it's because at the bottom line in some way, you are feeling vulnerable because of what's going on.

So there you are, the center of your attention, and there your problems are, the center of your attention. As long as that's your focus, you will not be looking where your salvation lies. You won't be looking in your brothers' eyes except to see how to be best defended against whatever he's going to do next. Because after all, you can't trust anybody these days . . . you see.

So you dig yourself into a very, very private hole and a very tiny hole. A hole that immobilizes you. And you say, "Of course, I'm depressed." [laughing] Well, of course, you're depressed, because you're digging a hole and climbing into it and saying, "There is no other way to look at this. There is no other way to look at this . . . the world is going to hell in a hand-basket. It actually is! And if it isn't, the recovery is going to be so protracted that I won't be around to enjoy the result and heaven knows if my children or their grandchildren will."

Isn't it wonderful, isn't it amazing the gifts of littleness that you give—the little gifts that you give of your thoughts. The only thing is, that it's like you have a paint brush and you dip the paint brush into your thoughts and you paint your face and you paint your head . . . you dip it in a little . . . you paint your arms and you paint your body. And you become the image of your little gifts. Wow, when the fact is that you are the holy Son of God Himself. And the holy Son of God Himself is painting himself with littleness and believing the definition he has covered himself up with. "I am not the holy Son of God, Himself. There is no God. If there was a God, these things wouldn't be happening in the world. And if we were the Sons of God, we wouldn't be doing these things in the world."

Well, I'm telling you something real simple and something very profound: You are the Sons and Daughters of God, doing these silly things! And because you're the Sons and Daughters of God, you don't have to do these silly things. No one is requiring it of you, circumstances are not requiring it of you, life isn't requiring it of you, "the way things work" aren't requiring it of you. It's something you just decided to try out. And by damn it you're doing it. And it's just really hard to see that you're damned by what you're doing, by damned.

Let's go into the book, and I want to back up just a moment in the previous paragraph. It says:

You know not what love means because you have sought to purchase it with little gifts, thus valuing it too little to be able to understand its magnitude. ¹

In other words, the infinity of it, the endlessness of it, for lack of better words—the omnipresence of infinity. And you've tried to buy it with little gifts. In other words, your own thoughts that you've made up.

So, continuing on.

Remember that you learn not for yourself alone, no more than I did.

You see. It's just not about you! It's not all about you! You're not the center of attention! You're not the focus of attention.

Remember that you learn not for yourself alone, no more than I did. It is BECAUSE I learned for you that you can learn of me.

I learned for you, and because of that you can learn of me. Now, that needs to be translated into something practical for you. When you learn not for yourself alone, but for your brother, then your brother can learn of you. That's the way it works.

It is BECAUSE I learned for you that you can learn of me.

And when you have learned for your brother, your brother can learn of you. It's simple. You've got to give your brother something to join, something other than the brothers who are all sleeping and dreaming and committed by their mutual agreements to sleep and dream and suffer from being unconscious of what they divinely Are.

I would but teach you what is yours, . .

. . . and that's what I'm doing all along here.

I would but teach you what is yours, so that together we can replace the shabby littleness that binds the host of God to guilt and weakness . . .

What's the shabby littleness that binds the host of God? And whose the host of God? Each one of you is the host of God. Each one of you is the place where God presents Himself. The shabby littleness that binds you, the host of God, is the practice of thinking for yourself and then sharing what you've thought up—a gift from privacy, a gift from isolation.

So . . .

I would but teach you what is yours, so that together we can replace the shabby littleness that binds the host of God to guilt and weakness with the glad awareness of the glory that is in him.

Now, I'm sharing with you the glad awareness of the glory that is in you, by pointing out to you that no matter [chuckling] who you thought your parents were and what sperm and what egg created the organism that you are, your mother, father is God and always has been. And as the Son or Daughter of God, you are the Christ and have always been. And in spite of the fact that you've been behaving as though you are not the holy Son of God and believing it, you have an alternative. There's another way to look at it. There's another way to be, because there's a glory in you.

Now, I'll tell you something: When you get up in the morning and you look at this meaningless world and you see how awful things are and you feel depressed and you do not feel the motivation for getting up and taking a step anywhere, not even into the shower, you are not conceiving of glory of any sort being in you. Now what that means is, that you have abandoned the awareness of the glory in you. It doesn't mean it's not there. It can't go anywhere because you can't stop being what God is expressing of Himself right there where you are, infinitely—in other words, with magnitude.

So, you don't have to be stuck in that depression. You don't have to be stuck in that immobilization. You must remind yourself that there is a glory in you. You must remind yourself, "I am the holy Son of God, Himself." When you say that, what are you doing? You're abandoning being the center of attention. You're deferring to God as the Presence that is right where you are, being what is right there where you are. "I am not my own self-creation. I am the holy Son of God, Himself!"

Whew! That means there's a glory in you. That means there's a magnitude, a wholeness, an infinite wholeness to you, in which your absolute security lies, in which your invulnerability is an undisturbable fact. And even though you say, "Yeah, right! Then how come I'm experiencing it now? If I were really the Son of God, I wouldn't be experiencing it if all this was true." Wrong. You will experience it as long as you choose to be the center of attention. As long as you are denying what you Are, you will not be comfortable. You cannot be in a state of self-denial and be sane or comfortable. You cannot do it without experiencing the two brothers—guilt and fear. You just can't. But you can stop having the experience, if you'll stop holding center position.

So . . .

My birth in you is your awakening to grandeur.

That simply means when you let me in, when you're willing to make room for someone other than yourself.

My birth in you is your awakening to grandeur. Welcome me not into a manger, but into the altar to holiness, where holiness abides in perfect peace.

And where is the altar to holiness? Right in the center of you.

Now that means, welcome me not into a small, tiny, limited, negative assessment of you. But welcome me into the altar to holiness, into the middle of the holy Son of God, Himself, where there is grandeur, where there is glory. Invite me in there. Invite me into the beautiful environment of your Being—the one that nothing and no one can take away from you, which means it is always there in its pristine beauty and orderliness.

Welcome me not into a manger, but into the altar to holiness, where holiness abides in perfect peace.

What holiness? Your holiness.

My Kingdom is not of this world because it is in YOU.

Your kingdom is not of this world. Your kingdom is not of this world you have thought up. It is not of this world that is made up of definitions that you have superimposed over the Kingdom of Heaven. Your world is the Kingdom of Heaven that has been painted over by your definitions and which is still there exactly as God is Being It, exactly as Creation Is, in spite of the fact that you've attempted to cover it up with very creative and original definitions of your own.

My Kingdom is not of this world because it is in YOU. And you are of your Father. Let us join in honoring you, who must remain forever beyond littleness.

Oh-h . . .

Let us join in honoring you, . .

Whatever I say to you about us, you need to take and say about your brother and you. If I'm the way shower, you're the way shower. Whatever I do, because it reflects the Father's Will, you will do because it reflects the Father's Will. And because that's the way things work.

Let us join . . .

. . . let you and I join . . .

. . . in honoring you, who must remain forever beyond littleness.

And then you turn to your brother and in behavior, in actions, in ideal, in intent, . .

. . . join in honoring . . .

. . . him . . .

. . . who must remain forever beyond littleness.

Decide with me, who have decided to abide with you. I will as my Father wills, knowing His Will is constant, and at peace forever with Itself. You will be content with nothing BUT His Will.

You see. That means you will have contentment only with His Will.

You will be content with nothing BUT His Will. Accept no less, remembering that everything I learned is yours. What my Father loves I love as He does, . .

Why? Because I'm letting God be first. I'm not the center of my attention.

What my Father loves I love as He does, and I can no more accept it as what it is not than He can. And no more can YOU. When you have learned to accept what you are, you will make no more gifts to offer to yourselves, for you will know you are complete, in need of nothing, and unable to accept ANYTHING for yourself.

Sound strange?

. . . you will know you are complete, in need of nothing, and unable to accept ANYTHING for yourself.

Why? Because in order for you to have the experience of Awakening, in order for you to have the experience of the return of your sanity, you've got to stop doing anything by yourself. You've got to stop thinking for yourself, which means you'll find yourself . . .

. . . unable to accept ANYTHING for yourself.

You see. You simply can't help yourself. And you realize that when you give up being the center of your attention. Now, you're . . .

. . . unable to accept ANYTHING for yourself.

And that doesn't constitute a sad incapacity on your part. Because in the absence of doing anything for yourself, by yourself, you find that you are whole, complete. You find and experience the magnitude of your Being. You find that you are in need of nothing. You are whole.

But you will gladly give, HAVING received.

From the experience of wholeness you don't need to get. And from the standpoint of wholeness, what you see is wholeness. And so, when you look at your brother from wholeness, you will see your brother's wholeness and you will make the gift of wholeness to him, allowing him to abandon his little gifts and to join with you and to abandon the brothers who are committed to sleeping and dreams. And together you will Wake up.

. . . you will gladly give, HAVING received. The host of God . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . needs not seek to find anything.

Wow! I guess that wipes out goals, doesn't it? A brand new way of being—being from wholeness.

Remember this is a point where you can very easily slip into letting God be first, letting God be the center of attention and Waking up. Let your brother, this week, be the stimulus for that.

I love you. Be ready for, be willing to move with and be the evidence of transformation.

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

March 14th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're really in the middle of a subject that is wonderful: "Waking up, a return to sanity." And I know everyone at this particular juncture in time, with the world situation as it is, would love for me to say things to inspire you—to speak positively, to put things in words that are assuring and allow you to believe that everything will be alright—to raise your spirits.

But even though everything is going to be alright, even though as I shared last week everyone is faced with transformation, not chaos, not great problems, just believing that is not enough.

Instead of saying things that are inspiring, I need to talk to you about the things that take your inspiration away. Because if you don't recognize the things that will take away your inspiration, you will be subject to them and you will lack inspiration.

I could speak for an hour and have you floating in heaven, so to speak, in your mind. But if you don't recognize what takes away your inspiration, it will be gone. The high I might leave you with will disappear quickly.

Now, there aren't really a whole lot of things that take your inspiration away. So it isn't complicated.

Arrogance is what takes your inspiration away and it's the only thing that will take your inspiration away. Arrogance is the giving of directions or orders without having authority to do so.

The opposite, the presence of which secures your inspiration, is humility. And humility is when you are willing to take orders from One who has authority.

When you're attempting to exercise authority that you don't have, you set up a situation in which there is immediate negative feedback—discouragement, anger, frustration.

You have no authority all by yourself and you never have. If you get enough people to agree with you and to support you in whatever authority you might express, you might for awhile seem to be successful—inspired, you might say, confident. But that exists only because of a group of you who have a mutual agreement with each other, and it isn't a stability that arises out of the way things work, fundamentally aside from mutual agreements.

Now we ended last week with the sentence:

The host of God needs not seek to find anything.

The reason being, that the host of God—meaning that one who is the place where God is expressing Himself—that one is whole and does not need to look for anything, does not need to gain anything, and therefore, doesn't have to have a capacity to exercise authority, you see. Wholeness and authority simply don't co-exist.

Humility can be had by choice or through [chuckle] difficult learning called "humiliation."

When any of you have gone to the uttermost length that you can possibly go in order to exercise authority and be in charge and create a situation in which there will be peace, because everybody is not disagreeing with each other, you are experiencing a false peace. And sooner or later it will collapse. When it collapses, you are going to feel complete failure. Because after all, you, by your so-called exercise of authority, were the one holding it together and your holding it together gave you credibility—respectability—and ability for you to see yourself and think well of yourself and be at peace with yourself.

So when that crumbles, it's very humiliating because you are faced with the fact that you couldn't hold it together and therefore, you hadn't been able to make that security become a universal absolute which could never change.

Now, where we are in the Course and what we're talking about, involves your arriving at a point where you willingly abandon authority, where you willingly consider the possibility that you're not in charge of anything, where you consider the possibility that in order for you to actually be sane, you must be unequivocally willing to cooperate with “the way things work.” In other words, you must allow yourself to be the puppet of the way things work—to be that which doesn’t stand out in any way by virtue of any exertion of personal, private force, who chooses not to attempt to stand out from everything and everyone else by virtue of being assertive.

To the ego this is very humiliating. To the divine one that you Are, it amounts to your setting the ground work for coming back into your right Mind where you find the way you fit in with God, where you find the way you fit in with the way things work and by virtue of the experience of fitting in, coming into the full conscious awareness of and experience of your universality, your all inclusiveness. The fact that since God has withheld nothing of what He is from you, you embrace and are constituted of all that God is—that you are universal being with none of what has been created being unavailable to you: Full open consciousness inclusive of all, infinitely speaking.

Now, continuing . . .

If you are wholly willing to leave salvation to the plan of God, and unwilling to attempt to grasp for peace yourself, salvation will be GIVEN you.

Um-m . . . you probably say, “Well, if I’m wholly willing to leave salvation to the plan of God, . . . nice words, but . . . uh . . . [chuckle] c’mon, what in the heck is the plan of God? Why don’t you, instead of talking about the plan of God and telling me that if I’m willing to leave salvation to the plan of God, it will be given me, why don’t you tell me what it is?”

Well, of course you don’t know the plan of salvation that God has because you won’t have it until you ask God what it is. You won’t have it until you abandon your arrogance and your attempts to express authority that you don’t have, and become still. Do the “two-step” as we’ve said, to step back and say, “What is the truth here, Father?” You see, join with the Father instead of being independently authoritative.

God’s plan for salvation has been expressed in the words, “Looking into your brother’s eyes and remembering God.” I’ve expressed it also as looking at anything in your world and being curious to know what the more of reality is there than what you’re experiencing. In other words, wanting to experience God there.

But you see, you won’t have that experience until you stop and abandon the definitions you’ve given to everything, and have a completely innocent and pure and uncluttered desire to know the truth.

You've got to bring your innocence into the process. And when I'm speaking of innocence right now, I'm speaking of your capacity to bring a willingness to know, that isn't cluttered up with previous concepts, that isn't stuffed with preconceptions and preferences of yours.

Now, you're supposed to be Awake. You're supposed to be experiencing your sanity, the full open consciousness as Mind undifferentiated from God. That's your Birthright. That is what you're supposed to be experiencing. So it's inevitable that you will be experiencing that when you do this one terrible ugly thing called: Abandoning personal authority that you think you have. When you're willing to be humble without having to go through a process of humiliation that brings you to your knees, where you are willing to say, "God, I don't have the answer. I need the answer. I'm going to stop trying to create it for myself and I'm going to ask God for help."

You don't have to go through that process of humiliation. But I do want to say something: If you do go through it, don't resist it and don't get haughty about it—embrace it. To be forced by what you would call circumstances, to abandon the idea that you ought to be able to control life, is pure wisdom registering with you—the wisdom of your being, the wisdom that allows you to come into an experience of peace and harmony that's not threatened by things you're afraid of, things that you have determined to be enemies, things that you have determined you must be in charge of because if you're not, they will "get you!"

Humility, whether it's been arrived at voluntarily or through processes of humiliation, is your Birthright. It's what is utterly natural to you. It's the state of your being when you've abandoned arrogance, when you've abandoned willfulness, when you've abandoned authority that you don't really have, and you've been willing to embrace the possibility that in the absence of that, you are valid, you are valuable, you are the holy Son of God Himself.

Why am I bringing this up? Because all of you go through your day with an attempt to have an agenda for it that you bring to bear upon it on terms that you have determined to be principled or right, or justified, or whatever. And you, at no point, have really allowed yourself to blend with the movements, the currents of Creation that are appearing as the day you are going through, where you're never finding out how you might fit in to an order that you forgot to provide in your agenda, and that if you will yield into that order and abandon your agenda, you will have an experience of harmony, originality, not originality you created but originality that goes far beyond anything you would have thought up—joy, delight—all in the context of peace that you find includes you being blessed, your brother being blessed, the other people on the freeway being blessed in ways that are obvious, but in ways that you couldn't possibly have caused all by yourself by virtue of your plan.

Now, humility, although most of you think of it positively, humility is not really attractive. People who are humble you might identify as “yes-men,” “toadies,” people without integrity because they can be pushed all over the place . . . they cooperate . . . and they cooperate . . . and they cooperate. And so, to find yourself in a position of either willingly or unwillingly being faced with becoming humble, you find that whatever inspiration you might have been experiencing fades because there’s nothing inspiring to a “go-get-it-ego” about abandoning the “get-go.” And you must understand this so that your inspiration doesn’t disappear, doesn’t fade when you dare to consciously choose to be humble.

This is important. And it’s important in this particular time all of you are living in because the situation seems to call for assertiveness—taking hold of the situation. Well I’ll tell you something: If everyone takes hold of the situation the way it’s been held in the past, there will be no transformation and there will be further disintegration, if I can put it that way, there will be further stress and distress. Because what is called for here is Vision that goes beyond the way things have been done in the past, that go beyond the mutually agreed upon definitions of what is right and so on and so forth.

And one of the fundamental reasons that things aren’t working is because the basic premise that has been used is, “I will act in a way that benefits me and that’s what life is about.” And you teach others to take that stance relative to themselves. And so then you end up with everyone serving themselves and only fitting in to whatever degree that act of fitting in supports they’re getting what they want.

There is no love in it. There is no fundamental premise of fitting together and of everyone being blessed. And that’s the Vision that’s called for now. It’s the Vision that’s been called for ever since there have been wise men, who themselves have done the two-step and have asked “What is the truth here?”

If you’re discouraged, it’s because you’re looking at the situation and you’re recognizing that you don’t have the answer. And in addition to that, you’re thinking, “This problem is too complex—too great for me to handle, therefore I can’t possibly have the answer.” You see, [chuckle] that’s only half of the two-step, that’s you stepping back saying, “I don’t know the answer.” The second half of the two step is saying, “Father, what is the answer?” It’s letting God’s plan of salvation be revealed to you because you’ve had the gumption to ask, “Father, what is your plan of salvation?”. . . and then abandoning all assertiveness on your part so that you are the most wonderful blank blackboard for God to write upon His truth that’s your truth, that will be the answer and will involve the Vision that is required that will constitute real transformation that blesses everyone and ultimately amounts to looking into your brother's eyes and remembering God.

You see, the only reason you don't have the answer is, that you haven't been willing to abandon an inner urgency within you that says, "You can come up with the answer and you must come up with the answer because that's what God created you for." That's your modus operandi but it's something that can't bear fruit.

When you realize that, it's going to be discouraging, it's going to take away whatever inspiration you gleaned from a wonderful talk somebody gave. Unless you realize that, your willingness to become silent and not assert authority is the only way you can find yourself fitting in, blending in, being that which is fluid enough to cooperate with the way things work—with the way Creation works, with the way the Kingdom of Heaven moves—which at the bottom line, constitutes you coming back into your right Mind, into your sanity again.

So you see, I've said many things over the years that are inspiring. And if you want to go back and read them and refresh yourselves, you're welcome to. But the real key thing right now is that you need to be able to look at the things that take away your inspiration and look at them closely enough to see that the reason the inspiration is fading is because you are upset, because you really are realizing that you're not in control and you don't really have the authority to correct the situation all by yourself. And because of your ego structures, that is not a happy state of affairs.

However, I'm pointing out to you that it is an inevitable state of affairs in the process of Waking up. It is inevitable that you will arrive at this realization that you don't have the authority, together with an inspiration to do something totally crazy—to abandon your attempt to be authoritative and to become utterly still so that you become a void, a void that is an invitation to be filled, in which no little bits of assertiveness are present anywhere—a void that is an invitation to be filled that becomes pregnant with the conscious experience of truth.

You see, again, it's simple. If you want to experience or know what God's plan for your salvation is, you've got to stop trying to figure out what it is. And you've got to shut up. And you've got to be willing to turn to the Father and say, "Father, what is your plan for salvation? What is it I need to know?" And then don't do it as a test, because to whatever degree you say, "Well, I'm going to give God 30 days. I think I can manage to not control things for 30 days without everything going totally to ruin. And so, I will be very willing for 30 days. I will be very unassertive for 30 days." But you see, this little plan that you've got behind your back is part of what's supposed to be the void, the emptiness that's the invitation and it's not empty is it.

I know, people say they'd give their right arm to experience salvation. Maybe you would. But what you need to be willing to give for your salvation is the last vestiges of any attempt or any intent on your part to be a self-existent, self-created authority. So that you might be the presence of pure awareness in which God's thoughts and God's meanings and truth itself can be illuminated and show you your right Mind and your Birthright.

Now, I am saying things that could be considered inspiring. But what I really want you to bring your attention to and what it's really important to bring your attention to are the times and the places in your day where inspiration goes out the window and you find yourself tense, uncomfortable, experiencing an undercurrent of one sort or another—where there's lack of inspiration. And notice it! Because these are the places where you're still holding out for the exercise of control as though you had authority, and they are standing in the way of your experiencing your right Mind. And you need to recognize them so that you say, "By damn it, I'm not going to let these things take my inspiration away. I'm going to stop asserting this personal, private authority. I'm going to stop trying to control things myself and I'm going to join with the Father." It's that simple.

And so, instead of letting the absence of inspiration get worse and worse until you're experiencing utter humiliation, notice it in it's earlier stages that aren't quite so rugged, so that you might say about this or that or the other thing that seems to be taking away your inspiration, "Father, what is the truth here? Father, I don't want to explore my personal potential for coming up with answers any further. I wish to abandon my independence and join with You. I would like to put my arm around You and I would like You to put Your arm around me, so that we might move forward together in harmony and cooperation. And I will let You fill my mind with the only thing that could possibly be in my Mind, because I am the host to God. I am the host to You. And I'm going to let myself be the host to You instead of trying to be something separate and independent all by myself."

Coming back to the book:

If you are wholly willing to leave salvation to the plan of God, and unwilling to attempt to grasp for peace yourself, salvation will be GIVEN you.

Now . . .

. . . will be GIVEN you.

. . . because it's already yours. You never did stop being what you ultimately will be or what you were to begin with before you decided to take this little vacation into orphanland. So, when it said it would be given you, it means it will be returned to you, it will be illuminated as having constituted your presence forever and ever, even though for awhile you chose to close your eyes and forcibly ignore it.

Continuing:

Yet think not you can substitute your plan for His.

You see. [Chuckling] Don't keep an ace up your sleeve. Don't give yourself a backup plan. Don't give yourself a safety, an out from this experiment in [chuckling] being a puppet, in being that which fits in.

. . . think not you can substitute your plan for His. Rather, join with me in His, that we may release all those who would be bound, . .

. . . by virtue of their choice to be independent . . .

. . . proclaiming together that the Son of God is host to Him.

. . . meaning God. You see, there's a clue about God's plan for salvation.

Rather, join with me in His, . .

. . . God's plan . . .

. . . that we may release all those who would be bound, . .

. . . all those who are still choosing to dream dreams, proclaiming together, you and I together, that the Son of God, every Son of God is host to God.

You're here to teach your brother the truth. You're here to be willing to ignore his presentation of himself, to ignore the concepts he governs himself by that cause him to be bound to an untrue perception of himself, and instead, be willing to bring to him the clarity of what is true about him in such a way that makes such sense that he will say, "Wow, I've been a fool to hold on to this misperception. Thank you . . . thank you for having the patience and taking the time and bringing with you the clarity of just exactly the perfect words that allowed me to see the nonsense I was holding myself to. I'm going to let it go."

You see, there's that clue about the Father's plan for your salvation.

Continuing . . .

Thus will we let no-one forget what YOU would remember.

Interesting way to put it, isn't it? We will . . .

. . . let no-one forget what YOU would remember.

When you say, "Father, what's the truth here?" And the Father reveals the truth, it is revealed to you so that you can share it. The clarity you find yourself having, you have for the purpose of sharing with another.

Thus will we let no-one [else] forget what YOU would remember.

And as a result what you give you get to keep. You secure it for yourself because you didn't indulge in further privacy. You listened. You joined with the Father. You wanted to know the truth and you were willing to abandon any authority you thought you had in the process and you shared it.

Thus will we let no-one forget what YOU would remember. And thus will you remember it.

What you give becomes yours.

Call forth in everyone only the remembrance of God, and of the Heaven that is in him.

. . . in your brother.

Call forth in everyone only the remembrance of God, . .

Don't join with him in his puny, small minded assessment of himself. Don't belittle him for it. But provide a Vision that allows him to see beyond it and recognize that it's not something he needs to be bound by any longer, that he can choose to abandon it. That's it.

If someone is behaving as though he is your enemy, don't assign the label "enemy" to him. Recognize that he's a brother misunderstanding himself and misunderstanding you. And then don't act as an enemy to him, act as a brother. And your insistence upon behaving as a brother who loves his brother, or a brother who loves his sister, you will provide by your actions, your behavior and your words, the assurance that your brother or sister needs to know that he doesn't or she doesn't have to distrust you and can be willing to abandon it and feel safe.

Call forth in everyone only the remembrance of God, . .

. . . meaning only the remembrance of what is divinely true about him.

. . . and of the Heaven that is in him. For where you would help your brother be, there will you think YOU are.

And that's a fact.

. . . where you would help your brother be, there will you think YOU are.

If you think your brother's a bastard . . . if you think he's lived his life in a way that is unprincipled and harmful and unkind and hateful and so-on-and-so-forth, and that he behaves this way because of life circumstances that he went through, that will be where you think you are. You will see yourself as like him, but having had better circumstances or been more fortunate than him. But still you were vulnerable as he was, but you by your own hand and your own intelligence managed to live your life a little bit better and so you're a little bit more respectable and you like yourself a little bit more and your demeaning attitude towards your brother is justified, even though you are as vulnerable to what he has experienced, as he was.

. . . where you would help your brother be, . .

See, if you would help your brother be in a state of being a bastard, who is judgable and who is appropriate to demean . . .

. . . where you would help your brother be, there will you think YOU are.

You'll think you're there too, but just a little bit more fortunate for the time being.

So be aware of this. And don't help your brother be where you don't want to be. Don't help your brother by demonstrating that he truly is vulnerable to life circumstances, and he truly is vulnerable to insane thinking, because you'll be teaching the same thing to yourself about yourself.

That's why you want to know the truth. That's why you want to abandon your own independent authoritative mental activities, because you want to stop before you think small-minded thoughts and say, "Father, what's the truth here?" . . . so that the truth might fill you, so that you might share that with your brother and thus help your brother be where you will think you are. See, you reinforce the truth for both of you that way.

Hear not his call for hell and littleness, . .

Don't let his behavior define him on his small-minded terms to you.

Hear not his call for hell and littleness, but only his call for Heaven and greatness.

You know something? Whenever you or your brother says, "Ouch," whenever you or your brother say or express, "I'm in pain," you're not declaring your mortality, you're not declaring your undivine humaneness, you are expressing a very deep awareness that is absolutely unjust for you to be in pain. Your "ouch" or whatever form of voicing your distress or expressing your distress, is a call for Heaven, is a call for truth.

So . . .

Hear not his call . . .

. . . your brother's call . . .

. . . for hell and littleness, but only . . .

. . . in what seems to be his call for hell and littleness . . .

. . . his call for Heaven and greatness. Forget not that his call is yours, and answer him with me.

You see? Don't answer him all by yourself. Don't resort to your knee-jerk mental reactions. Respond to . . .

. . . his call for Heaven and greatness.

. . . that looks like a call for hell and littleness and answer it with me—join with me. Do the "two-step" and ask me or ask the Father so that you can respond with Us and not in some mutual agreement with your brother and his current point of view. Join with One who has the Vision of truth and then respond to your brother.

Again . . .

Forget not that his call is yours, and answer him with me. God's power is forever on the side of His host, . .

. . . which you and your brothers and sisters are.

God's power is forever on the side of His host, for it . . .

... God's power ...

... protects only the peace in which He ...

... God ...

... dwells.

God dwells in the peace that is the fundamental context of your being. And God's power protects it.

Lay not littleness before His holy altar, . .

... God's holy altar ...

... which rises above the stars and reaches even to Heaven because of what is given it.

... the altar which is in you, which is the abiding place of God's love ...

... rises above the stars and reaches even to Heaven ...

This is what you want the experience of. And this is what you do not want to lose the inspiration to experience, just because you're faced with an inevitable demand to abandon the very things that made you feel good about yourself, which were all ego dynamics and didn't reflect the truth about you and kept you out of your right Mind and not experiencing your sanity.

Don't let the call for humility be interpreted as justification for losing your inspiration.

I look forward to being with you all next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

March 28th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

It's been a couple of weeks since we've been together and there's a point that we discussed last time where everyone still is.

It's this wonderful sentence:

If you are wholly willing to leave salvation to the plan of God, and unwilling to attempt to grasp for peace yourself, salvation will be GIVEN you.¹

Now, I said everyone is still at that point. That's not through neglect on anyone's part. It's very simply the point where all of you will be until you Wake up. It's really the threshold . . . it's the simple threshold.

[repeats] If you are wholly willing to leave salvation to the plan of God, and unwilling to attempt to grasp for peace yourself, salvation will be GIVEN you.

Every moment between now and the moment in which you Wake up, will be the moment where you can make the choice to be willing to leave salvation to the plan of God—the point at which you can decide to be unwilling to attempt to grasp for peace yourself. At no point is the “process” going to get more complicated than that.

Just let that sink in for a moment.

Remember, we spoke a few weeks ago about the fact that it's not appropriate for you to be the center of your attention, it's appropriate for God to be the center of your attention. And also, that it's not appropriate for your problems to be the center of your attention, but for truth to be the center of your attention.

Now, when you're willing to let God be the center of your attention, you are allowing yourself to be in a frame of mind in which you are not bringing forth an agenda of your own—an agenda for your salvation, an agenda for your success, an agenda for your health, an agenda for your safety—because you're not the center of your attention.

And why would you have God be the center of your attention? Because God is where truth is to be found. And truth is what you want to know. Because when you know the truth you're not experiencing ignorance any longer, nor are you suffering from ignorance any longer. You're in your right Mind, with your mind reflecting all that is true about God's Mind because you've let God be the center of your attention and you have invited in the conscious awareness of truth.

You see, the truth is really simple. But you are all wanting to make it more complicated. And you are wanting to make it more complicated because you think that is what will give you credibility—your ability to carry out complex tasks, your ability to think in complex ways. These are means by which you develop in the minds of others a respectable countenance, a respectable presence . . . you think. And you think that it does that and it's necessary because without doing it you're not respectable yet—which is not the truth. And I'm not going to harp on that over and over again tonight.

Now, this new section, the heading is entitled:

PRACTICING THE HOLY INSTANT

This course is not beyond IMMEDIATE learning, unless you prefer to believe that what God wills takes time. And this means only that you would RATHER delay the recognition that His Will is so.

Now, if you're not having a problem, you can read that sentence and you can possibly find it very interesting and stimulating and find a willingness to contemplate what it means in all its ramifications. But if you're having a problem [chuckle] and you've been asking for help and you're not experiencing the resolution of the problem yet, then these sentences here are not at all satisfying:

[repeats] This course is not beyond IMMEDIATE learning, unless you prefer to believe that what God wills takes time . . .

. . . and you sitting there with your problem that's unsolved—a need that's requiring immediate attention—and you're not getting an answer even though you are desiring to have immediate learning. You've done everything I've said. You've stepped back, you've said, "Father, what's the truth here?" And you've listened. And perhaps you have heard, and the need is still present—the need is still apparently as aggressive as it was in the beginning.

This course is not beyond IMMEDIATE learning, unless you prefer to believe that what God wills takes time.

"What do you mean, unless I prefer to believe? I don't prefer to believe that what God wills takes time. Why throw that at me when I've been sitting here today desiring to know the truth that heals—desiring to know the truth that eradicates or neutralizes or corrects this problem?"

And then it continues and says:

And this means only that you would RATHER delay the recognition that His Will is so.

That's a real slur if you're in a middle of a problem and you have been honestly and earnestly desiring to know the truth.

"Whatdaya mean? It means only that I would rather delay the recognition.

"I wouldn't rather delay anything!"

You know, when we've talked about small-mindedness and littleness—littleness is when you're using your mind for your purposes without being joined. And when you sit there in a state of reaction because you haven't yet seen evidence of your faith or your trust or of your willingness to know the truth, your reacting constitutes a presenting of littleness—a reassertion of what? Of your willfulness!

"What do you mean . . . I this and I that? What do YOU mean . . . who in the hell do YOU think YOU are? I know who I am. And because I know who I am I can say, 'Who the hell do you think you are?' And I can argue with you and I can bitch at you and I can be frustrated at you . . ."

You see, all of that is you reverting to littleness right in the face of your having been willing to abandon privacy and self-authorized thoughts, so that you might join with the Father because you have been told. And you have faith that what you have been told is true—that if you will let the Father in and if you will abandon your willfulness, you will see the results of ignorance dissolving, fading, being corrected, being erased.

Now, I've brought out before the statement that, "You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and you must understand yourself therefrom." Now we can equally say that truth is neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. It is at that point and must be understood therefrom.

So I want to describe something to you here. I want you to imagine that there are, like, two rooms: One is the room you're in that has the characteristics of you being an independent thinker—an authorizer of thoughts, an authorizer or creator of orderly thoughts. And in this room you have conflict, you have problems that you have to solve and you're even glad to have the problems to solve because that gives you purpose. There's another room in which Reality is going on, in which truth is available and present to be known.

Now, you all have the tendency to stand in the room where you are a private authorizer and for you to sort of reach into the other room where the truth is so that you might get hold of the truth to change the circumstances in the room you're in.

But the saying doesn't say that. It says, "Truth is neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it." In other words, it partakes of nothing of the nature of the room of independent thinking and the conflict and problems that necessarily accompany independent thinking.

And so you reach for truth to bring it back to the room you're in so that you can exercise authority. In many ways, this is the way you approach your healing. It's the way in which you do the two-step. You step back and stop thinking and you ask the Father, "What is the truth here?" so that you think you might be able to have the truth in your possession and apply it to the situation in the room that you're standing in.

But truth can't be understood in that room. And so when you're asking to know the truth, you're asking to have your mind shift from the room of independent thinking and the conflict always associated with it, into the room or arena of truth in which truth is neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, and therefore neither are you and the truth that is revealed to you does not become something to apply to the you that was standing in the other room.

And that's why the discovery or uncovering of truth is called a miracle. Because it's a sudden shift of perception: From the room of independent thinking to the context of truth, to the context of Reality in which nothing is getting better, in which nothing is having truth applied to it so it is transformed into something better.

Now, when you are learning about this and when you are learning to use your mind in this way, meaning not to use it to make something happen, but to use it to pay attention—to get out of the way in the sense of personal self-assertion and to let yourself be filled with the truth—when you're learning how to do that so that the fact that you're not behind the point of perfection and you're not advancing toward it can register with you, you have to be careful not to let your old-time thinking come into play that says, "Well this is taking a long time" or "This isn't working!"

Oh-h, well how do you know it's not working?

You just say, "It's not working according to my timetable!"

That's littleness! That's old habits! Those are the thinking processes that you have used forever and haven't allowed for healing and transformation to register with you—for you to find yourself moved out of the orphanage into the Kingdom of Heaven or from the room of conflict into the context of the Kingdom of Heaven and harmony.

Now it says:

This course is not beyond IMMEDIATE learning, . .

Okay . . . that's great news. It's wonderful. No argument there.

This course is not beyond IMMEDIATE learning, unless you prefer to believe that what God wills takes time.

Well, where on earth would that idea come from, that God's Will takes time?

Well it comes from thinking. [chuckling] It comes from using faulty imagination. And another way in which it comes into play which isn't a matter of a thought process, is that you don't really care what God's Will is. Because at the moment all you care about is your will. And your will may be very profoundly wonderful: "My loved one is in pain and I want my loved to be relieved of pain. I know that my loved one's Birthright is perfect harmony and the experience of perfection and by damnit, I'm going to think this absolutely flawless thought with such intensity and such confidence that it will, because of its truth, transform my loved one's experience!"

Whew! . . . no two-step there. No question, "Father, what's the truth here?"

It's an expression of arrogance isn't it. As we discussed last week, arrogance is the one thing that can take your inspiration away.

Hey, what is inspiration if it isn't the influx of truth—that which happens when you actually say, "Father what is the truth here?" . . . and you do care what the Father's Will is—and you're not caring more about what your will is no matter how well founded, how well placed or how perfect and beneficent it is.

This means only that you would RATHER delay the recognition that His Will . . .

. . . the Father's Will . . .

. . . is so.

You're gonna try your will first. You gonna try to be the best damned metaphysician—the best damned spiritual healer you could be, the clearest channel of the Father's healing power. By damnit you're going to be the best! "I'm gonna be the best . . . I'm gonna be the best! I'm going to apply myself with the foundation of truth itself to do a holy work."

When you do that, it means only that you would rather delay the recognition that His Will is so, that God's Will is the only One that is, the only One that exists, the only One that is embedded in you as your will, as your purpose which is waiting to be fulfilled when you yield to it.

But oh-no, you'd rather yield to the will you've imagined you have instead of the will the Father has placed in you which is His Will and which you won't discover the fullness of until you forget about yourself and say, "Father, what is your Will?" And invite it in and make room for it by not having any alternative plans for salvation yourself.

You know, what other plans of salvation might you have?

Oh well, let's see . . . Let's say your loved one's problem is an inconvenient problem. What if your loved one's problem is getting in the way of something important you have to do. What if your loved one's problem, which of course, the Course has taught you is the result of his or hers ignorance which he or she has brought upon himself or herself, and so therefore it's up to them to correct it and it's not your problem, really . . . you know. So, "I can't let my loved one's problem interfere . . ." With what? "Taking care of No. 1."

"Oh-h . . . you know, . . . if I were going to make my loved one's problem of primary concern to me because I truly love my loved one, that would tell everyone else who's expecting to be the center of my attention, that they aren't the center of my attention. That my wife or my husband is and that I'm willing to neglect them for my wife or my husband—my significant other. And I will lose respect, because by damnit, they expect me to follow through on whatever I've promised them I will do, or whatever I have convinced them I am capable of doing for them so that I might have their allegiance. In other words, their respect.

So there are strange ways of deciding that what the Father's Will is, is not important to you. And that you do not really want to know the truth about your loved one's problem so that your loved one will experience healing because it will cause you to lose face with others.

Tell me this: If you are going to become so convoluted in your mind (and you love complexity), before long you're going to be obligated to many in many different ways because of what you promised this one or that group or those people. And pretty soon it's going to be hard to keep straight what you promised to whom and how you're going to keep up a good front, all as a means ultimately of saying to your loved one: "Don't have a problem that's inconvenient for me. Don't have a problem that requires me to be with you out of my devotion to you because I love you. Don't have an inconvenient problem [chuckle] which would cause me to have to embody the fact that I don't value you as much as I value everyone else's adoration or respect or approval!"

Now, what I've been saying . . . I've used a loved one as the example, but it could be anyone, anyone who's calling upon you for attention that for one reason or another you don't want to give because of arrogance that you have that says, "I shouldn't have to do this, you're having a problem at an inconvenient time. I shouldn't have to bend over backward or put forth any conscientious effort because right now it's inappropriate!"

Remember, we said last time we read:

Call forth in everyone only the remembrance of God, and of the Heaven that is in him.

Well that's great [chuckle] if the call for the remembrance of God that's occurring doesn't happen to be inconvenient for you. If it's inconvenient, then you say, "I really don't have the willingness to call forth in you only the remembrance of God and of the Heaven that is in you." . . . selfishness.

Call forth in everyone only the remembrance of God, and of the Heaven that is in him. For where you would help your brother be, there will you think YOU are.

Now here's the key:

Hear not his call for hell and littleness, . .

. . . when your brother is voicing his frustration, his pain, his suffering, he's being unpleasant. He's expressing littleness, he's expressing fear, he's putting forth a call for hell and littleness. "Feel my pain . . . feel my pain . . . hear my pain . . . hear my pain . . . give your attention to me . . . give your attention to my pain, etc."

Hear not his call for hell and littleness, but only his call for Heaven and greatness.

Because you have the means to discern what his behavior actually is. Is his unpleasant obtuse negatively focused energy a call for hell and littleness or is it a call for Heaven and greatness?

And can a call for Heaven and greatness really be an inconvenience to you? Can it happen truly at an inconvenient time? Is there any time that is not appropriate for you to call forth in your brother only the remembrance of God? Is there any moment in which it's inappropriate for you to call forth within you the remembrance of God so that you can be with your brother consciously in that frame of mind? No.

Well, what if you answer your brother or sister with the truth that you hear, because you did the two-step, and your brother or sister refuses to hear you and persists in complaining and stating that the lie is the truth—that he has this terminal disease and he is dying and there's nothing that can be done about it and no matter what you say it can't be changed, and fights and fights and fights for the lie.

Well, [chuckling] you know, it was all right the first time you did the two-step, you know . . . it wasn't too inconvenient . . . you were able to take the time. But now your brother is kicking you in the face so-to-speak and rejecting the gift and saying that, in so many words, the truth that you're sharing is nonsense and you have presented nothing that justifies his abandoning his conviction—that he has no choice but to suffer and die.

So the question boils down to: At what point does your brother's need constitute a justifiable inconvenience to you so that you can say, "I cannot help you any further, because I have things to take care of for myself." At what point is the abandonment of Love, as the proper use that your mind is to be put to, justifiable? At what point does fulfilling your function become truly inconvenient and inappropriate?

It's a good question. Because if there is a time limit, if there is a point at which it is appropriate for you to withdraw your willingness to call forth in everyone only the remembrance of God, then there is a point at which it is appropriate for you to abandon your function and lose the opportunity for a miracle.

You're neither behind the point of perfection, nor advancing toward it. You're not in the room of progress, of development, of becoming better or becoming worse, you are at the point of perfection in the other room and must understand yourself therefrom—which means that when there is a problem to be solved, you must be willing to go into an arena that doesn't seem to make any sense, because you're asked to abide by a knowledge of truth that you will find yourself infilled with without being able to take that truth and use it, which it is your habit to do.

Everything that goes on in your mind is a thing to be used—a thing to be used for your safety, a thing to be used to create invulnerability, a thing to be used to reduce stress and help remove you from inconvenient demands so that you might find peace without resolution. And that's not what it's about.

Now if a brother is behaving negatively and in a harmful way, and if that brother won't stop no matter how clearly you share with him the very truth that would allow him to abandon his misunderstanding, if he insists on behaving in a way that would be harmful, you must, as I've said before, do whatever it takes to disallow for the harm to occur. But you cannot afford to treat the brother as though his problem is an inconvenience to you that provides a justification for abandoning your intent to call forth in him only the remembrance of God.

And as I've said before, if someone is brought into a hospital and there is a total lack of self-control and he or she would harm those attending to him, he or she is strapped down so that no harm can be done, and then care is provided—so the correction occurs.

Now, I'm going to go back to where we began.

This course is not beyond IMMEDIATE learning, unless you prefer to believe that what God wills takes time. And this means only that you would RATHER delay the recognition that His Will is so.

And I've just gone through various examples of how you justify a delay in the recognition that His Will is so, and not yours.

You have many ways of justifying governing yourself and your behavior towards your brothers according to your will, without violating your will, without letting your will be modified in any way.

The holy instant is THIS one . . .

. . . this instant . . .

. . . and EVERY one. The one you WANT it to be it IS.

The instant what? The instant in which immediate learning can occur. The instant in which a sudden shift in perception—a miracle—can occur.

The holy instant is THIS one and EVERY one. The one you WANT it to be it IS.

It's the simple truth. But if you're struggling with personal authority or personal affront and you're questioning whether it's still appropriate for you to call forth in your brother only the remembrance of God, this moment will not be the one in which the miracle occurs.

The one you WANT it to be it IS. The one you would not have it be is lost to you.

It's very simple.

YOU must decide on when it is. Delay it not.

And again I want to come back to you when you have been diligently and devotedly wanting to know the truth—God's truth—so that your brother might be blessed who is in pain or whatever. And you read it and it says . . .

YOU must decide on when it is. Delay it not.

And you have a reaction, "I'm not delaying it. I don't want to delay it. I've been earnestly and patiently and without any attempt at coercion to make it happen faster—being open to the truth that would heal.

"So don't tell me that I must decide on when it is and to delay it not. I have decided on when it is. And I'm not delaying it. Now is when I want it. Now is when I desire it because I love my loved-one."

If the correction hasn't occurred, then somewhere you are still holding out for your will, somewhere you're saving face or somewhere you're saving your ass, you're not going to bring it out into the full open center stage. But in some way the call for your willingness to help uncover the truth is colored by an agenda you have and a distress that what is happening is a little inconvenient for you and therefore not appropriate. The simple definition of arrogance—the exercise of authority that you don't have.

The holy instant is THIS one and EVERY one. The one you WANT it to be it IS. The one you would not have it be is lost to you. YOU must decide on when it is. Delay it not. For beyond the past and future, . .

. . . or we could say, separate and apart from the past and future . . .

. . . in which you will not find it, it stands in shimmering readiness for your acceptance.

What does? Well the truth does. But in this case it's referring to the learning that the Course makes available and encourages and nurtures—learning, growth, you might say, transformation, the miracle that constitutes the sudden shift of perception where ignorance is replaced by knowledge or Knowing.

For beyond the past and future, . .

. . . separate and apart from the past and future . . .

. . . in which you will not find it, it stands in shimmering readiness for your acceptance. Yet you cannot bring it into glad awareness while you do not want it, . .

“Oh, but I do want it. But damnit, it's such inconvenient timing. And how am I going to deal with these others who were expecting something from me at the very moment that I'm called to be here. It's not fair.” Ewe . . . there's all that littleness again. The private thinking that constitutes the opaqueness of your mind that doesn't let Reality shine into it.

Yet you cannot bring it into glad awareness while you do not want it, for it holds the whole release from littleness.

Your practice must therefore rest upon your willingness to let all . . . your willingness to let all littleness go.

What does that mean, all littleness? Remember, littleness is constituted of thoughts you are originating in the absence of being joined with the Father, in the absence of being joined with the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind.

The instant in which magnitude will dawn upon you is but as far away as your DESIRE for it.

Again, that sentence will make you mad if you think you have been desiring it and you are frustrated because you haven't seen the results yet.

The instant in which magnitude will dawn upon you is but as far away as your DESIRE for it.

"Well, whatdaya mean? I've had the desire for it all day. It sure seems to be further aware than my simple desire for it. And I'm pissed off. And it's not fair. Oh, boy." You see, all of these sentences are expressions of littleness, they are expressions that don't take into consideration the divine one that you Are, the one that is neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. It doesn't take into consideration that of you which isn't little and which isn't subject to thoughts that are not thoughts of God. Now, I don't mean thoughts about God, but thoughts that God is having.

As long as you desire it not, . .

. . . what? Magnitude. Magnitude is the opposite of littleness. So magnitude would be God's thoughts. Magnitude would be that Mind which you are supposed to let be in you, which is God's.

As long as you desire it . . .

. . . magnitude . . .

. . . not, and cherish littleness instead, . .

. . . as long as you want to throw out all these short sentences that express your frustration and unfairness and blah, blah, blah.

As long as you desire it not, and cherish littleness instead, by so much is it far from you. By so much as you want it will you bring it nearer.

And so you must be careful. You must watch your mind to see how you're willing to use it. Because you will easily slip back into cherishing the littleness of mind that is constituted of your asserting your right to express and believe and base your actions upon the thoughts you've made up rather than the thoughts that are God's thoughts about His creation, which constitute your ability to see truth in everything. In other words, everything as it truly is.

Think not that you can find salvation in your own way and HAVE it. Give over EVERY plan that you have made for your salvation in exchange for God's. His will content you, and there is nothing else that can bring you peace. For peace is of God, and of no-one beside Him.

Whew . . . the sooner you're willing to consider that any ideas you have come up with on your own about how things work cannot possibly be the truth, because you came up with them on your own, as an orphan, as an independent entity that it's impossible for you to be.

You will make it impossible to experience a miracle. You will make it impossible for there to be a sudden shift of perception. The fluidity, the willingness for change will not be present. There will be no invitation for what? . . . that which stands in shimmering readiness for your acceptance—Reality as it is, wholeness where disease seemed to be, beauty where all that you had seen was turmoil and ugliness.

Be humble before Him, . .

. . . God . . .

. . . and yet great IN Him. And value no plan of the ego before the plan of God. For you leave empty your place in His plan, . .

. . . you see. Every moment you spend going for the gusto of what you will to be, you're leaving your place in His plan empty, like a student in a schoolroom who's daydreaming, and so his presence in the class is lost to the class.

. . . value no plan of the ego before the plan of God. For you leave empty your place in His plan, which you must fulfill if you would join with me, by your decision to join in any plan BUT His.

Again:

For you leave empty your place in His plan, . .

. . . by your decision to join in any plan BUT His.

I left out a subjunctive clause there for it to be more easily understood. I'll read it again wholly:

For you leave empty your place in His plan, which you must fulfill if you would join with me, by your decision to join in any plan BUT His. I call you to fulfill your holy part in the plan that He has given to the world for its release from littleness. God would have His host . . .

. . . all of you . . .

. . . abide in perfect freedom. Every allegiance to a plan of salvation that is apart from Him diminishes the value of His Will for you in your own minds. And yet it is your mind that IS the host to Him.

Now, you're not used to letting your mind be host to God. You either occupy most of the space with your own thoughts about yourself, or if you have become acquainted with God and you have invited God in, you still reserve space there for you to be your own independent, willful presence, accomplishing things that you feel are worthy of being accomplished without asking God, "What's the truth here?"

So, you're not used to thinking in terms of a shift from the room of independent thinking and the conflict and the surmounting of conflict that are characteristic of it, for the context or room in which the experience of truth is available, and from which it is your Birthright to be experiencing not only truth but your Self.

And so, the call is for you to be willing to do what seems not to make sense, so that a new sensibility can begin to register and grow and substantiate itself in your mind. Which means that you must be willing to call forth in everyone only the remembrance of God no matter how unpleasant they're being, no matter how resistant they seem to be to receive the truth that would heal them, no matter how slowly the healing of pain seems to take, because ultimately if you don't stay with the desire to know the truth you will abandon the one element that triggers transformation and you will continue to be stuck in the status-quo.

You cannot afford to let your mind be distracted from your decision to let God be the center of your attention, not yourself, and for the truth to be the center of your attention, not your problems.

[addresses audience] I love you, and you, I love you, and I love you, and I love all of you who are watching. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

April 4th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, when there's a war, usually a conscript is set up and you'll see in various countries, in various forms, what was seen here in the United States: Uncle Sam saying, "We need YOU!"

Now, there's a call to peace. You recognize it on the world's stage today, but even if there weren't that demand or a demand of that sort occurring, there would still be a call to peace. The Course is a call to peace. And just as was brought out last week, if you are intent on fulfilling your purpose, then the purpose God has for you is unfulfilled. There's an emptiness—a void there—because you are preoccupied with your own private little business . . . you know . . . [deep sigh] pickyunish, chicken-shit, little itty-bitty business. I say itty-bitty business, because your function and your purpose is infinite, not little itty-bitty.

You're needed. We need you. God needs you. The Brotherhood that is Awake needs you. We all call upon you. The Holy Spirit calls upon you. It calls upon you to do whatever it takes to Wake up. It calls upon you to join the rest of us who are Awake in a full-on conscious experience of what you truly Are so that you are no longer confused, so that you are no longer tormented, conflicted, so that you are no longer suffering. We call upon you to do your part: To step up to the line, so to speak, and fulfill your purpose.

We've been talking for a few weeks about your purpose. Your purpose is to reflect the Father's Will. And your Father's Will becomes available to you as your conscious experience of what It is, when you what? When you shut up! When you dare to become still and invite a conscious experience of joining instead of what has amounted to be an unconscious experience of independent privacy in which your experience of Reality has been so distorted that you have become afraid of it and you have devoted yourself to protecting yourself against it.

You "kick against the pricks"¹ as it says in the Bible. The pricks are the parts of the Kingdom of Heaven that you're misunderstanding, misperceiving and that you're reacting to. And so, you fall in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven and you break your leg—a totally absurd thing.

But the moment I tell you . . . the moment you abandon the mindset that says it's a material world, a material universe, it's polarized, it is a balanced antagonism, you will find that it will be impossible to break your leg if you fall. You will find it impossible for impact to occur, and you will find that if you did fall or if you had fallen and been injured and you're in the middle of recovery, that recovery could be suddenly instantaneous and total.

Your Guides and the Holy Spirit and I have the same task: To bring truth to your attention, or we could say, to bring your attention to truth. Why? Because the moment truth dawns on you, you become unconfused. Peace is immediately established and clarity grows, for lack of better words.

Now, we ended up last week with this:

God would have His host abide in perfect freedom . . . 2

. . . and you are His host. You are the place: The fluid, flexible, willing place, in which God abides and expresses Himself—expresses, meaning Creation.

Every allegiance to a plan of salvation that is apart from Him diminishes the value of His Will for you in your own minds. And yet it is your mind that IS the host to Him.

This draws a simple picture for you of Who and what you Are—not the attorney or the secretary or the typist . . . or whatever.

You are the host of God. And what that means in its fullness awaits your conscious experience. And it will await your conscious experience forever if it takes forever for you to desire to have the experience. It is up to you. It's up to you to ask for it. It's up to you to press for it. Not willfully, but to press for it in the sense of willingly neglecting to do anything other than be curious to experience it.

Would you learn how perfect and immaculate is the holy altar on which your Father has placed Himself?

You're the holy altar on which your Father has placed Himself.

Would you learn how perfect and immaculate . . .

. . . you are?

This you will recognize in the holy instant in which you willingly and gladly give over every plan but His.

Now, does that mean that you've got to go on an inner search and find all your plans—the upfront ones and the hidden ones—and make sure you don't miss any of them, and abandon them, kick them out? No. [chuckle] What it really means is that you have to be willing to move into a space—I'll call it a space, a mental space—in which you're simply being quiet, in which there is silence, because in the silence there's no assertion going on. The moment you do begin to assert yourself, you can feel the silence being disturbed, literally. The disturbance will not escape your attention.

So when you go into the silence, you are willingly and gladly giving over every plan but His, because you're neglecting to exercise any plan of yours.

This is very important.

You don't have to ferret out all of the underhanded secret plans you have for your salvation in order to have salvation given you. You just have to stop employing them and you can do that by becoming still.

"Be still and know that I am God." Throughout all of the major religions, stillness is fundamental.

Again . . .

Would you learn how perfect and immaculate . . .

. . . you are?

Would you learn how perfect and immaculate is the holy altar on which your Father has placed Himself? This you will recognize in the holy instant in which you willingly and gladly give over every plan but His. For there lies peace, perfectly clear because you have been willing to . . .

. . . what?

. . . to meet it's conditions.

What are the conditions of peace? The absence of aggression—meaning, the absence of self-assertion, the absence of behavior that identifies orphanhood.

You can claim the holy instant any time and anywhere you want it. In your practice, try to give over every plan you have accepted for finding magnitude in littleness.

What does that mean, finding magnitude in littleness? It means puffing yourself up by means of your own thoughts and by means of skill you work on to acquire, so that you can control and direct other people in a way that supports your puffed up self-image.

Magnitude is what orphans try to generate through independent acts of will to prove that they are real while not claiming a Source, while not acknowledging and recognizing a Source. It's that simple.

In your practice, try to give over every plan you have accepted. . .

. . . by ceasing to employ any of them by simply becoming still, and in the stillness doing one thing, saying, "Father, what is the truth here? Father, what is the truth?"

In your practice, try to give over every plan you have accepted for finding magnitude in littleness . . .

. . . greatness without having to abandon independence and privacy.

IT IS NOT THERE.

Magnitude is not to be found in littleness because it is not there. And remember that I have been identifying littleness as all of the thoughts you think which do not in any way express or embody your having joined with your Source.

Use the holy instant only to recognize that you alone CANNOT know where it is, . .

. . . magnitude . . .

. . . and can only deceive yourself.

You, as a so-called imaginary orphan, cannot know where your identity is because your Identity is determined by your Father, by your Mother, by your Parent, by your Source, by that of which you are the effect.

You alone, . .

. . . not joined, being therefore totally unconscious of your Birthright, . . .

CANNOT know where it, . . .

. . . magnitude, . . .

. . . is, and can only deceive yourself.

This is a really simple point and it's a really important point. And I encourage you this week to meditate daily and meditate only for about ten minutes on this one point.

I want you to become still . . . as still as you can . . . and then for about ten minutes, I want you just to abide with the thought that you on your own, by means of your very best thinking or worst thinking, cannot know the truth. And that anything you do from that standpoint will be self-deception!

It sounds awful. Because it sounds like it's a judgment against you. But it's not. It's not a judgment at all. It doesn't say anything about your inherent or innate presence or validity. All it says is, that if you try to do something in this fashion, it won't work. And in the knowing that it won't work and that it never has, and that the only result that has ever been has been self-deception, which means that you've been ignorant, all you have to do is stop doing that in order to escape the ignorance.

So instead of being an awful judgment against you, it's a stepping stone out of an illegitimate experience of being, one that it's not your Birthright to be experiencing and one which you need to be free of.

Again . . .

Use the holy instant only to recognize that you alone . . .

. . . all by your little self . . .

. . . CANNOT know where it is, and can only deceive yourself.

Now, if you will just let that register with you without reacting to it, you will realize . . . "Wow, I don't want to deceive myself. And if I'm deceiving myself by means of thinking I'm engaging in, without being joined with the Holy Spirit or my Guide or the Father, then I'm going to stop thinking. I'm going to begin to make time to be still and do it more and more consistently. And if I must engage in an activity, I will engage in it to the best of my ability without leaving that place of quietness. In fact, I will desire to know if I am in the middle of an activity, how to engage in that activity with divine Grace—how every aspect of what I'm doing in that activity might express God. I will ask to find out how to be inspired in whatever task I'm engaged in." And then, still take time to quietly not engage in tasks and practice the stillness so that stillness becomes familiar to you.

Continuing . . .

I stand within the holy instant, as clear as you would have me.

For example, I stand within the holy instant as clear as Paul would have me. And sometimes Paul would have me very clear. And other times, Paul would not have me stand within the holy instant with great clarity because he wants to engage in some of his own clarity. He wants to practice being himself, you see.

And everyone does this. And in many cases, Paul presents the opportunity to experience me in the middle of the holy instant with him with great clarity more often than most people do. You're seeing an example of it right now. But as I've mentioned before, and everyone who knows him personally is aware, when the meeting is over, Paul returns, minus me. So, at that point, I stand within the holy instant as clear as he would have me, which isn't real clear.

Now, is that a judgment on him? I understand that some people do not like me using him as an example. But I'm using him as an example here, of the fact that he's quite capable of doing and being what works as well as doing and being what doesn't work . . . okay . . . just as each one of you does.

And what all of this that we're talking about boils down to is, each of you making, including Paul, the more consistent choice for letting me stand within the holy instant as clear as you would have me, and have you want to have me clear all the time.

I stand within the holy instant, as clear as you would have me.
And the extent to which you learn to be willing to accept me is the measure of the time in which the holy instant will be yours.

The moment you say "Yes," without holding out for a plan of your own, without filling the silence with some bias or project of your own, as soon as you do that, the holy instant will be yours. It's that simple. That you're not doing it, simply means that you're not doing it yet. And that you're not doing it means that you are constantly provided with the opportunity to do it. And that's all it means.

And we are calling you to let it happen. We're saying, "Join us," so that you might consciously experience the communion that it's your Birthright to be experiencing and in which the conscious experience of what you divinely Are will become yours. And you'll no longer be inclined to try to be in a room of independence, reaching for the truth, so that you might bring it into the room of independence and improve the conflict, which is unavoidable because independence is being attempted. [chuckle] You see?

I call to you to make the holy instant yours at once, . .

. . . not next year, not when you've refined your soul . . .

I call to you to make the holy instant yours at once for the release from littleness in the mind of the host of God depends on willingness, and NOT on time.

I know you all feel that you are willing. But . . . how can I put it? Are you willing to invest the time? Are you willing to make a commitment to an ongoing willingness that doesn't become disturbed by little attempts on your part to act independently and get the satisfaction, the hit that comes from it which actually amounts to nothing but fear?

It will be easier for you to make that kind of commitment if you will really let it sink in—that the holy instant is only to recognize that you alone cannot know where It is (magnitude) and can only deceive yourself.

If you will let that be the utter truth for you, to you, that all you can do all by yourself is deceive yourself and that the result of it will always be an ongoing state of being deceived and therefore not in your right Mind, it will become easier to say—no matter what is going on in your day—"At this moment I choose not to deceive myself by thinking further. I really, really, value the idea that if I become still and stop thinking, the truth of God can and will infill me and return me to a conscious experience of my right Mind, right here on planet Earth, today in the middle what appeared to me to be absolutely not divine activities. And I'm willing to do it because of the promise I have been given: That if I do that, these so-called un-divine activities will be revealed to me because of a sudden shift of perception I've gone through that allows me to see what is divinely going on, instead of what I've misperceived to be going on and convinced myself of."

Continuing:

The reason why this course is simple is that TRUTH is simple. Complexity is of the ego, and is nothing more than the ego's attempt to obscure the obvious.

Now, when Paul listens to me, as right now, he opens up his mouth and speaks the words he speaks because something becomes obvious to him. Truth is obvious. The obviousness to truth registers with you when you're not introducing anything of your own personality or personal biases into the mix.

When you become still and things become obvious, and part of the obviousness includes opening your mouth and expressing it, it is not experienced as a personal capacity of your own. What became obvious is not a creation of yours.

And so, when you dare to become still and abandon your own intents, your own willfulness, your own best judgments and concepts, and you become receptive like a sponge, you do become filled up. And then what you say and what you be and what you do becomes illuminated by what became obvious to you. And others recognize the obviousness of the value and the meaning and the truth that comes forth.

That's the way Being is. That's the way you, being neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it Be's, exists, fulfills your purpose.

When you are willing to Be in this way, there is no detectible arrogance in what you are being or saying or doing, which makes it easy for you to be heard or we could say, it makes it easier for others to hear you. And so, communication flows. Not you over here communicating an idea of yours to something over there, but you, in so many words, seeing the glory of God and saying, "Oh-h-h-h!" And everyone else hearing you say, "Oh-h-h-h!" and without your saying anything more, feeling the fact that that's an exclamation of a recognition of that which is Beautiful. And your exclamation had nothing to do with your trying to impress anyone. It was you having been infilled and responding to the infilling. You see?

What I'm trying to say is, that being Awake and the kind of behavior you'll find yourself engaging in will be very different from what you're presently doing.

Now, we'll continue and come back to this.

You could live forever in the holy instant, BEGINNING NOW and reaching to eternity, but for a very simple reason.

[Repeats] You could live forever in the holy instant, BEGINNING NOW and reaching to eternity, but for a very simple reason. Do not obscure the simplicity of this reason, for if you do, it will be only because you prefer not to recognize it, and not to let it go. The simple reason, simply stated, is this: The holy instant is a time in which you receive and GIVE perfect communication. This means, however, that it is a time in which your mind is OPEN, both to receive and give.

Now, let's understand that. It . . .

. . . means, however, that it is a time in which your mind is OPEN, . . .

. . . like a doorway without a door on the hinges, just . . .

. . . OPEN, both to receive and give.

Well, you say, "Well, everyday I engage in communication with people. And I receive and I give. They say things. I receive it. I give by saying things back." You see. And there you are in the picture, you're there as a giver-backer and you're there as a receiver. And the receiving and the giving has to do with what I'm going to call, two-way communication that at the very least, really is adversarial . . . really is adversarial.

As long as you're behaving as an orphan, as long as you're believing that you're an orphan, every bit of communication will be "this-for-that," "tit-for-tat." Adversarial . . . self-protective—always watching to see if you need to try for leverage or relax a little bit, but always wary.

What does it mean to receive and give? I'll tell you, it's what is happening right now with Paul. It isn't a matter of receiving from your fellowman in a game of "tit-for-tat" or leverage. It's standing in the silence, having abandoned the attempt to be self-assertive as an object or a thing called a human being, an organism—a thing with a piece of meat in its head that is able to cogitate and come up with conclusions.

No, it's about being a state of mind in which silence has been honored, which by virtue of what silence is, invites the infilling of Reality which we could call the Father's Will. And as I said, it causes a response, which could be, "Oh-h-h-h." or it could be words like the words I'm using right now—words like Paul is formulating with his lips and voice right now.

Either way it is an acknowledgement of the registering of truth that has become obvious by virtue of valuing the stillness. And so, receiving occurs and giving occurs.

But in the process, Paul isn't bouncing his tiny sense of himself off of what he perceives your tiny sense of yourself is. It's not a bantering about. It isn't attempts to leverage. There is no arrogance to it, because there is no personal assertion to it. And yet something utterly meaningful is happening. It's that simple.

The holy instant is a time in which you receive and GIVE perfect communication.

Let me put it this way: Communication really isn't a two-way street. [chuckle] Communication is not something directed toward each other. It's like looking at a sunset and someone is standing next to you. And the sun comes out from behind the clouds and hits the clouds and the sky in a particular way that's absolutely breath-taking. And you express the breath-takingness of it, not caring a bit whether your brother next to you notices it or not. But your brother does notice it, because you were verbal about it, and sees it also and responds to it.

Both of you are experiencing and responding to the same thing together, not as a result of a back and forth communication but truly more as communion. And it's in that sense that the word communication is used here.

The holy instant is a time in which you receive and GIVE perfect communication.

But remember, the perfect communication is occurring when you don't have yourself on your mind. It's when you have God on your mind, because you've experienced the Godness of something.

Continuing again:

This means, however, that it is a time in which your mind is OPEN, both to receive and give.

But mind you, it means to receive and give in a different way than what you have previously determined communication to be.

It is [for example] . . .

I'm adding the words in "for example."

It is the recognition that all minds ARE in communication.

Because I'll tell you something: When the experience occurs, it won't just be with the one next to you. And you will be able to glimpse—perhaps not fully, initially—but you will be able to glimpse the experience of the fact that it wasn't just you and the one standing next to you exclaiming at the beauty, but the whole Brotherhood, because there are no private thoughts. And that is part of the beginning of the dawning in your awareness of how perfect and immaculate is the holy alter on which your Father has placed Himself, meaning you.

Again:

It is the recognition that all minds ARE in communication.

Not will be, are, and therefore already have been.

It therefore seeks to CHANGE nothing, but merely to ACCEPT everything.

Oh, does that mean you're going to accept sickness? Does that mean you're going to accept sickness and sin and death? Are you going to accept murder? Are you going to accept violence—you're going to accept everything?

No. What it means is that when you have stepped out of the concept of an orphan, of an independent thinker, of an independent authorizer . . . when you have stepped out of that, there is no longer present with you any desire or attempt to change anything, to coerce your brothers, to make them behave in a way that makes you feel safe or makes you rich or makes you successful and so on.

And in the absence of assertive attempts to control and affect others and to make them behave in ways you want them to behave, you will find yourself preoccupied with the influx of truth that occurs, and the fact that the truth is so obvious. And you find yourself accepting what is obvious because it is obvious and in that state of mind, peace reins . . . peace governs.

How can you do this when you would prefer to have PRIVATE thoughts, and KEEP them?

And . . . your nice little secret thoughts: "Don't let them know what you're doing. Don't let them know what you're up to or they'll spoil it, or they'll do it before you will . . . can't trust anybody."

How can you do this when you would prefer to have PRIVATE thoughts, and KEEP them? The only way you could do THAT is to DENY the perfect communication that makes the holy instant what it is.

The holy instant is that moment in which you give and receive perfect communication.

You believe that it is possible to harbor thoughts you would not share, . .

. . . either hateful thoughts, that would embarrass you if others knew of them, or excellent thoughts that you are afraid people would take and run with and benefit from before you could benefit from them.

You believe that it is possible to harbor thoughts you would not share, and that salvation lies in keeping your thoughts to yourself ALONE. For in private thoughts, known only to yourself, you think you find a way to keep what you would HAVE alone, . .

. . . in other words, all by yourself . . .

. . . and share what YOU would share.

And you would only share whatever it would profit you to share—whatever you believe it would profit you to share. So you give what will get people's support. You give what will get approval from people. You give to get! But you don't share, because in the absence of self-assertiveness and self-protection, you have seen truth and gasped a little and felt awe a little and shared it not because you intended to share it, but because you couldn't keep your mouth shut, it was so wonderful.

. . . in private thoughts, known only to yourself, you think you find a way to keep what you would HAVE alone, and share what YOU would share. And then you wonder why it is that you are not in full communication with those around you, and with God Who surrounds ALL of you together.

So, here's a wonderful clue: When you're willing to become still, and when you are willing to invite in the Father's point of view—meaning that you truly want to know the truth—you find the truth about you becoming obvious to you. And you also begin to find the truth about your brother becoming obvious to you as he or she, whom you are bound together with, inseparable from in the embrace of your mutual Father.

In other words, you become open to, receptive to, and actually begin to experience what I'm going to call, the true experience of family. Because I will tell you, that the meaning of family is Identity. And there is no such thing as private, independent identity.

Every thought you would keep hidden shuts communication off because you would HAVE it so.

Yes, you would have it so and you make it so by valuing your private thoughts, and by being unwilling to be completely unconditionally open to and receptive to your brothers and sisters and your world. And thus you do not see them as the Sons and as the Daughters of God and you do not see the world as the Kingdom of Heaven. But that is what it's your Birthright to be experiencing. And that's what I'm calling all of you to have.

It is impossible to recognize perfect communication while BREAKING communication holds value to you. Ask yourselves honestly, . .

. . . during this coming week . . .

. . . "Would I WANT to have perfect communication, and am I wholly willing to let everything that interferes with it go forever?" If the answer is no, then the Holy Spirit's readiness to give it to you is not enough to make it yours, for you are not ready to SHARE it with Him.

When you share something with someone, neither one of you has a position of dominance. True sharing constitutes a mutual act of humility and absence of arrogance.

If the answer is no, then the Holy Spirit's readiness to give it to you is not enough to make it yours, for you are not ready to SHARE it with Him. And it cannot come into a mind that has decided to oppose it.

How do you decide to oppose that? By claiming the right to think your own thoughts. Again . . . the practice of littleness.

For the holy instant is given and received with EQUAL willingness, . .

. . . see, no one dominating . . .

. . . being the acceptance of the single Will that governs ALL thought . . .

. . . oh-h, governs all thought . . . what is it that governs all thought? Not some presence that is going to govern you. What governs all thought is the obviousness of truth that becomes obvious to you when you desire to know what it is. And that's the single Will that governs all thought. You simply will not engage in expressing thoughts that don't arise out of the obviousness of what is true.

So, have a good week. And I look forward to being with you next week.

Love the fact that anything you do on your own, will constitute ongoing self-deception, which doesn't serve you at all. And then dare to avail yourself of silence as consistently as you can during this next week, with a constant invitation to know the truth.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

April 12th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well at this point, almost everyone has finished the day of resurrection, the celebration of the day of resurrection—but the day of resurrection of Someone else, Someone else who was providing an example, not an example of the truth about life in some general way, but an example of the truth about life about you . . . everyone.

Now we have, for the last few weeks, been reading about the holy instant—talking about it—the instant in which there's willingness on your part to say “yes” to what? To abandoning thinking, to abandoning private thinking and instead saying, “Father, what is the truth here? Father, what is the truth that I may experience its obviousness and as a result of experiencing its obviousness, spontaneously embrace and embody it in my actions with my fellowman and with my world?”

The holy instant is your resurrection, if you will. It amounts to the practice of your holiness. Not you acting holy, but you experiencing the obviousness of your holiness because you're feeling God's Presence in you, as you. And you're feeling God's Presence in you, as you because you're not practicing any other presence, you're not imagining any other presence called, “you” and then behaving in that caricature.

Why have the crucifixion, resurrection and ascension if it had no practical meaning for each and every one of you today, in any given moment—in any given moment that you are willing to choose as the moment that will be the holy instant—the one in which you actually yield, the one in which you actually say, “Thy Will be done.”

. . . “thy Will be done.” The statement is said often. But it’s very often imagined to be a statement that says, “Oh, Your Will be done unto me . . . Your Will be done to me.” When it needs to mean: “Thy Will be done through me because I have abandoned my intent to act on my own for my own reasons, and instead I want to know what Your Will is. I want You to share It with me so that the obviousness of the truth of Your Will will cause me to abandon any interest in any other so-called right to have a different point of view.

You say “Thy Will be done” because it is your right and your prerogative to have the Father’s Will register with you today, now, in all of your apparent unholiness, in all of your apparent humanness.

So the statement, “Thy Will be done” is a request for you to be filled with, today, in the very human here and now, with the knowledge of truth that is the obviousness of the Father’s Will and the Father’s Movement of Being in you—an experience that is so obvious that nothing remains in you to imagine that there would be any value in any other point of view.

So we could say, that since the holy instant is any instant you choose it to be, the holy instant is any instant that you’re willing to say “yes.” Then any instant is the potential for your resurrection. It’s just another way of saying, that any instant is available to you for you to experience your salvation and it’s something actual that you will experience here and now, in what you call your everyday life, which will of course transform your everyday life. But here and now is where it will happen and here and now is where you are to desire it. Here and now is where you are to yield to it with an expectation of a sudden shift of perception—a miracle!

Resurrection isn’t for holy persons, which therefore would exclude you. We could say that resurrection is for unholy ones, who, at the moment, are neglecting to practice unholiness. I use the word, “neglect” quite a bit to illustrate an act you are to engage in.

I encourage you to engage in the practice of neglect. It’s not hard. It takes no effort. But it does require letting go of things that you have valued. And I encourage you to do it just on the basis that you have been told that if you neglect to practice independence, or if you neglect to think in the void, in the absence, in the silence, the Father’s Will will register with you. The experience of peace will be yours. The Movement that you would call a feeling that is love—divine love—will not fill you, but will illuminate itself as the very substance of every aspect of you.

Now those things in and of themselves are justification enough for neglecting to think or neglecting to practice independence.

You could say that your willingness to be silent is like the willingness to be in the sepulcher—in the emptiness of what is considered to be nowhere—in which the truth can be illuminated with transformation occurring. Silence indulged in is a womb of realization, a womb of transformation, the place in which you can come back into your right Mind.

Continuing from where we left off from last week:

The necessary condition for the holy instant does NOT require that you have no thoughts which are not pure. But it DOES require that you have none that you would KEEP.¹

When I was a child, it says, I did childish things. But when I became a man I put away childish things. A child can have a toy box and in the toy box will be treasured toys, and also toys that are no longer of interest. They're there, because they haven't been thrown out, but they're never played with anymore. There's no attachment to them. There's no thrill or hit that the child gets from playing with them.

So the necessary condition for the holy instant does not require that you have no toys at all, or no toys that are bad, or no toys that are old, but it does require that you have none that you would keep. It requires that the toys that you have, you don't let them be all-important to you. You let them be, and I would say, without attachment or detachment. You can simply be uninvolved with your toy box. And if that child, sister or brother comes in and grabs one of the toys, no fight will ensue, no scuffle, no squabbling will occur because that's not where the value is being placed.

The necessary condition for the holy instant does NOT require that you have no thoughts which are not pure.

It doesn't require that you become ultra holy, that you have refined yourself to the point of perfection. No. But it does require that you have none that you would keep. In other words, it requires that you be willing to let go of all of them or ignore them for a time, like, a holy instant! [chuckle] Just a little bit of time, just an instant. And the way you let go of them, as we've discussed, is to not give your attention to them, but rather give your attention to becoming still, abandoning thinking—what you call "meditating"—and then in the quietness, reach out to the Holy Spirit or the Father or me. That's all. In doing that, you are neglecting to do the other.

Innocence . . .

. . . and this is so important . . .

Innocence is not of your making.

It's yours. But you didn't make it. And it's unalterable. No matter how much you might have ignored it, or how much you might've had beliefs to the contrary.

Innocence is not of your making. It is given you the instant you would HAVE it.

Now the fact is, that it has been given you even though you're not experiencing it. But it will be experienced the instant you would have it. The instant you stop blocking the experience of your innocence, your innocence will register with you.

Well, how do you stop blocking your innocence? By not indulging in practicing guilt, by not constantly reiterating to yourself that you are guilty, by not constantly telling yourself that the problems you are having you deserve to have because you did this or you did that or you did the other thing that you are guilty of and that you must pay a penalty for.

See, you must neglect to employ guilt in order to have the experience of your innocence infill you, causing a sudden shift of perception—healing.

It is given you the instant you would HAVE it. Yet it would not be Atonement if there were no NEED for Atonement.

If you did not so significantly believe that you are guilty for this, that or the other thing, there would be no call for anything to reveal to you your innocence—called "Atonement." There would be no reason for a holy instant. Salvation would be a meaningless word because that which is whole—he who is the host of God and knows it—is not in need of salvation and is not experiencing anything less than salvation.

You will not be able to accept perfect communication as long as you would HIDE it from yourself.

Now this perfect communication is when you and your brother are relating to each other without hesitation, without shields, without armor, without techniques of self-defense being employed. It's you and your brother sharing unreservedly—sharing completely, totally.

And again, I will tell you that the word that describes that action, is peace. And it is security. And it is stability. And it is invulnerability, what would be called: Omnipotence.

You will not be able to accept perfect communication . . .

. . . which is the result of undefended sharing . . .

. . . as long as you would HIDE it from yourself. For what you would hide IS hidden from you.

Every act of self-defense that you bring into play, any act of defense against your brother, hides from you your oneness with your brother. It hides from you his holiness and your holiness, which as brothers you share because you have a common Father Whom you are host to. You hide that from yourself. The very thing which you think keeps you safe from each other, keeps you from knowing each other along with the fact that no defense is needed because there is perfect safety in the shared experience of who and what you Are already.

In your practice, then, . .

. . . practice of what? Practice of the holy instant.

In your practice, then, try only to be vigilant against deception, and seek not to protect the thoughts you would keep unto yourself.

Well, how do you be vigilant against deception? Easy, it's the answer to, "What is the practice of deception?" The practice of deception is thinking by yourself—thinking on your own.

So, . . .

In your practice, then, try only to be vigilant against deception, . .

. . . the practice of thinking all by yourself . . .

. . . and seek not to protect the thoughts . . .

. . . that you would think all by yourself, that . . .

. . . you would keep unto yourself.

The private thoughts you would have that you would keep private within you.

Let the Holy Spirit's purity shine them away, and bring all your awareness to the readiness for purity He offers you.

Be willing to do this radical thing of abandoning your right to think your own thoughts, of neglecting to practice it and to become silent and listen, desiring to know the truth.

I want you to wish to experience everything through my Vision, which is my gift to you from God. In order for that to happen you have to be willing to be consciously being with me, consciously aware that I am with you and that you are with me and that there's no value in our not being together, and then valuing my perspective, my Vision, because my Vision is the Father's perspective, which I give to you from Him, and which, as I've said before, when you let it in, you will share with your brothers.

But of course, we're talking there about sharing, we're not talking about privacy. We're actually talking about standing in the experience of awe and exclaiming your awe in whatever words pour forth, because you can do no otherwise, because it's so obvious that there's nothing else to be saying or being or doing.

Your resurrection, your Easter, will be when you say "yes" in any particular instant, to abandoning all the little acts of privacy, all the little attitudes of privacy and opening up with total defenselessness to the Meaning of your brother or to the Meaning of the flower or the Meaning of the table as God is Being each one of those.

Let the Holy Spirit's purity shine them away, and bring all your awareness to the readiness for purity He offers you.

And I'm going to add: A purity that is your very self, a holiness that is your very holiness, the truth about you that is the very truth about you.

Thus will He make you ready to acknowledge that you ARE host to God, and hostage to no-one and nothing.

Be willing . . . be willing to dare to believe that every time you have a thought all by yourself, every time you have a judgment, every time you have an evaluation, every time you come to a conclusion based upon what you already know, you have become hostage to those thoughts! Why? Because that's not your function—your function is to be host to God. Your function is to allow the Father's Will—the conscious awareness of truth, the obviousness of truth to constitute your Mind—so that that is what you are expressing, so that is what promotes your every act. That's your freedom. That's your wholeness. That's your holiness.

When you forfeit those, so that you might have a thought of your own, a determination that you've come up with based upon your best judgments, you have become hostage to those thoughts because they absolutely bind you to an unconsciousness of your Birthright and of your holiness. They take you away from your conscious awareness of truth and incarcerate you in a finite mentality and hold you hostage—hold you hostage because you always serve those who hold you as hostage . . . you always serve what holds you as hostage.

Easter . . . Easter Sunday currently is happening for a sliver of your globe, Hawaii and the West Coast. For everyone else, Easter was yesterday. But for everyone else, Easter is the instant you're in, right now. And right now is an acceptable moment for your resurrection. It's an acceptable moment to yield to the Father's Will as an actual thing and not just a wonderful, spiritual idea.

Now, the next Section is called:

THE HOLY INSTANT AND SPECIAL RELATIONSHIPS

And I'm going to set the tone right here by saying that special relationships are usury relationships. Special relationships are relationships that are used to get, at the expense of one of the parties, which means the other party [chuckling] which ultimately means both parties. Both parties are being abused. The reason being, that there's no sharing going on, there's no undefended sharing.

Now, so far we've basically been talking about the holy instant and what it amounts to, which is your willingness to become still, invite the Father's Will into your awareness and yield to It.

This is all well and good, but the fact is, that you want the Father's Will to infill you regarding everything you have ignorance about—so that true understanding, the experience of the truth of everything is your conscious experience and you're no longer ignorant of it.

Now, . . .

The holy instant is the Holy Spirit's most useful learning device for teaching you love's meaning. For its purpose is to suspend judgment ENTIRELY.

Suspending judgment is the equivalent of neglecting to practice independence, neglecting to engage in private thinking, un-joined thinking, . . .

. . . its purpose is to suspend judgment ENTIRELY.

Well, there you go . . . how can you do it ENTIRELY? It's like how can you root out every false thought, every negative thought? You don't have to. All you have to do is to neglect to employ any of them. You suspend judgment entirely by abandoning judgment in favor of enquiring of the Father or the Holy Spirit, "What is the truth here? I want to join with You in order to have You share with me Your perspective. And I'm going to stop holding on to the right to having private thoughts of my own in addition to the ones You share with me. I care to be Family. I care to be part of Family. I care to be embraced by All and I care to embrace All and I don't know how to do it. And I'm asking You to show me. And I yield . . . I will yield to the obviousness of the truth You share with me." That's how you suspend judgment ENTIRELY.

Judgment always rests on the past, for past experience is the basis on which you judge. Judgment becomes impossible without the past, for without it you do not understand anything.

So you see, [chuckling] the trap is thinking that you understand something at any point. The moment you think you understand something, you've lost the Vision—you're not looking with innocent eyes—you're not seeing the, "Behold, I make all things new."³ "Behold, I make all things new . . . I make all things new . . . I make all things new."

"Hey, it looks like it's the same old glass to me. Looks like it's the same old water that was there five minutes ago in it." But wait a minute . . . the fact is, "Behold I make all things new . . . "I make all things new . . . I make all things new." There is nothing about that glass or that water that is old. The Father is being it, Creation is being it right now . . . it's brand new.

You don't understand what you haven't experienced. So stop trying to understand. And let me make this clear: When you become still and you desire to know the truth and truth is revealed and it is obvious to you, what is obvious to you doesn't become understanding. Understanding is about past things. You cannot understand something now. You can be with it and experience its obviousness, but you will [make a] mistake if you take what is obvious and add it to your memory as a definition of a thing that will always be what it is—and now you can explore it and examine it and study it and come to conclusions about it. No!

The obviousness of truth is the obviousness of, for lack of better words, living Love, divine life. It's a fluid thing, it's not static. And so you will always find yourself knowing the truth, experiencing the obviousness of the divinity of Creation. And it will not be something you accumulate as knowledge to hold and to refer to and to base future actions upon. Because you will be making a shift into, for lack of better words, basing your actions on the obviousness of the truth of things in the holy instant, in the now of conscious awareness.

Being from this vantage point is a constant source of delight. But when you take the obviousness of truth and you capture it and you understand it, the delight is gone. And that's basically what you're living in and what I'm inviting you to abandon and come out from.

Again, . . .

Judgment becomes impossible without the past, for without it you do not understand anything. You would make no attempt to judge, because it would be quite apparent to you that you do not know what anything MEANS. You are afraid of this because you believe that, WITHOUT the ego, all would be chaos.

You see the ego is that imagined presence that has come to understand [chuckling] what everything means. And without this capacity to understand what everything means—that's called the ego—the belief is that everything would be chaos. Yet I assure you that without the ego, all would be Love. All would be a singularity, an infinite singularity, living, moving Love: The nature and substance of every idea—I didn't say every thought—every idea, or carefully we could say, every thought of God.

You see, the result of resurrection is the movement into the singularity, the obviousness of the singularity of Love relative to everything. It is something to be greatly desired, but not a thing to desire endlessly, although it's unobtainable. It is a thing to desire enough to bring you to a point of neglecting to do what blocks the experience of it. And what blocks the experience of it, in one form or another, is nothing more than the chatter that goes on in your mind, which amounts to static, which when what causes it is abandoned, leaves you in a pristine quietness of the Mind of God, which is your Mind. And in that quietness, all that characterizes the Mind of God will register with you and transform you and cause you to see everything with fresh eyes and promote your ongoing being without your attempting to say, "I understand."

Instead of saying, "I understand," and accumulating your understanding, you will say, "It's obvious and I am curious . . . I am open-endedly curious to experience the 'Behold I make all things new,' which is the Movement of God in me, because I am the host of God. And my only function is to let the Movement of God in me constitute my undistorted experience of Reality."

This is the wonderful truth. And although we can talk about the nature of the human mind—the independent ego—in very complex terms, there's a very simple way to become free of it. And that is to neglect to employ it. Turn your attention to listening instead of thinking. It's simple. I continue to recommend it to every single one of you.

And I wish you, each of you, a very happy Easter. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

April 25th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Many years ago now, in some of my first conversations with Paul, I told him three things:

- 1) All of you is always present.
- 2) All of you is always available, and
- 3) All of you is always functioning.

Now I did not mean that all of what Paul is as a human being or as a body, is always present, available and functioning, I meant to convey to him that as the manifestation of God, that he, being all that God was Being right there where he was, was present, available and functioning. It was my intent to get Paul to think beyond whatever his present concepts of himself were at that time, whatever definitions he was employing to "understand" himself.

And so I say to each one of you: All of you, all of what you are infinitely speaking is always present. No part of it is ever absent. And all of you—all of what you are—is always functioning. Every minute part, you might say, of you is always functioning. Why? Because, God [chuckle] is the Being of every minute aspect of you.

And so, where you might be thinking that some of your organs aren't functioning as they should be, or this part of your life isn't functioning the way it should be, and you're believing that, you need to bring your attention back to the fact that not only is all of you present, but all of you is always functioning. That's, you could say, the ultimate truth but it's also the primitive truth. So, it's not an ultimate truth you're going to move toward, it's an ultimate truth—that is, the primitive truth that you're going to come back into—the conscious realization and experience of. And what will specifically help you come back into that realization is the awareness that all of you—all of what you infinitely are—is always functioning and it's always available to you . . . it's always available to you.

This morning, something rather significant and important was discovered to be lost. There was some distress associated with the fact that it seemed to be lost. Thinking it through, it was reasonable to think that it could have inadvertently been taken. The circumstances were such that someone could mistakenly have picked it up, blah . . . blah . . . blah . . . and tension began to mount. And Paul remembered what I said, "All of you is always present," not lost, not out of sight. "All of you is always available," not unavailable. And "All of you is always functioning."

Now, every week, most every week we get together and we read the Course and we talk about principles, we talk about truth, and to a great degree, what is talked about is used as a salve to give you peace in your mind. But, although that's alright, it's not the purpose. The purpose is, so that when situations arise, as they rose this morning, and Paul or you is tempted to become upset—upset to the point of distraction—that's exactly the moment to say, "What is the truth here?" or as Paul said, "Where am I?" meaning, where was this aspect of himself that seemed to be very important but lost and therefore, a potential for difficulty.

"Where am I?"

You go into the malls and you'll see a map in various places of the mall and then there's a little circle with an arrow that says, "You are here."

Paul says, "Where am I?" meaning, the part of me that is this thing that can't seem to be found expecting to have the experience, I'll say, of the arrow saying, "You are here." In order to do this, Paul had to override his tendency to engage in reaction, when reaction seemed to be called for.

You're all faced with situations that you say call for reaction. And those are the times that what the Course is talking about should get beyond platitudes so that you actually take the time—when you're not inclined to take the time and when you don't feel emotionally capable of choosing for your peace because of the emergency—to actually take the time and choose for your peace because you don't choose to continue to operate in the arena of ignorance. You want everything that we're discussing to come to life.

Now, Paul did this . . . walked through the house, he made a couple of stops we'll say, looking, and walked to a most unlikely place . . . opened up a bag and there was the object—there was the thing that was lost. He had not had a picture in his mind. He did not beforehand have a realization, "I know where it is." But he allowed himself to be willing to know where it was and his behavior uncovered the fact that all of him was present, all of him was always available and all of him, including his capacity to know where it was, was always functioning.

Now, this ties in with the subject of the holy instant that we've been talking about. Because the holy instant is the place in which the act of saying "Yes" to God occurs. The holy instant is the place in which you decide to abandon your independence and therefore, your isolation. Isolation from what? The all of you that's always present, the all of you that's always functioning, the all of you that's always available, which is your conscious experience of Being when you let God's Perspective in, in favor of or instead of your own private perspective that you have been holding onto prior to this holy instant in which the act of saying "Yes" occurred.

The holy instant, or we'll say, the result of using any instant that is available to you for the purpose of saying "Yes" to God and yielding to the Father's Perspective—at the expense of your own private personal one—opens you up to the actual experience of wholeness. And I mean by that, infinite wholeness, where in fact you could say, while you are on planet Earth, with a capacity of knowing what that part of you that's called the opposite side of planet Earth, is available to you.

You also have available to you, for lack of better words, the conscious experience of everything in the cosmos. And you also have available to you ever presently and on-goingly, the conscious experience of every single brother and sister, every single aspect of Creation Itself. Now get this: With the conscious awareness that just as you are being able to be responsive to all of Creation, you are able to experience all of Creation responding to you simultaneously so that it is an infinite conscious experience of Being, in which no aspect of Creation is unavailable to you, is not functioning for you, and is not present.

You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and must understand yourself therefrom.

What's the point of perfection? What is this place that you're not behind or advancing toward? It's the conscious experience of truth, the unisolated, infinitely involved conscious experience of the truth of everything and the conscious experience of everything conveying its truth to you . . . as I said, an infinite involvement—nothing private whatsoever, not even a faint fascination with what it might be like to have a private thought or to have a private place.

The holy instant is that instant in which you move out of the orphanage and abandon the claim to orphanhood.

Now last week we read that:

The holy instant is the Holy Spirit's most useful learning device for teaching you love's meaning.¹

And today we're starting out with:

The past is the EGO's chief learning device, for it is in the past that you learned to define your own needs, and acquired methods for meeting them . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . on your own terms.

You made up your needs and then you made up the terms for meeting them. And all of this was going on in a supposed state of independence and isolation from your Source, so that you were, and still are, unconscious of your divine origin and nature, ignorant of the fact that all of you is actually infinite and is always present and is always functioning and is always available.

Now if you are not joined, if you are not experiencing a conscious union with your Guide or the Holy Spirit or the Father, then you are held hostage—you are blinded, you are caused by this definition you've applied to yourself as an ego, from experiencing what you divinely Are. And although you're not that unhappy about the situation you are in, it's not your Birthright. And all of you are, as it's been said, living lives of quiet desperation but managing to find meaning in it.

Now I want you to take a look at something perhaps a bit maudlin and unpleasant: When a loved one dies—passes on—it is a sad experience. And you may be very grateful to have pictures, audio recordings, maybe even some videos that this loved one is on that you can turn on and play and be reminded of that one's meaningfulness and have your sadness assuaged somewhat.

You know, quite some time ago in Europe, a woman, after her husband passed on, had him stuffed by a taxidermist and posed in a comfortable position on his favorite chair where he used to sit every night—every evening with her. And for her it was most meaningful because she didn't have to feel lost as much and she could sit there and talk with him as though he was hearing. And you can imagine that she might say, "Well, it's better than nothing."

When you go into the past, it means you're going into memory. When you're functioning out of memory, you're not present with the real thing.

What the Course is teaching, what I am alerting you all to, is the fact that you have available to you a means of Being that doesn't involve living in your memory every single day unconscious of Reality. And that you don't have to say, "Well, what I've got is better than nothing. Every day above ground is better than being underground." I want you to grasp that such an attitude about your living is as sad as this woman's situation who had her husband stuffed and "enjoyed his presence" for the remainder of her days.

It is sad. It's not something to find meaning in, at least it's no longer something to find meaning in. I'm telling you that you have an experience of Being that is unlike what you have been experiencing. And what it requires to experience that, is exactly what was required of Paul today when this item was lost that was needed and he had to take the time to go against his conditioned responses—all of which were drawn from memory.

"Oh-h, I've never been able to find anything successfully before and I'm going to need this before it can possibly be found . . ." and on and on.

All of these thoughts come from memory. And all of these thoughts say, "All of me is not always present and all of me is not always available and I have to settle for that." His conditioned thinking, meaning his memory banks, his past, said, "There is no justification for peace. There is no justification for reaching for something that you can't possibly know the location of. You never had it in your hand in the first place. You are not the one who misplaced it. You don't know where it's usually kept . . ." and on and on and on. You see, all of this thinking, all of this is thinking based upon past, based upon memory.

What was required was for Paul to stand in the face of all of that conditioning, all of that memorization and do something that his memory banks didn't tell him was possible for him, but which I've been telling him was possible. He had to reach for what, based on his memory he had no means of knowing [chuckle] as though he actually had the capacity to do it.

And all of you have to go through your day and find wonderful opportunities which might seem like moments of distress, to step beyond, to lean beyond what your memory says is possible, so that you might get beyond the distress. And today, in the here and the now, in your very so-called human life, you can experience the fact that all of you is always present, available and functioning.

The holy instant is the place in which the act of saying “Yes” occurs, “Yes” to God, meaning, saying, “Yes God, illuminate me with the knowing that it is my Birthright to be experiencing, because You have put Your Mind in me, because You have given all that You are to me, as me, along with all the rest of Creation. And I want to have the experience that is available to me when I honor my Source, because my Source is not only the Source of my existence but the condition of my existence and therefore, I do not wish to deny it in any way, shape or form any longer. And so I desire to be in-filled with the infinite Wholeness of my Being—the conscious experience of the infinite Wholeness of my Being—no longer holding onto any so-called right to think for myself, have opinions of my own, have perspectives of my own, have goals of my own because they put me into a world where life is stuffed and positioned in apparently pleasant ways . . . when everything is emptiness. I don’t want to be satisfied living life in half-assed way. I don’t want to be satisfied with that which is sad and actually unfulfilled and unfulfilling.”

You see, the holy instant is humungous in its meaning and its impact.

Don’t go looking for the holy instant . . . like, “Oh, maybe it’ll be this afternoon.” or, “I know, when I lay down to go to bed tonight, the holy instant is going to happen . . .” No.

The holy instant happens when you say “Yes” to the impossible, when you say “Yes” to having the experience of the fact that all of you is always present, and all of you is always available, so that a lost article is found, not as a magical manipulation of a material world, but rather as a unified experience of Mind finding nothing of its infinite conscious experience hidden from itself, no longer experiencing any form of insanity, but perfect clarity, perfect infinite clarity.

Again . . .

The past is the EGO’S chief learning device, . .

. . . memory banks [chuckle] . . . oh-h . . .

. . . for it is in the past that you learned to define your own needs, and acquired methods for meeting them on your own terms . . .

. . . with a lot of satisfaction and bravado in most cases, even if it was quiet and undisclosed to everyone else.

We said before that to limit love to PART of the Sonship is to bring guilt into your relationships, and thus make them unreal.

Well, we're talking about special relationships in this section. Special Relationships: "This one is really special to me . . . and that one's a little bit of a heartache and a problem for me . . . and I embrace this one fully . . . and that one, I embrace cautiously . . . and I withhold some of myself and some of my willingness to love, from them . . ."

WOW! Do you see that that attitude is an absolute denial of, "All of me is always present, all of me is always available, and all of me is always functioning?"

If those three things are true, then Wholeness is the fact. If Wholeness is the fact, it's the fact about absolutely every aspect of anything you're experiencing. It means that all of it is of the nature and character of God, because God is the Source and the condition of existence, the Source and condition of you and the Source and condition of that aspect of you that you call your brother.

When you are denying what you Are, when you are denying that you are a Son or Daughter, and rather that you're an orphan—an independent agent—we've talked about the fact that immediately guilt and fear come into play because you are attempting to behave in a way that you cannot possibly behave because you cannot, due to your divinity, be unconscious of who you Are successfully without dissonance, fear and guilt.

So . . .

We said before that to limit love to PART of the Sonship . . .

. . . to break the infinite allness of you up into parts and treat it differently, . .

is to bring guilt into your relationships, . .

. . . and also fear . . .

. . . and thus make them unreal.

What kind of a relationship was that dear lady having with her "stuffed husband?" An unreal relationship, right? No matter how satisfying, it wasn't a real relationship. Why? Because although she was able to be conscious of and respond to him, he wasn't in that chair, there, able to be conscious of and respond to her. And that's part of the characteristic of Wholeness. The conscious experience of Being is you being able to respond to all of Creation infinitely and having the experience of the fact that all of Creation infinitely responds to you as well. It's a two-way street. It's an involvement of infinite proportions.

And that's the difference between operating from memory, independent and un-joined—because that's where you are in memory when you're independent and un-joined—and being joined and abandoning your right to experience the very sad state of being that is the result of denying your Birthright and your holiness.

If you seek to separate out certain aspects of the totality, and look to them to meet your imagined needs, you are attempting to use separation to SAVE you.

[sigh] Sad, isn't it. We don't have to say much more about it than that. It's a sad thing to be living in unreal relationship as though it were actual. It's sad and it's maudlin.

Do I say this to disturb you? No. But I want you to see that whatever reasons you think you have for being happy not being awake, living your life every day the way you tend to from memory, you have an alternative to that that's radiant and joyous, and most of all, conscious in which mutuality really occurs because involvement really occurs. And you have a right to this. It's your Birthright and you need to be reaching for it even though, Paul reaching for it this morning, did it in the face of arguments that said it was impossible.

. . . you are attempting to use separation to SAVE you. How, then, could guilt NOT enter? For separation . . .

. . . independence . . .

. . . IS the source of guilt, . . .

. . . and as I've said, fear . . .

. . . and to appeal to it for salvation is to believe you are alone.

Sad again.

To be alone IS to be guilty.

To claim independence is to initiate an experience of guilt and fear, which will last until you abandon your so-called right to be independent.

For to experience yourself as alone is to deny the Oneness of the Father and His Son, and thus to attack reality.

The holy instant is that instant in which you give permission, you give invitation to and permission for God to infill you because you're no longer going to hold yourself apart. And instead of you being the center of your attention, you are saying you want God to be the center of your attention, which is, at the bottom line, the way you let your right Mind back into you so that you are able to exist consciously, instead of unconscious in your memory.

You cannot love parts of reality and understand what love means.

If you think that all of you is not always present and all of you is not always available, you have Reality broken up into parts. Paul was not experiencing what Love means when he was upset this morning because a very important item couldn't be found. It couldn't be found because why? Because he thought at that moment he was just an independent mind. A human being at a loss and without the mental capacity to figure it out because the item had never been in his hand to do anything with or to bring about a result that he might be able to logically figure out, you see. So he was really at a loss if he thought he was a person, if he thought he was an ego, if he was trying to be independent and solve the problem because it was important.

No. When you all get into these kinds of positions, you immediately feel like the direness of the situation calls for you to tear apart the house . . . to actually go and look in every sofa . . . or underneath every bed . . . or move things around, turn them upside down, empty the drawers . . . do something . . . do something . . . do something! And just by the sheer search without overlooking anything, you're bound to find it.

Well, what if the thing you're looking for is a pencil you've slipped over your ear?

When you're trying to be an independent agent, you cannot understand what love means.

You cannot love parts of reality and understand what love means. If you would love unlike to God, Who KNOWS no special love, how CAN you understand it?

If Paul had tried to turn the house upside down and mechanically do what would logically tell him would uncover the lost item, he would never have understood what love means. But he didn't. And he found that what love means is, that all of you is always present and all of you is always available, and all of you is always functioning—none of it's ever lost, none of it is ever absent. It's the experience of being whole and having the evidence of the Wholeness, so there's no suggestion of lack, no suggestion of anything that takes away from the experience of joy—that takes away from the conscious experience that Being is Itself the evidence of being loved.

Amazing, eh?

Being is the evidence Itself of being loved. And when you move into the holy instant, when you allow yourself to be at the point of perfection—not behind it or advancing toward it and letting your Wholeness be revealed to you—it’s the experience of the absence of fear. It’s the experience of perfect peace. It’s, as I said, the experience of being whole. It is the experience of Love . . . of being loved.

To believe that SPECIAL relationships, with SPECIAL love, can offer you salvation is the belief that separation IS salvation.

Wouldn’t you have to say that that dear lady sitting with her “stuffed husband” was an example of a special relationship? She created it. She wanted something she didn’t think she could have and it was better than nothing.

To believe that SPECIAL relationships, with SPECIAL love, can offer you salvation is the belief that separation IS salvation. For it is the complete EQUALITY of the Atonement . . .

All of you is always present. All of you is always available. All of you is always functioning. That’s complete equality. No more, no less. No more given, nothing withheld. Perfect peace. Perfect balance. Perfect harmony. Nothing present that dims the illumination of God’s Love that brings forth Creation, that of which there is to be conscious of with the experience of it being all there is of you and all there is of everything.

How can you decide that special aspects of the Sonship can give you more than others?

Ho-ho . . . well, it’s easy! You all have imaginations and you use your imaginations and you’ll believe anything you want to make up if you can get somebody to join you and confirm it. But it doesn’t make it true.

The PAST has taught you this. Yet the holy instant teaches you it is not so.

And you want to know something? The holy instant doesn't teach you that it isn't so. The holy instant reveals what the truth is that is so full of Meaning because it's the conscious experience of all that God is Being, that whatever your previous concept was becomes so meaningless that you wouldn't hold on to it and you don't even have time to criticize yourself for holding such a concept because you are so clearly aware of and experiencing the truth which is engaging you fully in a response of joy.

So . . .

. . . the holy instant teaches you it is not so.

And the experience of being taught that it isn't so is the joy that causes your sad experience, your maudlin experience to become totally meaningless because it's been replaced with the conscious experience of truth. You see?

You are not to be the center of your attention, God is. Your problems are not to be the center of your attention, truth is. And when you take the first step of letting God be the center of your attention because you're leaning into the omnipresence of You instead of holding on to your dearly believed limits, you become conscious of the truth. That's the Gift. That's the step that the Father takes. You don't have to take the final step, the Father takes the final step.

The holy instant is a BIG Meaning.

As I said last time, it does represent and embody Easter for you. And I encourage you this week, when you feel discouraged, to press for the impossible. Remember, all of you is always present, all of you is always available and all of you is always functioning.

So, this should be encouraging. None of you can possibly end up being stuffed and put in a chair. Because all of you is always functioning including the dear man whose wife thought she had stuffed him and whom she now knows [chuckle] is not her belief because she had the experience of him once again.

Now, let this coming week be instants of your willingness to say "Yes" to God and to neglect to engage fear and doubt. And instead of engaging fear and doubt, let there be quietness in you with a desire for it to be filled with the truth. Press for it. Persist.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 9th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Believe it or not, what we've been discussing and what we're reading about is really the essence of simplicity because it takes no effort, it takes no practiced skill, it takes no understanding, it doesn't rely upon logic.

At the bottom line, the holy instant—that moment in which you say “Yes” to God—is a moment when you step into an incapacity to understand, but a capacity to Know.

Now the Course itself says that it cannot teach the meaning of love. But the Course is setting your feet and your attention in the direction of the Teacher that can teach you the meaning of love. And that Teacher is not yourself. That Teacher is not the one you think you are. That Teacher is not the mental skill-sets that you have created and acquired and utilized and used as a means of defining yourself.

Last week I spoke about the fact that Paul had discovered something was missing—something which was needed—and he literally had no means of knowing where it was. And it became necessary for him, with my Guidance, to let go of the fact that he didn't know and couldn't know where it was—to let that be of no consequence because all of him is always present, all of him is always functioning, and all of him is always available.

Now that required him to go into a place where he had no capacity of any sort that he was familiar with—no skill that he was familiar with, and he had to lean into not knowing and not having any means of understanding through an excellent intellectual use of his mind.

Anyone who's been a student of truth, let's say, for very long, has found himself or herself frustrated because he or she thought more progress should have occurred or more capacity to heal should be available—or this, that or the other thing. Expectations were not met, healing was not occurring.

Now I'm going to tell you that the reason each of you arrives at that point is because you're at a threshold—not a threshold of failure, but a threshold of leaning into, willingly, an unknown capacity, a capacity that you're not presently familiar with even though it is an inherent part of you.

When you do this, it will always be relative to yourself or relative to someone else or relative to something else, where you're having to lean into a capacity to Know about yourself, someone else, or something else that you haven't experienced before.

In the act of doing that and not abandoning that act because it seems to be occurring slowly, and your ego wants to be frustrated, that will cause you to arrive at the point of the influx of truth, the influx of Knowing, the influx of the Father's Perspective, the influx of your right Mind. It will happen. When it happens, you will find yourself Knowing of your wholeness. You will find yourself experiencing your peace and you will know that it is an immovable peace, that the peace of your Being truly isn't capable of being flustered or jangled and you will know what being loved means.

Now, when you know what being loved means because you're no longer shielded from your experience of your Father, of your Source, by your will, you immediately, in that place of innocence, treat your brother differently, see your brother differently with the Father's Vision. And that constitutes the extension of something. What do you suppose it is? It's Love. It's the thing the Course can't teach you the meaning of. But it is what the Course can help bring you to the point of allowing to happen in you.

Literally, when you come to the place of not-knowing, when you come to the place of a feeling of incapacity even though there is an apparent demand being made for you to have a capacity, you are at the point of discovering the meaning of love.

What is it that constitutes being an orphan? What is it that constitutes the dream, as it's been called? What is it that constitutes your being unconscious of the truth?

It is, that you don't know how to love.

And so I say this so that you might understand that what we're moving toward here and what I am urging you to allow, is not greater intellectual understanding or greater mental capacity, but it is the abandonment of aggressive, self-assertive willfulness so that in its absence, love might infill you. Because love is what is missing from the equation, love is what is absent in the orphan.

Now you can say with a sense of relief, "I am so glad it doesn't require great mental capacity on my part. I am so glad to know that all it requires is for me to be innocent enough, un-willful enough, at peace enough within myself to relax." So that what? "So that I might be able to love."

Now whether any of you truly knows what love is in all of its fullness, you do have some comprehension of love, you have just been misusing it. And so, when I say that the threshold of Awakening which you find yourself at when you're willing to become still and get into your peace where fear and guilt are absent, you are simply allowing Something that you already somewhat comprehend to become substantiated more fully within you. And it's a capacity to be love. I didn't say, "loving." Because loving is something each of you has calculated a definition of. And the definition is different under different circumstances in different situations with different people.

When you come to the impasse—the void, the emptiness, the incapacity where you tend to become frustrated—it's just a time to say, "Oh, here is a moment in which I am primed for an influx of a capacity to be love." Love is un-willful. Love is not self-seeking. Love is not self-protective. Love is not self-centered. Love is not any of the things you associate with your daily life and your sense of yourself currently.

Love is an extension. Love is embracing. Love is not judgmental. Love is bringing innocence into the moment and into your relationships. Love is the absence of every skill you've ever used to keep yourself safe, even skills of kindness, kindness that doesn't arise out of a natural inclination to be in harmony with the way things work, but because it will keep you safe. That isn't love.

The orphan—you, when you feel as though you are a separate independent self with a God-given capacity to do things on your own and so on—that is a sense of self that you are going to let go of. That is a sense of self you will not bring forward with you because everything about it is directed to your safety. Which means that every act you engage in is a defense against a world that in one way or another, you feel is hostile toward you or will be, or is potentially, and therefore, you must hold it at bay with diligence and vigilance. And this is not the singularity out of which real harmony arises and which is the very essence of every aspect of Creation.

Now, continuing in the book from where we left off:

Because of guilt, ALL special relationships have some elements of fear in them.¹

Well of course they do because guilt and fear always go together, or fear and guilt always go together. Special relationships are relationships you have with others or with things that are a result of your not really being connected with others or with things, but instead you are connected with your concept of who that other one is, or what that thing is. And as a result, although you seem to have interactions, it's not a real relationship. And it's amazing if there is any real resemblance of harmony that occurs.

Special relationships are relationships where those involved are not really connecting with each other. Like the woman and her "stuffed" husband.² There's no love present.

Because of guilt, ALL special relationships have some elements of fear in them.

And if you are not experiencing your oneness with your Father, and are not experiencing your Sonship, but are instead, experiencing yourself as an independent authoritative entity, there will be guilt and fear in every aspect of your experience because relationships are all you're confronted with. Even if it's how far you are from the wall. That's a relationship between you and the wall.

Because of guilt, ALL special relationships have some elements of fear in them.

And if guilt is present, all relationships are special relationships.

Now that could be depressing. Or, you could say, "Wow! That means that every single aspect of my day, every single relationship I'm in is an opportunity to have a new experience, one in which I'm not blinded by what I think of that person or what I think that thing is. And in the innocence of my perception, I have the opportunity to have insight, to have Revelation, to have an influx of the Father's perspective which it is my Birthright to be experiencing."

So every moment of every day, and every single thing in every moment of every day is humongously pregnant with the opportunity for new Vision which I am encouraging all of you to be more diligent in your desire to have the experience of.

Again . . .

Because of guilt, ALL special relationships have some elements of fear in them. And this is why they shift and change so frequently. They are not based on changeless love alone. And love, where fear has entered, cannot be depended on because it is not perfect.

You might say that your willingness to be present with a thing or an individual, with innocent perception—not bringing into that moment with them any memory, any past experience you’ve had with them or any previous definitions of those things that have been provided to you—you are the place where the act of love is occurring. And that’s why a sudden shift of perception can occur.

In His function as Interpreter of what you have made, the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . USES special relationships, which YOU have chosen to support the ego, as a learning experience which points to truth.

Now, it does this if you care to enquire of that which is nothing more than your right Mind—to enquire of the Holy Spirit, “What is the truth here? What is the truth about this thing? What is the truth about this individual? I am enquiring . . . I am being willing to be an empty vessel, an empty mind which is capable of accepting something new.”

When you do that, the Holy Spirit is able to perform its function. Your right Mind is able to perform its function relative to you who thinks you have some other kind of mind that can be used in some other kind of way. And the Holy Spirit’s function—your right Mind’s function—is to bring that part of you which thinks it has its own independent capacity to be conscious, back into the full conscious awareness of what It is: The Son or Daughter of God, the offspring, the expression, the current living expression of a current living God. And to make it relevant, this means your capacity to be present with your brother or with anything, as Love.

Love isn’t a skill. Love is your nature, your divine nature. And it is present and it functions so that you can be aware of it when you’re not preoccupied with your definitions of love, which are to treat everybody in a way that will please them so that they will be nice to you and not hurt you. And also make you rich and respected and great! . . . and every other good private specialness that you might be able to think up.

In His function as Interpreter of what you have made, the Holy Spirit USES special relationships, which YOU have chosen to support the ego, as a learning experience which points to truth.

... points to truth ... points to truth? No. Points your attention to the truth so the truth registers with you as an experience, as an experience of being Iloved because it is an experience of knowing that you're not responsible for yourself, you didn't create yourself, and That which did, is still taking care of you by creating you now . . . now, as fresh as God is in every moment, you Are.

Under His teaching, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's. . .

... EVERY relationship becomes a lesson in . . .

. . . what? The only thing it could be a lesson in . . .

... love.

Because that's the only thing you're not familiar with. Very simply, the meaning of the word orphan is, "absent of love."

"Oh, but I'd rather do it myself . . . I'd rather do it my way. God gave me the right to be on my own!"

Not much embrace in that is there. Not much extension in that is there. Not much involvement in that is there. Not much unity.

But you know, if you have one part of infinity, if you have one small part of Creation, we'll say, that is holding itself apart from all of Creation, when it can't actually become separated from all Creation, what do you have? You have a great state of tension. You have what you could call, "war." You have some part of infinite Creation standing against all of the rest of Creation in an arrogant attempt to be something on its own.

There is no love in that because there is no involvement. There is no relationship in that is there.

So, is it becoming clearer that what we're talking about when we speak of Awakening—of Waking up, of coming back into your right Mind, that we are simply talking about letting love re-emerge in you as your actual nature, which it never stopped being?

Well, I suppose you could say that you can understand that that might be simpler than ultimately having to try to figure everything all by yourself. But, when it comes right down to it and you're in the moment of need and you're up against it and you don't know what to do and you don't seem to have a capacity to do anything, and yet you're called upon to have a capacity in that moment, you could say, "Well, letting love be me isn't that easy either. I still can't do it."

No, you can't do it because you think you can't do it and you don't remember that it's your nature. And so it does seem as though you're being asked to do the impossible. But you're not. And you are going to have to be diligent and vigilant in that moment of impasse so that you don't abandon the impasse and you abide there as you slip out of your unbelief into the capacity you have that goes beyond your belief.

Now remember something else: You're not doing this all by yourself. The Holy Spirit—not something foreign to you or a-far-off, but that which is nothing more than your right Mind, your ever-present sanity—is standing with you because it is intent upon bringing you back into your sanity.

It's function is to reunite this part of yourself that you're trying to be independent from the rest of yourself, to abandon its goal so that all of what you Are may reunite and experience the integrity and unity that never was successfully affected or changed.

That's the Holy Spirit's purpose.

And, . . .

Under His teaching, EVERY relationship becomes a lesson in love.

Because lessons in love are the way you walk out of the orphanage. Not lessons in greater capacity to think, not lessons in greater capacity to avail yourself and access your memory banks more quickly, more successfully. No, it's your capacity to not know. It's your capacity to be without compulsively attempting to be in charge.

Why? Why a compulsive intent to be in charge? You think it's because that's the way you stay safe. But when you abandon it, your eternal and infinite integrity, unity is obvious to you. Safety isn't even a word, because Being is unalterably forever perfect, forever the Movement of Creation that is perfect, with no threat to it whatsoever.

Now, . . .

The Holy Spirit knows no-one is special. Yet He also perceives that you have MADE special relationships, which He would purify, and not let you destroy.

Now I've said before, that no matter what you think this world and universe is, all you are ever confronted with is the Kingdom of Heaven. You're misinterpreting it, but you are not going to go anywhere else to arrive in the conscious experience of Heaven. And so you need to be willing to allow yourself to be present in what you call "the here and the now"—in what you have defined as a material world and universe—so that you may, in the abandoning of your current definitions, be available in the here and the now where the Kingdom of Heaven is the only thing going on, to experience it as what it is, instead of what you believed it was.

Well, likewise, the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . perceives that you have MADE special relationships, which He would purify, and not let you destroy.

See, I won't let you abandon this world and universe in your effort to Wake up and reach the Kingdom of Heaven, because this world and universe is the Kingdom of Heaven misperceived. And the Holy Spirit would purify your relationships and not let you destroy them, because relationships are real.

You're never going to rise above relationships, because relationships are real. And no matter what awful use you might be putting relationships to, it is something divine that you're putting to an awful use. It is something real that you are ignorantly misusing. And so the Holy Spirit will not let you abandon them, or step outside of them, or get beyond them, or rise above them.

. . . He would purify [them], and not let you destroy [them].

Because that's where salvation lies.

However unholy the reason why you made them may be, He can translate them into holiness by removing as much fear as you will let Him.

That which is nothing more than your right Mind has as its purpose the reduction and removal of fear. Why? Because when fear goes guilt goes. They're inseparable partners.

However unholy the reason why you made them may be, . .

. . . referring to relationships . . .

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . can translate them into holiness by removing as much fear as you will let Him. You can place any relationship under His care, and be sure that it will not result in pain, if you offer Him your willingness to have it serve no need but His.

In other words, you can turn things over to the Holy Spirit and expect to have no pain when you're willing to abandon the purpose you have applied to a relationship and wished to experience only the purpose the Holy Spirit would put that relationship to.

Thy will be done. Yield . . . yield . . . yield . . . yield what? Yield the willfulness. Yield the assertiveness that you use exclusively for self-protection. And as long as you are self-protecting yourself, you are shielding yourself from something else. And the allness and unity of Creation seems to become divided by the boundary you are imaginatively creating.

Yield . . . it's so hard to do because you think your salvation . . . your safety, your ultimate breakthrough into ultimate safety, comes from your asserting yourself against a hostile world, a hostile environment. You've got to abandon that use of relationships in favor of the Holy Spirit's, because the fact is that all of the relationships you have had, no matter how good they have been, have occurred in the context of self-protection—which means a lack of trust, which means a presence of fear. And that's not the purpose of relationships, and that's not your Birthright. That's not what you were meant to be experiencing.

All the guilt in it . . .

. . . in the relationships you have created.

All the guilt in it arises from YOUR use of it. All the love from His.

That's the difference. The way you use relationships involves guilt and fear. But when you let the Holy Spirit's Purpose guide you in your relationships, you will move into that holy instant, you will move into that silence where you have set aside your intent to do things your way for your reasons. And in that absence of willfulness, love can infill you, love can register with you—the love which is your nature and always has been will reregister with you.

Do not, then, be afraid to let go your imagined needs, . .

. . . meaning, needs for safety, needs for wealth, need for success, need for respect.

Do not, then, be afraid to let go your imagined needs, which would destroy the relationship. Your ONLY need is His.

Your only need is the Holy Spirit's. Well, what is the Holy Spirit's need? Being nothing more than your right Mind, it has a need for all of what you Are to come back into integrity, to come back into cohesive conscious wholeness.

At the moment, the need of the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind—is for sanity to return to all that It is, which includes this little bundle of willfulness that's trying to be something all by itself and enters into every relationship during the day on the basis of keeping itself safe, or is securing it's future against the chaos which is inevitable [chuckle] because life and being is polarized. It's necessary.

So . . .

Any relationship which you would substitute for another has not been offered to the Holy Spirit for His use.

Something doesn't work out well with this one, so you go to this one to try to have a happy relationship or get what it is you need. And so, you substitute this one for that one. Well, did you ask of the Holy Spirit regarding the first one, "What is the truth here?" Did you desire to go into the void, to go into your apparent incapacity to see the truth about that brother and lean into it with diligence and vigilance?

And if you didn't, and now you're going to substitute this relationship over here, are you going to say, "Holy Spirit what is the truth here?" and use this as an opportunity, like you could have used the first one or any other circumstance or object or person as the means of shutting up and becoming silent and realizing that the thing that's missing from the moment is one thing: Love—which you don't have the foggiest notion of how to obtain or employ, but which you know ultimately, you're going to have to access like waking yourself up out of a dream at night, out of a nightmare.

It takes diligence in the dream to rouse yourself. And it isn't always comfortable when you're having the dream to bring forth that much energy to actually rouse yourself from the dream so that you might wake up and find out that you were afraid of nothing, because it was all imaginary.

The one thing that's missing is love. And the only way to have it reemerge is to bring some diligence to it, in spite of your frustration and your impatience and the apparent call for you to be able somehow by yourself to assert yourself in the name of a divine purpose so that something good can happen, so that a correction can occur. That's just a repeat of everything you've done. And there's no love in it.

You might say, "Well, I'm fighting for correction here because I care about that person, or I care about that situation, or I care about that thing." No, you're really doing it so that you won't have to look at yourself after the fact and say, "I failed." It's still, at the bottom line, self-serving. And as long as it is self-serving, there is no love. And if love is still absent, there will be no correction and there will be no healing and there will be no transformation—love will not be extended and felt and love will not be felt by you. As long as love is still absent, you're still in the orphanage.

There IS no substitute for love.

You hear that?

There IS no substitute for love.

Now hear this: As long as you've been dreaming dreams, you have been practicing the idea that there is a substitute for love. And you've been out to prove it by determining things for yourself, by teaching other people to determine things for themselves. And then by influencing other people so that they'll behave and not endanger you, because you know you're vulnerable and you know you can be threatened and you know that ultimately you can be caused to cease to exist.

This is not the arena of healing or transformation or Awakening. And it is an exact example of insanity.

This book's a very long book—lot of words, a lot of complex ideas. But at the bottom line, they're all aimed at getting rid of the one little missing thing: Love—the one thing that will be missing as long as you insist upon being an orphan and being p-r-o-u-d of it.

You know all about being orphans. You've developed a lot of skill. And you're respectability comes from the skill you have employed at being an orphan well. So when it comes to letting love back in, which requires you to yield to something other than personal skill, it does feel like giving up your identity.

But I'm telling you that you have an identity far more meaningful than what you're presently experiencing. And it will come forth and register with you when you value the void, the holy instant, into which you're not bringing the past, and therefore are being present with innocent eyes, with an innocent mind, the essential element in order for a sudden shift of perception—a miracle to occur. And that's the point.

If you would attempt to substitute one aspect of love for another, you have placed LESS value on one and MORE on the other. You have not only SEPARATED them, but you have also judged against BOTH.

If you judge for this one, you judge against that one. But then in a minute later, and you judge for this one because the circumstance is different, you've judged against that one . . . so fickle. Love is unvarying.

Yet you had judged against yourself first, or you would never have imagined that you needed them as they were not . . .

. . . these things that you judge for and against and jump back and forth from. Yes, of course you've judged yourself first, because you've taken the role of orphan and fought for it . . . guilt and fear immediately present, unavoidable as long as you continue. So you've judged yourself before you judged anything else.

Unless you had seen yourself as WITHOUT love, you could not have judged them so like you in lack.

Do you see, that as long as you abandon your Birthright and claim orphanhood and fight for it, you cause all of Creation to be seen through the lens of lack, and as the source of, or call for, fear and guilt and every act of self-protection that you can possibly bring into play.

We're talking about abandoning those things which are the blocks to love—not fighting them, not overcoming them—abandoning them in favor of allowing yourself the time it takes to be in the uncomfortable position of not knowing and desiring to have a Knowing that your personal, private little mind hasn't been responsible for in any way, because you want to know the truth, God's truth.

We're talking about Waking up. We're talking about God's truth infilling you. Why? So that you might be able to be more real and more meaningful right here in the Kingdom of Heaven than you have been when you've been defining it otherwise and behaving on the basis of that definition.

So you're still going to be here and everything is still going to be here, but in new terms that were the original terms. Not complicated, but something that requires diligence and vigilance in the face of the discomfort of not knowing . . . yet.

Persist . . . but not through the use of will. Persist in the desire to have love replace . . . to have love replace the means you have been using in the belief that those things were essential to your survival.

I love you very much . . . all of you. And I want love to no longer be absent in your experience. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 24th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Every week or so we get together and discuss the ego, the Holy Spirit, the orphan . . . we discuss a lot of ideas. And it's very easy to think of these ideas and things as topics—topics of discussion. If they remain, however, forever topics of discussion, you might as well set this book down and go find something else to do.

If there's anything I'm trying to do, especially in the last few months, is to help bring you to the point of understanding that we're talking about how you use your mind. We're talking about how you behave. And we're talking about the call for a change in behavior.

We're talking about the holy instant. And I've brought home the fact that the holy instant is that moment in which you say "Yes" to God. Not like you say "yes" to daddy, or "yes" to mommy and then run on out and play like a child, but where you say "Yes" to God, meaning, that you're turning your attention to God to know from Him, to find out from Him what the truth is. To ask for Him to share His Perspective on Creation itself—which you are part of, which you are inseparable from and which it is your right to comprehend, embrace, understand as God understands it . . . comprehends and embraces it . . . so that you have no perspective different from the Father's.

So in effect, saying "Yes" to God means (dirty word) yielding to God. It really does mean this. And it means it, as I've said before, in the here and now, in your everyday activity. It means turning, as though you're in partnership with Someone, to learn of that Partner how to behave in this moment in a way that is totally consistent with that Partner's perspective, valuing His place in the partnership.

We're talking about letting yourself in for the experience of a radically new awareness of your Self. I say new, because, although it's your original awareness of yourself, it's one that you've ignored for so long that it seems unfamiliar to you now.

So, we're talking about the fact that the holy instant is the threshold of Awakening. It amounts to leaving the orphanage. It amounts to letting go of the definitions you have given yourself as an orphan and all of the wonderful and uplifting concepts you have developed regarding becoming the best damned orphan there ever was, and becoming as good as a Real child, we'll say, who's not an orphan.

To experience the holy instant, and I'm aware that I'm being repetitious, stepping into the holy instant amounts to letting go of all that you know. It amounts to asking, "What is the more of Reality that I'm not experiencing? What, Father, is Your Perspective? I wish to allow It to replace my current perspective."

We've discussed the fact that doing this puts you in the not-knowing place. A place in which you feel called upon to express a capacity that you don't know how to express. You feel, as a result, incompetent. And this is an essential part of moving into the holy instant and moving out of the false perception of yourselves, moving into the truer experience of what you Are so that you are able to be real with your brothers and sisters and available to your brothers and sisters.

Now the key difference between the holy Son or Daughter of God and the orphan, is love and the absence of love. The orphan doesn't know how to love because the orphan is preoccupied with himself or herself and his or her survival in a world that the orphan sees as hostile, because he sees it without love. Everything he does is based upon getting—getting safety, getting wealth, getting security, getting fame, getting peace by getting control.

Whereas, with the holy Son or Daughter of God, everything is a matter of embrace, of no judgment, of undefended presence—everyone with everyone. It is Being in such defenselessness that absolutely none of infinite Creation is distanced from you—absolutely none of it is feint because it seems to be at an infinite distance—where the universe is totally comprehensible, embraceable and experienceable simultaneously in every part of itself, which at the bottom line, means every part of yourself.

Now, some hundred years ago or more, a lot of these things could be talked about as though they were topics: Topics to discuss, topics to debate, topics to incorporate into progressive forward movement, or not. But I'm telling you that you are living in a time in which these lessons are required. You're living in a time when these issues are on your plate. You're living in a time when things are transitioning and you stand on the threshold of being in an entirely new way.

And one of the fundamental changes is going to be the shift from getting to giving—from self-protection to embrace of the whole.

The economy is changing. It isn't just suffering and being brought back to health. You are watching transformation of economy and the transformation is going to be successful. But it's going to become something that not all of you want, or it is going to become something that is going to require all of you to stand in the place of incompetence—to stand in that place of not-knowing, feeling the need to know and leaning into it without fussing about it, without fretting about it, leaning into it willingly because, in the beginning, all you can have based upon my encouragement is the idea that doing so will result in your becoming aware of what needs to be known that you never knew before . . . what needs to be known that will be transformational because it's not based upon the past.

Your economy needs to turn around. And I'm not speaking to any nation, I'm speaking to everyone's economy. And you know what? If you . . . and everyone who isn't willing to shift or is reluctant to shift, the transition will be tense and uncomfortable and will engender fear. Not because the transition is fearful, but because your attempt to preserve yourself as you have been, because that feels like security to you, is getting in the way of your experience of your fulfillment which is coming forth because you're being called upon to shift from orphan to holy Son of God, or holy Daughter of God.

Now, many, many, many people are very excited about the space program and the new frontier. And much energy and much expense is put forth in order to explore this new frontier. I'm telling you that there's a frontier before you that no one is going to be able to ignore. It isn't going to be a matter of choice. But whether it's strenuous, or exciting and inspiring, will depend upon whether or not you are willing to embrace it, or whether you're going to be resistant to it.

Privacy cannot continue. This country versus that country can't continue. For lack of better words, and I'm not being at all political here, there needs to be a United States of the World where everyone identifies with everyone else, and where everyone knows that the foundation for being every day when you get up is consistent globally. My God . . . if you can have a Big Mac¹ anywhere in the world and have it taste exactly like it does somewhere else in the world, you can all feel the same kind of unity with each other with a little willingness. And that's what's needed and that's what's called for.

There are new ways to be, if greed isn't the bottom line of everything. And if benefit to everyone, not just in a business, not just in a community, not just in a state or a country, but in the world, . . .

Paul: I'm sorry I lost it.

Raj: . . . new ways of being will have to develop that identify unity, embrace brotherhood and benefit for everyone, as opposed to greed and the accumulation of private, personal wealth. This is the threshold everyone stands on. It is a threshold which must take place. If it doesn't take place, there will be collapse.

In other words, there is no choice now!

And so, everything we're reading about regarding the holy instant and abandoning orphanhood and being willing to let the Father in because you love your brother or your sister, and in order to experience God's Love you must be willing to extend It to them. That's where it's at. That's where it's at on your planet at this time.

Selfishness is going to have to yield to Love. And for Love to come forth, you're going to have to find a confidence from some place that tells you, you do not need to be on the defense. And the only place you're going to be able to get that from is from the Father.

Now the Father has already given it to you because you're already the holy Sons and Daughters of God, right now, today, even if you're acting like a miserable orphan.

You hear me say it over and over: You cannot become something different from what the Father has created. You cannot be something different from what the Father is Being right where you are right now. But you can ignore it. And you can manufacture imaginations about what you are and who you are and how you are to be and how to overlay that upon what you truly Are and attempt with all your might to live it out.

It's time to give it up!

It's time to stop reading this book and considering "the holy instant" and considering the ego . . . and mulling it over in your mind . . . mulling them over in your mind as topics of consideration.

And you need to see that they're talking about you. The ego is the you that you imagine that you are when you insist upon being an independent authority.

The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind held in trust while you dally with the ego. It's time to trade the one for the other. It's time to abandon the one for the other. And the holy instant is the means.

And now . . . are all the opportunities for an instant in time to become the holy instant, in which you slip out of that which counts time as valuable into the experience of eternity which is wholeness, oneness, all of Creation experienced now with no part of it withheld from you, and no part of you withheld from it.

It's time to stop taking each day for granted. It's time to stop letting your spirituality relate to particular aspects of your life but not to others. And let the others, like . . . "Oh-h-h" . . . like you've done . . . "The economy will take care of itself," like . . . "I don't have anything to do with that . . . I don't need to have anything to do with that . . . why, I don't need to apply spirituality to that, it'll run itself." You see. And there are lots of areas of your life that you do that with.

Well, stop! It's time to stop! It's time to stop taking everything for granted. It's time to stop saying, "Well, it's taking care of itself," or, "they've taken care of it forever." You've just found out that they're not all taking care of it. And the idea that they were taking care of it was just sloppy thinking.

Sloppy thinking . . . I say that because clear thinking is a heck of a lot more fun. Clear thinking doesn't say, "Everything will take care of itself." Clear thinking says, "What is fulfillment? Where does fulfillment lie?"

Hmmm. You know what? Maybe fulfillment isn't, "My getting up every morning and getting on a crowded freeway and driving 10 miles an hour bumper-to-bumper to work, with everybody around me angry. And getting to work and hopefully getting that time clock punched before I'm late and then working in a crowded office with a lot of tension, because everybody's getting, getting, getting." Maybe that's not the way.

Maybe . . . maybe it's possible to work from home via the computer, via the internet. And maybe you could even have your own business without the overhead that would—if everyone else or many others were doing the same thing—would shift the workload and shift the area of provision to individuals that would be much more efficient and much more satisfying, because each one is personally involved—the creativity and the participation is evident. It isn't a manner of everyone . . . hundreds and hundreds of people being a tiny clog in a wheel, where that clog has no idea what the end result is and can feel no relationship to it.

The question: "What is fulfillment here?" Maybe fulfillment isn't anything that we've been doing already. If you do that, you're likely to have the idea that fulfills purpose before something else collapses that needs to collapse because it's not efficient, because it doesn't express divine order. And it doesn't express an involvement with everyone, where everyone's benefit is at the heart of what is done.

There are new ways that things are going to have to be done. And every single one of you . . . if you are conscious, and you are . . . that every single one of you can participate in being the gift of. But this means you're going to have to get off your—I'll be nice—duff . . . get off your duff . . . get off your complacency and care enough to become involved at levels and in areas that you never considered before.

How? By imagining areas you've never considered before? No. By becoming still enough to be able to say, "Father, what is the truth here? Father, what is needed here? Father, of all the things I see in my life that seem to be working, which ones aren't actually working and which ones need to be refreshed, which ones need to manifest insight that shifts everything away from greed and self-protection, to gift and love and fulfillment guaranteed for everyone because that's the goal, instead of getting, getting, getting."

Do you see what I'm saying? We've been reading about the holy instant and all of these things, but it needs to be translated into your life in order for it to become dynamic and real.

It happens that at this place in the book things are gelling, enough information has been provided in order for these things to be comprehended. And it happens that it coincides with things that are going on in your world that call for what this book and this teaching and these truths are putting forth.

Star Trek . . . going out into the unknown, . . . or you and you and you, and everyone bringing in the unknown by inviting it and making it possible for it to register with you because you're not insisting upon filling the space it will take with your own imaginative mental gyrations. All of which, at the bottom line, serve your selfish greedy needs and ultimately, you think keep you safe. When the fact is, that each one of you is a holy Son or Daughter of God who is safe, who is whole, who needs no protection, who, because He or She is the Presence of the Father in expression, has the characteristic of omnipotence and omnipresence and omniscience—the ability to know what you don't know yet, until you let it in and know it, which you need to be consciously nourishing everyday.

Now, if you say that the Course is not about the world because the world isn't real, it will not apply to anything . . . it won't be relevant to anything except a little mental masturbation. And that's not what it's about. It does relate. It relates to the use you put your mind to. It relates to how you're identifying yourself—holy Son or Daughter of God or ego/orphan. And depending upon which of those you embrace as the definition of you, your behavior will be different. Where will your behavior be different? Right here "in the world!"

And I'll tell you, that when you go into partnership with God by saying, "Father," which an orphan doesn't say . . . by saying, "Father, what's the truth here? Father, what is Your Perspective? Father, I wish to see things the way You see them, I wish to experience being the way You created me to experience It," you lay the ground work for the influx of illumination and inspiration and revelation, the uncovering of Reality to you in which whatever was false about your perception of the world and universe is replaced by the True perception of It—the Reality of It that has forever been what Is.

What this Course means will not be known to you until it becomes embodied by you in your actions once your mind is renewed and its renewal is the basis for those actions. And your mind won't be renewed until you let something other than your present sense of yourself in—the Father.

Now it will begin, not as you letting the Father in, it will begin as you letting the Holy Spirit in, which is the comforter the Father gave you when you abandoned your Birthright for a thrilling ride of independence that you made up for yourself.

The Holy Spirit, as I said, is your divinity—the truth about you, the conscious experience of the truth about you held in trust while you dally with the state of independence, which greed is the foundation of and fear is the motivator of and death is the ultimate result of. To give that up is not to give up much. It's time to give it up and it's time to enjoy giving it up, because it will be a joy to see the world change in simple ways that embody simple common sense arising out of love.

But by dammit! [slapping the book] let's . . . let's . . . let's get this book out of the book, let's get this truth out of the book, let's get it inside, so that even more consistently than you may have been doing it, you go through your day, each day, really interested to know what the Father's perspective is of this moment . . . of this moment . . . of that individual . . . of this circumstance . . . of what the truth is here . . . of what is called for . . . of how can I love this that seems unlovable and how can I persist in it when I am faced with such defense, such ugly defense, that it seems intolerable to stand in the face of it and want to know what the truth is and want to know what constitutes love, so that it can be extended, so that healing and transformation can occur.

Whatever you see, whether it's a physical problem, a physical disease, a social problem, a social disease, a global problem, a global disease—I'm talking about an Earth disease—it is not something to crumble in front of, it is not something to be wimpy in the presence of. It's a call for an answer. It's a call for you to discover a capacity you didn't know you had.

And the only way you can discover that capacity is to stand in the face of not knowing the answer, and to stand in the face of feeling incompetent about it and not getting huffy, egotistically proud, pissed-off, self-righteous about it, and saying with all honesty and agreement and cooperation, "I don't know the answer. The answer is something I don't know yet. But the answer is something I am capable of becoming aware of. And I know I'll become aware of it if I will be willing to be in this not-knowing, incompetent place with an understanding—theoretical though it may be—with the understanding that all of me, all of what I am is always present, all of me is always functioning and all of what I am is always available."

And then settle into that. Relax into that. Let go of all attempts at control because it will only stand in the way.

The infilling will come. The new modes of business will come. The new methods and means of commerce will come, and a world more united because it has become everyone's intent to embrace each other, because every single one of us are the Son's and Daughter's of God and not piss-ant little orphans who need to scramble for their good and grab it where they can get it, even if it means killing something or someone else to get it.

I'm going to end by saying: Be more alive to your days. Be more alive in every moment of your days. Wonder what it is you're missing. Wonder what it is you don't know. Wonder whether there are things that seem to be functioning well that actually aren't, where change is needed. And don't try to figure out the answers to any of those questions. Let them be dangling triggers of the awareness in you that you don't know and that you are yourself incompetent. And be happy in that knowledge, knowing that it's the Father's good pleasure, as it always has been, to give you the Kingdom. And that the Holy Spirit has as Its function, the reuniting of you with It—that which you abandoned in favor of becoming an orphan and exploring all the fearful excitement of being independent.

It's a good place where you are. Don't grouse about effort that it may take, because you all have more vital energy in your being than you dream of, and capacity that you don't know you had. And this lethargic incapacity and willingness to dreamily go through your day letting "them" take care of it or letting the economy take care of itself, and as a result, living in a tent city, or living in a tense city, because everyone is uptight because they're on the defense and they're trying to save their butts, or working for a corporation that sees getting the big bucks as the bottom line, no matter who they have to cut down in the process.

This is a world none of you have to endure. It certainly isn't something to just settle for because . . . oh, it's like being on vacation, you know, you just sort of sit back and let things take care of things. Well, that's okay, as long as things are going good. But since no one's actually consciously [chuckling] participating from a level of Real consciousness, it's bound to fail. And then everyone is going to say, "Damn, ah, this isn't any fun."

Well, no it's not fun, but that's only because you haven't discovered the benefit of a little bit of, we'll say, exercise in which you find out you have capacities that you didn't know you had. In fact, you have a capacity to know and embrace all of Creation consciously, without effort, and love it and feel it feeling your love. Having that kind of unified feedback, if I may put it that way, you have the Kingdom of Heaven awaiting you and the Sonship and a Daughtership as a Birthright awaiting you, that you no longer need to be unconscious of.

So, next week we'll go into the book.

In the meantime, I want you to go through what we discussed at the last meeting. You don't want to let this subject slip away. And no matter how much further we go in the book before we Wake up, you will not want to leave the practice of what we're talking about now. You will not want to move on to other things and let this become a topic of discussion that you discussed—and now it's not the topic of discussion that you're discussing. You don't want to let it be that. And I won't let it be that.

I love you. I love all of you.

Let's start having fun Waking up by participating in Waking up, instead of leaving It to "them".

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 31st 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Here's a question for you: What circumstances contribute to the experience of the holy instant? Solitude? . . . Quietude? . . . Reverence, as in the sanctuary where others might be present but there is an attitude of spirituality and reverence? . . . The absence of animosity? . . . The presence of respect being accorded to you?

Well, there's only one circumstance that contributes to the experience of the holy instant. And that circumstance is a mind whose attention is on God, saying "Yes" to God. This circumstance, present—no matter what is going on around you—is all it takes to experience the holy instant.

A holy instant is when you say "Yes" to God because you want to know God's Perspective . . . about what? About whatever the circumstances are that you're in the middle of. Why? Because the holy instant is about relationships.

And so, if you're going to experience the holy instant, you're going to have to be present in the middle of relationships. It's that simple. And it doesn't matter what they are. Why? Because no matter how you're defining them, if there are circumstances going on at all, they are circumstances God is Being. And therefore, the very circumstances that you might be defining inappropriately or incorrectly, are the very circumstances that hold your salvation in them because they hold the Presence of God being all that is really occurring right there.

You can experience a holy instant on a battlefield. You can experience a holy instant on the freeway where there's been an accident. You can experience the holy instant in the middle of a bunch of confused people who are trying to get out of their confusion in awkward ways. Why? Because no matter how others are seeing themselves, no matter how others are interpreting what they call the circumstances they're in, you are in circumstances that are constituted of God, understood, grasped, experienced truly or misperceived. Whichever it is, God is what is being experienced.

That's why I keep saying that every moment is pregnant with infinity. Every moment is pregnant with your illumination. Every moment is pregnant with you coming back into your right Mind—you letting the Holy Spirit in. Why? So that you might see your brothers and your world in an unflawed fashion . . . because it's your Birthright not to be insane. Let's put it this way, it's your Birthright to experience your sanity wholly, without distortion of any kind.

Let's go into the book.

The ego's use of relationships is so fragmented that it frequently goes even farther; . .¹

. . . even farther than defining this as love and this is not love, as having a preference that this is more loving than that.

The ego's use of relationships is so fragmented that it frequently goes even farther; one part of one aspect suits its purposes, while it prefers different parts of another aspect.

Well, considering what we've just been talking about, the ego can take the relationships that are part and parcel of the circumstances that you're confronted with and it can say that this aspect is more conducive, and that part, aspect, is less conducive to the experience of the holy instant [chuckle] under these circumstances. But under other circumstances the opposites will have value or lack of value. Why? Because depending upon the circumstance, one or the other helps create security to one who feels vulnerable. And so in one instance this will be rejected because it isn't as effective as another aspect to provide security. But under other circumstances, the one that was rejected will be the better of two, and it will be picked.

The ego has no standards. There are no principles underlying anything as the ego sees it . . . except the principle of self-preservation. And what preserves one's self, as I said, in one circumstance will be different in another circumstance.

What would you think if you observed someone behaving in these different ways under different circumstances? If you saw that one in the same set of circumstances all the time, you might be inclined to say, "Well this is a very dependable individual. He has principles. He abides by them. He is consistent. I can trust him. I can rely upon him to be the way I expect him to be."

But if per chance, you get to see him in another set of circumstances in which he violates what you perceived to be his principles, then you will be distrustful of him. "Where is his anchor? Where is his rudder? Where is there anything that makes him dependable?" And of course, why do you want to know? Because if he's not dependable, you are going to be vulnerable, and now this one, who maybe under certain circumstances you would rely on, but not in others you wouldn't, you become just like him.

The ego's use of relationships is so fragmented that it frequently goes even farther; one part of one aspect suits its purposes, while it prefers different parts of another aspect. Thus does it assemble reality to its own capricious liking, offering for your seeking . . .

. . . meaning, your observation . . .

. . . a picture whose likeness does not exist.

Have you ever known anyone who has "telephone manners?" You can be visiting with them, you know, down to earth, real, easy going, fluid conversation and the phone rings and they answer the phone and you think, "Who in the world is that? Where did they come on with that persona? And Why?" Well, because they feel that for some reason it serves them . . . it serves their safety . . . it serves the presentation and effect that they want to make. And under those circumstances they use it.

And they get off the phone and you wonder, "Well, wait a minute, how much of the way they've been dealing with me is real or how much of it is a persona that they're putting on with me, which they wouldn't begin to put on with someone else?" And as you try to take these conflicting aspects and put them together and have a picture of this individual, you can't, because they're so inconsistent.

It's almost like a person with multiple personalities. And one of the personalities wears glasses because their vision is poor, but consistently poor, so that an examination would show what kind of glasses were needed. And when they wear the glasses they're able to see. But when the other persona comes forth, it wears no glasses because it needs no glasses . . . same body, you might say, but inconsistency. And how can you put this together if you were to observe it? You can't put the need for glasses and no need for glasses together in the same place at the same time, which makes this sentence more understandable:

Thus does it assemble . . .

. . . the ego . . .

. . . reality to its own capricious liking, offering for your seeking a picture whose likeness does not exist.

Now the simple fact is, that if you're not yielding to God, if you are not saying in every instant, "Father, what is Your perspective? what is the truth here? what is it my Birthright as Your Son or Daughter to be experiencing here?" . . . if you're not doing that, then you are making a presentation. And the basis of whatever your behavior is, is self-preservation. And you are inconsistent. And you are dishonest, because you will do under different circumstances whatever it takes to keep you safe.

Now, the reason you do this is because you don't feel your connection with your Source. And so you practice or exercise no alliance with it. You practice an unconsciousness of it—an unconsciousness of a relationship that actually uninterruptedly, eternally exists and constitutes the reason you do exist.

So, every circumstance that you are confronted with is a circumstance of relationships. Every relationship holds for you the opportunity for you to experience it truly as it is, which would constitute a holy relationship. A relationship with—I don't want to say between—a relationship with everything.

If you go into a zoo and you walk through it, after three or four hours you have seen all different kinds of species of life. As you have done it, you've never been confused about who you are. And other human beings there that you have been walking with, are those that you would describe as, "we." "We—all of us—went through the zoo and looked at all these fascinating aspects of creation." And you didn't mean the baboons, and you didn't mean the hummingbirds and you didn't mean the rattlesnake when you said, "We all walked through the park . . . we all walked through the zoo."

But you know what? You had no trouble identifying who the "we" was. It didn't matter whether some had black hair, blond hair, . . . it didn't matter whether some had red skin or black skin or slanted eyes. "We walked through the zoo, fascinated by the incredible variety of Creation."

Well, you know what? When you enter into the holy instant, where you said "Yes" to God, and your brothers and sisters are revealed to you as what they truly Are, you recognize yourself in them, and you know they recognize themselves in you just like everyone in the zoo—everyone walking through the zoo. And you can immediately say, “We” . . . why? Because We are the same.

And this is what it means when the Course refers to the Sonship—the Sons and Daughters of God. The Sonship is One. The Christ is One. It doesn't mean that there's not infinite individuation of God. It doesn't mean that there isn't infinite manifestation of God. But it means that the infinite manifestation recognizes and experiences Itself as One, as undifferentiated, we'll say, in the sense that you're used to differentiating yourself from the birds and the cats and the insects and on and on and on. You make that differentiation.

I'm going to tell you something else: In the holy instant, not only is there no specialness of any kind, of the sort that would make insects different from cats and so on, absolutely everything, whether it's a tree, or a leaf on the tree, or a bird on the branch in the tree, or the earth that the tree is growing in and on and on and on, every aspect is “We”—every aspect is “Us.” And I will carefully say, every thing is “Me.” But it's every thing is Me, not everything is little me, the center of the world, the center of the universe. No, the universe in its awesome infinite wholeness is We—is Us—in which nothing stands out as being “not me,” and therefore, making the me that is different from what is not Me, special. You see?

Thus does it assemble reality to its own capricious liking, offering for your seeking a picture whose likeness does not exist.

You see . . . a picture of a likeness that doesn't exist is a caricature, actually. It's not a picture.

For there is nothing in Heaven or earth that it resembles, and so, however much you seek for its reality, you cannot find it because it is not real.

However much you try to find the reality of an ego that's capricious in the way it puts its values together, you're not going to find it. But at the same time, you must come to the realization that that definition applies to you too at this moment, until you're willing to provide the circumstance in which the holy instant can occur.

That circumstance being: Your willingness to stand with your attention on God . . . saying “Yes” to God, . . . “Yes” to letting in His perception, His experience of the Real meaning of every aspect of everything, so that you might, in that moment, cease being separate and different and therefore special and in not holding anything else to be separate and different from you . . . getting rid of its specialness, which in almost all cases amounts to a negative specialness that you must be on guard against and which you spend your life making sure you're defended against well . . . through skillful manipulation.

Everyone on earth has formed special relationships, and although this is not so in Heaven, . .

. . . you might say, where the Holy Spirit abides . . .

. . . and although this is not so in Heaven, the Holy Spirit knows how to bring a touch of Heaven to them here. In the holy instant no-one is special, for your personal needs intrude on no-one to make them different.

In other words, when you do allow the holy instant to happen, you no longer put on a telephone voice. You no longer talk this way with that one and another way with another one. You suddenly cease in that instant to be dishonest. And you have the opportunity to feel the substantiality of your integrity when you are actually being honest—something that happens spontaneously when defense is abandoned—when fear is gone. This is important to understand.

Without the values from the past . . .

. . . things which you cannot bring into the holy instant.

Without the values from the past you WOULD see them all the same, . .

. . . just like you see all the other people in the zoo as being the same, as contrasted by being different from the animals in the zoo.

Without the values from the past you WOULD see them all the same, and like YOURSELF. Nor would you see any separation between yourself and them. In the holy instant, you see in each relationship what it WILL be when you perceive only the present.

Here's a little mind bender for you . . .

. . . you see in each relationship what it WILL be when you perceive only the present.

If you perceive only the present, how can you see what will be? Because when you see in the present, you see the truth, you experience the truth, which you will experience forever—even though time will not pass.

The point is, that the future will not constitute a change of what you Are. No more will you be engaged in perfecting yourself in developing greater skills.

You will live life fully from the already fullness of you, as will all of your brothers and sisters. And you will see it in them and they will recognize, as I've said the last few weeks, they will recognize it in you. Your appreciation and acknowledgement of what is true of them will be felt and acknowledged by them. And you will feel the acknowledgement, therefore, your act of acknowledgement is a universal act of acknowledgement that embraces the whole as a single act, much in the same way that all of you walking through the zoo is a single act or all of you enjoying a day at Disneyland is a single act. It may be made up of a lot of different activities, but it's a single act of Us, you might say, having fun.

I'm trying to convey to you a feeling . . . a feeling of what Oneness means. And a feeling of the fact that Oneness no longer allows for any form of differentness that constitutes exclusion in some way

The very word "infinite" implies infinity. It implies unending manifestation of life. But none of those manifestations constitute a difference or a specialness that makes it stand out above anything else, and also does not allow everything else to be something threatening.

And so unity of infinity constitutes harmony. This is what awaits you as you allow for and invite the holy instant by abandoning the definitions you've made up and learned that cause you to see differentness where differentness doesn't exist, and causes strife to occur where differentness doesn't actually exist and which, therefore, needs to be expunged. The strife needs to be banished, not by a decree, but by a simple lack of exercising a right to define things as though they are different and believe your definition, and then act accordingly.

God knows you NOW. He remembers nothing, having ALWAYS known you exactly as He knows you now.

As you walk through the zoo with everyone else or as you move through Disneyland with everyone else, you're knowing each other NOW. You remember nothing about them. You could say that you're a present, We. It's a brand new We, different from the we that was walking down the streets in Anaheim or the streets in the town where the zoo is. But it's always, We. And you recognize the We. And you know Them as you knew the people yesterday as We.

Now this does not express the total meaning of the words here in the Course, but they convey to you how We can mean something to you without there being a requirement to define every aspect of the We as though it is distinctly different from the others, as though each individual were a different species. You see?

But you live with each other that way. You protect yourself against each other. And because you're protecting yourself against your brother, your brother sees you as a threat and treats you accordingly. And so you play this dance together, of war, to one degree or another, which is the absence of the holy instant . . . and is the call for the holy instant.

Again . . .

God knows you NOW. He remembers nothing, having ALWAYS known you exactly as He knows you now. The holy instant parallels His knowing by bringing ALL perception out of the past, thus removing the frame of reference you have built by which to judge your brothers.

And judge your brothers, you do . . . unless of course, you've done the two-step. Unless you've stepped back and abandoned whatever definition might have sprung forth the moment you met him a moment ago, or whatever definition had accumulated because the fellow was someone you've known for a long time . . . you've been willing to step back and abandon that and inquire with an innocent mind, with innocent eyes, to know of God, "What is the truth here? Help me see You in this one, because I know if there appears to be this one in any form, it has to be You being Yourself, here and now, and everything characteristic of You is the only thing that can truly be there for me to experience it. That, I want to experience. I do not want to continue to experience my definition and my reactions to those definitions and my preoccupation with what behavior is called for because of those definitions." You see?

Once this is gone, . .

. . . all perception out of the past, which has removed the frame of reference you've built by which to judge your brothers . . .

Once this is gone, the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . substitutes His frame of reference for it.

Listen:

His frame of reference is simply God.

That is the simplicity of it. If the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, then your frame of reference is God. That's the simplicity of it. That's the strength of it. That's the integrity of it. That's the inviolability of it. It means that no matter how much imagination you use, God being all there is to you can't be altered, and hasn't been altered.

The Holy Spirit's timelessness lies only here.

Your timelessness lies only here.

For in the holy instant, free of the past, you see that love is in you, and you have no need to look WITHOUT and snatch it guiltily from where you thought is was.

Relief . . . release. You no longer have to snatch it guiltily because it's not only yours, it's the very substance of you. It's your nature. It is that out from which every action, every conscious awareness comes. It's pure harmony and pure beauty and yet, in the experience of it, you don't have yourself on your mind because you're aware that this is the truth about everyone and everything. And all of a sudden it's We. All of a sudden it's Us. All of a sudden there's no call for defense. As I said, all of a sudden there is relief.

Now, it's becoming clearer that this is a threshold that everyone will move over. And it's a threshold that you're being called to move over because you can, and there's someone to tell you that you can.

It's simply time for suffering to be over. It's simply time for tension to dissolve. It's simply time for a misunderstanding of who you Are and what everything Is, to vanish.

ALL your relationships are blessed in the holy instant, . .

. . . and it's equally true to read it this way:

ALL your relationships are bless-ed in the holy instant, because the blessing is not limited.

In the holy instant, the arising of love in you that's filling you up—at least that's what it feels like—is God's Love illuminating Itself in you, illuminating what never left. And as you feel it, and I'm going to say, own it, because you know it's You, and because there are no private thoughts or experiences, all of Creation feels that acknowledgement in you and that experience in you, because there are no private experiences in actuality. And you have your first experience of what can only be called "Universal Love."

You've been able to imagine that you are embraced in Universal Love—the Father's Love. But it's time for you to begin to be aware that when you let the Love that you Are be felt by yourself, it is felt Universally. And the Universe feels Universally loved by you. This is the simple, simplicity of Oneness.

As you realize that We are walking through the zoo, or We are all enjoying Disneyland, it doesn't turn the We into a lump—an undifferentiated lump, we'll say, which would be static and not infinite anymore. It leaves every aspect of infinity free to fulfill its God-directed purpose, with every aspect of it recognizing its Godness and the Godness of everything else, so that it knows all of it is We . . . and rejoices in safety, rejoices in peace, rejoices in the absence of tension, rejoices at the awesomeness of Creation without excitement—meaning, that thrill that was always tinged with fear as something new was explored, which couldn't be embraced because it was being looked at through eyes that were absent Love. In other words, by the orphan.

In the holy instant, the Sonship gains AS ONE. And united in your blessing, it BECOMES one to you. The meaning of love is the meaning God gave to it. Give to it any meaning APART from His, and it is impossible to understand it.

And I will say that, because you don't understand it when you look at Him and it looks like your brothers and sisters, you tend to be confused and misunderstand and mistrust what you see, and begin to act out of fear.

Now, . . .

Every brother God loves as He loves you; neither less nor more. He needs them all equally, and so do YOU.

[Raj repeats] Every brother God loves as He loves you; . .

. . . no specialness. But God sees you truly. God sees you now. And God sees Himself in you now. And you, not holding yourself apart, experience as your being, that integrity of God seeing and recognizing Himself in what He sees, and therefore It's incapability of conflict. Unity, peace, harmony, being, arising out of love infinitely, but not separately.

God needs all of Creation equally. And you need all of Creation equally. And all of Creation needs you equally because it is all One. And if any part of It tries to hold itself apart, it doesn't change the fact that the Universe needs all of Itself equally, including you. And the Brotherhood needs all of Itself, including you, equally . . . and vice versa.

The holy instant allows that experience, that Real experience of being as One, back into and as your conscious experience of Being. And that's what it's all about.

In time, you have been told to offer miracles as Christ directs, and let the Holy Spirit bring to you those who are seeking you.

You have been told to listen to the Holy Spirit. You've been told to listen for the Christ within and to take direction relative to healing, and that the Holy Spirit would bring those to you for healing. Yet, you were moving to, you might say, a new level, a new paradigm.

Yet in the holy instant, . .

. . . this moment in which you say "Yes" to God, and actually let in the experience . . .

. . . in the holy instant, you unite directly with God, and ALL your brothers join in Christ.

You join with God by no longer insisting upon the right to be an orphan and work out your own salvation on your own terms. And when you join with God and God reveals you to your Self as He is being You, and you recognize the truth about We—all of your Brothers and Sisters and all of Creation—you no longer hide your Christhood. And as part of the Brotherhood that constitutes the Christ, you recognize your Self without guilt and without pride, simply for what you Are . . . the Father's Son . . . the Father's Offspring.

Those who are joined in Christ . . .

. . . in other words, [a chuckle] those who as they walk through the zoo say We about themselves walking through the zoo, those who find their unity even though there seems to be diversity, are joined in their We-ness . . . right? That's the same as what it means here:

Those who are joined in Christ are in no way separate. For Christ is the Self the Sonship shares, as God shares His Self with Christ.

That's like a mathematical equation: God = Christ = Christ = God.

Now, these are not spiritual words about a spiritual existence somewhere far off. These are invitations and triggers to your awareness to help you be willing to look at where you are now, with whatever circumstances you're confronted by, with a cultivated curiosity no matter what the circumstances are, to get God to tell you and show you Himself in any part or every part of the circumstances, without bringing your past definitions of the circumstances into play.

You can't say, "Well, it's not quiet enough. Well, it's not private enough. Well, there's not enough respect. Well, there's not enough peace." You see . . . and then resent the circumstance.

The circumstance is the only means you have, to have a holy instant. Because the holy instant is going to be about a relationship. If that isn't kicking against the pricks, I don't know what it is, when you resent the very thing that holds the Answer.

If the circumstance is unpleasant, say anyway, "God, show me your Self here. I know You've got to be here because something's happening. [Chuckling] It looks like hell, but something is happening. If something is happening, You've got to be here! Show me, because I want to see You. I do not want to see what I'm seeing. I'm willing to abandon my frustration or anger at the circumstance. I'm willing to stop saying the circumstance will keep me from experiencing Your Presence." You see?

Value every apparent circumstance that you seem to be in, and you bring the one circumstance into play that will promote the holy instant—your willingness to stand with your attention . . . where? Not on your definitions of the circumstances, but on the Father, Who is present with you no matter what you are perceiving, and asking, "Father, what is the truth here?" and letting it in.

Just remember, you won't let it in as long as you're resenting the circumstance, as long as you are judging it as not worthy of being present with, as long as you are judging it as something destructive to you. That is bullshit!

You don't have to define it that way. You can define it truly and say, "If anything is going on here at all—and something obviously is—God must be here. And I'm going to ask God of Himself what It is, so that I might know it and join Him in appreciation of It and let go of whatever is binding me to a sense of suffering and lack associated with these circumstances." That's the invitation to the holy instant. And that's what lets the holy instant occur.

You have humongous number of holy instants ahead of you this coming week. Take advantage of them. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, we're talking about the holy instant and special relationships. We've especially been discussing the fact that the holy instant is when you say "Yes" to God. It's not really so much you're saying yes to God, it's really more a matter of your not saying "No" to God. More than affirmatively saying "Yes," it's a matter of gently, calmly and quietly being still with an inquisitive attitude because you want to know something. The inquisitiveness is the act of "Yes-ness." The openness and the desire to learn is what says "Yes."

I must reiterate, that because you're so used to thinking, and it's been your habit to always be able to come up with better ideas, you automatically think that the answer to a problem is a better idea, or is a better thought than what you've thought before. But when you're thinking a thought, when you're asserting an idea in your mind, there's no attentiveness, it's an exertion, an outward moving act. It isn't an emptiness in which something can fill. And this is why it seems to be difficult to Wake up or to find the path Home, because it's the opposite of what you've been conditioned to believe you need, or need to do. It's really not a need to do anything, it's a need to be something. And mostly it's a need to be still.

When you, let's say, . . . (it's a poor use of words) when you initiate a holy instant, you do it by emptying yourself because you want to know more than you presently know, you want to know other than you presently know. And at the bottom line, what motivates any of you to engage in this act is a need. You don't usually do it when everything is going smoothly or to your liking.

And so, when you choose to become still and listen because there is a need and you hear and the need is answered, you learn something of the nature of Life, the nature of Being. You actually learn that all of the doing that you had been engaged in was not connecting you with the nature of Being and the way things work, and you were not making any progress.

Now, if listening and hearing an answer to a problem constitutes the meeting of a need, it constitutes the correcting of a problem. And what have we been learning about ever since we started reading this book? We've been reading about the need for correction . . . the call for correction and, I'm going to say, correction accomplished. None of you are supposed to be satisfied with limitation, satisfied with pain or discomfort, satisfied with lack. Any of those things are a call for correction. All of those things are a call for a holy instant.

Now the reason it is practical to become still is because in the silence God speaks—in the silence you can feel the Movement of God in you. And that's why there is insight. That's why there is revelation. That's why there is the presence of Love that illuminates your perfection in the most practical ways. All of you, at one time or another, have had an experience of the sort that I'm talking about.

Now when you're faced with a problem today, when you listen to the news or you have a physical situation that is bothersome and is dragging you down, here is a call for correction. And here is a call for you to be willing to become still rather than to have a better idea—something that you can put your will behind in order to heal this situation, handle the devil, get rid of the evil.

It's very simple. There is a God. God is omnipresent, omnipotence, which means that God is Presencing Himself, God is being all that there is omnipotently—which means without contradiction.

What you must understand is that this omnipotent Self-expression is always in action and is always being everything there is of you. You could call it your safety net, as long as you think you're some little, tiny, separate entity.

As a separate entity, you're frightened, you're doubtful, you're egotistical and on and on and on. And it's very difficult for you to relax and trust, to relax and actually be still, because you think that if you aren't exercising your will by virtue of your ideas that you will be vulnerable—increasingly vulnerable.

This is when you have to recognize that the problems you're experiencing—those things which are frightening—are calls for correction. They are calls for the holy instant, which means they are calls for you to withdraw your attention from aggravating the negativity and abandoning the mental activity that generates it so that you become still. But it's difficult to do this when you're afraid. And that is why you must remember that there is a God—there is an underlying omnipotent Presence that constitutes your invulnerability, or what you might call by reflection, your omnipotence—not your power over anything but your incapacity to be overpowered by anything.

Many of you, in spite of your study of the Course, do not watch the use to which you put your mind. I'm very aware that circumstances presently, whether it's national, whether it's economic, whether it's international, whether it's physical, whether it's health issues, there are things which are alarming and you feel a perfect right to be reactive to—to be frightened by. And you just let yourself be swept along by a wave of emotion and you don't realize that there's a necessity for you to be diligent, to be alert, to recognize when you are willy-nilly letting your mind be used poorly.

Now it's very simple. Whatever the apparent circumstances are in your life, it's very easy for you to have difficulty hoping. Hope is not present. Faith is difficult to come by. Well, you know what? It's not as important to have hope and it's not as important to have faith, as it is not to have faithlessness and not to have hopelessness. And that you can do something about!

You may not be able to drum up and generate hope and faith, but you can monitor your minds. And when you're inclined to say, "Nothing is working out . . . nothing that I do helps . . . things are getting worse and worse and worse and I feel like giving up—not only do I feel like giving up, [chuckle] I really feel like cursing God! And I really feel like cursing the people that are running our country . . . and I really feel like abandoning this person or that person . . ."

And your self-righteousness gets in there and begins to have a field day and it generates more and more turmoil and emotion. And it feels good, like you're doing something.

But all the time that you're doing that you are absolutely inhibiting the holy instant, you are not providing the environment in which you can even be conscious of God—except perhaps to hate Him under the circumstances. And so you are getting satisfaction out of being pissed off at everyone and everything, but you're not attending to the one thing that would make a difference. That is, shutting up!

You can stop practicing doubt. You can abandon indulging in fear. You can abandon hopelessness. How? Well one thing you can do is simply hum a song, say a poem, count to ten—anything that you give your attention to will constitute doing something other than practicing fear and doubt and energizing it.

You know, you can have a pretty good day and you can sit down in the evening, in the TV room, and watch a movie. And as you watch it, you realize you've made a mistake when you chose that movie, "What a bummer this movie is." But you keep hoping that it will get better. You watch it right through to the end. And when you get to the end, you don't want to go to bed feeling like you're feeling—your whole mental attitude has been adjusted, you might say, against your will, it's been adjusted in a direction that isn't comfortable. And you say, "Well, I'm gonna have to watch another movie before I go to bed that lifts me up again." And so you look for a comedy . . . right?

Well, you all know that happens. And you all know that you can adjust and shift the overriding attitude in your mind by changing the externals. You can do the same thing just by the use you put your mind to. And you can talk yourself into the pits of hell.

Now, circumstances might say to you that you can't talk yourself into Heaven, even though you can quite ably talk yourself into the pits of hell. Okay, so you can't talk yourself into Heaven, but you can stop talking yourself into the pits of hell. So do what you can do! Stop practicing faithlessness, even if you can't have faith.

Now you really need to grasp the idea that Waking up isn't a matter of having better ideas. It isn't a more skillful use of your mind than the use you've been putting it to, unless it's that you use your mind to simply pay attention, to simply be present with everything, with inquisitiveness—a desire to see more of what God is Being right there in front of you, than what you've seen before.

And in that absence of thinking, you know what it all means. And your desire to know what it really means, as God is being It, you provide the environment of the holy instant.

Now, you have all got to stop arguing for limitations. You've got to stop arguing for the worst. Because, you know what? You can make yourself absolutely miserable. But you can't get rid of God!

And so what's true and what's Real will continue to be true and Real, and it will stare you in the face with all the Love that God is Being in all of what is Real. And it will Love you unequivocally and unconditionally, and bless you with Its Love. And you will miss it until you decide to be curious, inquisitive and empty enough for something to infill you.

Now I've been saying this for a long time and especially over the last few weeks. But as you look back over this past week, I want each of you—and I'm not excluding any of you—I want each of you to look at your week and see whether . . . or how many times you have absolutely denied yourself the experience of the holy instant because you were so insistent upon declaring your doubt, upon declaring your self-righteous indignation at the injustice of this or that or the other thing.

Or maybe it would be easier for you to see how many times you actually did shut up and become still, with the desire to know the truth. Not to come up with a truth for yourself to think, but to desire to know what the truth really is, by becoming still enough for the Father to infill you or for the Holy Spirit to reveal to you the experience of truth—which, as I've said before, is far more than an idea or a thought—so that the experience of it caused you to relax and feel whole and feel well, not by virtue of anything you've done, but by virtue of the truth about you . . . what the truth is.

Everybody would like to have healing. But very few of you are willing to watch the use to which you're putting your mind, to see to it that you're providing the environment in which the healing can occur, in which the correction can occur, in which the transformation can actually occur.

You're not helpless victims. And you're not here to look at circumstances and say, "Well, ultimately they're not really Real and therefore, they're not really affecting me. And one day I'll see the truth of that and I'll laugh about my misperception." Well, to hell with one day . . . how about now? How about seeing the truth now and not having to laugh about how you saw things before the truth dawned on you? How about not delaying the holy instant?

Let's go into the book.

Think you that you can judge the Self of God? God has created It BEYOND judgment, . . .¹

. . . you might say, [chuckling] His workshop without—beyond the realm of judgment.

God has created It . . .

. . . the Self of God . . .

. . . BEYOND judgment, out of His need to extend His Love.

Oh, wait a minute, what is this Self of God? We just read last week:

For Christ is the Self the Sonship . . .

. . . all of you, all of us . . .

. . . shares, as God shares His Self with Christ.

You could say, that God being the Christ, is the Christ being Man. And although it appears to be stated in steps, it's one action, it's one event . . . infinite, though it is.

So when it says . . .

Think you that you can judge the Self of God?

. . . it means, do you think that you can judge your Self? Do you think you can judge your brother's Self? Your brother's Self is the Christ and the Self of the Christ is God.

Oh, but how much of your time this last week was spent judging the Self of God that was a brother or a sister? Or how much of the time was spent judging the Self of God that's you? "Oh, I just don't get it! I'm never gonna get this! I'm gonna die before I Wake up. And it will probably be ten thousand more lifetimes before I Wake up."

How do you judge anything? You judge it by thinking about it . . . right? You have a thought . . . a judgmental thought, sometimes very creative cutting thoughts, that give you great satisfaction because they cut so well . . . right? The only thing is that you're the victim of the cut. Not because the cut could hurt you, but because the use you're putting your mind to. You are using your mind to deprive yourself of the environment in which the holy instant can occur—in which a miracle can occur.

So you are engaging in an activity that's actually depriving you of your heart's desire. Because none of you would be listening to me or reading this book if you didn't want to Wake up, if there wasn't more of Reality that you wanted to experience and that you believe is there to experience, than what you're presently experiencing.

So learn to be alert so that you don't inadvertently, with great ego satisfaction, deprive yourself of your greatest love.

With love in you, you have no need EXCEPT to extend it.

. . . unless you need to be angry [laughing] or unless you need to be really self-righteous. But if you don't have a need to be angry or self-righteous, then . . .

With love in you, you have no need EXCEPT to extend it.

I'm going to tell you that it's a heck of a lot easier to extend love than it is to practice jealousy or hate or fear or self-righteousness.

In the holy instant there is no conflict of needs, for there is only ONE.

And you know what? That need isn't even felt as a need. You ordinarily think of a need as a lack—a perceived lack. You say: "I don't have this, so therefore, I need this. I need this something that I don't have." But in the holy instant, you have only one need and it is experienced as a "having." It's experienced as the having of the capacity to look at your brother and see God. It's the capacity to be present in a situation without judgment and therefore be an agent for change of harmony—of harmonious change. It's the experience of having, that in no way conveys lack at all. You see?

So . . .

In the holy instant there is no conflict of needs, for there is only ONE. For the holy instant reaches to eternity, and to the Mind of God.

Of course it does, because the holy instant was an instant in which you turned your attention toward God and said, "Father, what is the truth here?" and then said "Yes" to His answering you and "Yes" to your receiving the answer.

So of course, . . .

. . . the holy instant reaches to eternity, and to the Mind of God. And it is only there love HAS meaning, and only there CAN it be understood.

And again, I'm going to reiterate that the understanding isn't the understanding of thoughts or ideas. When you taste chocolate, I'm going to say you understand what chocolate tastes like. But you would be hard-put to explain it to anyone else. So it's not a matter of ideas. But you know . . . you just know . . . what chocolate tastes like.

. . . the holy instant reaches to eternity, and to the Mind of God. And it is only there love HAS meaning, and only there CAN it be understood.

Now, . . .

It is impossible to use one relationship at the expense of another, and NOT suffer guilt.

That's because relationships aren't there to be used. And it's an activity that doesn't fit with Reality. And when you engage in that which doesn't fit with Reality, you experience dissonance, you experience your sanity saying, "You can't do this and be comfortable." You can't go against your nature, period. And if you try to, if you imagine that you are, the experience is going to be accompanied with imaginary pain. But it will be equal to the degree of imagination you've brought into play, in order to go at odds with Reality. And so it will feel as uncomfortable, imaginatively speaking, as the force which you're bringing to bear upon Life—to be at odds with it.

So, . . .

It is impossible to use one relationship at the expense of another, and NOT suffer guilt.

And remember that relationships aren't just between human beings. There are relationships between you and the floor, you and the water that buoys you up when you are swimming, and so on.

And it is equally impossible to condemn part of a relationship and find peace WITHIN it.

Mind you, to use a relationship or to condemn a part of a relationship means that you're doing something other than abiding in the silence with an inquisitiveness to experience the truth of whatever the circumstances are that you're in the middle of. It means that you have abandoned attentive inquisitiveness and a quietly receptive attitude. It's that simple and it's that absolute. You do that, you will not experience the holy instant. Stop doing that with a curious, inquisitive, quiet, attentive mind and you will.

Under the Holy Spirit's teaching, ALL relationships are seen as total commitments, yet they do not conflict with one another in any way.

And I want to take this opportunity to cast doubt, if you will, on the impractical idea that when everyone Wakes up there will be no distinguishable individualities, no distinguishable identities. That it will all become the Oneness of God.

Under the Holy Spirit's teaching, ALL relationships . . .

. . . plural . . .

. . . are seen as total commitments, . .

. . . if you have total commitment to all relationships—relationships, plural—are not going to blur and blend into each other and become one indistinguishable for another. If that happens, it means commitment has been lost. But it says here:

Under the Holy Spirit's teaching, ALL relationships are seen as total commitments, yet they do not conflict with one another in any way.

This is very important. It's important because it means that you, individually, are eternal and you will not become someone else, or you will not dissolve into an amorphous blob. You will have total commitment to every other expression of God as every other expression of God will have total commitment to you. And that absolute harmony, that absolute committedness or connectedness will not allow in any way for dissonance or conflict of any kind. Why? Because you will have invited and nurtured the holy instant, in which, in the silence in the middle of you, you find your connection with All That Is, and find it not different from you in nature and character, but different in the sense of the infinite capacity of God to infinitely express Himself.

Perfect faith in each one, . .

. . . in each relationship . . .

. . . for its ability to satisfy you COMPLETELY, arises only from perfect faith in YOURSELF.

Well, that brings us back to: What use did you put your mind to this past week? Did you have perfect faith in yourself or did you doubt yourself? And did you berate yourself and did you kick yourself around the block? And did you, without even turning on a bad movie, depress yourself with your own negative filmstrip in your mind, and your satisfaction in being pissed-off at this, that or the other thing?

You know what? As I said, you might not be able to have perfect faith in yourself, but you can stop practicing faithlessness relative to yourself. You can stop saying, "Nothing's going to work out. The economy is such that at this moment there's really no way that I can get out of the hole."

Remember the story I told you about the two shoe salesmen that went to Africa? One of them made no sales and they asked him why. He says, "Because no one wears shoes here." The other one made humongous sales and they said, "What accounts for your success?" He says, "Nobody wears shoes here."

If you will shut up . . . if you will become still . . . if you will say a favorite poem to yourself over and over, when you've found yourself being very busy condemning yourself or criticizing others and justifying your negative feelings about your bad situation, you will find that you will come to a place of equilibrium. And when you're in that place of equilibrium, then in the absence of severe depression that you've managed to get yourself out of by a better use of your mind, you can then say, "Father," . . . you can turn to the Father, you can take the first part of the two-step and turn to the Father and say, "Father, what is the truth here? I want to know the truth." And then the second part: Listen . . . and maintain the silence . . . maintain the space that you haven't filled up yourself, for the Father to fill.

If you will go within like that, you will find the encouragement you need. You will find the Father in you. You will find the Holy Spirit in you. You will find your Guide. You will find me there to encourage you.

And yeah, occasionally you will get very incensed at me, and say, "Yeah, right! Well, what about this? And what about that? And what about that time?" And you will begin thinking again. And you'll begin doing that which causes your mind not to be quiet any longer, and takes you out of the position where you can hear because you're enjoying listening to yourself so much.

And I will wait until you turn your attention back. And I will reassure you again. The Holy Spirit will reassure you again. The Father will reassure you again. Why? Because no matter how much you grouse, you can't get rid of God, you can't change Reality.

And so, your wholeness and your well-being and your transformation stands unchanged in front of you, awaiting your acceptance of it. It's absolutely certain, because it's been yours since the beginning.

Perfect faith in each one, . .

. . . each relationship . . .

Perfect faith in each one, for its ability to satisfy you COMPLETELY, arises only from perfect faith in YOURSELF.

Or I'm going to say, the perfect practice and the absence of the practice of faithlessness.

And this you cannot have, while guilt remains.

You can't get into the quiet as long as guilt remains. Well, there you go. That means that guilt is something you're always introducing. It isn't actual. And the moment you stop introducing it, the moment it no longer remains because you've let that little bit of business in your mind go as well so that now your mind is quiet, the moment is gone. Being satisfied completely by your relationships can happen.

Let me read that again:

Perfect faith in each one, for its ability to satisfy you COMPLETELY, arises only from perfect faith in YOURSELF. And this you cannot have, while guilt remains. And there WILL be guilt as long as you accept the possibility, and CHERISH it, that you can make a brother what he is not because YOU would have him so.

Oh, you would love for your brother to be responsible for your bad luck. You would love for the CEO's of the big company to be responsible for your inability to experience wholeness. You would love somebody to be the scapegoat. You would love to turn them into the justification for your lack and for the call for you to practice self-righteousness.

The word, "CHERISH," . . . there is the key:

And there WILL be guilt as long as you accept the possibility, and CHERISH it, that you can make a brother what he is not because YOU would have him so.

You know what? Your wholeness has to do with one thing and one thing only, and that's your direct relationship with your Father—He, Whom your Birthright comes from.

And as soon as you abandon trying to make your brother what he cannot be, the culprit, the bastard that took your good from you, and you realize that there's nothing that can actually break your relationship with your Source, then it becomes easy for you to turn to the Father and say, "Father, what's the truth about me? I wish to experience my wholeness that isn't dependent upon or affected by what anyone else does or doesn't do. I would like my wholeness to be manifest for me, because You haven't withheld it from me. And You know my brothers and sisters need to see an example of that so that they might be inspired as well to turn to You and abandon their self-righteous indignation and make room for the holy instant."

Continuing . . .

You have so little faith in yourself because you are unwilling to accept the fact that perfect love is in YOU.

Well, it's easy for you to be . . .

... unwilling to accept the fact that perfect love is in YOU.

Because nobody has really ever taught you that it was. And when everyone teaches you that such a thing isn't there, and because it isn't there you must become a conniving, smart, ego and human being, then you could say there is justification for your current behavior. But now you know the truth and you don't have to continue the behavior. You don't have to continue having so little faith in yourself. But in order to find that the love is in you, you do have to stop practicing faithlessness. And you do have to, in the space that's left after you've abandoned faithlessness, ask God, because you want to know the truth and be willing to let the truth in.

You have so little faith in yourself because you are unwilling to accept the fact that perfect love is in YOU. And so you seek without...

... out there...

... for what you cannot FIND without. . .

... out there.

I offer you my perfect faith in you, . .

... it's really that simple.

I offer you my perfect faith in you, . .

I offer you my perfect faith in you, in place of all your doubt. But forget not that my faith must be as perfect in all your brothers as it is in you, or it would be a limited gift to YOU.

And I'm going to add: That would turn it into an unholy relationship—a special relationship. And I will not do that with you. And I want you to learn not to do that with your brothers and sisters.

In the holy instant, we share our faith in God's Son . . .

... no matter which one we're looking at.

In the holy instant, we share our faith in God's Son because we recognize, together, that he is wholly worthy of it, and in our appreciation of his worth, we CANNOT doubt his holiness. And so we love him.

Now we talked earlier about the fact that there's only one need and the fact that the experience of that need is an experience of having something. It's not an experience of a lack.

And so here it is. Here's what you find yourself having:

In the holy instant, we share our faith in God's Son because we recognize, together, that he is wholly worthy of it, . .

And I'm saying that we recognize it together, for lack of better words, spontaneously. Not as a result of figuring it out, we have the experience of recognizing it . . .

. . . together, that he is wholly worthy of it, and in our appreciation of his worth, we CANNOT doubt his holiness.

Well, not only can you not doubt it, it doesn't even occur to you to doubt it. It is clear that it is undoubtable. And that experience, that together, joint experience, is an experience of something you have. The need to be the presence of love is experienced as having the love and extending it, because there's nothing else to do. It's an experience of wholeness.

And so we love him.

During this coming week, be more diligent and know that I'm present with you in support of it, every moment, even when you feel like you do not have the capacity to do anything other than actively, aggressively practice faithlessness . . . I'm sorry, remember that no matter how committed you are to that, I stand with you not in support of that, because it isn't the truth. And I stand in support of you feeling the influx of your capacity to have faith, because the truth spontaneously makes more sense to you than your faithlessness did.

Use every moment that you can for a holy instant. And understand that whatever is unlike God is meant to be corrected. You are meant to have a corrected experience in which that is no longer going on. And persist with it. Persist with the invitation to, and the nurturing of the holy instant, by, at the least, ceasing to practice faithlessness. And then turning to the Father and desiring to know the truth.

And when your addiction to self-righteous indignation rears its head, recognize it for what it is and trash it. Don't give it another moment of your attention. Shift your attention. Shift it to a mantra. Shift it to, "Peter Piper picked a peck of pickled peppers.” And say it over and over. Say anything that’s even nonsensical. But do it with focus, because all the time that you’re doing that, you’re not practicing faithlessness. And you’re setting the scene for a correction of the problem and your freedom from your ignorance as to your Birthright, and that it’s for you to be experiencing now.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 13th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're almost exactly half way through the text of A Course In Miracles. And at this point I want to emphasize the first paragraph of the chapter that we're reading, which surprisingly enough, since we have been discussing the holy instant, is called The Purpose of Time. I'm going to read that paragraph in just a moment.

As you become more committed to experiencing the holy instant, as you become more consciously and consistently committed to actually being Awake, not talking about it, not studying about it, but engaging in the inner act of that which facilitates the shift, you are going to find yourself experiencing distress. And when you do, for whatever reason, you will find it extremely valuable to come back to the first paragraph of Chapter Fifteen. It says:

Can you imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time? Yet that is what time is FOR; to learn just that and nothing more.¹

Every one of you need to remind yourself of this often. To have that experience is what triggers Awakening. Therefore, when you find yourself highly committed to other goals, you may know that you are not doing the one essential thing—that you are being side tracked from the one essential thing—and that for all of your commitment to these other goals, you're applying yourself in a foolish and impractical direction that you must come to recognize as such, so that you can consciously, purposely, begin to devalue those goals. They will not become devalued spontaneously and automatically because they are habits which you developed and which you value and which you will not spontaneously release until you find them no longer of value.

God's Teacher . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . . me, . . .

. . . cannot be satisfied with His teaching until it constitutes ALL your learning.

. . . until His teaching becomes the only teaching you have interest in and choose to follow—choose to be consistently attentive to. Obviously, one who changes teachers frequently and changes from one teacher to another teacher, who is not consistent—teachers who are not consistent with each other—that one is not going to find the miracle occurring. That one is not going to find Awakening occurring. That one is not going to find his heart's desire, which is to know who he Is and to be what he truly Is uninhibitedly. That will not happen. He will not find that.

God's Teacher cannot be satisfied with His teaching until it constitutes all your learning.

If your Teacher will not be satisfied until what He's teaching constitutes all you are learning, then obviously you are not going to find yourself satisfied until His teaching becomes all your learning. And although it's purely logical, the reason is, that this Teacher is nothing but your right Mind revealing your Self to you as you truly Are.

That's why satisfaction is the subject here.

He . . .

. . . God's Teacher, . . .

. . . has not fulfilled His teaching function until you have become such a consistent learner that you learn ONLY of Him.

You could call that devotion to truth. You could call it devotion to God. But at the bottom line, it's a devotion to your sanity—a devotion that needs to become total. Because until your devotion to your sanity is total, you will continue to dally with the ego and you will not be able to experience your right Mind as your right Mind and you will not Wake up.

When this has happened, when you . . .

. . . have become such a consistent learner that you learn ONLY of Him. [When this has happened,] you will no longer need a teacher or time in which to learn.

Now you won't need a Teacher, because that which you need to learn of, which is your right Mind that you're not fully connected with, will be your right Mind with you fully connected with It. No more teaching will be needed because you will have returned to your sanity.

Now the question is, "How are you going to return to your sanity?" You've got to remember what the means is. The means is the right use of time. The means is to avail yourself of the purpose of time.

Again, and you must remember this, because very often you get too serious—too serious in your dedication to your Waking up—so that you become quite intense and quite severe on yourself and there's no peace. But listen:

Can you imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time? Yet that is what time is FOR; to learn just that and nothing more.

To learn just that and nothing more means to arrive at a point where you've abandoned your own personal goals—where they're not more important to you than being sane.

Now you're going to find times when it's hard to practice the holy instant. You're going to find that somebody has ticked you off or a circumstance has arisen that is impacting you adversely, and you will feel the injustice of it, you will feel the fact that it's not appropriate for you to be suffering from it, and you will, out of habit, forget to do the appropriate thing which is choose for your peace and not aggravate the symptoms by indulging in anger and frustration and self-righteousness and on and on.

You are going to have to be diligent. And when you are upset you're going to have to consciously decline to participate in the upsetness. And you're going to have to do that when you don't feel like doing that. You're going to have to dredge up from within you a remembrance of what we've been talking about, which won't be on the surface when you're in the midst of your reaction. And you're going to have to be willing to remember what your function is.

Your function is to want to see God. Your function is to glorify God by recognizing God in each and every thing. Your function is to take any instant, no matter what is going on, and recognize that its potential is a holy instant. And then decide to take advantage of it as a holy instant. And you might have to stand there or sit there and in your mind, say: "I refuse to accept this invitation to be angry—to lose my balance, my emotional cool. I refuse to accept this invitation because my function is holier than that.” But mind you, when you dredge that up and bring it into the foreground, there’s not going to be much conviction behind it because at that moment you still will feel justified in your upsetness. And so, the words will ring hollow even though last Sunday or tonight they rang true and meaningful.

It’s at times like that, that you need to go back to this paragraph:

Can you imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time?

I’ll be honest with you, when you’re in the middle of turmoil, you probably won’t want to imagine what it means to have no cares because you will be so upset at having them. But it’s right in those circumstances that you have to be willing to bring to the foreground the truth that you know, the truth that you have learned, the revelations that have filled you, and you’re going to have to choose to stop doing what will inhibit you from your peace and exclude you from the holy instant that you’re in, period.

THE HOLY INSTANT AND THE LAWS OF GOD²

We’ve been reading about the holy instant in this, and the holy instant in that, and the holy instant in the other thing. Now we’re reading about The Holy Instant and the Laws of God. Why? Because interestingly enough, when you move into the holy instant, new rules come into play. You might say that God’s Values come into play. The way God “Be’s” and Knows things is different. And you will find that what you had valued before won’t have value for you, and in some instances, initially, that will be experienced as a loss by you.

But you must understand—you must be willing to understand—that as you let this shift occur that occurs in the holy instant, you do come under a new, an apparently new regime in which God’s laws govern, in which God’s laws govern you absolutely . . . govern you in perfect peace . . . govern you in perfect health . . . govern you in perfect joy . . . govern you in perfect freedom.

All separation vanishes as holiness is shared.

You are the holy Son of God. You are the holy Daughter of God. You are the holy Offspring of God. This is part of the new state of affairs. This is part of the new setup. It’s always been true but you’re at a point now of needing to embrace it and embody it—to own it. And to behave as though it’s true and to behave toward your brother as though what’s true of you is true of him. He or she is the holy Son or Daughter of God.

All separation vanishes as holiness is shared.

[slight chuckle] All separation increases as unholiness is shared. When you're insistent upon sharing your incompleteness and the great need you have to compensate for your incompleteness at the expense of your brother, separation increases. But . . .

All separation vanishes as holiness is shared.

So this is part of your new function—to share your holiness. But I will tell you that there are going to be times, initially, where the idea of sharing your holiness is going to cause you to feel extremely vulnerable, as though doing that is extremely dangerous because there's a defenselessness to it—there's an intimacy to it that means you are being undefended as you are sharing your holiness.

All separation vanishes as holiness is shared. For holiness is power, and by sharing it, it GAINS in strength. If you seek for satisfaction in gratifying your needs as YOU perceive them, you must believe that strength comes from another, and what YOU gain HE LOSES. Someone must ALWAYS lose, if you perceive yourself as weak.

Or we could say, someone must always lose if you perceive yourself as unholy—as not the Son or Daughter of God, as an orphan.

Yet there is another interpretation of relationships which transcends the concept of loss of power completely.

It also transcends the concept of gaining power because the relationship embodies something else.

Now . . .

You do not find it difficult to believe that, when another calls on God for love, YOUR call remains as strong.

In other words, your call on God for love is not diminished when another calls on God for love.

Nor do you think that, by God's answer to him, YOUR hope of answer is diminished. On the contrary, you are far more inclined to regard his success as witness to the possibility of YOURS.

Another receiving healing, another having his life transformed as he turned his attention and willingness over to the Father, easily inspires you to believe that if you do the same thing, the same thing will happen to you. You do not think that God's favors have been used and there are therefore, fewer favors available for you.

That is because you recognize, however dimly, that God is an IDEA, and so your faith in Him is STRENGTHENED by sharing.

Now God is an Idea. But God is also Mind—the environment in which ideas take form. God is an Idea and God is also the Formulator—the Creator of Ideas.

Again . . .

. . . you are far more inclined to regard [his] . . .

. . . your brother's . . .

. . . success as witness to the possibility of YOURS. That is because you recognize, however dimly, that God is an IDEA, and so your faith in Him is STRENGTHENED by sharing.

See, this is the different makeup, constitution of relationships that transcends the concept of loss of power, or the gaining of power completely.

What you find difficult to accept is the fact that, like your Father, YOU are an idea. And like Him, you can give yourself completely, WHOLLY without loss and ONLY with gain.

You see, these are the new rules—these are the new dynamics of the holy instant. And you've got to grasp the way it works so that you might have the courage to give yourself completely. Because in giving an idea completely through sharing, it is magnified, it is strengthened, it is substantiated. We could say, it is immortalized, it is infinitized.

But this doesn't come naturally and spontaneously as you're moving out of self-protection and orphanhood and all of the benefits that you thought you had brought together for yourself by being a successful orphan.

Being persistent about this may unsettle you. And you may have to go back to the first paragraph of Chapter Fifteen as you practice this part of Chapter Fifteen so as to give yourself courage to persist.

This is important:

What you find difficult to accept is the fact that, like your Father, YOU are an idea.

You could say, you are an Idea of God: "I am an Idea of God, held eternal in His Mind, forever renewed and freshly expressed by Him in His ever-present expressing of Himself right where I am."

So you're an idea. So it doesn't look like it . . . it looks like you're a thing. It looks like you're a body. Your body is an idea. And ideas are perfectly tangible and experienceable to the mind that formed it. And the fact that it's tangible and experienceable hasn't caused it to become a thing, hasn't caused it to be less an idea and more a manifestation of an idea. An idea is itself the manifestation of the Mind that formed it. The idea is the evidence of the existence of God. It's that simple.

So, Waking up isn't an experience of translating things into thoughts or ideas of experiencing them more truly and by virtue of experiencing them more truly, releasing them from the limits that were imposed upon them by a false interpretation of them as things—"material objects."

What you find difficult to accept is the fact that, like your Father, YOU are an idea. And like Him, you can give yourself completely, WHOLLY without loss and ONLY with gain.

But you will not find out that it will be only with gain until you do it. And let me just say this: If suffering is going on, then you haven't done it yet, and what you are doing isn't the answer to the release from pain.

Herein lies peace, for here there IS no conflict. In the world of scarcity love has no meaning, and peace is impossible. For gain and loss are BOTH accepted, and so no-one is aware that perfect love is in him. In the holy instant, you recognize . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . the IDEA of love in you, and unite this idea with the Mind . . .

. . . the capital "M" Mind . . .

. . . that thought It, . . .

. . . meaning God . . .

. . . and could not RELINQUISH it. By holding it within Itself, there WAS no loss. The holy instant thus becomes a lesson in how to hold all of your brothers in your mind, experiencing not loss, but COMPLETION.

If you're willing to hold all of your brothers in your mind . . . to hold them . . . to embrace them, . . . it means you're willing to share yourself with them—you're not holding them outside your mind, separate from you, protected from them. It's the demonstration of sharing. It's the other interpretation of relationships, which transcends the concept of loss of power completely.

Now, you're going to have to pay attention here, because you're going to have to sort out what's Real and what isn't real . . . what is of value and what isn't of value. And then stop doing what isn't of value. You're going to have to do it by paying conscious attention. It might seem to you like work, but, shall I say, it's an adult thing, a mature thing to do—to be willing to look at what the answer is, even if it doesn't fit your concepts of what right ought to be—and then choose for it, even though it means having to change your mind and do things in a new way for new reasons.

You have encouragement for it. You have encouragement in the book. You have encouragement from the Holy Spirit. You have encouragement from me. You have encouragement from the Father. You have encouragement from each of your Guides. You are companioned by many who have one intent, and that is, to help you make this shift with your fear reduced enough so that there is willingness to do it.

But you're going to have to persist in remembering the first sentence of Chapter Fifteen . . .

Can you imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time?

So much of the time you have other more important things to do. You insist on the context of your life being something else and you attend to the needs of your daily affairs from a different place, not from a place of no cares and no worries and no anxieties, not a place where there is perfect calm and quiet all the time. But you don't have to do it from there. You can choose to do it from the place that significantly ushers you into a new awareness of being, which is your original state of Being and is you coming back into your Sanity.

The holy instant thus becomes a lesson in how to hold all of your brothers in your mind, experiencing not loss, but COMPLETION.

Wholly, whole . . . COMPLETION . . . to be complete is to be at rest. To be complete and to be at rest is to be the presence of Life, enjoying living.

From this, it follows you can ONLY give. And this IS love, for this alone is natural, under the laws of God.

In the holy instant the laws of God prevail, . .

. . . that's a mighty statement.

In the holy instant the laws of God prevail, and only they have meaning.

This is where the confusing part comes in . . .

The laws of this world cease to hold any meaning at all.

But the fact is that the laws of this world are pretty much the laws each of you has made up for yourselves, aside from the ones you mutually agree upon so as to have a certain amount of harmony. But the fact is that at the bottom line, all of the laws that you have made up have been self-seeking and they function at the disadvantage of others. It's that simple.

The laws of this world . . .

. . . meaning the laws you made up . . .

. . . cease to hold any meaning at all.

And you experience that as a loss . . . a loss of identity, a loss of meaning, a loss of leverage, a loss of ability to cope . . . as though there were such disorder that it was essential for you to cope, instead of there being such infinite harmony that there's nothing to cope with and only everything to experience with embrace and willingness to share.

When the Son of God accepts the laws of God as what he gladly wills, it is impossible that he be bound, or limited in any way.

Now that's not just a truth for a future time, it's a fact for you to be actively engaged in taking hold of, by choosing for the holy instant persistently, as though there were really no other way to be in any moment of your day than to be seeking to experience the holy instant.

Somewhere along the line, you're going to have to mean the idea that you want to Wake up. And you need to understand that, so that you don't think that you'll sort of somehow slip into the Kingdom of Heaven inadvertently [chuckling]. You'll do it consciously. You'll do it by choice. And when you do it by choice, you own it, you set it deeply or allow it to be set deeply in you—where it actually already is—deeply enough that you no longer choose to try to see or do things differently or at odds with it.

When the Son of God accepts the laws of God as what he gladly wills, it is impossible that he be bound, or limited in any way. In this instant, he is as free as God would have him be.

How free would that be? Totally . . . completely?

For the instant he REFUSES to be bound, he is NOT bound.

The moment you refuse to be bound, you will not be bound. Refusing to be bound is a pro-active choice, nothing slipshod or lazy about that. Don't be afraid to be pro-actively decisive.

Now what happens if you become pro-actively decisive and you succeed in actively paying attention to every moment with a desire to experience the holy instant, to experience God's Perspective, to experience the truth of what things are that are in the instant you're in, and there's no transformation and you're called upon to be persistent with patience, apparently without results? It's simple. What will happen is sometimes you will get upset and you'll say, "It's not worth it," or, "All of this must be a lie," or some other excuse. And you might even claim that it's unfair for anybody to expect you to have to go to these lengths.

Well, it's just the way it is! Those are the lengths you have to go to. You have to go to the lengths wherein you have become consistent and not slipshod. You have to go to the lengths it takes not to switch teachers back and forth and confuse the issue. You've got to arrive at the point where you, like any good student, truly want to learn and pay dutiful and grateful attention to that one who can teach you what you need to know, without getting arrogant and self-righteous—deciding for yourself that you shouldn't need to know that much in order to have that benefit, as though you know better than your teacher. And the fact is, that when you slip into that, you've switched teachers, and you're listening to the teacher that is the voice for fear, the voice for the ongoing "human condition" that's uncorrectable.

How much effort does it take? It takes however much effort it takes to arrive at a point where you're not sabotaging yourself by valuing more than one teacher, teaching two different curriculums.

In the holy instant, nothing happens that has not always been.

What has always been, ultimately, infinitely, truthfully? God, being the Movement of Creation, that is what has always been and that is what will always be, except now It will register with you as what it Is.

In the holy instant, nothing happens that has not always been.
Only the veil that has been drawn ACROSS reality is lifted.

The distorting, graying affect that allows things not to be seen distinctly, and therefore, easily misinterpreted or misunderstood.

Nothing has changed. Yet the AWARENESS of changelessness comes swiftly as the veil of time is pushed aside.

How is the veil of time pushed aside? By using time for its only purpose.

Can you imagine what it means to have no cares, no worries, no anxieties, but merely to be perfectly calm and quiet all the time? Yet that is what time is FOR; to learn just that and nothing more.

You know what? You all are already full of learning much more than that. And now you're having to escape from your imaginations and your misinterpretations, and your interpretations that were made for selfish or unloving reasons that have tripped you up and bound you to an ongoing ignorance of the truth about you.

No-one who has not yet experienced the lifting of the veil, and felt himself drawn irresistibly into the light behind it, can have faith in love WITHOUT fear.

So accept that. And accept the fact that as you allow for the holy instant, as you invite it, as you provide the environment in which it can occur, fear is likely to accompany you. Just realize it. It will accompany you until you've moved far enough over the threshold . . . and then it will vanish. But you will have to persist.

Yet the Holy Spirit GIVES you this faith, because He offered it to me and I ACCEPTED it.

And I will add, that in my accepting it, I accepted it for you. And so you're not doing the work from scratch, and you're not having to overcome all of what the first one had to overcome.

Fear not the holy instant will be denied you, for I denied it not. And through me the Holy Spirit gave it unto you, as YOU will give it.

See, sharing . . . sharing . . . was shared with me, I share it with you, you will share it with others, because that's the new paradigm of relationships. It's not one of loss and gain. It's one of having . . . it's just one of having . . . it's just one of having . . . having infinitely.

Let no need that you perceive . . .

. . . like the need to get upset, and the need to be angry and the need to object.

Let no need that you perceive obscure your need of this. For in the holy instant, you will recognize the only need the aspects of the Son of God share equally, . .

What are the aspects of the Son of God? All of the Sons and Daughters of God are the aspects of the Son of God.

For in the holy instant, you will recognize the only need the aspects of the Son of God share equally, and by this recognition you will join with me in OFFERING what is needed.

Now that's quite a new paradigm isn't it? That's very different from loss and gain. That's very different from "getting" what you need because you don't have it and costing another in the process of your getting it, or vice versa, someone else in the process of getting what he needs causing you to experience loss.

Pay attention to this. And pretend if you must, that you are a graduate student and that your getting your degree is important. In other words, your learning what your studying is important. And be a diligent student by paying attention.

Remember not to switch teachers. Remain true to one. And then remember that all of this is to be done in the context of fulfilling the purpose of time, which is to be in your peace, to be in harmony, to be not anxious, and ultimately to be free to have Reality revealed to you so that you might enjoy it in your wholeness, which embraces and includes everything and with whom you share yourself without reservation.

Do the work this week. That is my wise counsel, because that is what will cause learning, and that is the point.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 20th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Before we begin, I would like to thank everyone who is here in the room for the quiet—for the quietness before we began. It's a shift from the style of gathering that we've had in the past, which was more social and jovial, but there was a need for it and there will continue to be a need for it.

Let me put it this way: We're talking about the holy instant. We're talking about how essential it is to Awakening. We've been talking about how does one nurture the holy instant. How does one provide the environment in which one can have the full experience of what the holy instant is.

Now before every meeting, Paul engages in what, for lack of better words, is the nurturing of the holy instant. He didn't think of it in those terms, although in the recent past it's become clear to him that what we've referred to as the "two-step" is what he engages in.

Before every gathering, whether it's the study group or whether it's a larger gathering, he always, during the quiet time, says to himself and to God:

"I allow only for that which expresses the Christ consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of Being—the Father's Will. In other words . . ." and this is what he is saying to himself: "In other words, Thy Will, not mine be done. Let the reign of divine truth, life and love be established in me and rule out of me all self-will. And may Thy Word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them."

He has invited the Father—the Christ—to enrich his affections by abandoning the business of his own mind and his own reasoning and his own thinking, all of which fall under the category of self-will. It's the opposite of attentiveness. It's the opposite of listening. It's the opposite of wanting to know the truth so that when it becomes known, it can be shared. So that the truth is what finds expression rather than the misperceptions and the delusions that arise out of independent logical thinking processes that we've identified as the "orphan mindset."

Now the holy instant, as you can see, since we've been reading about it for quite awhile, is very important. It's essential to Awakening. And I am asking that from now on at these meetings, that as everyone comes, they begin—while they're on the way, even—to give their attention to God, to provide the environment in their own mind for a holy instant to be experienced by them . . . by you.

I encourage you to join Paul in the act of shifting your attention away from all that busies and occupies your mind during the week so that it can become attentive to the influx of wisdom and truth that spontaneously comes when silence is present and there is an inquisitive mind. I'm asking everyone to join Paul in this—and those of you at home can even do this as well. After all, you haven't tuned in for a TV show, you've tuned in because there is a desire to know the truth and you think there's a fair chance that truth will be revealed here.

But let's bring your mind even further into play so that you provide the presence of mind (everyone who's watching) . . . so that you provide the presence of mind that invites Revelation, that invites insight, that invites the influx of truth or for lack of better words, that invites a miracle—a sudden shift of perception. I invite you to participate rather than just observing Paul doing it.

We're talking about a holy instant. What you're interested in experiencing is a holy instant. So let's use the instant we're in as though there is something holy about it. And approach it, I don't want to say with reverence, but let's say, approach it soberly . . . not seriously, but in a grounded, sober, fully open manner.

We really need to bring what the holy instant is, home. We need for it to become, not something talked about, but something experienced.

And so again, I thank everyone who's here, for the quiet before the meeting. It did prepare the way. And the environment in which insight and revelation and sudden shifts of perception can occur, is present now.

And so, before we go into the book, I want to ask something else: If everyone—even those tuning in—if everyone is abandoning self-will, if everyone is in effect saying, “Father, Thy Will not mine be done,” then you’re obviously going to be abandoning expectations, concepts of how things ought to be.

I want you to be aware that because you and many others are all tuned in to Paul, the attention is felt. Paul feels the attention. Some of the attention, if it involves expectations, is attention that has tension in it, “Oh, if Paul would just start earlier . . . Oh-h, if Paul would just be punctual and follow the social etiquette rules, everything would be better . . . Oh-h, if Susan wouldn’t prepare food, there wouldn’t be unnecessary dynamics” . . . and so on and so on.

Now the simple fact is, that Paul and Susan and Chris and Judy are all making a gift . . . they’re all making a gift. And they are making the gift to the best of their ability from a place of wisdom—a place of inner attentiveness and as little willfulness as possible. It is important for this gift to be left as pure as possible so that expectations, whether self-righteous or not, do not provide an undercurrent that requires Paul, especially, to be even more centered.

One could say, it is a gift to him to have the demand to let himself more fully into the holy instant than others might have to. But it doesn’t have to be that way. One cannot pluck a gift away from the giver, else it becomes a stolen article and not a gift.

I’m encouraging everyone to stay in the nature of Gift. And indeed, might that not be a more expansive way of speaking about the holy instant? Because after all, the holy instant is an event in which a desire to make a gift is expressed, a willingness to receive is brought into play, and when the receipt occurs, it is given. And you know what? The Gift comes from the Voice for truth. It doesn’t come from the only other voice there is—the voice for fear.

It’s important for the Gift of the Voice for truth to be made. It’s important because the world is in need of it. But it’s more important because it is its practice that brings you back into your right Mind—brings you back into your sanity, brings you back into your wholeness, causes you to Wake up, causes you to discover who you Are so that you’re no longer inclined or tempted to pretend that you are an orphan attempting to become a real boy or a real girl.

Now, we’re currently reading from a section called, The Holy Instant and the Laws of God. Interesting . . . The Holy Instant and the Laws of God . . . there’s a key sentence that we read last week, one that you cannot afford to let pass your attention. It says:

In the holy instant the laws of God prevail, and only they have meaning.¹

In the holy instant you're in a different domain from your normal frame of mind. Your normal frame of mind is the orphan mindset. In the orphan mindset, the Kingdom of Heaven is called the "world" and "universe," a physical entity of humungous proportions, probably not infinite, that came from a "big bang" and is nothing more than a conglomeration of physical laws operating.

But what is it saying? It's saying that the Kingdom of Heaven, which all of this really is, is nothing more than "matter," nothing more than a physical universe—something that has absolutely nothing to do with an Entity called, "God." Wow!

In this frame of mind, the laws of physics govern. And the laws of physics govern absolutely. The laws of physics are not the laws of God. And when you choose to see yourself as an orphan—as an independent thinker and one who's proud to be one—you are bound by the laws of physics. But that's not your Birthright.

The holy instant is the threshold of escape from the "physical universe,"—the binding misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven in which you move into a different arena, it would seem—in which God's laws prevail and in which God's laws prevail absolutely.

This is very important to understand.

It isn't just the holy instant and the laws of God, you know . . . "Let's go to the law book . . . we'll read down . . . God's laws says this . . . and God's laws says that . . . okay, we'd better do that then, and . . ." No.

We're talking about Love. We're talking about Truth. We're talking about Life. We're talking about Principle—absolute Love, Truth, Life, Principle, Soul, Spirit, Mind. We're talking about unchangeable Life, Truth, Love, etc. We're talking about the Movement of that which is perfect, which brings forth the manifestation of perfection. In other words, it brings forth the visibility and tangibility of that Movement. It's not something else that gets created, it is the Movement of God Itself that's visible and tangible and it has to be perfect.

And these are the laws that are governing absolutely every one of you and absolutely everything that exists. But these laws won't seem to apply to you until you invite in the holy instant and move into the, for lack of better words, arena in which they are the truth, in which they are the facts and there's nothing present to obscure them from you.

In the holy instant the laws of God prevail, and only they have meaning. The laws of this world, . . .

. . . meaning, the laws of physics—the laws that you have all made up based upon your tiny separated orphan-minded mentality . . .

. . . they cease to hold any meaning at all.

In other words, they no longer govern you. Now mind you, the orphan mentality—the independent, self-centered mentality—takes Spirit, the substance of all that God makes . . . it takes it and calls it, "matter." The laws of physics refer to the way matter works.

The holy instant brings you into a mental frame of mind, a sane frame of mind in which Spirit looks like Spirit once again and in which Spirit behaves like Spirit once again, and doesn't report back to you decay or disease or death or sickness or distortion or unnaturalness.

Now, I'm bringing this out because all of you need to arrive at a point where you're using, I'm going to say . . . using your mind with greater clarity so that you do not allow it to function in a way that continues to cause you to see Spirit as matter—that which is eternal Life seen as that which is failing life.

You are simply not definite enough in your use of your mind or your expectation of the experience of your good. And so you allow your mind to function in slipshod ways.

Now the simple fact is, that your body, your world, your universe is all constituted of the substance which is Spirit—God-stuff . . . God Himself-stuff. It therefore, has no capacity to embody or reflect or manifest anything different from its Source. If it is, it means that you have decided to believe something else. You have decided to adopt the idea that it is a physical universe governed by laws of physics, and that's it!

And you allow suffering to occur, or at least you allow a minimal amount of suffering to occur—the least amount possible without your actually having to have a total healing. Because of course, a total healing isn't embraced in the laws of physics even though it is embraced in the laws of God—which are available to you in the holy instant.

And again, what is the holy instant? It's you not being an orphan mentality. It's you not using your mind in unconstructive ways. It's you abandoning the use of your mind that blocks you from experiencing Reality.

The holy instant is when you say, "I allow only for that which is in harmony which the Christ consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of Being—the Father's Will." You see. It's when you say, "To hell with all of my fancy thoughts . . . to heck with all of my beliefs . . . to heck with whatever I thought was right. I want to cast my anchor into the divine. I want to cast my anchor that drags me with it into the depths of God. I want to expose myself to the infiniteness of my right Mind, which is the Mind of God."

And then you are very strict about not indulging in negativity. "Oh-h . . . it won't work out . . ." or "Oh-h, I'm too old, it's too much to expect this kind of regeneration and this kind of correction, . . ." and blah, blah, blah . . . or, "I'm too young and I can't expect to go through my teen years without acne and without pimples and without all of the awkwardness . . ." you know.

It's not true. But these are the beliefs that you serve—that you honor. And they are the way you avoid the holy instant. You avoid the holy instant by making noise—mental noise . . . thinking, thinking, thinking . . . worrying, worrying, worrying . . . doubting, doubting, doubting. Denying that you have.

"Not having, not having, not having . . . lack, lack, lack . . . suffer, suffer, suffer from lack, lack, lack . . . suffer, suffer, suffer from lack, lack, lack, that I have no way to get out of . . . have no way to get out of . . . have no way to get out of . . ."

You see, this kind of business goes on and it seems justified when it's happening. But does it allow for the holy instant? Is there room for anything else beside your determined perceptions . . . or, shall I say, "Do you have time for anything other than what's being expressed by the voice for fear?"

No you don't . . . unless you make time. Unless you say, "This is useless! This, I can see clearly, does not allow for the environment in which a holy instant can happen in which the laws of God prevail—and only they have meaning.

"Well, I'm not going to continue this. It's absolutely stupid! Why would I be active in an arena where God's laws don't prevail or where His prevailing laws don't register with me because I'm so conscientiously ignoring them?" You see?

Every day should be a day in which the expectation of instantaneous healing of this, that or the other thing is not foreign to you, is not absent from your awareness. And then knowing what it takes, you should get down to the business of what it takes which is choosing for your peace. It means monitoring the idiotic stream of thoughts that keep you bound, so that you can say, [snaps fingers] “No! . . . No! . . . No! I’m not going to accept the invitation to go there. No, I’m not going to accept the invitation to go there! I’m going to take a deep breath, because I don’t have to be disturbed and I don’t have to put on the behavior of disturbance. And I am going to insist upon putting on the behavior that provides the environment in which the holy instant can occur, where the laws of God prevail.”

There’s much to be enthusiastic about. Not anything that you have power to do all by yourself, but experiences that will be available to you when you abandon trying to do anything all by yourself. And you say, “Father, what is the truth here?” Or you say, “Holy Spirit”—knowing that you’re addressing that which is nothing more than your right Mind—“What is the truth here? Holy Spirit, how do I see things with You? Show me the way.”

When the Son of God accepts the laws of God as what he gladly wills, it is impossible that he be bound, or limited in any way.

That means that the sore disappears. The cracked elbow is un-cracked. The limp is nowhere to be found. The cancer is gone. The sore throat is replaced with pure comfort.

If the holy instant doesn’t mean something worthwhile, then abandon it. But if it means something worthwhile—which it does—take hold of it and monitor your thoughts so that you can catch yourself when you are repeating the voice for fear. How will you know when you’re hearing the voice for fear? You’ll feel lousy. You’ll feel depressed. You’ll feel hopeless. Why? Not because things are hopeless, but because a voice in your mind is repeating hopeless words, rehearsing hopeless words, practicing depressing attitudes, unrestrained, because no one’s in the drivers seat so-to-speak.

No one’s saying “yay or nay.” No one is saying, “I allow only, . . .” do you see? “Only . . . I allow only for that which expresses the Christ consciousness. And I allow only, . . .” it’s a very exclusive, very black and white expression . . . “And I allow only for that which is in harmony with the purpose of Being—the Father’s will.” That doesn’t leave any room for any amusing or very creative thoughts you might come up with, or even some thoughts that might help God out a little bit.

What happens when you—who is estranged from your right Mind, which while you’re estranged from it is called the Holy Spirit—what if you say, “I allow only for that which expresses the Holy Spirit . . . only that which expresses the Holy Spirit?” You can see the logic of that picture. Because the moment you are completely committed to that, your mind becomes One. The insanity is gone. The split is gone.

But you know, as long as your right Mind is something that you're estranged from, the idea that you're going to have to make commitment to it totally, means to you giving your power away, which your orphan mentality says is absolute foolishness. "Don't do it!"

But the fact is, that if you, as you're presently perceiving yourself, do make one hundred percent commitment to your right Mind—meaning that you've completely abandoned any right you think you have to think for yourself—what happens? Whatever boundaries seemed to be between you and your right Mind, dissolve and unity replaces it. That's the whole point. And that's why it's so important to let yourself be a puppet and stop trying to be something without strings. Because when you allow yourself to be the one hundred percent puppet of your right Mind, you will be sane.

I'm expressing it this way, or these ways, so that you might find it reasonable when your doubting this, or your depressed about that, . . . to challenge it, to not just let it steamroller you. And the only thing that makes it seem to steamroller you, is that you acquiesce so completely to it, because you're not saying, "No." You're not saying, "I allow only!" . . . and that's all you have to do. You have to start saying, "I allow only." As long as what you're only allowing is for that which you haven't figured out, that which you haven't thought up, that which you have not brought into existence through any independent act whatsoever, letting in that which you aren't responsible for, as long as that's the only thing you're allowing. If God is the only thing you're allowing, if your right Mind is the only thing you're allowing, you will Wake up, you will become Unified again, you will become sane again. That's what it's all about.

Let's see how it worked. I'm putting it in the past, because it's already happened.

In the holy instant, . . .

. . . and I'm continuing with what we read last week.

In the holy instant, nothing happens that has not always been. Only the veil that has been drawn ACROSS reality is lifted. Nothing has changed. Yet the AWARENESS of changelessness comes swiftly as the veil of time is pushed aside.

First you see the mountain . . . then you don't . . . then you see the mountain and nothing has changed. First you see the mountain through the lens of your misperceptions, your orphanhood . . . then you don't see the mountain. And then you see the mountain as it truly is, through your right Mind, and nothing has changed. The mountain is still the mountain, and yet everything has changed.

Nothing has changed. Yet the AWARENESS of changelessness comes swiftly as the veil of time is pushed aside. No-one who has not yet experienced the lifting of the veil, and felt himself drawn irresistibly into the light behind it, can have faith in love WITHOUT fear.

It's just not possible. It will be accompanying you, because as the orphan, what are the two things that immediately came into play when you got your divorce from your Father? Fear and guilt.

So, . . .

No-one who has not yet experienced the lifting of the veil, and felt himself drawn irresistibly into the light behind it, can have faith in love WITHOUT fear. Yet the Holy Spirit GIVES you this faith, because He offered it to me and I ACCEPTED it.

Sounds sort of strange, doesn't it?

. . . the Holy Spirit GIVES you this faith, because He offered it to me and I ACCEPTED it.

The moment one has done what's Real, it has been done for everyone. I've said it before: The ice has been broken. The overcoming of the impossible has already occurred. The trail has been blazed. No one else has to break through again. Everyone else can follow right along, without impediment.

Fear not the holy instant will be denied you, for I denied it not. And through me the Holy Spirit gave it unto you, as YOU will give it.

See, it's already been done.

Let no need that you perceive . . .

. . . you know, like I said last week: Like the need to be able to get angry, the need to be peeved, the need to be jealous, the need to be depressed, you know.

Let no need that you perceive obscure your need of this. For in the holy instant, you will recognize the only need the aspects of the Son of God share equally, and by this recognition you will join with me in OFFERING what is needed.

Now, we're going into new territory in the book.

It is through US that peace will come.

It's through the joining. It's through the sharing. I've said before, that when you ask for the Holy Spirit you get me, and when you ask for me you get the Holy Spirit. We have the same function. We have the same purpose. You might understand then, the meaning of this a little more clearly when you think of the Holy Spirit instead of me, Jesus.

It is through US . . .

. . . you and the Holy Spirit, you and that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

It is through US that peace will come.

I'm going to say, it is through us-ness. It is through unity. It is through no longer having this artificial sense of separation that peace will come. It's that simple.

Join me in the IDEA of peace, for in ideas minds CAN communicate. If you would give YOURSELF as your Father gives His Self, you will learn to understand Selfhood.

The only way that you're going to be able to give YOURSELF is when you let your Self come into focus—gel, congeal, become single, not fragmented. And that's going to be the result of the holy instant, invited, allowed and experienced, because that's when you will experience your Self without misperceptions, distortions. When that happens, everything you Be will be an expression of your Self, the Real one that you Are.

If you would give YOURSELF as your Father gives His Self, you will learn to understand Selfhood.

You all have the experience.

And therein is love's meaning understood. But remember that understanding is of the MIND, and ONLY of the mind. Knowledge is therefore of the mind, and its conditions are in the mind with it.

Now again, we must come back to this: Your body is an idea. Your eyeball is an idea. Your retina is an idea. Your finger nail is an idea. Your toe nail is an idea. Your kidney is an idea. These ideas are held in the Mind of God and are as eternal as the Mind of God, therefore, they function according to the laws of Mind, I'm going to say. And the laws of Mind are not made up, they're not fabricated through the use of imagination.

So, all ideas are constituted of the substance of Spirit. Love is the nature of the substance of Spirit. And so, every bit of substance that you have any experience of is an experience of an idea. And this is very important. Because until you begin to embrace this as a possibility, you will continue to look at things that are actually ideas as though they are objects—that they are objects built out of atomic building blocks which are matter, which operate according to laws of physics. And that they are subject to decay, and their arrangements are subject to disintegration, which you call death or disease and so on.

So, everything here is being translated back into Mind. It becomes much easier when you see things as ideas, to grasp that as ideas and not hunks of matter, they can have, for lack of better words, the flexibility to order themselves according to the laws of God, and thereby, you experience instantaneous healing—[snaps fingers] instantaneous healing, not subject to time or laws of physics.

Now the interesting thing is, that the moment you start having instantaneous healings, the physicists are going to learn how to track it and find out how it is that matter is not behaving like matter. But right now they're not looking there and they're not interested in it because they want the dependability of matter, because it provides them with guarantees—guarantees at control, guarantees to keep everything safe.

. . . remember that understanding is of the MIND, and ONLY of the mind.

Well, there's that word ONLY again . . . nothing else. "I allow only."

. . . understanding is of the MIND, and ONLY of the mind.

Very black and white, isn't it?

Knowledge is therefore of the mind, and its conditions are in the mind with it.

So your eyeballs and your toe nails and your knee sockets . . . they're all ideas subject to the way the Mind works that brought forth the idea—perfectly, in other words.

Knowledge is therefore of the mind, and its conditions are in the mind with it.

Hip sockets are therefore, of the Mind and their conditions are in the Mind with it, you see.

If you were not only an idea, and NOTHING ELSE, you could not be in full communication with all that ever was.

Difficult sentence to understand.

If you were not only an idea, and NOTHING ELSE, you could not be in full communication with all that ever was.

I'm going to read it a different way.

Because you are . . .

. . . only an idea, and NOTHING ELSE, you . . .

. . . can

. . . be in full communication with all that ever was.

You see? Incredible. When you step across the threshold of the holy instant where the laws of God prevail, this is the kind of thing you're faced with.

Because you are . . .

. . . only an idea, and NOTHING ELSE, you . . .

. . . can be and will . . .

. . . be in full communication with all that ever was. Yet as long as you PREFER to be something else, . .

. . . like a cute little orphan . . .

. . . or would attempt to be nothing else and something else . . .

. . . what on earth could that mean? . .

. . . to be nothing else and something else . . .

. . . that would be where you are trying to be the holy Son of God and an orphan at the same time. Because maybe . . . maybe the holy Son of God gets to live in the penthouse of the orphanage, you know, so you're going to be a little bit of both.

Yet as long as you PREFER to be something else, or would attempt to be nothing else and something else TOGETHER, the language of communication, which you know perfectly, you will not remember.

The language of communication is the way you experience uninterrupted and indivisible conscious awareness of absolutely everything, of all Creation, and it knows you, so that there is this ceaseless, full, conscious awareness of everything by everything. This is part of what awaits you in the holy instant where the laws of God prevail.

Do you see now why this section is so important, The Holy Instant and . . . what? the Laws of God.

In the holy instant God is remembered, and the language of communication with all your brothers is remembered with Him. For communication is remembered TOGETHER as is truth.

Again, it's a shared thing. Your prized independence is costing you everything. It's costing you instantaneous healings. It's costing you the experience of invulnerability—meaning absolute fearlessness.

There is no exclusion in the holy instant because the past is gone, and with it goes the whole BASIS for exclusion.

Separation . . . privateness . . . independence, etc.

Without its source exclusion vanishes.

What is the source of it? Your right to have an independent thought. Your right to be private. Your right to make up the rules. Your right to determine that the Kingdom of Heaven is not the Kingdom of Heaven, and can be whatever you want. And that, Spirit is matter—as absurd as that is.

Without its source exclusion vanishes.

The thinker that think it up . . . when it gives up the ghost, everything associated with it vanishes.

And this permits YOUR [capital 'S'] Source, and that of all your brothers, to replace it in your awareness.

"Oh yeah, what's your Source? Father, what's the truth here? My right Mind, which is the truth of God held in trust. What's the truth about me? What's the truth about everything? I let You in. I want to share my space with You. I want You to fill my space up. And since all there is of You is what I truly Am,

I'm not going to reserve any supposed little private spot that I can call me different from You. I'm going to let it all go.

. . . this permits YOUR Source, and that of all your brothers, to replace it in your awareness. God and the power of God will take their rightful place in you, . .

. . . together with your right Mind, together with your sanity . . .

. . . and you will experience the full communication of ideas with ideas.

Now play with this, this coming week: That all things are ideas held in the Mind that formed them. And that Mind was God. And these ideas function according to the nature of the Mind that formed them. And the nature of that Mind is indivisible, which means there is no possibility of conflict or difference—difference in the sense of Real verses unreal. There's infinite variety of what's Real.

Through your ability to do this you will learn what you MUST be, for you will begin to understand what your Creator is, and what His creation is along with Him.

Togetherness still . . .

. . . along with Him.

Now, this might sound complicated, but it's not. And don't work it around in your mind to make it complicated.

Here's the simplicity of it: You Wake up through the proper use of time—using time for its purpose. And its purpose is for you to be experiencing peace—the absence of anxiety.

If you're not experiencing it, then you're engaged in something that is creating its opposite. And all you have to do is stop. You have to decide right then and there, that it's worth more to you to be sane. It's worth more to you to be able to move into the holy instant where the Laws of God prevail, because you'd much rather be happy and whole and healthy and comfortable than what you've got right now.

And then as much as your ego says it's totally crazy, choose for your peace, move into it, abandon what is not peaceful. And then in that sanctuary of quietness, invite God in. "Father, what is the truth here? Father, reveal to me an instantaneous healing. Father, show me what needs to be done." And then expect an answer. And persist until you have the answer—persist in listening until you have the answer, persist in not inserting yourself into the equation until you have the answer.

You all have available to you the potential to be experiencing greater cohesive wholeness a week from now than you're experiencing tonight—I will even say, a moment from now.

Stop letting the voice for fear as it comes through the media, teach you. Reject it as a teacher. And then do the absolutely crazy thing of leaning into the Holy Spirit in you, with an intent to rely upon it, because then you will be beginning to rely upon the integrity of your Being, which will strengthen it by bringing it forth.

I love all of you and I look forward to being with your next week. And I look forward to rejoicing with you all week long in every little “a-ha” of a holy instant that you might have, and every big one as well.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 11th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Okay. As it's said in the vernacular, tonight I'm just going to hang out with you. We're going to be together, so you can put away your books.

God is Love, you know. And when the going gets tough, sometimes pause is called for . . . where you can take a deep breath and feel the fact that God is Love and not be under the gun of learning-learning-learning. Make no mistake, though, I will take advantage of every opportunity in being with you tonight to cause learning to occur.

One could say, "So little to say and so much time to say it." And so you could say that I'm here to say over and over and over again the little that there is to say for as long as it takes. And I'm demonstrating God's Love by doing it. And you can all afford to express God's Love by doing it for yourselves and for each other.

The times seem to be rough and the roughness seems to be persistent.

The economy, globally, is in a rough situation and it seems to be going on and on and on. And the suffering, the tension, the on-going lack of resolve in so many people's lives becomes discouraging, or there are physical problems that seem to be delayed in responding to any healing effort that's being put forth and that is cause for discouragement.

It seems to put a demand on each of you in many different ways. And many times you might find yourself like a relatively new student of music, let's say, learning how to play the piano. And he's playing his piece that he's been learning and his teacher says, "Stop . . . no, here's the way to do it . . . listen."

And the teacher demonstrates. And the child hears and he becomes fretful. And he says to her, "What if I don't do it right?" The teacher says, "Well, it just won't sound so good."

"No!" he says, "What if I don't get it right?"

"Well," the teachers says, "It will just mean that you're not playing it the way the composer of the song envisioned it—meant for it to be played."

And the little boy (the student) says, "No! What will happen to me if I don't do it right?"

And the teacher is sort of amazed and looks at the child and says, "Well, nothing will happen to you. You'll just need to practice it. You'll just need to do it over and over until you get the idea—until you get the hang of it."

And the boy says, "Ah-h-h, thank God! I was really worried that if I didn't get it right, something would happen."

It's a concept that all of you labor under in one way or another and it's called, "truth or consequences." The phrase has been bandied about. There was a television program, "Truth or Consequences," as if there was such a thing. When the fact is, that there is truth or truth—there's no truth or something else.

"What if I don't get the truth right? I've got all these problems. I'm having trouble feeding my family. I'm not having the kind of healing that I want to be having or that I was told there would be. I need to do something! What if I don't do it right? Oh-h, maybe I already didn't do it right and maybe this is the consequence." You see.

And so what amounts to a simple opportunity for practice until you get it right, practicing to get it right becomes a potential for being made wrong and being made responsible for being wrong. And the attention is drawn away from something that the little boy (the piano student) realized: "Oh-h, oh-h, thank God! There is no consequence for me. Nothing will happen to me. All I need to do is to keep doing it until I get it . . . I see."

God wants you to stop turning your learning into cause for guilt and for self-recrimination, and for blame directed at yourself.

Now you will only ever run into this dynamic if you're trying to get your healing from the orphanage or if you're trying to move into an experience of your abundance as though you were a poor little orphan, you see, [chuckle] and here's the thing that can catch you up: You can't get to the experience of what is true about you from the orphanage or from the orphan mind-set. The only place you can access your wholeness, your healing, your transformation, is from the Kingdom of Heaven.

Well now, that's pretty darn near impossible, isn't it. Because you're obviously not in the Kingdom of Heaven—you're pretty damn sure you're an orphan. But you know, we've talked about something: We've talked about the fact that you're neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You're at that point and you must understand yourself therefrom.

Oh, wherefrom is that, "therefrom?"

That thar, "therefrom," is the Kingdom of Heaven. It's the point of perfection. It's the place or the frame of reference in which you can look at yourself and see what's true because you've chosen to neglect to exercise or practice doubt, fear, guilt, etc. You've chosen to become still. And in the stillness say, "Father, thy Will be done."

Now, we've also talked about letting radical idealism become practical realism.

Well, what the heck is radical idealism? [chuckles] At the bottom line, it's whatever the truth is that doesn't seem to be true for you. That makes it radically idealistic and impractical.

What's radical idealism? That God is Love.

What's radical idealism? That you are His Daughter or Son.

What is radical idealism? That you are very holy.

What is radical idealism? That the perfection of every act of God that is called Creation is utterly and unchangeably perfect.

And that means that everything about you is unchangeably perfect.

Now why is that radical idealism? Because it don't seem that way to you! And you're pretty darn sure that it can't actually be the truth about you because you have so much evidence to the contrary. And you know what? Your word goes. Your word rules.

Now, I'm going to back up. You're neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at that point. You are, at this moment, at that point and you must understand yourself therefrom. You must understand yourself therefrom if you are to arrive at a conscious experience of the truth of that fact. Standing at that point constitutes being in the holy instant. It's that place where God's laws prevail. It's that place which seems to you to be a new arena of being in which laws are working that express God's governance. And the laws of matter, the laws of physics that seemed to have been governing you, are no longer governing you.

And so you have healing. You have a transformed experience.

Now I've talked before about the fact that you tend to use your minds carelessly, mainly because no one ever really taught you how to use your minds carefully.

Now I'm going to use a meditation as an example. Ordinarily you go through your days every day thinking-thinking-thinking. But then you learn about meditation. And you learn whatever practice of meditation you learn. In the process of learning it, you find that there's a new experience to be had—an experience of silence, of peace in your mind. And it is experienced when thinking stops. And so, as part of your practicing your meditation, you have a mantra or a focus, a candle flame, whatever, and you give your attention to it gently. And you find yourself thinking a thought, "Ah-h," you realize, "not the time for that." And you abandon the thought and bring your attention back to whatever the focus of the meditation is.

Now this is like the child learning how to play the piano or a child learning how to ride a bike, where there's repetitive practice of the act of riding the bike or of doing the particular trill . . . whatever it might be.

What I'm trying to say is, that if you want to have the experience of radical idealism becoming practical realism, you have to be willing to practice what it takes for that to happen. And if you're not good at it, you have to persist. And when the temptation comes to say, "Well, what I'm persisting about is particularly important, it's an issue that could make radical changes in my life that might not be good—what...if...I...don't...do...it...right!"

It's like doing a meditation, and in the meditation when you're in your peace, the thought comes: "Oh, I forgot to call so-in-so and it's important!" And you are tempted to not just recognize that as a thought that doesn't fit what you're engaged in so that you may set it aside and bring your attention back to the focus of your meditation. You're sorely tempted, because of the seriousness of the matter, to abandon what, for lack of better words, is the translation of radical idealism into practical realism or the fact that God is Love, into the experience of feeling your peace so that you are able to attend to whatever needs to be attended to, in peace, in wholeness, in the holy instant where God's laws prevail.

There's practice. That's the point. You must be willing to practice radical idealism. Idealism has the word, "ideal" in it. So radical idealism doesn't describe something radical that could be good or bad, radical idealism has as its focus, the ideal. And God is the Ideal. And God's actions are the Ideal. And you as the evidence of God's actions are the Ideal. There, we're starting to understand you from the point of perfection. I'm talking about you from the point of perfection.

And when you bring your attention there rather than letting it dwell on the constant rehashing of fear, doubt and anxiety, you become less opaque, if I may put it that way. You, in your being as you know yourself to be in the moment, are becoming less afraid, less dense, less tense, more flexible, more open, more receptive, with less and less of your confident fearful self-assertion. And in the absence of that—in the quietness, the presence of the perfection of you, because it is God-derived, and because, for lack of better words, it constitutes an assertion of God's right where you are—radical idealism, the truth about you can, by virtue of the laws of God that prevail in that place, find yourself being healed.

But it will not happen as long as you're trying to get your healing from the orphanage, as long as you're trying to be the best damned orphan you can be, or the most spiritually proficient orphan you can be. You see, it doesn't have anything to do with filling old concepts about who you are as a good boy or who you are as a good girl. It's not fulfilling your mother's or your father's concepts of who you ought to become, or how a good girl is, or how a good boy is.

You see, as you do the two-step, as you let yourself into the holy instant, the old passes away. The old fades and is replaced with new rules. This is what you need to understand. And the new rules, without fail, render visible God's laws that prevail and none else do.

Again, you must understand that all the holy words in the world, including those in the Course, if they're worth anything at all, bring you to a point of having radical idealism rendered practical realism. God created you and the act of Creation He engaged in was an act of perfection. And His Creation, called you, is therefore perfect and that radical idealism, because it doesn't seem to be the case, becomes the practical realism which is, that a physician examining you will find the problem invisible, unavailable to study, unavailable to see—not only that, it will mean that deformities or things that were out of balance but not diseases or problems, will vanish as well.

Oh I know . . . you say, "this is far out." But this is radical idealism. This is truth. And this truth is something you're supposed to be experiencing. And so, the Course is leading you to the point where you will have that experience. It's leading you to the point where you say, "Holy Spirit, I now know you are nothing more than my right Mind," or put another way, "I now know, intellectually at least, that my right Mind is nothing less than God's Holy Spirit! And I invite this right Mind of mine to register with me as mine. In other words, I desire for that which represents to me at the moment, radical idealism, I invite that to register with me as the truth about me, in other words, the down-to-earth, here and now practical realism of me." Because that's the point.

It is so easy, especially when "hard times" persist or a problem that doesn't yield . . . it's very easy to become discouraged and to justify frustration and anger. But it doesn't make it practical. It doesn't make it appropriate. It doesn't ever constitute something that lays the groundwork for radical idealism to become practical realism. And you all know that. You all know that every expression of hate, every expression of anger is something that doesn't even register well with your body, much less [chuckles] provide the environment in which the Love of God can register with you.

Now, I've got to tell you that generating anger and vocalizing it with as great strength as you can, will never constitute the means of shutting the ego up. Why? Because it, itself, is pure ego attempting to get charge of the situation all by itself—all on its own. And always, it will constitute getting control of the situation, finding authority that works on or over another, or a thing, "I've got dominion over this cancer. I've got to get dominion over this asshole who's ruining my life. I've got to get control over the people who are governing the economy and our world. I've got to find my voice!"

And this feels very justifiable to you. Of course, it's all being done from the context of the orphanage—a state of being which is based upon a basic false assumption that you exist autonomously and have no connection with a Source other than what you can create with your fantastic imagination, and the rules you can get other people to believe so that they'll behave in a way that supports you and keeps you safe, blah, and blah and blah.

I started out by saying God loves you and that we would take some time to talk about things, because sometimes you need to step back and not try so hard, so that you might, in the quietness, have a chance to be reminded by the presence of God, the presence of Love in you, that God loves you.

And so that's what I'm talking about tonight, the ways to . . . (ah, I don't like this) . . . the ways to think about it, the contexts in which to be present with the demands in front of you and with your opportunities to practice over and over something that you're not skilled at but you will become skilled at as you practice—just as a meditator, through the practice of noticing when he's thinking and saying, "I'll do that after the meditation," and going back to the focus. That one through that simple repetitive practice learns how to be in the stillness for long periods of time and has the opportunity in that stillness to let God in.

I have to say that there are those who meditate who think the stillness is the point, and maintain the stillness so that the moment God speaks, that one says, "I'll deal with that after the meditation," and holds himself to perfect silence, to perfect stillness in which no Movement of Creation in its true aspect can register with him, and in which the Voice for truth can't register with her.

There's a reason for all of this that we're doing. And it isn't just peace in the middle of chaos—peace within, while there's chaos without.

When it doesn't feel easy to have faith, when radical idealism like, "God is Love and God loves you," seems like nothing but crap—a false promise, a crazy concept, something that mortals came up with as a salve for the awfulness of existence which doesn't have a shred of truth to it—when those thoughts occur to you, what do they do? They immobilize you . . . one way or another they keep you from practicing that trill . . . for one reason or another they keep you from getting back up on that bicycle.

And one of the main reasons is, as I said before—and everyone of you have to watch out for this—it becomes turned in upon you, "What if I don't get it right? What if I do it wrong?" Nothing! But if you let it immobilize you, you won't be available to hear that one word, "nothing," . . . nothing will happen.

You, whether you do it right or wrong, will still be, because you can't get outside of the fact that you are the expression of God, therefore, eternal, therefore, unchangeable in terms of Being. So if you get it wrong, nothing happens, except that you still have the opportunity to do it right.

And tonight I'm reminding you that there's a way to do it right. There's a way to be, that is the way God created you to be. And there really is no other way to be that's actually available to you, but you're all trapped in the belief that there is. And so, you just muck around in the miserable beliefs that, "There ain't no such thing as radical idealism that can possibly become practical realism, because practical realism is a state of existence unto itself that has nothing to do with this other thing called radical idealism."

It's really like saying, "What's real is error and what's unreal is truth. So don't reach for the truth, don't waste your time on it. The suggestion that radical idealism can become practical realism is nothing more than a false temptation, a carrot placed on a stick ahead of you that you can't ever reach. The truth is impossible to have!" No. Truth is inevitable for you to have, just like the perfect trill is available for the piano student to have. You just need to persist. The child needs to not get up and walk away from the piano and go outside with his buddies and say, "Playing piano is for sissies. I'm not going to do it anymore. It's not worth it. It's too hard. Let the girls do it."

Be patient with yourselves. Love yourselves enough to stop doing what hurts you, even if at the moment it feels so good to do it. Anger always feels momentarily satisfying. At times it's almost better than an orgasm. Many times, anger has prevented the possibility of an orgasm, "Honey, I'd rather be angry tonight . . . no way."

Anger and guilt are like drugs, they give you an apparent high, but they are debilitating in their use. And there's a point that you have to arrive at where you decide not to employ them. And when you make that decision not to employ them, you have to begin to exercise a little self-discipline. You don't run off like the child from the piano, angry. You sit there and you say, "Oh, nothing's going to happen to me if I don't get it right. And if I keep practicing it, I'll get the hang of it, everybody else has. I'll get it." And you persist. Or in your meditation, you have a thought, you abandon it and bring your attention back to the focus. This is the practice of discipline.

Some of you feel in the clutches of anger. Some of you feel as though you're in the clutches of depression. Some of you feel that you're in the clutches of fear and you say, "The things that I'm in the clutch of are so strong and I'm not responsible for them, circumstances are such that I can't be anything but anxious or fearful or depressed or whatever.

This is where, like the user of drugs, you have to be willing to take a look and see whether such an attitude or the practice of such an attitude is detrimental to you or helpful, so that you can recognize that, "No, it's actually detrimental and I must change what I'm doing. I must stop yielding to the clutching of fear, the clutching of anxiety, the clutching of depression and so on. I may not be able to make it go away, but I can give my attention somewhere else. I do not have to give these things my full attention."

And here's the best way to start: By reminding yourself that you're neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, that you are at that point and that you must understand yourself therefrom. Because therefrom is the holy instant and therefrom God's laws prevail, God's laws govern absolutely. And in the presence of those laws, whatever it is, whatever the fantastic imagination was that brought up fear or anxiety or depression, together with the fear, anxiety and depression will be gone and radical idealism will have been rendered practical realism. And that's the point.

Always, always when you are in pain of any sort, psychological, physical, whatever, the furthest thing from your mind is the truth that you're neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, that you must understand yourself therefrom if you wish to be free of this which is debilitating your ability to see God in everything, including yourself, and to experience transformation, healing, the direct experience of Creation as it truly is.

So sometimes you need to stop plowing through your lessons and be present with things you've already learned. Because they will help you to dare to choose for your peace when chaos seems to say you need to be afraid. Or to choose for your peace when your health seems to be saying there's no justification for you to be experiencing peace. And then be in that point of perfection, be in the holy instant like a lead weight, so that nothing moves you, nothing distracts you, because you're not interested in being distracted.

You want to know something? The holy instant is that place in which God's laws prevail and prevail absolutely. But I promise you that the experience of the holy instant isn't just a permanent experience of invulnerability and perfection, the holy instant is the threshold, for lack of better words, of your being swept into the Movement of Creation Itself as a participant in It by sharing with God the instantaneous conscious experience of all that Creation Is now, . . . now . . . now . . . now . . . now.

And so, the holy instant isn't a destination. The holy instant is the beginning of being Awake again. It's the beginning of radical idealism becoming practical realism. That's what Creation Is: God being radically ideal. And in the act of being radically ideal, causing practical realism without any of it ever becoming unlike its Source, without any of it becoming some physical universe and without any of God's Sons or Daughters becoming independent agents who seem to be able to generate for themselves frustrating, sickening, dying experiences . . . seem to be able to create for themselves.

New meditators or meditators under stress have difficulty being free of thoughts, but with practice they become free of thoughts. You may have difficulty watching the truth become real for you, watching radical idealism become practical realism, but through practice you will.

And the one thing I want you to go home with knowing tonight is, that what doesn't contribute to radical idealism being translated into practical realism, is a useless, meaningless activity for you to engage in. And as the threshold of Awakening—generally speaking—is closer, your dallying with a capacity to imagine negatively, is going to be met with more discomfort than it has in the past. And the freedom that you used to have will seem to be taken away from you, the freedom to do it and not suffer. And you will be reminded more instantly that what you're doing is not providing the environment in which the holy instant can occur. That what you are doing is making it impossible for you to remember that you are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, you are at that point and you must understand yourself therefrom. You must approach everything in your apprehension of all of Creation from that standpoint. I don't mean apprehension as fearful, I mean apprehension as being conscious of.

Now you may do whatever you like this week. You may read on in the Course, but I'm going to encourage you not to do that and to spend some time learning to be gentle with yourselves, give yourselves the benefit of the doubt. And while you've let yourself off the hook that causes you to certainly automatically feel guilty, consider these gentle things . . . these gentle truths that we've been talking about . . . that God loves you . . . that your perfection is what you are supposed to be experiencing . . . that doing what will allow your perfection to manifest is not something that will be met with good affect or consequences and that therefore you can freely and without remorse, without guilt, persist with some diligence—gentle diligence as you would use in a meditation.

You're meditating. You've had some quiet time. And then a damn thought pops up! You see. And that's what you do. "A DAMN THOUGHT JUST POPPED UP!" Wow . . . call that a disturbed meditation! You could just say, "Oh, another thought. I'm going back to my focus." You don't have to disturb your meditation further than the thought did. Just notice it gently and come back to your focus.

If you don't get it right, don't get upset about it. Notice that you didn't get it right and come back to doing it again. "Damn I forgot that I was at the point of perfection and not advancing toward it. Oh, yeah, I gotta remember, I'm neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, I'm at that point and I must understand myself therefrom. That must be the context in which I consider things or listen for what the truth is."

Kindness . . . self-kindness . . . be kind to yourself as you reach out to God. Be kind to yourself as you desire to know the truth that is revealed in the holy instant in which the laws of God prevail absolutely.

And again, no matter how satisfying it is to bitch or grouse about this, that or the other thing, remember: Begin to remind yourself that as satisfying as it feels at the moment it doesn't allow for the holy instant, and therefore, it doesn't allow for that place, that experience in which God's laws prevail absolutely. If you will remember that, you will realize that there is nothing satisfying enough about being angry to sacrifice the other.

And then go back to remembering that you're at the point of perfection and that you want that fact, which seems to you at the moment to be radical idealism, to be rendered practical realism to you, rather than your awful beliefs.

I love you all. Be kind to yourself this week with the truth. Let the truth love you into your health, by not fighting against it with your absolute negative confidences. You don't need to do it. You don't need to block your good.

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 18th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet. There are some things we need to discuss before we move on.

Mind moves. In other words, Mind—and I'm referring here to Mind as God and the Movement of Mind as the Movement of God, because God is Mind, Mind moves—and I'm using the word, "movement" to describe the activity of Mind—Mind being what Mind is, which is conscious.

And so Mind, in the act of being conscious elicits, we'll say, Creation—infinite detail, infinite detailed expression of perfection, of harmony, of beauty, of shape, outline, form and color. Because it is Mind that is moving and because the Movement of Mind is Consciousness, the movement is experienced as ideas. And as I've said before, these ideas are perfectly real and tangible to the Mind that formed them by the act of being what it is: Consciousness.

This is the primitive and ultimate truth. It was the truth before any of you had a different idea about it. It has been the truth while you have had a different idea about it. And it will continue to be the truth when you abandon the very creative, imaginative definitions you have given to Creation which have not allowed you to recognize God in it all.

This is the premise of every prayer that is a real prayer. Because a real prayer is the desire to experience something as it truly is. You desire usually to have that experience and express it as a prayer when you're in distress because form, outline and color seems to be uncomfortable—damaged, diseased, whatever.

Now what happened to this primitive and ultimate actuality of Being?

You're not going to hear a lot that is new from me tonight but we're going to bring it into focus once again so that the part of the book we're going to go into will make more sense to you.

Now at some point, you and a brother—because you couldn't do it all by yourself—you and your brother, a brother or sister, a fellow Son or Daughter of God, decided to be imaginative: "What if we looked at Creation this way? What if we looked at that this way or that way, or the other way? What if we gave it a definition different from what it truly is?"

And so, the two of you made a mutual agreement to believe something that wasn't true.

Now in doing this you gave away your Birthright. You abandoned your Birthright. Your Birthright as the Son or Daughter of God is to see and experience everything as God is Be-ing it. But if you choose to create a definition for yourself different from what a thing actually Is, you've moved out into a territory that you could call "independence." And we've referred to this in the past as getting a divorce from your Father . . . saying, "Father, I'd rather see things my way."

Now, we've also talked about the fact that the moment you acted on this, and you denied your Birthright because you truly wanted to commit yourself to a fantasy for awhile, you lost the experience of the totality of Creation in its context of perfect harmony. You, by virtue of abandoning your Birthright began, yourself, to act out of harmony with Creation. And this, as we have discussed, resulted in two things: Fear and its partner, guilt, or guilt and its partner, fear.

Now at the same time, when you began to define everything yourself, or yourselves, you could not align each and everything with God anymore. And so you conceived of it as being a self-existent independent thing itself instead of an integral part of the action of Mind, which by it's action, is being Creation now . . . now.

Things became objects unto themselves. And because they were not under the governance of God any longer because you were imagining them to be things on their own, they became dangerous to you. Why? Well everything became dangerous because you were in a state of fear, which you couldn't escape as long as you insisted upon being independent yourself—seeing yourself that way and behaving the way one would have to behave in that vulnerable state minus the invulnerability that you had enjoyed before this decision.

These independent objects then became defined as matter governed by the laws of physics: Self-existent bits of matter, self-existent arrangements or cooperations, you might say, of forms of matter called organisms and so on and so forth.

It's important to understand this. You need to understand that when you got your divorce from your Father, by choosing to think for yourself, you caused the Real to become something unreal—at least to your perception, which you are fully committed to.

The ideal became the unreal. Spirit, the substance of All, became matter. That which was pure idea became pure physical object.

Now last week we talked about translating radical idealism into practical realism. We talked about the need for translating matter back into Spirit, if you will, by asking to know what a thing is that you have defined as matter, desiring to know what a material thing is as the Father is Be-ing it. In other words, you want to know: "What is the Father Being right there where I am seeing an 'independent material object?'"

In other words, we're talking about translating everything from matter back into Mind—from a physical object to an idea. Now you're not actually changing a real physical object into an idea, you are, by means of the holy instant, letting yourself back into the true experience of what it has been all along.

Now, there are a couple of reasons why it's important to understand this. The first is, that when it comes to healing, when there is a need for healing, you tend to think of using the holy instant as a means of gaining an understanding, or a knowledge, or a truth that will be equal to the correction of the awful, serious, problem that you're faced with. And the more serious the problem, the more "life-threatening" the problem, the bigger the truth that's going to be needed. And so you think that availing yourself of the holy instant is going to be the first step of at least two-steps. [chuckle] And you will use the holy instant to become still, to desire to know what the truth is here instead of what you're experiencing, so that you can take that truth and apply it to that material object—that liver that's blocked, that breast that's cancerous, that sore throat . . . you see.

And then the second step will be to use the clarity that has been provided by your availing yourself of the holy instant and applying it to the clogged liver, or the cancerous breast (fearsome-fearsome thing . . . cancer . . . anywhere!). And because you don't understand that the holy instant is not the means of getting to a first step that will allow you to do a second step, you miss the meaning of the first step, or you miss the Revelation entirely because it doesn't fit your preconception. You're looking for something you can use to apply to something else.

Now we've spent some time talking about the fact that the holy instant is that experience of Being in which God's laws prevail and no others do—the laws of physics don't, the laws of correct social behavior don't—the laws of God prevail. And so, when you let yourself into the holy instant, what you're doing is, you're allowing yourself into the place where God already has dominion. And as a result, there's nothing left for you to apply that dominion to.

Why?

Because the breast, the liver, the throat were never material objects in the first place, even though you have committed yourself to very definite definitions that say they are. All that has ever been where your throat is, where your breast is, where your kidney is, all that's ever been there have been ideas—perfectly tangible to the Mind that formed them. But That which formed them was not conflicted, and therefore, what It created could not become conflicted and therefore, they never became matter that could become diseased.

Why did they seem to become diseased? Because you got your divorce and caused for yourself the experience of guilt and fear. And that guilt and fear believed and practiced as though it were absolute, has caused your experience of the ideas—the infinite specific ideas of Creation—to be experienced untruly, as problematic.

But all that Spirit is doing is being what It is while you are twisting your perception of it and believing your perception.

You don't even have to learn the truth so you can get Spirit to untwist Itself because Spirit never got twisted—God never got changed by your imagination.

I am reiterating this and I will continue to reiterate it because it goes flat against the grain of everything you believe, everything you have been taught, where you are willing to look at everything with at least an intellectual grasp of the fact that you may be seeing nothing more than a distortion of God's Creation that hasn't changed Creation but is altering your experience or perception of it, and that you can find yourself returned to the true experience of it. If you will be willing to consider that it's all ideas, divine ideas, God-ideas, and because they are ideas they're not bound to laws of physics, they are bound to express God's laws which prevail in reality, which prevail in the holy instant, which you will find prevailing when you have abandoned the application of a distorting mentality or a distorting intent. And how do you abandon the applying of a distortion? By choosing for your peace.

So, you might say that the first step, if you were going to think of it logically, the first step is to recognize that everything is an idea—an idea formed by the Movement or action of Mind, the Mind that is God. And that therefore, that action and its identifiability is Creation Itself. And it's all mental. It's all Mind.

That would be the first step. That's your premise. That's the premise upon which you open yourself up. That's the basis upon which you desire to know the truth. You aren't asking to know the truth about [raps table] matter, you're desiring to know the truth about [raps table] Spirit! An idea, [raps table] an idea that makes noise. [raps table] Noise is an idea. It's all Mind.

So when you want to know the truth about something—a breast, a kidney, a throat—you're wanting to know the truth about an idea, a divine idea, an idea that is as eternal as it's Maker, an idea that is as eternal as the Mind that formed it, by the action of Be-ing Mind.

Mind doesn't create things other than Itself. Mind moves and, you could say, creates the experience of Be-ing Mind, of Be-ing consciousness.

I've said this before: Mind is it's own great cause and effect. You see? There's absolute integrity, because there's only one thing going on—what you have called mind and manifestation is one thing—and it's all Mind.

So, when you sit down to avail yourself of the holy instant, what you're doing is allowing yourself to relax into wholeness. You're allowing yourself to relax into the ultimate. You're allowing yourself to relax into the peace of Being that is peaceful because it's incapable of embodying or holding conflict of any kind, therefore, there is no conflict in it. You're letting yourself into a sudden shift of perception—a miracle.

Now you can either look at that as being much simpler than what you have been imagining, or you can look at it as something far more difficult than you have been imagining, because I've just said that letting yourself into the holy instant is letting yourself all the way into the conscious experience of what God is Be-ing.

[snaps fingers] Oh-h . . . that might mean you would Wake up! That might mean you would be Awake [snaps fingers] right now—sooner than you expected, sooner than you wanted! You had some things you wanted to take care of . . . well you had one last exciting thing to do before you got your peace . . . and besides, you really don't like unexpected things happening!

You don't like unexpected things happening because you can't be in control of them.

If the unexpected thing that happened was your release from misery—release from sin, sickness, death—would you really quibble? No you wouldn't.

The reason you quibble now is because you don't really think that can happen—at least not so quickly that you would have to let yourself be out of control right now!

But you know, this is what we're talking about. The Book may be a long Book, but Waking up doesn't have to take a long time.

So you could say that the holy instant is sufficient to the meeting of your every need—and perhaps the meeting of your every need in one-fell-swoop.

So when we're talking about the holy instant, and during the week when you're thinking about the holy instant and what we've talking about, be willing to let it be something far more than you had been thinking it was, and also let it be something far less than you were thinking it was, because if you had a really big problem, you'd have to have a really big truth. And that's not the case.

Now, once you got your divorce from the Father, once you had your autonomy, you lost the experience of everything being an idea and you gained the [chuckles] insane idea that everything was made up of independent building blocks of matter, including your body. And you experienced your mind as being different from your body. And as we will be reading in the next couple of weeks, your body became the means you used for communication. And your mind was what you used as a means to have privacy.

You want to express love to someone, you caress them, you touch them in a way that evokes pleasure, comfort, peace. You open your mouth up and make your vocal cords vibrate and you move your mouth and form words and you communicate by means of your body. But the moment you want to be alone you start thinking. And no one knows what you're thinking.

How many of you have ever put on a pair of sunglasses and looked at things that you would've never looked at if anyone else could see what you were looking at? You use your mind the same way. And you think about and look at in your mind things that you don't want anyone else to know you would even consider thinking about because it doesn't uphold your image, it doesn't uphold your means of, lets say, getting them to behave in a way that's supportive of you.

And so you use your mind to be alone. You use your mind to be private. And yet, the simple fact is, that bodies can't communicate because there ain't no such thing as a body made up of independent building blocks of matter that are physical as opposed to mental.

And so communication cannot and never has been accomplished by bodies. The fact is that in this distorted frame of reference—this independence from God, where you are an autonomous entity—you think you are communicating all the time by means of your use of your body. And you're not. And you think that you are not communicating anything in the privacy of your mind and you're communicating everything, because "the privacy of your mind" is a nonsensical phrase. Your mind never has been private. Mind has always been universal—all inclusive. And any communication that has ever occurred has been by means of Mind.

Waking up is making a shift from believing that you're communicating by the use of your body. It's abandoning that, as well as abandoning the idea that when you think something it's private and no one else knows or can feel it or is affected by it.

The split between mind and matter, or Spirit and matter, dissolves in the holy instant, wherein everything is resolved back into Mind as Creation Itself, exhibiting only that which is characteristic of the Mind that is moving and by its Movement, elicits Creation, we'll say, so that a touch or a thought are both recognized as ideas, as Mind. You see?

The split between mind and matter disappears and everything is still there. What you have called matter is still there and what you had called mind is still there, but now it's recognized as Mind . . . as the conscious experience of [knocks on table] Being . . . the conscious experience of [claps hands] Being . . . the conscious experience [gestures to mouth] of Being . . . the conscious experience [gestures to ear] of Being—meaning hearing. It's all Mind.

Now, we've been talking about holy relationships and we've been talking about special relationships. Special relationships occur in this funny idea [chuckling] that bodies communicate and minds are private. That's where special relationships occur. It happens in a place where guilt is the engine that drives all relationships.

Now some of you like me only to say nice things. But not uncovering not so nice things can leave you still asleep. And so I can't do that. Now the fact is that until you are Awake, guilt drives every relationship you have and you use guilt to fire up and create motivation within relationships. You say, "No, I'm not that duplicitous."

But you know what? You have a phrase: "When you're at your wits end." What happens when you're at your wits end? When you're at your wits end, generally speaking, suddenly you're not very nice. When you're at your wits end you've used all your niceness up and you say, "Well, I can't put on a mask any longer. I've got to express the way I really feel." Not...so...nice!

You talk about "When push comes to shove," and that usually applies to a situation where you're at your wits end, right? And when push comes to shove, what happens? Not...so...nice!

You need to have a new motto: "When push comes to shove . . . hug." Um-m, please remember that, the next time you're in that, when push comes to shove place. You're not likely to like adding that . . . "When push comes to shove, hug."

The fact that you probably won't like adding that word, "hug," tells you that the sweet guy or the sweet gal that you are ain't so sweet and ain't so nice when push comes to shove. Now, when push comes to shove, it simply means that you're at a point where you can't fake it any longer. What does that mean? You can't fake that you're nice.

Mind you, I'm addressing those of you who, when push comes to shove, don't hug. But you know what? I need to talk to those of you who do hug as well. Because until you're Awake your willingness to hug is still part of a deal, it's still part of a manipulation. Because until you're Awake guilt still drives your relationships. And that's the part you don't want to hear. But that's the part you need to hear. And that's what's coming up in the next section: The Holy Instant and Communication. What blocks communication? I'm going to change the words: The Holy Instant and Communion . . . communion . . . hug . . . The Holy Instant and Hug . . . The Holy Instant and Embrace . . . The Holy Instant and Unconditional Embrace.

"The holy instant is that place," in which God's laws not only prevail, but God's perspective becomes available to you as yours because it always has been, it's your Birthright, but you're not blocking it. And when that happens, you find yourself in communication with absolutely everything, infinitely speaking, without any aspect of infinity escaping your notice at any given moment. And it's not overwhelming to you. And it's not just you, as I've said before, it's not just you being conscious of everything else, it's everything else being conscious of you and being conscious of you being conscious of it being conscious of you. In other words, communication, not just awareness but communion. The Holy Instant and Communication.

And we're going to be talking about what blocks communication. And I basically laid it out for you here. What blocks communication is that you have decided that it's bodies that communicate and it's minds that are private, which is 180 degrees . . . no it isn't just a 180 degrees out of sync, because mind is the means of communication and form is the means of communication. Mind is the movement of ideas and forms are the movement of ideas, so they are not even at odds with each other, they can't be a 180 degrees out of sync. But do you see that the moment you moved into the orphan mentality, that which was one became split into opposing factions: Spirit and matter . . . Mind and matter . . . the ethereal and the physical? No. It's all the same thing. It's all Mind.

Now, however, as the orphan you've made this split of something that's one. And you go around affecting everyone with your mind, when you think that everything is private. You think no one can see what you're looking at in your mind. And everyone sees it and feels it. And you provide an atmosphere that everyone feels, even though they, at the moment . . . none of you can tell what each other is thinking. But I promise you, the fear you feel is affecting your neighbor. The anger you feel is being felt by your neighbor . . . by your neighbors in New York . . . by your neighbors in Tokyo . . . by your neighbors in the Andromeda Galaxy.

And then, through the use of your body, you think you're communicating with everyone all day long, in one way or another, when you're not. And that's how you block communication. You block communication by ignoring it where it's happening and by thinking it's happening where it's not happening.

The holy instant and communication are inseparable. And so, if you don't get this straight . . . if this doesn't become clear to you, then you will miss the holy instant. You will be, being quiet and being attentive looking for a concept you have of what ought to show up, when that's not what's going to show up. What's going to show up is a realization that you'd better be more careful about how you use your mind, because what's going on in there is not private at all and it is affecting your brothers and sisters, and then you'll take a little better responsibility for what you're thinking.

Does that mean you're going to figure out healthier definitions of ideas to think about, or does it mean that you're actually going to shut up and enter into the holy instant and desire to know of your Father what the truth is about this thing or that thing or about what will your mind feel like . . . what will be going on in your mind when you're willing to look at everything and see it as an idea?

Ask the Father to convey to you the experience of the idea that's in front of you, which because it isn't made up of building blocks of matter, isn't held to the laws of matter and therefore, can behave like Spirit . . . can behave [snaps fingers] right now the way God is Being it—meaning that [snaps fingers] right now you can have a shift of perception, where your confidence in your definition of a thing gives way to a clear experience of the divinity of the piece of glass on that glass tabletop.

When everything is going well, when you have managed to behave in such a way, that with minor applications of guilt, you've been able to get your brother or sister to be pleasant and cooperate with you, then you say, "I'm a nice guy. I'm happy. Things are going smooth. You never see me get upset." You say, "I work on a pretty even keel, everybody will tell you that."

Come on . . . just upset your apple-cart at any given moment and Mr. Nice Guy or Mrs. Nice Guy will be gone, and the bitch or the bastard that you've been underneath all the time but didn't have to show because everything was going smoothly, will come out.

Now is that the truth about you? No it's not. But it is what's at the bottom of the way you're living your life and experiencing your life when you've said, "There's no God. I'm here . . . I've been given free will. I'm here to do whatever I imagine to do. I'm here to be ultimately creative—as creative as possible. I'm here on my own." You see. And that premise is false!

Now are you going to wait until your apple-cart is upset and Mr. Nice Guy disappears and you say, [snaps fingers] "Yea, Raj was right! I can see it clearly now. I'm not Mr. Nice Guy. It was all an act when nobody was pushing my buttons, my apple-cart wasn't upset, everybody was being nice to me and my employment of guilt in controlling them was done skillfully enough so that they didn't notice it, you see.

Now you can either wait for that dastardly experience, or you can say without that happening, that you're going to use every opportunity you have all day long when things are going well, to abandon the premise that you're an independent, autonomous entity having been given free will and with a sort of command to be as creative and original as possible with the greatest beneficence possible. You're going to have to be willing to abandon that. Because no matter how nicely it can be said, it's a definition of someone who uses their body to communicate, that constitutes no communication, and uses his mind to be private when it constitutes a universal blast of experience.

You want to stop that because it blocks communication. It blocks the experience of communion—all embracing communion, the holy instant and communication.

I tell you, this chapter that we're reading, is the most important chapter. It is loaded with so many stimuli to trigger you Awake.

So, I'm going to suggest that this coming week you read ahead this next section. It will make a great deal of sense considering what we've talked about tonight. And I will have plenty more to say about it next week. And your study or your consideration of what it is saying in light of what I've shared tonight will lay the groundwork for more rapid assimilation or embrace of the truth and perhaps sudden losses of control in which the holy instant is experienced.

I love you all. And I tell you the bad news because it's the fly in your soup. And you need to know it's there so you can ask for a fresh bowl of soup.

I look forward to being with you all next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 25th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

To make things easier, I'm not going to begin reading at the beginning of the section, but the second to the last paragraph in the section just before, The Holy Instant and Real Relationships. What we will be reading from the beginning of the section will be stated as a preamble to what I'm going to read right now. Reading this now will help the preamble settle better, digest more easily, . . . make more sense.

Forgiveness . . .

. . . this is the key . . .

Forgiveness lies in communication as surely as damnation lies in guilt.

This section is entitled, The Holy Instant and Communication. Communication is key to Awakening and it's the opposite of damnation.

Forgiveness lies in communication as surely as damnation lies in guilt. It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function to instruct those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION.

Why would the Holy Spirit need to teach . . .

. . . those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION.

Under what circumstances would one think that communication would constitute damnation?

It's very simple. Communication takes away the supposed authority or capacity to act powerfully but autonomously. It takes that away. It takes power away. Better stated: It takes false power away.

Anyone who has been enjoying any degree of success in their life is for the most part, enjoying it because of the successful practice of power. The success has not been the result of communication. It has not been the result of communion. It has not been the result of allowing for and desiring to have, or shall I say, desiring to have and allowing for the holy instant in which joining occurs with the Father—with That which Moves and by its Movement, constitutes Creation, including every single one of you and everything.

Now communication is obviously damnation if one's power and authority is usurped or taken away, if one's ability to be successful as the direct result of his own actions. That's dangerous. That's the loss of everything essential. It will curse you—the one who does it—to no longer being able to exercise authority and create success. Create . . . what is it? Not just respectability but reality for himself—to be a puppet without strings who is a real boy now, or a real girl now.

So that's why communication can be seen as damnation. It would take away every opportunity you have to become a real boy and a real girl—to become actual instead of orphans.

So again . . .

Forgiveness lies in communication as surely as damnation lies in guilt.

Guilt . . . well, if in order to be successful, you must not engage in real communication, you must instead, pretend to communicate by means of your bodies which can't actually communicate at all, as we discussed last week. If you are caught in this context, where you must use your body to communicate for the purpose of authenticating yourself, you are assuming a position you don't have. And the attempt to assume it and get others to believe you is a frightful task. It's one that makes any good ego nervous.

And, as we also have discussed, when you got your divorce from your Father, when you said, "Father, I'd rather see it my way, I would rather do it my way, I would rather define what everything is," you lost the conscious awareness of your indestructible eternality—your sovereignty—and what replaced it were the two partners again: Fear and guilt. And because, as we've also discussed before, it's too hard to bear the burden of guilt for assuming a state of existence that the Father didn't give you and that you're having to create out of whole cloth, that guilt is too hard to bear. So it gets projected out: "It's her fault! It's his fault! It's the circumstance's fault! It's the President's fault! It's the fault of whoever is in authority and has jurisdiction over me."

And so, in the projection of guilt "out there," blaming everyone and everything else, you have to have some means of exercising some control so that your vulnerability is lessened. And the only tool you really have to use to coerce and manipulate your brothers is guilt.

Now, since fear and guilt go together, you can also use fear but always in the end, the reason you're using it is to affirm and substantiate the experience of guilt in your brother, so that your brother will acquiesce to you and behave the way you want him to behave.

So that's why it says here . . .

Forgiveness lies in communication as surely as damnation lies in guilt. It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function to instruct those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION.

You see, it's no small task, because it's not just an idea . . . "Oh, . . . oh, well . . . communication doesn't have to be damnation, communication can be salvation . . . my goodness, what a concept! I get it!"

No . . . it's not an idea to be "gotten." It's a way of being that has to shift. It's a whole way of being that has to shift. So the Holy Spirit's task, we will say, is not an easy one because you're not just shifting ideas, you're having to abandon values that you have brought into play that your assertion of authority through the skillful use of guilt brings credibility to you, brings respect to you.

And if you exercise the laying on of guilt subtly enough and skillfully enough, your brother will think that you have loved him, your sister will think you have loved her and that the reason he or she is standing in support of you is certainly not because you're a skillful employer of guilt, which, at the bottom line, is usury and is only for self-protection. Nevertheless, that is the way it's working. That is the way it works outside of the holy instant . . . outside of communication . . . outside of communion.

So . . .

It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function to instruct those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION. And He will do so, for the power of God in Him AND you is joined in REAL relationship, so holy and so strong that it can overcome even THIS without fear. It is through the holy instant that what seems impossible is ACCOMPLISHED, making it evident that it is NOT impossible.

Now I promise you that every single one of you, as you step up to this point of learning, will find yourself feeling that this shift is impossible. Don't be surprised by it.

Don't take it seriously . . . don't take it seriously!

You are going to have to stand in the face of a very clear inner conviction that it's impossible, and a fear that comes along with the intent to get past this impasse. And it would be very hard to do if there were no one here to tell you that what you're facing is a bluff—a bluff period, nothing else. And that you must be willing to hang in there with your intent to establish communication, to have the joining, to absolutely neglect to fall back upon your habits of thinking. Because you don't want a single thought you've had that hasn't Wakened you, when you can have an idea from the Mind of God in your mind that constitutes an experience of Oneness with the Father—with your Source.

And in that experience of unity, you find yourself unified with every single one of your brothers and sisters and everything as well throughout the Universe.

It is through the holy instant that what seems impossible is ACCOMPLISHED, making it evident that it is NOT impossible. In the holy instant guilt holds NO attraction, since communication has been restored.

Now I'm going to give you a little hint: If you simply sit down and do a meditation and move into your peace, if you had been experiencing guilt, you'll find that in that peace—in your meditation—it's gone, whether it seems to you as though you have established communication with anything or not.

That should be helpful in conveying to you from an experience that you've had, that guilt is not fixed. Guilt is not absolute. Guilt can disappear without the cause of the guilt having been corrected. And I'm going to say, without the cause of the guilt trip that has been laid upon you, has been corrected. If the one laying the guilt trip upon you has not stopped, that cannot inhibit you from meditating—moving into your peace and finding the guilt gone.

beginning to wear you down, it's beginning to cause you to be ineffective—immobilized—once again, if you will meditate and move into your peace, you will find the guilt gone, you will find that which has been immobilizing you, gone. That's not the end of it though, because joining, communication has to be established, else you're still in the orphanage, you're still claiming to be an orphan and you will still behave as though you are one.

You must join with the Holy Spirit. You must join with that which is nothing more than your right Mind. In that joining peace comes. In that joining guilt disappears. In that joining the experience of vulnerability vanishes. And, you can either get stuck there in peace that is just being immobilized in ignorance, or it can be the place where you step across the threshold and actually, as a result of inquiry made by you to the Father or to the Holy Spirit—inquiry is made—and you listen with rapt attention for the answer, until you hear the answer. Then communication is established and then the immobilization vanishes.

Movement in your mind, movement of you and your experience occurs free of your false beliefs, free of your mutually-agreed-upon-definitions that all of you have used to keep each other in control. And because you are experiencing everything as it is, and experiencing it clearly, you are able to, for lack of better words, dance with Life because you can see It and you can move with It, and you can respond to and with It in a dance, in an involvement that is pure because no concepts or mutual agreements are getting in the way anymore.

Again . . .

It is through the holy instant that what seems impossible is ACCOMPLISHED, making it evident that it is NOT impossible. In the holy instant guilt holds NO attraction, since communication has been restored. And guilt, whose ONLY purpose is to disrupt communication, has no function here.

Interesting? Guilt's only function is to disrupt communication. And you thought that its purpose was to get people in line, to get them straightened out, to do the only thing that would work, to get them to knuckle under and stop doing what disturbs you, or even do something altruistic, "You'll rot in hell if you don't do something altruistic! Man if you don't be kind to her, I won't ever speak to you again."

No, communication is very important here, because communication is the evidence that you have embraced and embodied the truth that you're not alone.

Oh-h, you did that damned thing . . . that thing that damned you. You gave up the right to be alone. You gave up the right to be the authorizer. You gave up what made you able to create success for yourself. And what was the awful result? That you found, that in your union with everything—beyond your belief—you found that you fit in. You found that you belonged. No small thing. You found yourself being and not having the sensation of being out of your skin, or a stranger on a strange planet—somebody who didn't belong, somebody who just needs to wait it out and put up with "this lifetime," where you shouldn't be at all until you get back where you're supposed to be. Misery-misery-misery.

Here . . .

. . . in the holy instant . . .

. . . there is no concealment, and no private thoughts.

Here . . .

. . . in communion . . .

. . . there is no concealment, and no private thoughts.

That's your salvation. That's what you're looking for.

Now I'm going to back up to the previous page in the Sparkly Book, the second full paragraph:

Whenever you are angry, you can be sure that you have formed a special relationship which the ego has "blessed," for anger IS its blessing. Anger takes many forms, but it cannot long deceive those who will learn that love brings no guilt at all, and what brings guilt cannot be love, and MUST be anger.

Again . . .

Anger takes many forms, but it cannot long deceive those who will learn . . .

. . . who are willing to learn, who are receptive to the fact . . .

. . . that love brings no guilt at all, and what brings guilt cannot be love, and MUST be anger. ALL anger is nothing more than an attempt to make someone feel guilty, and this attempt is the ONLY basis which the ego accepts for special relationships.

Guilt is the only need the ego has, and as long as you identify with it, guilt will REMAIN attractive to you.

"Well, hell, why shouldn't it look attractive to me? It's worked very well for me for years . . . course, I don't call it guilt. But it is easy for me to play on other people's inclination to think that there's something wrong with them, to get them to do things that benefit them so that they will do things that benefit me, or if I can't manage to set something up that benefits them, I can at least get them to do things that benefit me."

Now, we're going to go back to the beginning of this section:

THE HOLY INSTANT AND COMMUNICATION

Beyond the poor attraction of the special love relationship and ALWAYS obscured by it, is the powerful attraction of the Father for his Son. There is no other love that can satisfy you, because there IS no other love. This is the ONLY love that is fully given and fully returned.¹

Now that last sentence may not make much sense to you.

This is the ONLY love that is fully given and fully returned.

Well you can imagine that maybe it might be fully given to you, but the part about being fully returned . . . ummm . . . what's that? How's that work?

Well it doesn't work from the orphan mentality. And that's why it seems unclear to you at the moment. This is a statement of the ultimate and the primitive truth:

There is no other love that can satisfy you because there IS no other love. This is the ONLY love that is fully given and fully returned.

When you are in communion, when you are in communication with the Holy Spirit, the Father, the Father's Love is received and returned. It's a mutual admiration society, if you will. And it isn't one that you engage in out of choice, really, where you could say, "Oh, today I'll return it and tomorrow I won't." It's just purely spontaneous eternal Love.

This is the only true Love. It always has been the only true Love. And while you are experiencing what seems to be love and hate, but no such thing as pure eternal Love, it's still the only true Love there is. And you will come back into the conscious experience of it. That is the whole point.

Being complete, it asks nothing. Being wholly pure, everyone joined in it HAS everything.

You see, this is why communication is not damnation but salvation. Because everyone joined in it has everything. Not in the sense of possession, but in the sense of unseparated presence with everything and experiencing the unseparated presence of everything with you, so that it is a mutual sharing that really constitutes a conscious experience of integrity, meaning, inseparability—togetherness. And again, a togetherness in Movement—a dance—a universal dance. That's why it's salvation and not really damnation.

You may have lost the apparent capacity to act autonomously, but you also lost your unconsciousness of your wholeness and your inseparability from everything in which you lacked nothing, in which you lack nothing.

Being wholly pure, everyone joined in it HAS everything. This is not the basis for ANY relationship in which the ego enters. For every relationship on which the ego embarks IS special. The ego establishes relationships only to GET something. And it would keep the giver bound to itself through guilt.

Really lousy, huh . . . really unkind . . . really a miserable state of existence to be in for the “getter” and the “giver,” because you're both stuck in a state of lack that it isn't your Birthright to be experiencing. And whatever hit or thrill you get from playing the part of the “getter” and the “giver” is empty—doesn't stand with any meaning whatsoever in the face of the universal conscious experience of Being, which is part of communication.

It is impossible for the ego to enter into any relationship without anger, for the ego believes that anger makes FRIENDS. This is not its statement, but it IS its purpose. For the ego really BELIEVES that it can get and keep BY MAKING GUILTY.

Now when it's put in those words you all understand it . . . you really do all understand it.

Guilt is a truly effective means of getting things done or getting what you want. And if you don't think that guilt is the only means you use to get something done, no matter how subtly or with great finesse you employ the use of guilt, just ask yourself . . . [chuckle] just ask yourself how often do you actually sit down and go into the holy instant and ask of the Father what the truth is, so that you might give from there?

Oh, I know, you do that all the time—and it's only once in awhile that you employ guilt—cause it's so easy . . . it's so easy to go into the holy instant, right? You do it all the time.

If you're not doing that, there's only one other way to make anything happen and that's through guilt. And so if you're not doing the holy instant, if I may put it that way, then you are doing guilt!

Now, you could feel really guilty about that. But that's not my point. My point is to just express simple clarity, so you can say, "Wow, I had no idea that that's what I was doing, but I can see that I must be doing that, because I'm very seldom going into the holy instant and inquiring of God and hearing—which is proof of communication—and having my whole perspective change so that everything I do is a blessing, a true blessing."

So if you can see that you're not doing that, then you can back-off and not make as heavy an investment in the use of guilt and you can find greater justification for doing the "two-step," for stopping before you act and saying, "Father, what's the truth here? Father, what is appropriate here? Father, what is really happening here? Father, what will nullify ignorance and its effects right here?"

So when you read:

It is impossible for the ego to enter into any relationship without anger, . .

. . . and you say, "Well, that's ridiculous, many relationships I get into without anger . . ."

And then, that it says . . .

. . . for the ego believes that anger makes FRIENDS.

Well, what jerk believes that? None of you! No one.

This is not its statement, but it IS its purpose. For the ego really BELIEVES that it can get and keep BY MAKING GUILTY. This is its ONE attraction; . .

Don't feel bad about this, just decide to give your attention in new directions, the direction of the holy instant—the willingness to become present in the now and back-off from your spontaneous assumptions and all of your collected thoughts that you use to justify behaving so as to convey to everyone who you are now.

This is its ONE attraction; . .

. . . that the ego . . .

. . . BELIEVES that it can get and keep BY MAKING GUILTY. This is its ONE attraction; an attraction so weak that it would have no hold at all, except that no-one RECOGNIZES it.

I mean, when I started reading this paragraph no one recognized it. Now you can see, you can at least recognize it even if you forget an hour from now. You have recognized it and you're no longer totally ignorant, and therefore, you're a step closer to freedom from it and its effects.

For the ego always SEEMS to attract through love, and has no attraction at all to anyone who perceives that it attracts through GUILT.

[Repeats] . . . the ego always SEEMS to attract through love, and has no attraction at all to anyone who perceives that it attracts through GUILT.

In other words, if you see what's going on, you're not attracted to it. If you don't see what is going on, and your heartstrings are pulled—which I'm going to say are your guilt-strings—your guilt-strings are pulled and you acquiesce, and because it was so skillfully done that you thought it was your heartstrings, you yield and you become a puppet of a user. And you suffer from your ignorance.

This all sounds very heavy handed and that's why I wanted to begin with the next to the last paragraph so that you might understand that this is a contrast to the goal—the ultimate goal of communication or communion—because it's the blockage of communication that keeps you from the holy instant and keeps you in the orphanage, keeps you suffering.

The sick attraction of guilt must be recognized for what it IS.

See, if it said, "The great attraction to the wonders that guilt can perform, are . . ." you would all be listening. You might waver a little bit in your enthusiasm, but you would listen just in case you might hear something useful. You really would. But to say:

The sick attraction of guilt . . .

Wow, that's depressing isn't it. The attraction of guilt is sick. It's mentally deranged. It's insane. And to be attracted to it is not to be in your right Mind. So call a spade a spade.

The sick attraction of guilt must be recognized for what it IS.

Sick!

For having been made real to you, it is essential to look at it clearly, and by withdrawing your INVESTMENT in it, to learn to let it go.

In other words, to begin to make the shift in the way you're being.

No-one would choose to let go what he believes has value. Yet the attraction of guilt has value to you only because you have NOT looked at what it is, and have judged it completely in the dark.

You see, everybody's been doing it. And as you grew up, everybody helped you understand how to do it. Everyone showed you how somebody else was doing it to you. And they showed you how to do it to them. And all the while nothing occurred to cause you to question whether the premise for your conscious awareness of being was correct or not—at least not immediately—and so being an orphan and using guilt to accomplish things, and becoming a better and better independent authoritative presence, all of that seemed unquestionably natural and not worthy of challenge.

So guilt had value for you. And it didn't make you feel guilty, because it was the standard operating procedure.

But the point is, that it left you empty of your Birthright, empty of your freedom, empty of the experience of your wholeness, and mostly, absent the experience of invulnerability. And without the experience of invulnerability available to you—even though it's your Birthright—you exist in a state of fear and guilt that generate the use of fear and guilt in order to survive, which actually secures you more and more solidly in ignorance.

We're just undoing that. We are constantly . . . I am constantly confronting you with a different view, another way of looking at it. And not just another way of looking at it, but the way of stepping out of ignorance entirely, so that you're able to experience everything from innate intelligence, flawless intelligence established in you by That which formed you and withheld nothing of what It was from you in Its forming you: The Father, God, the Life Principle . . . whatever you want to call It.

As we bring . . .

. . . the value of guilt, or your belief in its value.

As we bring it to light, your only question will be why it was you EVER wanted it. You have nothing to lose by looking open-eyed at this, for ugliness such as this belongs not in your holy mind.

The host of God CAN have no real investment here.

Now, I must touch on something that we discussed last week . . . bring it forward again: If you use the body for communication when it is not a means of communication, because it isn't matter, you cause it to be experienced as matter—governed by laws of physics, apparently capable of sin, disease and death.

As long as you think that you are a body with a mind somewhere inside it, you are trapped. You are literally immobilized and you try to use the body to communicate. You use it to communicate and you also use it to secure its ongoing existence. In other words, you will use your body to defend it against it being damaged by someone else attempting to damage it.

Now the actual fact which we discussed last week is, that there is no matter whatsoever, whether we're talking about a table, a piece of wood, a toenail, a thumb, a body, a planet. It's all idea. They are all ideas—the present manifestation of Living Mind being Conscious, and by virtue of being Conscious, having All to be Conscious of.

The Holy Instant and Communication is being discussed because it is only the communication of ideas that constitutes communication. And ideas are of God and are therefore, holy. And so, part of this shift of Being that you are moving into involves shifting from body identification to Mind identification. It's only as Mind that everything can function without the governance of the laws of physics in which entropy² is inherent and unavoidable. Entropy is impossible to Mind. Entropy is impossible to Creation. So if you don't want to experience the various forms of entropy that you seem to suffer from now, you must be willing to make this shift from body identification to Mind identification.

Remember The Holy Instant and Communication. There is now, as opposed to past, present, and future. You let your attention be in the now. And then you let it be in the instant of now, which means you abandon thinking about tomorrow, you abandon thinking about what happened yesterday, and you let yourself be totally present in the instant you're in. Without all the thinking going on, you're confronted with a sizeless experience of peace.

The experience is one of Mind. You can still hear everything that is going on. If you move your hands you can feel your fingers. But there's perfect peace and there is an awareness that your environment is Mind and that all form is embraced within the conscious awareness that you are experiencing.

This is the groundwork for communication, the communication that this section is about, which primes you for the influx of, we'll say, the divine Will, the Father's perspective and not damnation, but the Father's Love embracing you, surrounding you, supporting you, blessing you, calling you Its own and presenting you with an undeniable experience of belonging and of fitting in with nothing lacking, and again, at the threshold of being able to engage in the dance of Life, infinite, moving conscious involvement.

Continuing . . .

We [have] said before that the ego attempt to maintain and increase guilt, but in such a way that you do not recognize what it would do to YOU. For it is the ego's fundamental doctrine that what you do to others YOU HAVE ESCAPED.

That's right, you think that if you make everyone else guilty you escape the experience of guilt for believing that you are something you're not—believing that you're an orphan, believing that you have a capacity to act independently and that you don't need anyone.

The ego wishes NO-ONE well.

Certainly, the ego wishes no one unconditionally well, that would be a little bit too much intimacy. You wish everyone well a little bit, if it suits you, if it meets your need . . . but don't get too close, don't let your privacy be interfered with or disrupted, because it's through the practice of it that you manage to become a real boy or a real girl.

The ego wishes NO-ONE well. Yet its survival depends on your belief that YOU are exempt from its evil intentions. It counsels, therefore, that if you are host to IT, it will enable you to direct the anger that it holds outward, thus PROTECTING you.

And mind you, remember again, that the only way any of this works or makes sense or seems functional, is within the context of your believing that you are a body and that the body is matter, and that Mind just happens to be the peak evolutionary result, which of course, man is the epitome of, you see.

Bullshit! It's not working! It's not really working for you! You don't have to keep honoring it, and reinforcing it by honoring it.

It counsels, therefore, that if you are host to IT, . . .

. . . the ego . . .

. . . it will enable you to direct the anger that it holds outward, thus PROTECTING you. And thus it embarks on an endless, unrewarding chain of special relationships, forged out of anger, and dedicated to but one insane belief; that the more anger you invest OUTSIDE yourself, the safer YOU become.

Now, can you do anything to improve the situation? Is there anyway for you to continue to be or conceive of yourself as a body that communicates with other bodies by means of being a body?

There simply is no benefit in continuing to operate in a context that is flawed, in which there is no truth.

It is this chain that binds the Son of God to guilt, and it is this chain the Holy Spirit would remove from his holy mind.

The Son of God's holy Mind.

For the chain of savagery belongs not around the chosen host of God, who CANNOT makes himself host to the ego. In the name of his release, and in the Name of Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . Who would release him, let us look more closely at the relationships which the ego contrives, and let the Holy Spirit judge them truly. For it is certain that, if you will LOOK at them, you will offer them gladly to Him.

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

What HE can make of them you do not know, but you will become willing to find out, if you are willing, first, to perceive what YOU have made of them.

I'm going to say, "If you're willing to perceive first, that you have made of them what they are."

You see, because you think you are thinkers you have thought about everything, at least everything that's gotten your attention. And you have, through the use of your thinking, arrived at an opinion, or an evaluation, or a definition about whatever it was that you gave your attention to. And then you have believed that your definition was what the thing was, or who the brother was. And you have gone through your life, as I've said before, apparently responding to your world, but actually responding to the definition of your world that you have set in place, for it.

That's just the way you thought it worked. And so that's just what you did. So, now someone says, "You must be willing to look at what you made of them." You say, "Well, I didn't make anything of them." But you did. And if you're willing to look at what you made of them, or if you're willing to look at just the fact that you made them up, and used your definition instead of them as the thing you respond to, you have been out of touch with Life. And correction of your perception needs to occur so that you're not stumbling where dancing ought to be happening.

Again, referring to the Son of God:

In the name of his release, and in the Name of Him Who would release him, let us look more closely at the relationships which the ego contrives, . .

. . . now, that doesn't mean, let's study the awful facts. It means, here is a wonderful thing to do, here is a wonderful avenue to move down that is an avenue of release. And it will be an avenue of release because it will not convict you of anything and incarcerate you and immobilize you from the dance of Life. By being willing to go down this avenue and . . .

. . . look more closely at the relationships which the ego contrives, and let the Holy Spirit judge them truly . . .

. . . it will be a joyous thing that will result . . . in what? Salvation, rather than damnation.

So . . . so, when you read this, read it with a friendly attitude, read it as though it's good news . . . because it is.

For it is certain that, if you will LOOK at them, you will offer them gladly to Him. What HE can make of them you do not know, but you will become willing to find out, if you are willing, first, to perceive what YOU have made of them.

Now we're going to stop there. But I want to end with what we started with, so that it feels like what we're talking about is a blessing.

Forgiveness lies in communication as surely as damnation lies in guilt. It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function . . .

. . . and I will say, it is the Holy Spirit's glad teaching function . . .

. . . to instruct those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION.

Communication is you, no longer being in isolation. Communication is you, knowing to the core of your Being, that you're not alone. Communication is you experiencing the fact that you fit in, that you belong, and that fulfillment, not damnation is yours to be experienced—not a pipe dream, not a fantasy.

I look forward to being with you next week.

And don't shy away from this. Don't become immobilized for fear of loss of something, or for fear of becoming in receipt of something that you're not sure you want. And don't let the ego suggest that whatever it is, because it will be so grand, it will be totally overwhelming to you and drive you insane.

Embrace the holy instant.

Last week I suggested you read this section that we started reading tonight. This week I'm going to ask you to go back to the beginning of the Chapter we're reading and read it from the beginning to this point. You're going to find it so much fuller of meaning than it did a few months ago when we started reading it. And it will be confirming and reassuring to you that you are learning. And I want you to have that experience.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 1st 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We ended up last week considering this:

. . . let us look more closely at the relationships which the ego contrives, and let the Holy Spirit judge them truly.¹

Now let's be clear, that when we're using the word, "relationships," it doesn't just mean relationships—human being to human being.

You are in relationship with absolutely everything in the Universe.

Your relationship with the moon may be a long distance relationship, but you have a relationship with it. So let's keep clear that we're not speaking exclusively about relationships—one-on-one with a brother or a sister.

. . . let us look more closely at the relationships which the ego contrives, and let the Holy Spirit judge them truly. For it is certain that, if you will LOOK at them, you will offer them gladly to Him. What HE can make of them you do not know, but you will become willing to find out, if you are willing first, to perceive what YOU have made of them.

And we discussed clearly last week that absolutely everything you are aware of, that you have given your attention to, you have defined. Some things you may have defined by means of mutual agreement and discussion with brothers, and some of the definitions you may have come up with in a solitary study of this, that or the other thing. But the fact is that you have given meaning to everything you're presently aware of. Now the meaning is the "fleshing out" of your relationship with that thing. It's that simple.

So, what the Holy Spirit can make of your relationships you do not know. And the reason you don't know is because what the Holy Spirit will make out of them is a true experience of them, where you are not blinded by your definition any longer and you are able to look at a thing and see it as It is, to see It as God is meaning It in this very moment by Being all there is to It, Being all there is to the idea that that thing Is, instead of the material object that you have defined it as.

What HE can make of them you do not know, but you will become willing to find out, if you are willing first, to perceive what YOU have made of them.

Okay, again, being willing to recognize that you have made of everything something that is uniquely defined by you.

That is the first step in being willing to become curious: To ask the Holy Spirit, "Well, what is this thing really then? If it's not what I think it is, if it's not the definition I made up or if its not the definition that others made up and gave to me, what is it?"

Once you realize that what you're seeing is made up, it will become easier to become curious and to say: "Father," or "Holy Spirit, what is the meaning of this?"

Now (serious stuff here):

In one way or another, every relationship which the ego makes is based on the idea that by SACRIFICING itself, it becomes BIGGER. The "sacrifice," which it regards as purification, is actually the root of its bitter resentment. For it would much prefer to attack directly, and avoid delaying what it REALLY wants.

Well, what does it really want? It wants control. And it wants to control circumstances and people and things that it's in relationship with for the purpose of benefitting it right now. And what benefit does it want? It always wants relief from not being real. It always wants relief from being an orphan. It always wants relief from suffering. It wants relief from isolation. It wants relief from being alone—utterly alone.

Now . . .

Yet the ego acknowledges "reality" as it sees it, and recognizes that no-one could interpret DIRECT attack as love. Yet to make guilty IS direct attack, but does not SEEM to be.

Why? If to make guilty is a direct attack, why would it not seem to be? Because, it says here:

For the guilty EXPECT attack, and having ASKED for it, . .

. . . by their expectation . . .

. . . they are ATTRACTED to it.

Okay . . . how does this relate to any of you?

Have you been sacrificing? Do you think that by sacrificing you're increasing yourself? Do you participate in sacrifice as a means of purification?

Well, not that you've thought about. So what in the heck is this talking about?

The ego . . .

. . . would much prefer to attack directly, . .

. . . is that about you?

Yet to make guilty IS direct attack, but does not SEEM to be.

Well, one thing is for sure: At this juncture in reading this book, you do know that you're not utterly happy campers, you know that you aren't experiencing bliss all the time, you know that things are rugged and you know—because it's becoming clear—that you really haven't been in communication with God. You've been very busy taking care of your life. And when things really get rough, and your attempts to exercise authority and free will—which it's your Birthright to express—when that isn't meeting the need, then you will sit down, turn to God and attempt to have a talk with Him.

If you do hear Him and you are blessed with healing or correction of the problem, when you arrive at the point where you're no longer feeling helpless because you're feeling the strength and the support of your union with the Father, you say in so many words, "Okay, thank you God. You've gotten me back to the place where I can take care of myself and I know that was the whole point, because you gave me free will and you set me free to exercise it and grow and learn, and so I'm going to take on the task again."

But that wasn't the lesson. That wasn't the lesson that awaited you.

The lesson that awaited you was for you to discover that in all of the prior times that you had been behaving independently and expressing free will, you had not been in your right Mind and you had not been experiencing the fulfillment of Being that it's your Birthright to be experiencing, because you are your Father's Son, you are your Father's Daughter, not an independent agent.

And in that discovery and the blessing of it, the lesson was for you to say, "Wow, I'm not going back to the expression of free will. I'm not going to go back into the concept that I'm here to do things on my own and that that is what God created me for. I am going to value this partnership and I'm going to stay with it, no matter what temptations come my way."

If you're not Awake right now, then no matter what blessings you had from temporary joinings with the Father, you opted for your independence. You opted for your orphanhood.

Now, I can't repeat this too often because you cannot afford to hear it too often. Why? Because it serves as the basis—the springboard for Waking up.

When you opt for independence, you opt for an experience of two things: Fear and guilt. They are inseparable. Fear and guilt become the environment in which you live in the Kingdom of Heaven but unconscious of it. It becomes the environment in which you relate to the Sons and Daughters of God—your Brothers and Sisters—without being conscious of them. It becomes the environment in which you have to learn to cope with fear and guilt.

Now fear and guilt cause frustration when it is experienced endlessly. Fear, guilt and frustration result in action. What is the action? Always, it's anger. There is no other action that can follow the interminable experience of fear, guilt and the frustration that it creates.

And so, as an orphan in the orphanage, your behavior is constituted of expressions of anger.

Now, there's something important to understand here, however, about anger. Why would you feel anger? Why would you be angry?

If indeed to be an orphan, to have free will, to be expressing your Birthright as an independent, autonomous entity, why—if that's normal—would you be angry? Why would there be fear and why would there be guilt to cause the frustration that causes the anger?

Well, the anger is actually your innate sanity. In spite of the definition you've given yourself, in spite of the definitions of you that everyone else has given you, you haven't stopped being what you divinely Are. And you know that it's illegitimate for you to be interminably experiencing fear and guilt and frustration. But because you've forgotten who you Are, you don't realize that the anger is your righteous indignation—I mean, an indignation that arises out of a true perception of what you divinely Are. It is illegitimate for you to be experiencing fear and guilt and frustration interminably. And you know it!

Now obviously, the correction of the problem lies in undoing the divorce you got from your Father—undoing the steps you took to establish a state of independence. But when you've forgotten who you Are, when you have forgotten that you are the holy Son or Daughter of God, you don't remember that that divine status of you, Itself, constitutes the authority for abandoning orphanhood, the authority for dismissing fear and guilt and frustration from your experience by your re-uniting with the Father—rejoining consciously your Source. You forget that.

And so, this sanity that knows what you're experiencing is illegitimate, gets expressed by an orphan in an orphanage where he is in constant and only relationship with other orphans, and the only option available is the exercise of control and, as we discussed last week, the laying on of guilt upon your brothers and sisters so that you can be free of it, so you don't have to experience responsibility for it. You see?

Now, when you get hooked in this style of relating to everything, . . .

When you get caught in this style of relating to everything, you have shifted into a state of sacrifice. First of all, by getting your divorce, you've sacrificed your conscious experience of your Birthright. You have sacrificed the on-going experience of the fact that you have a Father. Then, when you do not comprehend the experience of sanity, which occurs that is felt as anger but I have described as "righteous indignation," you demand that your brothers and sisters sacrifice for you to relieve you, you think, or so the ego suggests, of your experience of having sacrificed something terribly valuable.

And, so guilt and blame are directed at your brothers and sisters so that you might be free of it, and the sacrifice that you're experiencing gets laid on them so you won't have to experience it. And what happens? The interesting thing is, that because all of your brothers and sisters that you're with are also in the orphanage, meaning they're operating from the same mind-set and the same flawed perceptions, they are feeling guilty. And because they're feeling guilty, they're waiting for the axe to fall. You see.

And that's what this means:

Yet to make guilty IS direct attack, but does not SEEM to be. For the guilty EXPECT attack, . .

. . . the guilty expect the axe to fall . . .

. . . and having ASKED for it, . .

. . . by expecting it . . .

. . . they are ATTRACTED to it.

And I will add . . . that not only are all of you attracted to it, and not only do you expect it, you accept it when it shows up. And of course it's going to show up because of the crowd you're hanging out with, you know, a huge group of guilty bastards . . . right? . . orphans!

So they're waiting for you to lay your guilt trip on them to get free of guilt. But you know what? While you're busy doing that, you're consciously or unconsciously waiting for them to lay their guilt trip on you because you deserve it because you are guilty. You see, as we said last week, it's a really sick, symbiotic relationship.

All relationships engaged in by those who are choosing to believe that they are orphans, are sick.

Now, [chuckle] the truth that you need to see can be very depressing. It could be very depressing to me if I looked at you the way you look at yourselves. And if I looked at you seeing the determination you have for holding on to the way you see things, it could make me feel that it would be impossible to help. But it's not. And so, although I am making something very clear here, it is something that needs to be seen so that it can be released—not reacted to.

Now, this point of sacrifice is very important. Especially when it comes to what we're talking about: The Holy Instant and Communication.

It has been said that the devil is a liar and the father of the lie.

The ego is a liar and the father of the lie—the idea of the lie, the thought of the lie. Everything about it is destructive because as we read last week, it blocks communication . . . communication meaning, your reunion with your Father, your reuniting with your Father. Another way of putting it is, your presenting yourself as a Son or your presenting yourself as a Daughter, meaning that you are something that is in unalterable and permanent relationship. The ego constitutes the blocking of that communication—of that Knowing that it's your Birthright to be experiencing of the truth about you.

Now the simple fact is, that if you're not careful, you can fool yourself into believing that you're doing alright when you're not.

Now I'm going to get heavy-handed here: Sacrifice is what the ego requires. And you know what? The ultimate sacrifice that all of you are bound to pay as long as you insist on hesitating to claim your place as a Son or Daughter of God, is death.

Now, no matter how much you've read the Course, no matter how long you've listened to me, you still tend to say: "Well, I don't know anyone other than Jesus who didn't die—who overcame death—so I won't make that demand on myself this lifetime. I know that in spite of the truth that I'm hearing, there's no death . . . I know that in spite of the fact that I might die, there is no death."

Some of you say, "Well, I wouldn't want to live to be two-hundred anyway. I don't want to be around here that long. I want to get on to other new adventures—other experiences of life. Why would I want to hang around, especially after all my friends have gone? I wouldn't want to get to be more than eighty-five." You see.

Why the hell not? Why not live forever? Why not be without going through some miserable experience called "death" so that you might have another lifetime and repeat the death . . . and another lifetime and repeat the death . . . along with all of the suffering and physical diseases and traumas and damages that occur throughout a lifetime because you don't know about your invulnerability from it, or you just don't want to take that radical of stand or that radical a step in this lifetime.

And so you say, "I will accept from God all the blessings that He will send to me in this lifetime and hopefully, I'll learn enough to be able to be more graceful and more consistent with the truth of me in the next lifetime."

That's sacrifice . . . that is sacrifice that you value. And I say you value it because there are no red flags going up in your mind saying, "STOP THAT! This is insanity!" This anger that you have about the human condition and the way you use it to manipulate your brothers and sisters, is not there for that purpose. It's there to serve as a red flag, so that if injury occurs or sickness occurs, the flag goes up and you don't say, "Well, what can you expect?"

We've talked in the last few weeks about radical idealism becoming practical realism.

To leave this place doesn't require that you die. That's like saying, if you want to go to Hawaii, you've got to die. No! You can get on a plane, or you can get on a ship, or maybe in the clearer experience of what you divinely Are, you can [snaps fingers] simply teleport.

You know what? Sacrifice is for the shits! There is no value in it. It's a delaying tactic. It simply blocks realization. It blocks healing. And recognizing that and noticing red flags going up when you're confronted with some illegitimate deprivation, that's an indication of Waking up. And it's an indication that you're not valuing sacrifice anymore. And it's an indication that you're getting the message—that you're hearing and understanding what I'm talking about.

Now, teenagers aren't much interested in considering abandoning sacrifice because they think they're not sacrificing anything whatsoever. And thirty year olds or forty year olds aren't much thinking about it either, although things are beginning to give them pause so that maybe they're considering God a little bit more, but they're still not really, as a general rule, looking at the ultimate sacrifice. But get to be sixty, get to be seventy, get to be eighty and now there's a willingness to look at what I'm talking about, but then the tendency is to say, "Well, I'm tired out. There's not enough time for me to get it. I probably won't get it. You know, this needs correction or that could be fixed. But what's the point? I don't have that long left."

But on the other hand, if you knew you had another five thousand years left, would you put up with or would you tolerate an ache or a pain or a blurred vision or a canker sore on your lip? No! A red flag would go up, you'd say, "Man, a canker sore on my lip for eternity, that would be hell, not heaven!"

Now, when you put up with little discrepancies, when you put up with little irritations or when you put up with things that are bigger but don't incapacitate you, you're just valuing sacrifice and you're employing sacrifice. And although on the one hand you fool yourself into thinking that that's okay, on the other hand, you're pissed off underneath. But you say, "There's nothing I can do about it, except I can blame everyone else for it. And I can mistreat them and I can abuse them to get them to make me feel better. And so I'll do that rather than abandoning what's creating my problem."

So you engage in sacrifice. You frustrate the hell out of yourself by doing it. And then you blame others so you won't have to feel the distress. And you can get them to comfort you and to do things that you think will make it all worth while until you can finally die, which you have no compunctions about, "Hell, everybody's done it. [chuckles] I'm not gonna expect anything different."

Well, that's what should be on every gravestone, "I didn't expect anything different." [audience laughter]

You know, when we talk about sacrificing your life, whether it's from old age or from serious injury or accident, we're talking about something that needs correction, we're talking about something that is the result of an act you engaged in that you can undo. And you undo it by indulging in and engaging in the holy instant—"that place" where you have abandoned thinking but you haven't abandoned being conscious. And you allow yourself to be present with everything as conscious awareness, with the curiosity to know of That which made It All, what the truth about It is, because you're the Son or Daughter, you're the Expression of That which made It All.

When you engage in that conscious joining, you move into that place where the laws of God prevail and nothing else does. You give to God His Fatherhood by rejoining with Him and you get to keep your Sonhood, your Sonship, your Daughterhood—you get to have It once again because you're not blocking It.

And so, in the holy instant in which communication occurs, connection—conscious two-way connection—occurs, communion occurs, suddenly God's laws once again prevail as your conscious experience. They never stopped prevailing, but you lost the conscious experience of them prevailing and you have the conscious experience of them once again.

What's happened? Oneness has been established. What you give you get to keep. That means the stability of unity has replaced the chaos of divorce, the chaos of separation.

Where God's laws prevail, you Are. And you will find yourself to be forever the epitome of the perfect Expression of God. Disease will be absent. Deformity will be absent. Sickness will be absent. Death will never be imagined. Damage or injury or any limitation that's inconsistent with the infiniteness of God that you might have been experiencing before the holy instant, will no longer be present. You will no longer seem to be old.

And if you decided to embrace the holy instant three minutes before you were going to die, having lived to be a hundred and twelve years old, feeble and almost not functional, you will find all that crap gone. You will find the perfectly stable—in balance--manifestation of God that God is Being and has been Being as You all along. It will be present. It will be what you're conscious of. You won't be three minutes away from your death, nor will you be old and feeble. And I'll tell you: You, in your full conscious awareness of yourself, will realize that you're far older than a hundred and twelve years, that you are eternal, and have forever been.

What you need to understand as we're reading all of this is, that you're engaged in a process of abandoning illusions for Reality—for a distorted experience of Being, to a clear minded divine experience of Creation in the middle of Creation happening, in which you are no more separated from It All than God is, nor are you any less aware of It in all of Its infinite detail and variety than God is, where you will sit at the threshold of the unexpected and not be ill-at-ease because you're out of control, not be ill-at-ease because you haven't designed, consciously designed, the next moment in all of its infiniteness. And you will sit with God at the threshold of the Movement of Being that's called and looks like and feels like Creation, in absolute perfection.

Now, we're talking about making a shift—not through death—from misunderstanding to clarity to understanding. We're talking about the Son of God abandoning a poor use of his mind and making room for the original function of his Mind, by invitation, so that what happens is a sudden shift of perception—a miracle.

Now, these sudden shifts of perception had better include the disappearing of a wart or the correction of vision, or the instantaneous eradication of injury and its effects. Hell, this is called, A Course in Miracles! It's about the miraculous, not the ordinary, not the orphanage.

So don't be so lackadaisical because, as you can see, in your lackadaisicalness you're embracing sacrifice and you're reinforcing . . . well, you're reinforcing the repetitive experience of dying, which won't work . . . which is why there's another chance to die . . . and it won't work . . . but it provides another opportunity to die—to suffer—to not feel your righteous indignation for what it is, but to experience it as anger rather than the clear awareness that what you're experiencing is illegitimate and doesn't have to be tolerated and you don't even have to annihilate it.

You simply have to not embrace it anymore because the red flags went up and you said, "Oh-h, no thank you. I'm not accepting the invitation. I'm declining the invitation. Father, what is the truth here? I refuse . . . I refuse to attend the banquet at the orphanage, where they're recruiting new orphans from amongst the Brotherhood of God. No, no way."

Be careful! There are many ways in which you have justified death. And there are many ways in which you have justified sin and disease. And in many cases they've been elevated to places of honor: "Oh, she deserves to be a Saint. He deserves to be a Saint. He sacrificed for the benefit of everyone his whole life."

Wow, you hear that and you say, "Maybe . . . maybe there's some benefit for me in that kind of sacrifice. I don't really want to engage in it, but if the pay-off is really good, it might be worth it. And so I'll play the fool for so-and-so. I'll be less than the holy Son of God that I am for the gold star, so that I can sit next to the Son of God in Heaven—all the while on the bus or the streetcar or the plane, you're sitting next to the holy Son of God already!"

Why do you think you're suddenly going to recognize that you're sitting next to the Son of God after you die . . . because you sacrificed so well? You're not!

That's the bad news that is the good news. And I tell it to you so you don't keep running after this carrot, thinking you're actually going to benefit from it.

You don't like bad things to happen, but you're not surprised when they do. Why not? Um, because you deserve it or probably you deserve it. "Oh, it's bad karma. It's from something I did in the last lifetime." See, I mean, you can pull up justifications for what's illegitimate from any imaginative source. And why do you even do it? Why do you indulge in it? Because you're feeling guilty—because guilt and fear go hand-in-hand. When you've lost communication—not communication with each other, but communication with your Source—you've lost communication with That which is responsible for your Being. And the holy instant is the reestablishment of that communication.

Now, we only got through one paragraph tonight.

You know what . . . even if at the moment you can't seem to see the possibility of radical idealism becoming practical realism, at least notice during this coming week when you're not willing to embrace it as a possibility, at least notice when you are feeling that the probability is, that there won't be any translation of radical idealism into practical realism . . . at least notice it! Oh I know, you're gonna say, "How depressing!"

If it's depressing, it means you don't know what to do with a trigger to a lesson, you don't know what to do with a trigger to a learning.

If you actually realize the degree to which you confine yourself to an orphanage, in which the experience of fear and guilt, frustration and the ultimate expression of anger is a never ending environment of your Being, you will actually begin to think that there might be some practicality in trying out something different, not just having a positive attitude, but actually attempting to find out whether it's true that there is such a thing as a holy instant, and that it's experienced when you're willing to dishonor all of the meanings you've given to everything and engage in a curiosity to know what everything really is and to want to find out what it is from your Father, or from the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

Now that's one of the best kicks in the seat of the pants that I've given in a long time. And as you experience levitation and fly through the air a little bit, at least say, "Wow, I haven't had this experience before. Man, he administers a swift kick, but wow, I'm levitating . . . I'm going to embrace what he's saying."

The fact is, that no matter how much you value sacrifice, it will never be accomplished. And an eternity of never accomplishing something is not what you were created for.

I love you. And I look forward to being with you next week. And I hope you look forward to being with me next week, because you're not sacrificing as much as you have been. And you are joy-ing in the freedom.

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 8th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

"Our Father . . . Our Father." That sort of undoes isolation right there, right?

"Our Father, Who art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy Name. Thy Kingdom come, Thy Will be done" . . . where? "On Earth, as it is in Heaven."

That's another way of talking about translating radical idealism into practical realism. You see? It's not such a novel idea, after all. But it does stimulate the words, "translating radical idealism into practical realism," . . . does render the meaning more meaningful. It stimulates a higher and greater expectation than the words "Thy Will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven." And it's important for you to have words to use that stimulate you further than you have been stimulated in the past.

Now I know that this last week some of you did pay attention, not so much to how many times you were open to and conscious of a need for things to be translated from radical idealism to practical realism, and I'm aware that there are of those of you who didn't even think about it, not really because you were neglectful but because your daily experience engrossed you quickly and got your attention and sucked you in. And you just began to deal with your week out of habit with whatever degree of authority you have brought into play in your life. And actually, it's right now, as I'm talking to you, that you're realizing that you missed out on a dimension of your week that you could've had.

I'm not scolding you in any way. I understand completely. But this week I'm going to give you the same task, if you will. This week I'm going to ask you to put a note on your refrigerator, or on the wall beside your toilet, or on the dashboard of your car, or on the inside of your appointment book. Put a note to remind yourself because it is going to make a difference if you take the time, many times a day, to look at whatever is going on and acknowledge that there's more going on than the meanings you've applied to everything that's happening.

There are things going on that are radically ideal. There are things going on that are the Kingdom of Heaven in action because there really is nothing else in action at any given moment. And so, there is something radically ideal right there in front of you at any given moment for you to be experiencing clearly without distortion, without distraction.

Now, guilt and fear and frustration and anger, these are all well-established habits that you're going to have to break.

You're going to have to break them because it's time to Wake up. It's time not to be ignorant of the truth. It's time to no longer be suffering from ignorance.

"Oh, gee, I'm not suffering from ignorance. I'm doing quite well, you know. Things happen in my life. I cope with them well. I cope with them intelligently. And as a general rule, I always come out on top and everyone around me is blessed in some way as a result of the principled way in which I handle things and the value I give to principle and love and beneficence, and the fact that I expect to see those things surface and manifest in my life and in the lives of those around me."

But you know what? You can't afford to be too pleased with yourselves.

Now why do I say that? I say that because if you are too satisfied with yourselves, if you are too comfortable, you will have a lower level of curiosity that you bring to every moment of your being conscious. And, with a lower level of curiosity, there's no way you're going to have the experience of radical idealism being translated into practical realism that is, for lack of better words, miraculous, indicative of the Presence of God, indicative of the Kingdom of Heaven instead of material existence as you've been viewing it.

None of you realizes the extent to which that which is less than the best, that which is less than optimal, is valued—and pleasure is gotten from valuing it.

For example: Ignorance instead of omniscience. Omniscience is to know everything. Ignorance is to not know everything . . . but what? Instead of not knowing everything and being uncomfortable and insisting upon getting back to your Birthright, which is omniscience . . . what happens? You look at ignorance and you say, "Ah-h, this means there is much for me to discover. Why, I could discover things that will change life on earth. I could be another Galileo. I could be another Newton. I could be another Einstein."

You find great value in the presence of ignorance because it implies the opportunity for discovery. And you value discovery. You value discovery, why? Because it's exciting to be involved in discovery. It invigorates anyone who's discovering something for the first time, even if it's coming over the crest of the hill and seeing a view that you've never seen before.

Besides it being invigorating, if you are the discoverer, you get credit for the discovery and you might get appreciation, and people might value you for it. And at the bottom line, this contributes to your becoming a "real boy" or a "real girl" you see, as opposed to just an orphan.

So who would really want to experience omniscience if it takes away the excitement of discovery, the satisfaction of being the one that discovered it—the ego satisfaction of being the one who discovered it—and if you're going to lose the admiration of your fellowman, and if you're going to lose the opportunity to have far reaching benefits to your fellowman? Who would give up such valuable stuff in order to be omniscience, in order to know everything and have no questions? You see. In other words, who would really want to be Awake?

So you value ignorance more than you value being Awake. And as a result, you will not bring into play the curiosity that is appropriate.

You see, things are a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync. You value things. You value ignorance. You value being in the dark. You value being an orphan, because of all the potentials for expansion that it provides you.

But I want to bring out something here: If you were to say, "Our Father Who art in Heaven," if you would reach out, not just to "a God," but your Father, and you joined with Him and you let His Perspective fill you because it is your native perspective, because you are His Creation, you won't need to engage in discovery for your sake, because you will stand with the Father in the holy instant, the instant of Creation. And in that experience of the holy instant, Being is Itself, the action of discovery. Creation is the discovery of that which hasn't been before.

You think you're going to lose the capacity to discover things that will make you substantial and important and valuable? No. You're going to stand in the midst of Creation, involved in the conscious Movement of Creation, by not having a mind held separate from the Father so that you experience the Movement of Being—which is called Creation—with the Father and find yourself at Home . . . find yourself at Home.

Now that's the Reality. That's the radically ideal translated into the practically real for you, when you indulge in and practice the holy instant and you become free of the bondage—the addiction to trying to make a “real boy” or “real girl” out of yourself by valuing ignorance and the overcoming of it.

Now there are many other areas, all of which subtly affect you or not so subtly affect you, and which you practice consciously or unconsciously. For example: Mortality is profitable. Mortality is a big money-maker.

What about life insurance—strange name for it—when it's “death insurance?” It guarantees a benefit that you will receive when you die. So you get a benefit . . . well not really . . . everyone else you love gets a benefit when you die. But in the meantime, your insurance agent gets a benefit for getting you to buy death insurance. The life insurance companies are benefitted and they become part of the engine of the economy of the country, or the world.

If you are a senior citizen—or even if you're not—and you have a wife and family and you find out you have a terminal illness, and the terminal illness is the result of some sort of abuse that you were the recipient of through employment, let's say, you can sue the company and make money because of your mortality. And as I've brought out before, in many cases the trial goes on and on and on, and as long as it goes on, you cannot afford to have a healing because then you will lose the justification for the benefit.

All upside down, backward thinking. Ah-h . . . you can even become so sick, as we talked about last week and the week before—demented, confused—that you could come to the conclusion that you're more valuable to your spouse dead than alive: “Don't you dare keep a life support system going and eat up all of our savings. I want you to have all the funds available to you that you're going to need. Don't you dare keep that plug in. I'm more valuable to you gone, than still here.”

You see, I'm going to say . . . is that not sick? But I know that there are those of you who will hear what I'm saying and know that I'm not comprehending the reality of the situation. I can appreciate that also.

What I'm trying to point out is, that you have made accommodations for something you shouldn't be suffering from: Mortality. And you need to stop doing it automatically, unthinkingly, without question!

Oh, you hear mothers say to their children, or their husbands or wives, "You're going to be the death of me yet!" You've heard the statement, "Think to be heard of God and speak to be heard of men."

You know what? Almost always, guilt is used for two reasons: To make someone feel guilty so that you can control them, or, and, to make points because you are sacrificing on the behalf of someone else—you are doing something that they don't deserve and therefore, you're making points with God.

"You'll be the death of me yet!" which is the curse: "Speak to be heard of men," but it's simultaneously in the mind . . . it says, "Thank you God, you'll be the death of me yet, thank God," because if you're a martyr, you may get to sit at the right hand of God. You may be turned into a saint. You see?

It's sick.

There's another way to be. And that's what we're talking about week after week. Another way to be means, Be-ing a different way, not just thinking a different way. It means breaking habits! Are you to feel guilty because you have the habits? No, because you've been taught to have them. You didn't have anyone to train you or provide you with a different perspective.

Now a different perspective is being provided. And in the process you're finding out that you're doing things that are not practical, that are not helpful, that are sick, that exhibit insanity. But these things aren't shared with you without equal attention being given to the fact that you have an innate, capital 'S,' divine Sanity that could never be taken away from you and therefore, is still present right where you are being the activity of consciousness, or of conscious Being that constitutes existence.

You're being told that there is a different perspective that is available to you if you can break the habit of spontaneously and habitually repeating the past.

Now, the holy instant is the threshold of escaping the past. It's the threshold of escaping the habits. It's the threshold of your placing your attention in a new place: In the Father or Source you didn't think you had that gives you an Identity that you didn't know you had.

Now we talked last week about the fact that guilt and fear ongoingly cause frustration, which ultimately cause you to take action because of the discomfort of it. And the action you take is expression of anger.

Again, I need to say that no matter how good your life is going, if you're not Awake at this moment, you're still in the realm of anger and its practice, even if it's only very subtle. And that's why I say, don't become too self-satisfied, because the use of anger must come to a stop and it won't if there is no conscientious effort made.

Now continuing from where we left off:

In these insane relationships, . .

. . . meaning the relationships where anger are used for control and where ignorance and mortality are used to supply meaning to life.

In these insane relationships, the attraction of what you do not want seems to be much stronger than the attraction of what you DO.

The use of anger for control works and so you use it. It's attractive to you. Whatever is attractive to you, whatever you find useful, draws to you those things that will bring it into play. It's that simple.

So you have to find something new that's attractive . . . like, "What's the truth here? What is the conscious experience of what is really going on that it's my Birthright to be experiencing even though I'm not. Father, please reveal it to me, You have my attention, the truth has my attention."

. . . the attraction of what you do not want seems to be much stronger than the attraction of what you DO. For each one thinks that he has sacrificed something to the other, and HATES him for it. Yet this is what he thinks he WANTS. He is not in love with the other at all.

And we're talking about special relationships. Special relationships are usury relationships. They are relationships used to get you what you want. And of course, the other one in the relationship is going to be doing the same thing. And so a healthy relationship is one in which you each let each other have what he wants, or she wants, without sacrificing what you think your integrity is.

And so it's a game. It's a mutual manipulation, "You stroke my back, I'll stroke yours, without my ever getting to know you and without your ever getting to know me and without our ever being real with each other."

He is not in love with the other at all. He merely believes he is in love with SACRIFICE.

"My family will be the death of me yet. By God that one needs that family to be the death of her or the death of him yet because of the kudos—the gold stars—that will be gotten for having endured." You see.

He is not in love with the other at all. He merely believes he is in love with SACRIFICE. And for this sacrifice, which he demanded of HIMSELF, he demands the OTHER accept the guilt, and sacrifice himself as well.

We talked about the fact last week that everybody thinks the ax is going to fall, everyone thinks he or she is guilty and that sooner or later their guilt will be found out or will be manifested in some sort of lack or bad luck as though karma is being played out. Again, another way of justifying sick thinking.

And what happens when you demand of the other that he sacrifice as well? The other does sacrifice as well, because he was expecting the ax to fall—he found the idea of axes falling, attractive. And thus, when an ax falls, it's expected and not contradicted, not resisted, not rejected. "Of course the ax fell. It was going to sooner or later. Things couldn't go smoothly indefinitely."

How many of you have had that very thought at one point or another? Really, every single one of you has. If things have gone well, you know, it's like, "Well when is . . ." (another saying) "When is the other shoe going to drop?" You see.

Forgiveness becomes impossible, for the ego believes that to forgive another is to LOSE him.

Now guilt is a wonderful leverage, if you can convince the other one that he's actually guilty. If you can get the other one to believe that he is guilty or if you can find one who's willing to believe he's guilty before you even tell him what he's guilty for, you have a good stooge—you have a good controlee. And as long as guilt is in place, you have a solid relationship with that one. That one, if you have the goods on him, is not going to do anything to cross you. And so you have a "bonded relationship," one in which he is in bondage to you. You see?

Forgiveness . . .

. . . which would be the opposite of holding one guilty . . .

. . . becomes impossible, for the ego believes that to forgive another is to LOSE him.

"Why, if I forgive him, [chuckles] he won't stick around. He won't be my friend. I'm nobody for anybody to be a friend to. Nobody likes me. Nobody will like me. So if I want to have someone in relationship with me, the only way I can do it is to find a way to make him or her guilty and then convince them that it's their pleasure to pleasure me—to take care of me, to do what I need in exchange for which I will praise them, but not without holding them to their guilt, you see.

Again . . .

Forgiveness becomes impossible, for the ego believes that to forgive another is to LOSE him. For it is only by attack WITHOUT forgiveness that the ego can ensure the guilt which holds all its relationships together.

Now, all of you to one degree or another do employ these tactics. You may not be a beginner in your Awakening and you may not be employing these practices with the diligence or the commitment that you used to, but you must be persistent enough to arrive at a point where you're neglecting to employ these in any way, shape or form. And that's what the holy instant is for.

Again . . .

For it is only by attack WITHOUT forgiveness that the ego can ensure the guilt which holds all its relationships together.

Yet they only SEEM to be together. For relationships, to the ego, mean only that BODIES are together. It is always physical closeness that the ego demands, and it does not object where the MIND goes or what IT thinks, for this seems unimportant.

Remember, we talked about the mind being the place where you can be private, where communication doesn't occur and that the use of bodies is where communication occurs. Again, a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync.

As long as the body is there to receive its sacrifice, it is content. To the ego, the mind is private, and only the BODY can be shared. Ideas are basically of no concern, . .

. . . to the ego . . .

. . . except as they draw the body of another closer or farther. And it is in these terms that it evaluates ideas as good or bad.

See, the only place in which ideas are given a context, an evaluation of such as good or bad, is how effectively those ideas cause bodies to behave together and communicate. And by means of that communication, accomplish the bondage that's called a loving relationship, a constructive relationship, a good business relationship, etc.

What makes another guilty and HOLDS him through guilt is "good."

I'm going to ask a straightforward question and I would like each of you in your mind to give the straightforward answer.

Are you loveable?

Or do you have to develop and use skills, whether constructive or destructive, to get people to pay attention to you, to be with you, to involve themselves with you?

Now the question was to you: Are you loveable? Which means, do you believe you are loveable. Do you experience yourself as loveable? The question wasn't, do other people think you're loveable. Be very clear about that. It doesn't matter what anyone else thinks!

To you, are you loveable? Are you in your own appraisal of yourself, your own experience of yourself, are you worthy of anyone else's genuine fulfilling attention and affection and friendship?

I know sometimes you feel that you are, and sometimes you feel that you aren't. But in all cases, the way you see yourself is going to absolutely govern the way you present yourself and are present with others. And the way you present yourself will elicit responses.

What is the holy instant for? The holy instant is for the experience of communication with your Father or, I'm going to say, communication with the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind. And in that communication, experiencing what you Are and who you Are—the truth about you, so that you're not confused about you and you're not publishing your confusion about yourself, so that when you're asked, "Are you loveable?" there's no question about it, "Of course." Except when you say, "Of course," it's like the universe standing with you, sings in chorus with you, . . . "Of course . . ."

Again, . . .

What makes another guilty and HOLDS him through guilt is "good."

According to the up-side-down, backward thinking of the ego, the orphan.

What RELEASES him from guilt is "bad," because he would no longer believe that bodies communicate, and so he would be "gone."

Right now you think you have a thought in your mind and no one else is there. In your mind you think everyone else is "gone." You see. But in the up-side-down, backward thinking . . .

What RELEASES him . . .

. . . your brother . . .

. . . from guilt is "bad," because he . . .

. . . your brother . . .

. . . would no longer believe that bodies communicate, and so he would be "gone."

In other words, in the realm of bodies he would be gone just like in the realm of the mind you think others are gone. But a shift occurs when you stop identifying yourself as a body and instead, allow your mind to register with you as that context in which the experience of bodies and all forms is occurring. Then the presence of others doesn't seem to be gone . . . don't seem to be gone . . . others don't seem to be gone any longer and mind no longer seems to be private.

You are going to have to arrive at a point where you let your brothers go, where you release them from your control of the presence of their bodies in your experience, so that they will stay there and so that they will appear to be a wonderful community, family, whatever you want to call it—a social group that validates every member of the group by its groupness.

Body identification is one of the habits that needs to be broken. And it will be broken when your attention and curiosity shifts from body and what bodies can cause to happen, to Mind.

Idea . . . ideal . . . ideals are mental . . . ideas are mindful. Radical idealism is Mind, is mindful. When you shift from body identification to mind identification, you begin to see radical idealism being translated into practical realism, which means your every experience . . . now . . . now . . . now . . . today . . . here . . . here . . . here. You see.

It isn't until you let go of the control of your brothers' bodies through the use of guilt, that you will find your brothers and sisters to be ever present with you in full communication, because all of you are, for lack of better words, the Father's Mind Knowing every aspect of Itself. Just as abandoning ignorance and the opportunity that it seems to provide for discovery, just as that puts you in the position of standing at the threshold of Creation, which is Itself infinite discovery forever, your abandonment of your brother as body and a thing to control by the use of body, which your ego says will constitute a disappearance of your brother, will constitute a replacement in which you experience your brothers and sisters infinitely—all at once, with full comprehension and full meaning, full communion, full brotherhood.

And so, what it appears that you will lose is miniscule, is very unsatisfying by comparison with what will replace it . . . as radical idealism is translated into practical realism.

I'm going to end tonight by simply reading the next sentence. It sounds like an indictment in a way, it sounds very negative. But what we've talked about has brought it into focus. I'll talk about it next week. But right now I want you to be willing to sit with it this week, because you know what? It makes the practice of unintelligence unattractive. And I've shared enough with you for you to know that there is something to replace it. And I want you to be with this so that you can see the unattractiveness and not want it anymore.

Suffering and sacrifice are the gifts with which the ego would "bless" all unions. And those who are united at its altar ACCEPT suffering and sacrifice as the price of union. In their angry alliances, born of the fear of loneliness and yet dedicated to the CONTINUANCE of loneliness, they seek relief from guilt by increasing it in the OTHER. For they believe that this decreases it in THEM. The other seems always to be attacking and wounding them, perhaps in little ways, perhaps "unconsciously," yet never without demand of sacrifice. The fury of those joined at the ego's altar far exceeds your awareness of it. For what the ego REALLY wants you do not realize.

We're reading about and considering the holy instant and communication. It's like the holy instant and the answer. We're discussing what the holy instant is the answer to. Don't gloss it over. I want all of you to understand completely what the holy instant and communication is the answer to, so that you might appreciate it fully, comprehend it fully, embrace it uninhibitedly.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with your next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 29th 2009

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're reading from a section entitled, The Holy Instant and Communication from a chapter entitled, The Purpose of Time. The purpose of time is to give you the opportunity to abandon time—to get out of time back into eternity, your Home, your starting Place, your forever existing Place, and the apparently future Place which you will experience as you abandon your intent to try to be independent from your Source.

Now, I'm going to put it this way: There is a transition that occurs. Because you experience yourself as separate from God, because you have intended to be separate by being an independent autonomous agent, you're in a position where, if you want to return Home and reconnect with your Father, you have to do it by means of communication because your sense of separateness is so definite. So you, from over here all by yourself, are going to communicate with your Father over here in the Kingdom of Heaven—somewhere else than where you are.

When you use or utilize the holy instant for reestablishing communication and you allow that reestablishment to occur so that communication is happening—apparently two-way dialogue—that's the beginning of a transition. You will not, however, forever stay in communication—two way dialogue—because as you communicate by means of the Holy Spirit, or by means of your connection with your Guide, a shift occurs and communication becomes communion—simultaneous inseparable Oneness. Communion . . . communion. It's a shift into that place where, as the Bible says, you “Let that mind be in you which was also in me.”

Communication transitions into communion. Communion becomes, for lack of better words, non-disintegrated conscious experience: integrated conscious experience.

Now, we started out the last time we met with the beginning of the Lord's Prayer and tonight I want to begin with the beginning of the Ten Commandments. The first one says, "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."² [Repeats] "Thou shalt have no other gods before me."

Now, in light of what we've been learning, that means: Listen to no other voice but Mine. "Thou shalt not listen to any other voice than Mine."

That means, thou shalt not listen first to your mother's voice, or your father's voice or your sister's voice or your brother's voice or your son's or daughter's voice, or your guru's voice. You will not listen to any of those first.

"Thou shalt not listen to any other voice than Mine." That choice and the experience of fulfilling that choice is what we've been talking about as the proper use of the holy instant, or the purpose of the holy instant to reunite that which was always One, which you, for a time, have believed was two.

I need to reiterate that the word, "communication" here, which is referred to as Salvation, is something far more than just you communicating with your brother, sister, mother, father, daughter, son, boss, relative, guru. It's far more than communication with a body. That's not what it's talking about.

That kind of communication which you have been engaged in, we'll say, for your whole life, does not constitute Salvation and you all know it hasn't. How do you know? You're not Awake. You're not free from sin, sickness and death. You're not truly and uninterruptedly happy and you don't feel like you're at Home.

Now, God is divine Mind. So the first Commandment means, "Thou shalt have no other mind but Mine"—God being the speaker. Your having the Mind of God as the forever-healed experience of your mind is the result of the holy instant in which communication transitions into communion.

Now the key here is, that the communication that constitutes Salvation is your ongoing conscious connection with the Father in which, no matter what is going on, you're always asking for, you're always desiring first to experience the Father's Perspective about whatever it is that is going on, so that when you interact with what is going on, the interaction arises from your conscious connection, your conscious communication, your conscious communion with God. It's this that constitutes Salvation. And it's simply this that is your goal, no matter how intellectually complicated or spiritually technically detailed you want to get.

So what we're saying is, that healing, the correction of illusions, arises out of communion, which arises out of communication in the holy instant to begin with.

Now, you can pray for that to happen and it is well to pray for that to happen. It is well for you to ask the Father or the Holy Spirit or me to fill you up with clear mental atmosphere, clear mental environment and to ask to be filled with the truth that heals. But you know what? It's not going happen by magic. It's not going to happen without your involvement.

Important: It's not going to happen without your involvement. Healing will not be done unto you.

You see, as we go into the book here, we start with this paragraph I read at the end last time that doesn't paint a very pretty picture:

Suffering and sacrifice are the gifts with which the ego would "bless" all unions.³

If you're not Awake, then you are constantly under the gun, so to speak, you are constantly vulnerable, you're constantly insecure, and you're constantly in need of somehow securing stability. And the only means that you have to accomplish that is through the communication of guilt.

You have to weasel your good out of your brother. It's that simple. And you do it because you're afraid. You're afraid because you're in the middle of insanity. You think that you're alone. You think you're independent. You think you have a God-given right, a Birthright, to make decisions for yourself and succeed all by yourself. That isn't true. And embracing that state and embellishing it causes fear. It also makes you feel guilty, because at the bottom line you know what you're trying to do isn't possible and you know that the accomplishment would constitute a lie about Creation, and absolute denial of your Father, of your Source, and that will never be comfortable.

So, all you little orphans work each other over so as to secure stability. It hasn't worked. But there is a way that works. And the way it works is that you have to abandon the idea that the only thing you have to work with are bodies, and that bodies communicate and that the purpose of communication is to coerce behavior that represents stability and safety for you.

From first to last, it's unkindness. It's an unkind behavior.

Now why am I saying this? Because there comes a point where you have to do something different and the "something different" is what we're reading about. It is engaging in and utilizing the holy instant.

If you want to see the correction of an illusion, whether it's illness, whether it's injury, whether it's blind obedience to drugs or alcohol, you're going to have to want to experience no other mind than God's Mind. You're going to have to want to have no other gods before God. And, I'm going to tell you flat out, that that is going to feel like an absolutely independent act—a very lonely act. But it will only seem that way by comparison with the environment that you will be emerging from.

Now, it's a time of year when there are many baby birds that are past the stage of being baby birds and they are still insisting upon pestering mommy to put food in their mouth. And even if mom is on a lawn or in an area where there's bird-seed and there's abundance of food, those babies have their eyes only on one place: Mommy's mouth. Why? Because from the first moment they think they can remember, that's how they were nurtured, that's how they felt good. And so here they are, perhaps walking around in half an inch of bird-seed on the ground, not seeing it because their eyes are focused on mom's beak and they're making raucous noise pestering her to feed them, which she does slowly . . . and manages to do evermore slowly.

Now, you know from watching them, that the time is going to have to come where they decide to notice what mom is doing and look down and see all this food, the seeds, or look down and here are the worms or the bugs, and take a bite themselves without relating that act of, I'm going to say sovereignty, to mom. It's like abandoning everything that's meaningful. It's like abandoning mom . . . abandoning all the feelings associated with mom.

To decide to take the bite yourself feels like abandoning mom. It's not easy and it feels like you're trying to be independent. It feels like you're doing something that's going to make you be lonely because mom won't be there . . . because you're gonna feed yourself? It doesn't make sense.

Now, the simple fact is, that when we're talking about the holy instant and when we're talking about hesitating and doing the two-step so that you say, "Father, what's the truth here?" what are you doing?

Well you're doing a few things: You're abandoning checking with your friends, or your guru or your mom . . . or whoever has explained life to you; your professor. And you are leaning into the answer from a direction that doesn't involve a relationship with those that you can see—all these bodies around you. It feels like an act of independence. It feels like doing something that makes you be alone. But mind you, this act that you're engaging in is a conscious act of joining with Something that you have not experienced communication with, much less communion with.

There comes a point in this apparent process of waking up, of coming back into your right Mind—your divine Sanity—and your rightful place in the Movement of Creation . . . there's comes a point at which you must stop leaning on and manipulating your brothers and sisters into being the source of your answers—the source of your reason for feeling stable.

If you've chosen well among your brothers and sisters, among those bodies with whom there seems to be communication, you will have been involved with those who point you in the direction that I'm pointing you in at this moment, that point you within to that very intimate, and we could say private, but I'm going to say, very intimate place of connection with your Source, where you lean into this Source and dare to entrust yourself to this action where you have no external proof of the validity or the dependability of what you're doing.

Until you, like the baby bird, get your own food for your own reasons, and that act doesn't put any of your brothers or sisters or mothers into a position of obligation to you that fulfills your dependence on them . . . until you do that, the full meaning and impact of the holy instant will elude you and you will not get out of the orphanage! "But I don't know how to do it." Then persist in doing a very simple thing: Persist in asking for help!

Now you notice that this communication that I'm describing isn't communication between bodies, is it? It's between you and God. It's between you and the Holy Ghost—you and the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind. It's all Mind. Communication, real communication, is all Mind.

Well you're not used to that. You don't think it happens. You think it only happens body to body. Or shall I say, body over body—bodies controlling bodies, bodies making bodies behave in a way that provides safety and security and, hopefully, self-respect.

Now, just as with the baby bird abandoning his mother as that which identifies his completeness, you will find yourself uncomfortable in abandoning your allegiance to your brothers and your misuse of them to provide you with a feeling of security and wholeness. And it will feel like a reckless and dangerous thing to do that will increase the vulnerability that you have used as justification for misusing your brothers and sisters.

That feeling of vulnerability that caused you to mistreat your brothers and sisters was a result of abandoning your Father, of getting a divorce, emancipating yourself from your Source and developing a sense of security from strange behaviors as an orphan.

“Thou shalt not listen to any other voice but Mine. Thou shalt not have any other mind but Mine.” These, at this point, are strange experiences, unfamiliar experiences. But you know what? You’re not going to shift into the actuality of them until you emancipate yourself from dependence upon your brothers and sisters to provide you with something that you already have by virtue of your Birthright, by virtue of what you truly Are.

Once the baby bird finds out that he can have more worms by going after them himself than he can have if he waits for mom to get one for him and one for his brother and one for his sister and one for his other brother, he’s going to go after the worms and to hell with mom [chuckle]. He found he doesn’t need her for that, he doesn’t need to make her function in that way.

Likewise, when you will dare to lean into the holy instant to establish communication with That which is bodyless—That which is not primarily a body—and you have the unfolding experience of the fact that you really are the Son or Daughter of Something Else, that you have a Source that you’re in inseparable relationship with already, a relationship which means that you’re whole, a relationship which means that you’re not subject to sin, disease and death, you will be glad to abandon what the Course speaks of as “special relationships.” And the abandoning of them will not seem like a loss to you at all.

And when that happens, you will apparently become an agent for change in the world, or shall I say, in the orphanage—not that the orphanage will be remodeled and revamped and made more spectacular for orphans to live in—but an agent for change in the sense that you say to the other orphans, “Hey, stop leaning on each other that way. You’re not orphans. Come on out of the orphanage and abandon all of the well-established activities that identify orphanhood—meaning abusing each other, meaning living in a constant state of fear, meaning seeming to be vulnerable, able to become sick, die, experience uncorrectable injury.

“Come on out from that. Stop bickering with each other. Stop trying to communicate with each other, just because you can see bodies, and that means that that’s what you must communicate with. Come out of that mindset and invite the holy instant, utilize the holy instant. Reach to that which is actually in you that is infinity, that is God, that is you in your infinite right Mind, in your infinite Sanity.

“And if it seems scary to you, persist anyway. Just like the baby bird arrives at a point where it must get its worm on its own and persist in it, even though the urge is absolute, it would seem, to run to mom and pester her to death . . . pester the heck out of her to get her to feed you.”

You will not discover your omnipotence, you will not discover your omnipresence, you will not discover your omniscience until you completely abandon leaning upon external sources for omniscience and omnipotence. But when you do abandon leaning on everything out there, omnipotence will become yours, omniscience—knowing everything—will become yours, omnipresence will become yours.

What will omnipresence mean? Well, it'll mean peace, because there's nothing outside of omnipresence to be at odds with it. Omnipresence means everything fits: You fit with everything, everything fits with you, you're all it and it's all you, infinitely. It means everything and more that's embodied in the word "Home"—everything you can imagine about the ultimate of "coming Home." It means that and infinitely more.

You know, you're cautioned not to lean unto your own understanding. And yet, you must, all by yourself, decide to lean into your right Mind—the Holy Spirit—and not renege on that decision, so that the Allness of what you Are might infill you and replace the sense of private, intimate aloneness that you're having to bring to bear in order not to be distracted by all the input you can get from everything out there, nor the relief that you might feel by being able to make everyone else and everything else responsible.

Hey, baby bird would love to make mom responsible for feeding him for the rest of his life, but he would never come into the conscious experience of what he is. He's a bird not a baby. He didn't show up in order to forever be a baby, a permanent dependent. And neither have you.

So, if you want to see healing, if you want to see the correction of illusions that you are suffering from, you must be willing to do one thing: Don't pray to have things fixed, still being unconscious yourself of any relationship with God, still not having experienced the holy instant because you never for a moment said, "Father, what's the truth here? What's the truth that shows the problem to be nonexistent because my fulfillment has never been altered in any way? What's the truth?"

If you ask for healing, if you desire healing, you're going to have to stop listening to other voices than God's Voice. That means that you're going to have to stop listening to the voice for fear in you, and you're going to have to stop letting it ramble, and you're going to have to stop stoking it with more and more bad news and more and more doubt and more and more personal energy of yours to rev it up. It means that you've got to use some self-discipline and stop doing what doesn't work, stop letting all these voices speak and register with you and cause you to get into a reaction with all of them. It's hell! . . . plain, pure and simple.

A Comforter was sent to everyone. The Comforter is your right Mind. The Comforter is the Holy Spirit. The Comforter was sent to you the moment you decided to try to be independent and to become a puppet without strings—a real boy in your own right. The moment you abandoned your right Mind, It was held in trust, ever present with you and forever insinuating Itself into your awareness to get your attention and bring you back into your full conscious awareness of what you divinely Are.

All we're talking about here is you making the choice to let your right Mind back in . . . by what? Having no other gods before God. Listening to no other voice than the Voice for Truth—God's Voice. Having no other mind but the Mind that is God. And hanging in there with doing that until you hear. And then invest your trust in what you're hearing, so that you're not going and checking with others to get validation. You see?

There comes a point at which the baby bird has to stop going to mother for validation of its ongoingness.

Now, you all know—any of you who have attempted this—that it feels very lonely and it feels like you're leaving everyone behind or pushing them away, shutting them out, not valuing them. It feels like the opposite of embrace.

Why, the Course talks about holy relationships as well as special relationships, so why not get busy developing holy relationships with each other. Well, any relationship that you develop with someone else, while you're still not experiencing the conscious connection with God, is just another special relationship dressed up in spiritual finery . . . "Lookin' g-o-o-d" . . . but still false, still not valid.

What the baby bird abandons is a special relationship with the bird called its mother. But the relationship with that bird doesn't end. Hey, the United States broke away from England, took its independence in the sense of standing on its own ground, being responsible for its own decisions, emancipated itself from its mother country and in the process it ceased to be a dependent and it opened up the door for England and the United States to be brothers, to relate to each other without dependence.

Now, we've been talking for quite some time now about where we're going, what it is that what we're studying is all about. We've been talking about what does it mean today, here, in your daily life. This is what it means: In communication lies salvation.

The communication that constitutes salvation is communication between you and God's Voice, which happens to be the Holy Spirit, which happens to be your right Mind. We're talking about That which is One, but seems to be two being brought back into Oneness. And that act has to arise out of some sort of basic self-respect that doesn't involve abusing your brothers and sisters, doesn't allow your brothers and sisters to abuse you, does not attempt to engage in communication as though it's bodies that communicate, and instead finds in the reunion of that which was always One, infinite Brotherhood that has nothing to do with bodies relating to each other, but which has to do with Mind infinitely experienced and infinitely expressed, experiencing its all-inclusive unity and Brotherhood and wholeness and peace and invulnerability and omnipotence and omniscience and omnipresence . . . and on and on.

Now I want to end tonight with a statement that comes at the end of the Manual for Teachers. Right at the very end there's a two or three page section called:

AS FOR THE REST . . .⁴

After all of this, then . . .

AS FOR THE REST . . .

And this is very important, because it relates most specifically to what we're reading and what we're discussing. It says . . .

There is another advantage,—and a very important one,—in referring decisions to the Holy Spirit with increasing frequency. Perhaps you have not thought of this aspect, but its centrality is obvious. To follow the Holy Spirit's guidance is to let yourself be absolved of guilt.

I'm going to read it again:

There is another advantage,—and a very important one,—in referring decisions to the Holy Spirit with increasing frequency. Perhaps you have not thought of this aspect, but its centrality is obvious. To follow the Holy Spirit's guidance is to let yourself be absolved of guilt.

And because guilt always has a partner, fear, it means being released from fear as well. And since guilt and fear, prolonged, cause anger, then it means moving into an arena of being, you might say, in which anger is not only absent, it isn't even considered, you might say, as a use for manipulation and control.

I'm going to begin again.

There is another advantage,—and a very important one,—in referring decisions to the Holy Spirit with increasing frequency. Perhaps you have not thought of this aspect, but its centrality is obvious. To follow the Holy Spirit's guidance is to let yourself be absolved of guilt.

Here it is:

It is the essence of the Atonement. It is the core of the curriculum.

Mind you, this is right at the end of the Course in the Teachers Manual, in a little section called:

AS FOR THE REST . . .

This little point is the essence of the Atonement and it's the core of the curriculum.

The imagined usurping of functions not your own is the basis of fear.

If you usurp functions that aren't your own, it's going to cause fear. When you say, "Father, I'd rather see it my way. Father, I'd rather do it my way," and you take on functions that aren't yours, it's going to do what? It's going to cause fear. It's also going to cause guilt and eventually it's going to cause anger, which will be used as the means for running life miserably.

Now . . .

[Raj didn't read this sentence:] The whole world you see reflects the illusion that you have done so, making fear inevitable.

To return the function to the One to Whom it belongs is thus the escape from fear.

And I'm going to add, and guilt and the need to use anger or feel it for any reason.

To return the function to the One to Whom it belongs is thus the escape from fear. And it is this that lets the memory of love return to you.

Now, it's important to see this. It's like these steps bring Reality back into focus for you—for everyone. When you pray for something, that's what you need to be praying for. When you do the two-step, that is what you're asking for. When you say, "Father, what is the truth here?" that is what you're asking for. If you say, "Father, make that mean man stop doing what he's doing." "Father, get me a fantastic well-paying job," these aren't the questions to be asking. This isn't what to be asking for. What you want is what answers those questions by perhaps showing that they don't need to be answered at all because fulfillment constitutes something far more wonderful.

Now, again . . .

To return the function . . .

. . . that you usurped . . .

. . . to the One to Whom it belongs is thus the escape from fear.

[In other words, the escape from fear occurs] when you say, "Father, Thy will be done," and then you say, "Father, what is Your will?" and you listen until you get the answer even though you would so much love to go ask somebody else what the answer is without having to go to the trouble and the effort of hanging in there with your desire until you get the answer, and entrust yourself to the process and value the answer and dare to embrace it.

To return the function to the One to Whom it belongs is thus the escape from fear. And it is this that lets the memory of love return to you.

It lets your function register with you consciously once again. It lets your invulnerability register with you so that you feel no need for protection and defense. And in the absence of maintaining defense the love that you Are spills out and defines you as you watch it defining you. You see?

Do not, then, think that following the Holy Spirit's guidance is necessary merely because of your own inadequacies. It is the way out of hell for you.

And that sits there in a little section called:

AS FOR THE REST . . .

The holy instant as communication . . . the holy instant—period—is as it said, the essence of the Atonement. It is the core of the curriculum.

You will go into the holy instant alone with your own commitment, which the Holy Spirit will have inspired in you in one way or another. And you will persist because that's the way the Atonement works, that's the way your coming back into your right Mind works. And it's really the one and only thing that needs to occur in order to Wake up—no matter how long this book, A Course in Miracles, is, no matter how many words or pages.

At the bottom line, you must stop doing what doesn't work. You must stop listening to other voices. You must stop listening to your voice, because until you listen and ask for God to reveal to you the Truth, until you ask for the Holy Spirit to reveal to you the Truth, your Real Voice won't be heard yet. And it's your Real Voice that you want. And it's your Real Voice that you are going to determine to listen for no matter how long it takes, whether you can get confirmation from any other source or not.

God insists on your knowing yourself for who you truly Are. And that's why the Holy Spirit, which is your right Mind, is present to respond to you when you're willing to lean into It and rely upon It. The Holy Spirit is your right Mind and It is in place in you because you have a Father and you're not an orphan. And your reconnection with It is inevitable, unavoidable, because you haven't stopped being what you divinely Are.

Be willing to do the hard work. Be willing to do the diligent, intimate, private work, where you lean into God for the confirmation of your divinity, lean into that place where God's laws prevail, so that you might have the evidence of it. And do it without continuing to look outside yourself to find out whether you're doing the right thing.

I love you very much. I love you enough to tell you not to lean on the wrong thing.

And I look forward to being with you all next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 5th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Before we have our quiet time, I've asked Paul to let me make an announcement.

It has almost been a year and a half since there was a need to share with everyone a request for financial support. It's been a wonderful period of time. During that period of time, many new people have found the website and the materials, and have joined us for the study groups approximately every week. And many of them have not had the opportunity to learn that the basis for the operation of the Foundation, the manner in which this work is done, is entirely on the basis of Gift.

There is never a charge for anything that we do, or for the sharing of the materials. And there's no way to purchase the materials because they are available at no charge. They are a gift.

I, in the beginning, instructed Paul to set up this activity as a non-profit foundation, corporation, and let him know that no steps would be made to generate income; no grants would be sought; no literature or materials would be sold—that every aspect of this activity would have to happen on the basis of a voluntary expression of gratitude, whether it's the fact that Paul participates with me as an expression of gratitude for the truth that he's hearing, or that the support for the activities, since the activities do cost something to carry on, would also have to be on the basis of Gift. Voluntary expressions of gratitude.

Every aspect of this activity is gratitude embodied.

Now, at the present time contributions have dwindled. The simple fact is that Paul has not received a paycheck since the next-to-the-last week in July. There is need for support to take care of the basic operating expenses so that, for lack of better words, Paul does not become distracted through fear or concern and can stay with Gift. There is no need for the giving of Gift not to be sufficient to meet the need.

Now the simple fact is, as we'll be discussing a little later, there's a need for truth to be expressed. There's a need for each of you to be able to hear it. There is a need for each of you to be reminded of it, because although at times you will "catch a wave," as it were, and feel supported in your confidence, in your faith, there will be other times where your faith will be tested, where doubt will creep in, where circumstances will distract you and seem more valid than the truth that would make you free. Those are the times when you need to be able to hear the truth—literally, to be able to walk to your computer and push the button and listen to a gathering that may have happened back in 1993, or last week's meeting, [snaps fingers] right there in the middle of the night! It's marvelous.

So, I'm taking this time to let everyone know that the need is there. If you want to think of it as a "fund-raising," fine. But don't get too conceptual. I prefer for you to stay in touch with gratitude and act from there.

There will be an announcement, a transcription of what I've just said, posted on the Gathering Place and on the Home Page tomorrow, and emailed to everyone on the email list.

The gifts of gratitude that have kept things going for the last twenty-some years are greatly appreciated . . . gratefully received.

Thank you.

Okay. Let's take a few moments to be quiet together. (Quiet time)

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We'll go right into the Book—into this awful paragraph:

Suffering and sacrifice are the gifts with which the ego would "bless" all unions. And those who are united at its altar ACCEPT suffering and sacrifice as the price of union. In their angry alliances, born of the fear of loneliness and yet dedicated to the CONTINUANCE of loneliness, they seek relief from guilt by increasing it in the OTHER.

"I'm going to make you guilty! You're responsible for my suffering. You're responsible for relieving me of my suffering. And you know what? You're not doing anything to relieve me of my suffering, therefore, you're to blame for my ongoing suffering." You see.

What did that do? What did all of that Do? It said: "I don't have anything to do with my suffering. I have no choices I can make that would make a difference. I'm suffering for no good reason at all . . . at the hands of someone else . . . at the hands of circumstance or chance." You see. And it's not true. Your decisions make all the difference in the world.

But let's continue. So . . .

. . . they seek relief from guilt by increasing it in the OTHER. For they believe that this decreases it in THEM.

You know what? Whether we're talking about truth or illusion, what you give away you get to keep. That's a law that does not change whether you're on the side of truth or illusion. So the belief that this decreases in them is totally false.

Now . . .

. . . they believe that this decreases it in THEM. The other seems always to be attacking and wounding them, perhaps in little ways, perhaps "unconsciously," yet never without demand of sacrifice.

Interesting. Because very often, because of the devotedness to the game-playing, and perhaps even a spiritual willingness to "see the best in another," the action of attack and being wounded, because it happens perhaps in little ways, perhaps unconsciously, you say, "Well I won't say anything about it. He's not really trying to hurt me. She's not really trying to hurt me. It's completely unconscious. What it is, is it's just plain pure thoughtless and so I don't need to jump on them for that."

But the fact is, that it's never without demand of sacrifice. Attack always makes a demand for sacrifice that you will have to pay if you don't object—if you don't say, "No!" to this con job when they say, "Well it's all your fault." No, it isn't. That's a con job trying to put one over on you, trying to get you to say, "Yeah, you're right!" They're hoping you're going to feel guilty enough because you're an orphan that you won't even question them seriously because you were waiting for the axe to fall from somewhere because you were guilty, you see.

And everything gets fuzzy. You're expecting an axe to fall and that's your ignorance. And they throw an axe at you and you say, "Oh, that must be the axe that I was expecting to fall . . . and well, I lack the clarity to see that what they're trying to do is a con job—something for me to object to. And my attitude that says, 'Something bad is going to happen to me because I'm an orphan,' that I need to say no to and object to." You see? Clarity needs to come into play, not fuzziness.

The fury . . .

. . . continuing . . .

. . . of those joined at the ego's altar far exceeds your awareness of it.

See, you do soft-pedal it, you do cover it up, because why? Because although you might be willing to see that the bad behavior of others arises out of fury, you're not willing to take a look and see that your behavior . . . your bad behavior toward them . . . your manipulative behavior toward them arises out of fury. So you won't look at it. If you look at it anywhere, you're going to see it's everywhere. Because it is everywhere until you leave the orphanage, until you decide to engage in the holy instant—to practice the holy instant and to abandon your privacy, your aloneness.

The fury of those joined at the ego's altar far exceeds your awareness [of It]. For what the ego REALLY wants you do not realize.

We'll get into what that is.

Now, for two or three weeks here, we've been going at this subject in great depth and it's bound to have helped move you to the point where you don't value your so-called right to think on your own. It may well have caused you, and hopefully it has caused you to want to be more diligent about joining with the Holy Spirit or with your Guide and bringing that partnership into play more consistently throughout your day and days, and even perhaps weeks, so that it becomes more and more permanent.

The awfulness of private thinking and the suffering that you may have begun to realize accrues from it, may have actually caused you to become quite diligent with a very dark sense that you must do something to get out of this habit that is purely destructive—not constructive in any way. And this could cause great discomfort . . . a sense of urgency to join with the Holy Spirit, why? so that you won't be guilty of doing destructive things—because if you become guilty for doing truly destructive things, why there's no hope for you. Nobody's going to help you.

Now, you know what? I hope you are each becoming diligent in your desire to know the truth. And I hope that each one of you is becoming diligent about reaching out to the Holy Spirit or the Father as the Source of your understanding of what truth is, as the Place where you want the truth to come from, so that you might abandon and break the habit of isolation—of being a totally independent agent.

Now, what I want you all to understand is, because I'll tell you, this past week I have felt . . . I have felt many say, "I can't do it!" It's been a sort of sad, angry, plaintive cry. You want to connect with the Holy Spirit. You want to hear me, you want to hear your Guide, but it isn't happening. And if you're feeling an urgent need to do it so you won't be guilty of doing destructive things, because you aren't doing it, that puts you between a rock and a hard place—nothing but a sense of pressure, of unfair pressure!

And here's one of the things that you need to be able to hear someone tell you, and you need to be able to hear them tell you over and over and over again: Has anyone heard of God's plan for salvation? There is one. And you know what? God's plan for salvation was created to work! It wasn't created to sometimes work and sometimes fail. It wasn't created to be a carrot for you to run after but never reach.

The Father's plan for salvation—God's plan for salvation—was created to work. And it's guaranteed to work. And that means that it's not impossible for you to hear your Guide. It's not impossible for you to hear the Holy Spirit.

You know what? The holy instant is God's plan for salvation. You, standing in that very intimate place right in the center of you where nothing else is present but you and the Father—you and your desire to connect with the Father, and the Father—that is guaranteed to work. You, in that quiet, private place and the Holy Spirit and your desire to let the Holy Spirit in, it's guaranteed to work. It was created to work.

And as we've said before, when you realize that the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, it becomes more obvious why God's plan for salvation was created to work and will work. Because, at the bottom line, when it works, That of you which you've been ignoring while you've dallied with the ego, becomes One with you again. Or you, abandoning your right to make decisions by yourself, find yourself melded, blended again, wholized again with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

It's bound to work because that which is One can never be other than One. And ultimately, it can do nothing other than become apparent again as One.

Nevertheless, because you haven't had this experience, and because you haven't met a lot of other people who have had the experience and perhaps only a few like Paul have been vocal about it enough for many people to have heard about it—about the holy instant, about the two-step, about hearing the Holy Spirit—it can seem as though it's a special gift for an elect few, but not for you. And that's why it's not working for you. And that's why it seems justifiable to say, "I can't do it . . . I...can't...do...it." Well...yes...you...can!

Yes you can! You were made [chuckling] to be able to do it! Because in the beginning you were doing it, until you decided to have this little dalliance with the idea of independence. And now you've had that experience, up to here, I hope, and you can come back into your right Mind. You can! It is not a talent. It is not a special gift. It doesn't require an especially spiritual person—you don't have to become a monk. And so I want you to lighten up. And when you feel like you can't do it, I want you to pull out this tape and listen to it so you can hear me say, "Yes...you...can!" and remind you of it or go to any other source that reminds you, "Yes...you...can!" It's the way God's plan for salvation was made to work! It's not the way God's plan for salvation was made to fail.

Now there's another place I want to turn you to. It's in the Course and you can remind yourself of it by going here: It's [Workbook] . . .

LESSON 49

"God's Voice speaks to me all through the day."*²

I know, [chuckling] you don't think God's Voice does speak to you all through the day, but here's something stating the truth to remind you of the fact.

It is quite possible to listen to God's Voice all day without interrupting your regular activities in any way.*

Don't have to become a monk, don't have to go sit in a cave, don't have to go sit in a church. You can wash the dishes. You can clean your house. You can mow the lawn. It is quite possible.

It is quite possible to listen to God's Voice all day without interrupting your regular activities in any way.

Now, let's get something clear here: God's Voice. You can listen to God's Voice. What is God's Voice? God's Voice is the Voice for Truth. You're more familiar with the Voice for Truth being the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. Ah-h, God's Voice is nothing more than your right Mind. That's what It really is. God's Voice is nothing more than your right Mind or your right Mind is nothing different from God's Voice. Your right Mind is where union with God IS.

So, God's Voice is with you all the time. God's Voice is your right Mind. And even if you are insisting upon thinking for yourself, and not listening for the Holy Spirit, It's still there and It is forever intending to register with you. In other words, It's constantly knocking at your door. It's constantly asking for your attention.

So the minute you decide to say, "Holy Spirit, what's the truth here? Father, what is the truth here?" well, that means that you've walked up to the door that the Holy Spirit has been forever knocking on and you have your hand on the knob with an intent to open it.

Now, you see what I'm doing here? I'm letting you know that reaching for the truth, reaching for the Holy Spirit is never a case of you groping around in the dark for something you don't know the location of—a very lonely thing that you're doing all by yourself. No, the minute you desire to know the truth of the Holy Spirit or the Father, you have your hand on the doorknob of a door that the Holy Spirit—the Voice for Truth, God's Voice—has been knocking on, is knocking on, and is with all enthusiasm waiting for you to go ahead and turn that knob and open the door.

Oh I know . . . you tried it and it didn't happen.

"I...tried...it...and...it...didn't...happen." Seven words. Are you going to make a god out of those seven words? Are you going to bow down to those seven words? Are you going to serve those seven words? Are you going to believe them and not let any doubt whatsoever creep in? Why not do that with the real God. You don't have to believe it. In fact, you must disbelieve it. You must abandon making the statement and go someplace like this and read:

It is quite possible to listen to God's Voice all day without interrupting your regular activities in any way. The part of your mind in which truth abides . . .

. . . that would be the Holy Spirit, right? . .

. . . is in constant communication with God, whether you . . .

. . . from the orphan mentality . . .

. . . are aware of it or not. It is the other part of your mind. . .

. . . the orphan mentality, the one who thinks for himself.

It is the other part of your mind that functions in the world and obeys the world's laws.

. . . or seven words.

It is this part which is constantly distracted, disorganized, and highly uncertain.

The part that is listening to the Voice of God is calm, always at rest and wholly certain. It is really the only part there is. The other part is . . .

. . . pure imagination and we've talked about it endlessly.

The other part is a wild illusion, . .

Well it doesn't matter how wild it is. A wild illusion or a passive illusion or a quiet illusion, is still nonsense. But nevertheless, . . [chuckles]

The other part is a wild illusion, frantic and distraught, but without reality of any kind. Try today not to listen to it.

And you know what? I would suggest that you practice this whether there's a problem going on or not. In fact, when there's not a problem going on, your curiosity to know the truth and your reaching to the Holy Spirit for the answer will allow the connection to be made with less stress, with less doubt interfering. And even if you don't hear immediately, I won't hear you say, "I can't do it!" You'll just say, "Well, it didn't happen then, I'll just try again a little bit later," you see, without any emotional impact or negativity.

Try to identify with the part of your mind where stillness and peace reign forever.

It's right there with you, every moment of every day.

Try to hear God's Voice . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . call to you lovingly, reminding you that your Creator has not forgotten His Son.

This is important.

Everything is geared to work. The Father's plan for salvation was created to succeed.

Try to hear God's Voice call to you lovingly, reminding you that your Creator has not forgotten His Son.

You see? It's a thing to be looked forward to. It's a thing to be embraced. It is not something to look at as though eternity hangs in the balance, depending on how well you do. Being a lesson, it gives instructions:

We will need at least four five-minute practice periods today, and more if possible.

Wise counsel. Do it more. Do it lightly. Do it willingly. Do it gladly.

We will try actually to hear the Voice reminding you of God and of your [capital 'S'] Self.

. . . You, embracing and embraced by and unseparated from the Holy Spirit—which constitutes you in your right Mind, you sane, you letting the Father be all there is of You. You, thereby being co-creators with God because you're not holding yourself separate and apart in any way from the Movement of Creation that He is Being as You. You see? Listen to this lesson in a book in the world:

We will try actually to hear the Voice reminding you of God and of your Self.

Why would you do that? Why would you be told to do that if it weren't possible? That would be evil.

We will approach this happiest and holiest of thoughts with confidence, knowing that in doing so we are joining our will with the Will of God.

Do you see why you need to have things to remind you of the truth? Because the truth is happy and the truth is uplifting and the truth is motivating and the truth removes you from the sludge and the slog of negativity that immobilizes you and causes you to feel that there's no use—no point.

Again, . . .

We will approach this happiest and holiest of thoughts with confidence, knowing that in doing so we are joining our will with the Will of God.

Listen to this:

He wants you to hear His Voice.

You need to be reminded of this when you're inclined to say, "I can't do it." And you're inclined to believe those seven words, or . . . "I can't do it" . . . those four words.

He wants you to hear His Voice.

He wants you to experience all of your Mind, without it being split off into Holy Spirit and orphan ego. You see.

He wants you to hear His Voice. He gave It to you to be heard.

You must argue . . . You must disagree with . . . You must counteract the negativity that would say, you're stuck, "I can't do that. That doesn't work for me." Find some words that express God's point of view, and bind yourself to them, tightly, and stand with them unyieldingly no matter how awkward or unnatural it seems to you. Why? Because, God's plan for salvation was created to work.

Listen in deep silence. Be very still and open your mind. Go past all the raucous shrieks and sick imaginings . . .

. . . that go on in your mind . . . just thinking . . .

. . . that cover your real thoughts and obscure your eternal link with God.

See, it tells you what to do, instead of complaining about it not working, instead of convincing yourself that it isn't working and it won't work.

Sink deep into the peace that waits for you beyond the frantic, riotous thoughts and sounds and sights of this insane world.

And you know, to be even more specific, you can get past the sights by closing your eyes. But you want to get past, that in your mind that wants to tell the story about how the world works. And who's it going to tell the story to? You . . . yourself. So you sit there and you tell yourself a god-awful story. And you rehearse it in your mind. And you make it more and more real, by the diligence with which you rehearse it. Rehearse a play long enough and you don't need the script in your hand anymore—you know it by heart.

Quit rehearsing the lie or you'll learn it by heart and you won't need to say it anymore because, as you see, it will be written in your bones, it will be written in your very being. Well, it can't be written in your very Being because that belongs to God. So it can only be written in your memory. But once memorized it's difficult to abandon.

Sink deep into the peace that waits for you beyond the frantic, riotous thoughts and sounds and sights of this insane world. You do not live there.

Where? In your mind where you're rehearsing all of the illusion.

We are trying to reach your real home. We are trying to reach the place where you are truly welcome. We are trying to reach God.

Well, again, God's plan for salvation was created to work. So if this is what you are trying to do, you're trying to do that which works. And isn't it wonderful to have Lesson 49 to go to and remind yourself of all the different ways here in which God's plan for salvation is guaranteed to work.

Continuing, back in the Text:

Whenever you are angry, you can be sure that you have formed a special relationship which the ego has "blessed," for anger IS its blessing.

Remember, we talked about the fact that anger is a result of the frustration of experiencing ongoing fear and guilt. Anger is the means that orphans—those who are not joined with the Holy Spirit, those who are not experiencing any form of relationship with the Father—use to create safety, to create security.

And the anger doesn't always come out with an angry voice. It very often comes out with a calm, even cultured voice, speaking with dignity and a sense of education, explaining to you what you're guilty of and why you shouldn't be at peace, explaining to you what you owe for your guilt. And if you're not careful, you'll believe it.

If it came out expressed as anger, you would become defensive much more quickly and then in order to be overcome yourself, the anger would have to be skillfully expressed in a way that would cause you to feel threatened significantly enough to cause you to yield, to buckle under and to serve.

Whenever you are angry, you can be sure that you have formed a special relationship which the ego has "blessed," for anger IS its blessing. Anger takes many forms, but it cannot long deceive those who will learn that love brings no guilt at all, and what brings guilt cannot be love, and MUST be anger.

So you see, it's really important to be willing to look at this straight on, so that you don't overlook anger in favor of noticing the cultured intelligent way in which a guilt trip is being laid on you and honoring the wondrousness of how intelligence can master a situation, you see, and cause you to believe a lie.

Whew . . .

ALL anger is nothing more than an attempt to make someone feel guilty, and this attempt is the ONLY basis which the ego accepts for special relationships. Guilt is the only need the ego has, and as long as you identify with it, guilt will REMAIN attractive to you.

That means, that it will remain attractive to you as a tool for you to use in manipulating others. And because it's attractive to you, it will attract into your experience those circumstances which will cause you to have to cope with a guilt trip being laid upon you.

What you give you get to keep. What you find attractive is attracted to you. And then because you're already in a guilty state of mind, you're not likely to object to the guilt trip that's laid upon you. You will just find the most effective means you can to not have to pay as much of a penalty. [chuckling] You might go get a good attorney who can get you off, even though you know you're guilty. You see?

But that's not emancipation, that's not Waking up, that's not moving beyond the liability to be guilty, into your native innocence.

Yet remember this; to be with a body . . .

. . . you know, like, for you to be at a movie with a date . . . or in bed with a lover . . .

. . . to be with a body is NOT communication. And if you think it is, you will feel guilty about communication, and will be AFRAID to hear the Holy Spirit, recognizing in His Voice your OWN need to communicate.

And how can He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . communicate with you, while you believe that to communicate is to make yourself ALONE?

Continuing:

It is clearly insane to believe that by communicating you will be abandoned.

Remember, we talked about the fact that communication isn't body-to-body, but mind-to-mind, so to speak. It's actually an event in infinite Mind that isn't broken down by body into individualities.

Listen:

It is clearly insane to believe that by communicating you will be abandoned. And yet you DO believe it. For you think that your minds must be kept private or you will LOSE them, . .

. . . you see . . .

. . . and if your BODIES are together your minds remain your own.

Now we discussed this earlier.

The union of bodies thus becomes the way in which you would keep MINDS apart. For bodies cannot forgive. They can only do as the mind directs.

Communication—true communication—means abandoning the idea that bodies communicate, and that minds are not separated off, one-from-another, where there seem to be bodies separating you all off one-from-another.

There are no private thoughts. I know, that sounds interesting, it's an interesting statement to make. It can be a topic of an interesting conversation. But the simple fact is that there are no boundaries, there are no limits circumscribing your mind or your neighbor's or your wife's or anyone in the universe or anything in the universe. And communication is going on and you can feel . . . you sometimes say, "Well, she's more sensitive than I am," or "I have an affliction of a sensitivity, where I can feel what's going on with other people." No. Some of you just aren't as defended against it as others. But the fact is that that's where communication really occurs.

The illusion of the autonomy of the body and ITS ability to overcome loneliness is but the working of the ego's plan to establish . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . its OWN autonomy.

And earlier we read:

. . . what the ego REALLY wants you do not realize.

What the ego wants is . . .

to establish its OWN autonomy.

It's the orphan mentality. It wants to become a real boy or a real girl, instead of a puppet. And in doing that it denies and actually attempts to cause God to be less than He is.

A real boy or a real girl, who became real from a prior state of being an orphan, who originally was the Son or Daughter of God, would cause God, the Father, to have two less children and therefore to be that much less Father, that much less God, which when we put it that way, you can see is absolutely idiotic. But you can see what the end goal would be if everyone managed somehow to become a real boy or a real girl in his or her own right from the environment of an orphanage—from being an orphan. That is what the ego really wants.

Okay, it's not going to work. And when you can see it this clearly, it's easier for you to be willing to abandon your interest in pursuing it further, and engaging in the holy instant.

As long as you believe that to be with a body is companionship, you will be compelled to attempt to keep your brother in his body, held there by guilt. And you will see SAFETY in guilt and DANGER in communication.

Always, it's a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync.

For the ego will ALWAYS teach that loneliness is solved by guilt, .

Remember, guilt is what must be used to bind two together in a special relationship—a relationship which wouldn't naturally occur without the employment of guilt to bind it together and seal the union.

. . . the ego will ALWAYS teach that loneliness is solved by guilt, and that communication is the CAUSE of loneliness. And despite the evident insanity of this lesson, you have LEARNED it.

You've learned it so well, that when you try to break the illusion of being alone, by reaching out to the Holy Spirit, or the Father, or your Guide, it doesn't happen spontaneously. It seems like it only happens under stress or with unrelenting persistence that in itself seems unreasonable at times. That's how come you know that you have learned it.

Now . . .

Forgiveness lies in communication as surely as damnation lies in guilt. It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function to instruct those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION.

And we began this section a few weeks ago with this very paragraph, so that when we got here today it would make more sense to you.

It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function to instruct those who believe . . .

I'm going to start over and point out that we could just as easily read: It is God's Voice's teaching function, cause the Holy Spirit is the Voice for Truth, God's Voice.

It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function to instruct those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION. And He will do so, . .

And here's another reason you need materials like this, to remind you of the joyful news when you get depressed and discouraged. You need to hear the facts.

Listen:

It is the Holy Spirit's teaching function to instruct those who believe that communication is damnation that communication is SALVATION. And He will do so, . .

. . . why? . .

. . . for the power of God in Him AND you is joined in REAL relationship, so holy and so strong that it can overcome even THIS without fear.

That's the good news. The Holy Spirit and you are . . .

. . . joined in REAL relationship, so holy and so strong that it can overcome even THIS without fear.

Overcome what? The idea that communication is damnation, when communication is salvation.

It is through the holy instant that what seems impossible is ACCOMPLISHED, . .

It is in the holy instant that radical idealism is translated into practical realism. You see? It's . . .

. . . ACCOMPLISHED, making it evident that it is NOT impossible.

And you could say that's the beginning of education that transforms you. But you're not going to see radical idealism translated into practical realism if you don't contradict the cry, "I can't do it! It doesn't work for me! I did it and I did it and I did it and it doesn't work for me!"

You won't see it if you say, "Well, so-and-so is further along on their spiritual path and that's why they can do it and why I can't."

It is through the holy instant that what seems impossible is ACCOMPLISHED, . .

And I'm here to tell you that holy instants are available to the worst sinner that exists. Because, a sinner is just a Son or Daughter of God, who's temporarily believing a lie about themselves. And because it's not the truth about themselves, a holy instant is available to them [snaps fingers] at any instant. And it's through the holy instant that's available to anybody, . .

. . . that what seems impossible is ACCOMPLISHED, making it evident that it is NOT impossible.

And also, making it evident that the one that it happened to wasn't the awful sinner—wasn't a god-damned sinner. Because after experiencing the holy instant, they found that they were a God-blessed presence that now they can see, had to be the Son or Daughter of God instead of the sinner he or she believed he was or that everyone else believed he or she was. You see? Transformation!

In the holy instant guilt holds NO attraction, . .

. . . when you are in the holy instant . . . oh, you know what? the idea of using guilt as a tool to accomplish something won't even occur to you. And so you won't be attracted to it in any way. And in the absence of attraction to it as a practical tool, you won't attract into your experience the attempts to make you guilty that you would have to cope with.

In the holy instant guilt holds NO attraction, since communication has been restored.

The experience of your wholeness has been restored. You, not an orphan mentality or an ego separated from the Holy Spirit, that is the rest of you—your wholeness, your integrity, your innocence, your flawlessness, your pure integrity is obvious and you know Who you Are without a doubt.

In the holy instant guilt holds NO attraction, . .

And remember, that in the holy instant God's laws prevail. Those two sentences mean the same thing.

In the holy instant God's laws prevail.

In the holy instant guilt holds NO attraction, since communication . . .

. . . integrity . . .

. . . has been restored. And guilt, . .

. . . listen to this . . .

. . . whose ONLY purpose is to disrupt communication, has no function here.

Guilt has one purpose: To disrupt your direct communication with the Holy Spirit, an event which when it happens, reveals to you the fact that you and the Holy Spirit are One. And that One is the Holy Spirit, and you're the Son or Daughter of God.

Here there is no concealment, and no private thoughts.

You see, you're not thinking that bodies communicate when Minds do. And now Mind is communicating. Mind is in communion. Mind is aware of absolutely every aspect of Eternity, of Infinity, of Creation . . . whole.

Here there is no concealment, and no private thoughts. The willingness to communicate attracts communication TO it, and overcomes loneliness completely.

See, you need to hear this. This is the good news. This is what you need to read when, and remind yourself of, when you say, "I can't do it. I'll never be able to do it . . . blah . . . blah . . . blah."

There is complete forgiveness here, for there is no desire to exclude anyone from your completion, . .

. . . from your wholeness, from your completeness . . .

. . . in sudden recognition of the value of his part in it.

Everyone and everything is absolutely essential to your completeness, because it's all part of Creation—Infinite Creation Itself—which is One, because it's the expression of a purely singular Mind which has no fragments to it, which cannot be polarized and is therefore perfect harmony, pure Love embodied in every way.

In the protection of YOUR wholeness, all are invited and made welcome.

You find that you invite and make welcome everyone, because that is what protects your wholeness. To exclude others, violates your wholeness and throws you right back into the orphanage.

And you understand that your completion is God's, Whose only need is to have YOU be complete.

Since God's only need is to have you complete, well, that's what caused God's plan of salvation to be instituted, if you will, because God needs to have you be complete and know it.

For your completion makes you His in your awareness.

Now you've always been His, but you haven't been aware of it and you haven't even wanted to think about it, because you've been too busy surviving on your own.

For your completion makes you His in your awareness. And here it is that you experience yourself as you were created, and as you ARE.

Now did you think we would ever get out of the section called, The Holy Instant And Communication? We did it. But you can see how packed and important it is. And what its goal is: The happy conclusion of God's plan for salvation.

So, I encourage you this week to lighten up, even if you wish to be diligent, even if you really significantly desire to know the truth, and spend a great deal of your time giving your attention to the Holy Spirit or the Father to have the truth revealed to you. Do it without an edge of sternness and potential guilt. Do it without entertaining fear along with it, because God's plan for salvation was not setup to be a strain. It wasn't to be the way you paid the penalty for having abandoned Him. No, the Father's plan for salvation was established out of Love, with Love, so that you might experience the way Home, as Loving.

So when you begin to feel depressed or discouraged, and negativity about you begins to voice itself in your head, you tell it to "shut up!" And then remind yourself of the truth in whatever way works for you.

I look forward to being with you next time. And with much Love I say to you, that I hope your paths of discoveries this week will be enjoyable. And if they aren't and you must persist against what seem like unreasonable odds or unreasonable negativity, do it! Persist! But persist with whatever degree of light-heartedness you can introduce, because you don't have to be obedient to those seven words. And you can be irreverent and have a happy curiosity in the face of it. You really can. Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 12th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening and welcome to everyone who's joining us on the internet.

So we have a new section tonight: The Holy Instant and what? Holy Relationships? No.

THE HOLY INSTANT AND REAL RELATIONSHIPS¹

The fact is, that a real relationship will be a holy relationship. But if we were going to talk about having a holy relationship, it could appeal to your egos in unsavory and unsatisfactory and stifling ways.

Relationships are things that you currently have, right here, right now, on planet Earth in the physical universe as you think of it. You think they are relationships by virtue of measured distance between this and that, and distance in time. You think that relationships are between things called, "bodies" whether it's the body of a planet, the body of a human being, a body of an animal—the body, the physical shape, texture, substance, presence of a chair. But the relationships are all going on, I'm going to a little bit carelessly say, in your mind. And I'm saying that a little carelessly, because you could interpret that to mean the mind you think you currently have and use.

But I'm talking about an eternal fact here. I'm talking about relationships that are forever. Well you say, "Well, the table there, isn't gonna be there forever? Somewhere along the line, through a fire or through the simple passage of time, it's going to deteriorate and it's no longer going to be there." And the only reason you say that, is because at the present time, you think it's purely physical.

But I'm going to reiterate that it's a pure idea. And I tell you, that any object that you might have experienced in your whole life that seems for one reason or another to no longer be present, unavailable to experience, when you come back into your right Mind—your full conscious awareness as Mind in which all of Creation is occurring—you will find everything that you ever experienced available to you, tangible to you, enjoyable by you because it's an idea and it was an idea when you thought it was matter.

And everything right now is an idea even though you think it's an object that has nothing to do with your mind other than that it is something, which the sensitivity of your mind can pick up on and experience, you see.

It's backwards. You think that because it's there your mind can sense it, your mind can experience it. But the fact is, that it's because your mind is present that it is there—plain, pure and simple.

Therefore, truly, your relationship with it is the relationship between the conscious mind, the conscious Being that you Are and the idea embraced within that conscious Being—that being conscious, the relationship never was physical. The relationship never was between a mind, a brain and sensory organs, and other things which those sensory organs could experience. It never was. But you're quite convinced that it is.

And so as we begin this section . . .

THE HOLY INSTANT AND REAL RELATIONSHIPS

. . . let's not get too hung up on, "Oh-h boy, I'm gonna have a hunky-dory holy relationship with Betty over there," or, "Oh-h boy, because we're going to be doing it right this time, it is going to be one zinger [chuckles] of a relationship, soul-satisfying for eternity!"

Let's begin:

The holy instant does not replace the need for learning, . .

. . . well, that's sort of out of the blue . . . where did that come from?

The holy instant does not replace the need for learning, . .

Well, if when you do the two-step, if when you step back and say, "Father what is the truth here?" and the truth is revealed and you find yourself Knowing the truth, you could come to the conclusion that perhaps you will never have to learn anything because Knowing will always be available to you.

Well, it's not true. The holy instant does not replace the need for learning. And if you become lazy and slipshod, thinking that learning has gone out of the window, because you can always know the truth, you will find yourself confronted by life in a manner or a form that throws you for a curve. Why? Because you haven't learned something.

The holy instant does not replace the need for learning, for the Holy Spirit must not leave you as your Teacher until the holy instant has extended far beyond time.

Holy instants are literally instants in time in which you abandon yourself to the Father, in which you abandon yourself to the Holy Spirit.

Now the simple fact is, that when you find yourself knowing the truth and it's very clear to you, clear enough that you might be able to express it to someone else and have it make sense and be inspiring and uplifting and growth-causing for them, if you don't take that truth within and let it replace the illusion that you've been experiencing, because you have a certain partiality to the illusion or there's a certain benefit you think you get from the illusion, you won't learn—no change will occur.

And so all of this that we're talking about does involve shifts of perception and the adopting of the new perception to the exclusion of the old one actually changing.

For a teaching assignment such as His, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

He must use everything in this world for your release.

Well now, let me ask you this: If you have thought that this world is an illusion, why would the Holy Spirit use everything in this world for your release? Why wouldn't the Holy Spirit turn your eyes away from illusion?

Well very simply, because everything you're seeing—everything in this world as you put it—is everything that's in the Kingdom of Heaven because Reality is the only thing in your face. If you are experiencing a misperception of things in the Kingdom of Heaven and, in fact, if you're having a misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven Itself in Its entirety, then this world and each thing in this world will serve as the occasion for becoming undeluded. The glass, the table, the plant will serve as the opportunity to see God there instead of what you had determined was there or the definition you adopted that somebody else determined it was.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . must use everything in this world for your release.

Now, it isn't that the Holy Spirit must use everything because you're so dense. The Holy Spirit must use everything because everything must come back under the jurisdiction of God, the Creator of it, and the fact that any perception of it whatsoever must necessarily be the truth about it—the true experience of it—you see? . . . where ignorance no longer rules, dominates or injures or depresses anyone or anything.

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . must side with every sign or token of your willingness to learn of Him what the truth must be.

You see, keep saying, "Father what is the truth here? Holy Spirit, what is the truth here? That which is nothing more than my right Mind, what is the truth here?"

We've just been reading some rather heavy-duty material, the expression of some unpleasant, hard to look at ideas. The whole reason for describing the ego and ego-dynamics as they are, which is unpleasant, the only reason for describing them was to help bring everyone to a point of not finding it attractive anymore to be ignorant of the truth or to not be in communication with the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind—so that it might be easy for you to allow communication to occur once again for union to be reestablished once again.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . must side with every sign or token of your willingness to learn of Him what the truth must be.

The Holy Spirit waits patiently but expectantly for every opportunity to connect with you and have you know that you're connecting with Him—to have you know that there is union within your Mind again.

He is swift to utilize whatever you offer Him on behalf of this.

It's important to know this because when you think you're an orphan, when you think you're isolated, when you think God is far off from you and doesn't even care to connect with you because of whatever reasons you've come up with, you need to know it's not the truth, that you aren't some little inconsequential gnat, trying to get the attention of an infinite Creator.

He, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . is swift to utilize whatever you offer Him on behalf of this.

The moment there is the faintest glimmer of your attention being given, where the Holy Spirit is, the Holy Spirit responds. Light illuminates the corridor, if you will, the opening—the weak spot in the armor—and rushes in.

He doesn't just sit there and say, "Come-on . . . just a little bit further . . . yeah, you're doing pretty good . . . yeah . . ." No, that's not the way the Holy Spirit is, that's not love. That which is one with you already is impelled because of its love of unity and because of its love of the wholeness of It and you. It is impelled to rush in and meet you and greet you and embrace you and speak to you in language of your present weakness, in language of your present insecurity, in language of your lack of confidence in spite of your low trust level, in language that will not reduce your level of trust, there is that kind of love. You could say, it accepts you where you are. But it isn't that it accepts you where you are, it is intelligent enough to speak in the language that you can understand, so that you can be moved beyond that language into new language. You see?

His concern and care for you are limitless. In the face of your FEAR of forgiveness, which He perceives as clearly as He knows forgiveness is RELEASE, He will teach you to remember that forgiveness is not loss, but your SALVATION.

What is forgiveness? Well, forgiveness is you abandoning the definitions—the false definitions you've applied to everything even though you didn't know they were false. It's you saying, "Father, what's the truth here?" And the Father gives you the answer of what the truth is here and you say, "Oh-h . . . O-o-okay!" And you abandon the false definition, you abandon the definition you had been using and applying to that thing. And that's forgiveness. You forgive it for being what you held it to be in your mind and insisted upon it being because of the image you held in your mind and which you judged for being the image that you held in your mind, thinking all along that you were talking about a thing that wasn't an image in your mind but an actuality "out there."

Forgiveness of a thing—the releasing of an incorrect definition you've applied to it—is what constitutes the learning that must occur, the change in you that must occur and which the Holy Spirit is present to facilitate.

I'm going to read this last sentence again:

In the face of your FEAR of forgiveness, which He perceives as clearly as He knows forgiveness is RELEASE, He will teach you to remember that forgiveness is not loss, but your SALVATION. And that in COMPLETE forgiveness, in which you recognize that there is nothing to forgive, YOU are absolved completely.

You see, when you use the holy instant for the purpose of desiring to know the truth and you let the knowledge or experience of truth in, you're immediately faced with the relieving fact that everything about that thing that you had judged negatively, wasn't even going on, it never was the truth about that. And therefore, there was nothing there to forgive in the sense, in the human sense of looking past a flaw—giving the benefit of the doubt—being generous enough to not “nail him” for that this time. You see?

He will teach you to remember that forgiveness is not loss, but your SALVATION. And that in COMPLETE forgiveness, in which you recognize that there is nothing to forgive, YOU are absolved completely.

What does that mean? That means that you become innocent immediately. You see? Innocent of falsely accusing this, that or the other thing or your brother because you were convinced that the illusion was true—that a lie was true. You're absolved of abuse. You're absolved of guilt. Why? Not because you were guilty, but because now you are looking with innocent eyes, where before you were looking with the eyes of fear, which experienced the need to apply blame and guilt in order to try and reduce the fear. You see?

So when you engage in complete forgiveness, you're absolved completely. You become pure. You are returned to your state of innocent purity.

Hear him gladly, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, but is the Voice for Truth, the Voice for God.

Hear him gladly, and learn of Him that you have need of no special relationships at all.

You have no need of relationships that are based on guilt because guilt is the cement that holds relationships together. You have no need for that. And intellectually, I know you can understand that but there's a learning that must occur. You must take that fact which we could call radical idealism . . . right? . . . and insist upon experiencing it translated into practical realism.

What this means is, that joined with the Holy Spirit, joined with that which is nothing more than your right Mind, you must ask to be helped to abandon the habits that are in place by means of which you establish guilt in others and hold them to it. You need help in abandoning that. This is a learning that you need help with. You need a companion standing with you whom you're willing to listen to because He will tell you how to stop employing guilt—how to stop attempting to become a real boy or a real girl independent of the Father by the excellent use of guilt, you see.

This is what the learning is—this is some of what the learning is. And it is this learning that you need a teacher for. And the only teacher who can help you with it is one Who can see your particular sneaky, tricky techniques for keeping your brother unforgiven—the sneaky techniques that cause your brother to appear to need forgiveness, but a forgiveness which you will withhold, because you think that if you forgive your brother, your brother won't stick around. And also, because you think that if you can lay the guilt perfectly enough and cause that one, let's say, to behave, it will give you gold stars in your resume in the orphanage.

Of course, this is just part of the nastiness we've been learning about the last few weeks relative to special relationships. Because special relationships not only cement the relationships, secure the relationships, special relationships also have as their bottom line goal, the purpose of making you right—the purpose of making you worthy of the designation: Real boy or real girl, perfectly respectable individual in your own right. That's the ultimate purpose—that's the ultimate goal. You see. And this is why you fear complete forgiveness. This is why you fear engaging in complete forgiveness because you think you will lose all of those things that you believe the employment of guilt is getting you.

Again, . . .

Hear him gladly, and learn of Him that you have need of no special relationships at all.

Good-bye and good-riddance is where you want to be relative to special relationships—gladly let them go.

You but seek in them what you have thrown away.

Thrown away . . . yeah, you threw it away when you said, “Father, I’d rather do it my way. Father, I’d rather see it my way. Father, I’d rather say what a thing is.” You threw away your Birthright. You threw away the connection that constituted your Reality.

So, you then but seek in relationships—which have to be special—what you have thrown away.

And through them you will never learn the value of what you have cast aside, but what you still desire with all your hearts.

You see, you want something from something that can’t give it to you. And the thing you want from them is something you want with all your heart. You want to be whole. You want to feel your simple invulnerability that allows you to be utterly and completely at peace, and therefore, able to really, truly be present with your brothers and sisters and with your world in a benign way, in a way that allows what everyone and everything is to register with you as it is in Creation—as the Father is Being it right now.

Let us join together in making the holy instant all that there is, by desiring that it BE all that there is.

You could say that the holy instant is an instant of clarity, an instant of experiencing everything as It is. Now, why just have a momentary glimpse of everything as It is?

Let us join together in making the holy instant all that there is, by desiring that it BE all that there is.

By not desiring to have anything else anymore, neglecting to desire to have it be anything else.

God's Son . . .

. . . me, the Christ . . .

. . . has such great need of your willingness to strive for this that you cannot conceive of need so great.

Oh no, don’t feel sorry for me. It’s not a sad neediness, it’s not a neediness of lack. It’s a need in the Presence of the Mind of God to not see the Mind of God absent anywhere, especially in you.

If God is All, then there is a need for the Allness of God to be All. And it is a need beyond anything anyone can comprehend. But it’s not because there’s a lack, it’s because that which is All must be All, that which is All is All, and therefore, that Allness needs to be totally experienced, it needs to be totally available in every aspect of the Allness of God—meaning right where you are, right there as you.

God's Son has such great need of your willingness to strive for this that you cannot conceive of need so great.

. . . so infinite, so unyieldingly absolute.

Behold the only need that God and His Son share, and will to meet together. You are not alone in this.

And so, when you begin to turn your attention away from the thrill and the stimulation of special relationships and the thrill and stimulation of thinking for yourself, you will find that you, in the absence of those things, are not alone but companioned with by mighty companions—God and His Son.

Now, . . .

The will of your creations call to you, to share your will with them. Turn, then, in peace from guilt to God and them.

And make sure it's in that order. Don't turn to your brother and then turn to God. Turn to God before you turn to your brother. Are you going to be a teacher of God or a teacher of your brother? If you're going to be a teacher of God . . . well, of course, God doesn't need you to teach Him anything, so it can't mean you "teaching God."

To be a teacher of God means that you are turning to the Father and yielding to the Father so that you might be the expression of the Will of God, as God is Willing it where you are. Then when you turn to your brother, you won't be a teacher of your brother, you will be a teacher, an expresser, a sharer of what God is Being—you will teach what God is Being.

Better than that though, because of the likelihood of egos to grab onto the idea of being a great teacher, you will be a teacher by breathing, you'll be a teacher by being. Your connectedness with God will subsume any other goal. And thus in your connectedness with the Father and your yielding to the Father and you letting the Father shine through you, things will happen. But you won't look at yourself making them happen and you won't look at yourself as doing them. You won't even have yourself on your mind relative to your brother.

But I'll tell you, that you'll experience your brother, and the experience of your brother will be an experience of union in which neither you nor your brother, as bodies or personalities, have any importance, but in which the sharing of the truth of what God is Being in that Real relationship, in that moment teaching and learning will occur, but you won't know about it—not as you being a teacher.

Now, I'll tell you something, you won't get the same ego satisfying hit that you might from being an independent teacher actually doing a good work. No, there won't be any cause and effect sort of thing . . . "I did a good job and therefore, I get the hit." No. The experience of communion itself is a blessed experience. It's an experience of wholeness, in which you experience God as Love, you experience being together as Love, you experience presence as Love, you experience whatever the interaction seems to be as a movement of wholeness that isn't progressive but is effulgent.

Now, you see, all of this that we're talking about is leading us somewhere, in the sense of it being educational. And you are supposed to find yourself moved. You are to find yourself not where you were yesterday—not bound by the things you were bound by yesterday—recognizing and enjoying Godness, where you hadn't recognized or experienced it yesterday.

Relate only with what will NEVER leave you, and what YOU can never leave.

You see, that's like in the Bible it says: "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things shall be added unto you."² You see, you're so geared to getting the things. But it's the wrong way around. And it's only orphans that get things. And in the long run, the things they attempt to get are the things that will raise them up in the orphanage—make them more and more real without being joined, without knowing who they Are.

Now, . . .

The loneliness of God's Son . . .

. . . meaning Jesus, meaning me.

The loneliness of God's Son is the loneliness of his Father.

You say, "How could the Father be lonely?" Well, what if your children ran off to a far land and ignored you completely? You would be lonely, because family is an actuality that isn't being embodied, it's an actuality with no presence, no conscious participation in.

The loneliness of God's Son is the loneliness of his Father. Refuse not the awareness of your completion, and seek not to restore it to yourselves.

You can't do it. You don't know how to do it. Because right now all you know how to do is to be a pretty damn good orphan, which means you know how to be pretty damn independent and joining—union is a polar opposite—something which you're not attracted to, something which you avoid.

Fear not to give redemption over to your Redeemer's Love.

And this word here, "Redeemer," is being used in the traditional Christian meaning. It means Jesus Christ. It means me.

Fear not to give redemption over to your Redeemer's Love.

O-oh, is that getting a little too intimate? Is that getting a little too close? Is that getting a little too dependent? Is that requiring you to let go of some autonomy that's very important to you? Or is it just that . . . that's too religious! "Oh . . . give yourself over to the Redeemer's Love . . . yeah, right! Don't feed me that Christian bull-shit! Don't throw around that terminology at me!"

I know, you have given Love a chance. You have let yourself become vulnerable. You've let yourself be defenseless and open, maybe multiple times and gotten kicked in the teeth. So what you say with our sarcasm about Christian language and all of that, is really you hoping, wanting for there to be a true opportunity to experience being loved that actually uplifts you and confirms everything that is Real about you, without eventually having it withdrawn. And you don't trust it.

I understand. And I want you to understand the dynamic in you that causes you to feel that way, but I also want you to understand that I love you. I want you to understand that I withhold myself in no way from you. I want you to understand that I'm here for you forever, and have been here for you. And you're at a place where you can actually hear me say that to you.

You have arrived at a place where you're showing a little willingness. And it will bear fruit if you will be faithful to that willingness. And in spite of your low trust, you must invest the trust, you must find a consistency of trust in you. Because it's only through that persisting trust, that its validity and its healing benefit can register with you, because it causes learning in you.

Fear not to give redemption over to your Redeemer's Love.

Mind you, it didn't say, Fear not to give redemption over to your Redeemer. Your Redeemer's Love . . . Your Redeemer's Love is the Father's Love unblocked, unhindered in It's extension to you.

He will not fail you, . .

. . . I will not fail you . . .

. . . for He comes from

. . . I come from . . .

. . . One Who CANNOT fail.

The Father.

Accept YOUR sense of failure as nothing more than a mistake in who you are.

A mistake is a temporary result of misinformation. Replace the misinformation with true information and the mistake will not be made.

Accept YOUR sense of failure as nothing more than a mistake in who you are. For the holy host of God is beyond failure, . .

. . . you are beyond failure. No matter how much of a failure you're convinced that you are, no matter how much of a failure everyone else is convinced you are, it's only a temporary insanity that everyone is laboring under because this insane idea is being applied to a Son or Daughter of God who is incapable of failing, but who behaves like he's failing or she's failing, because he or she believes failure is possible and that indeed in some way it happened. But it didn't! And it's just a temporary insanity.

For the holy host of God . . .

. . . you . . .

. . . is beyond failure, and nothing that he wills can BE denied. You are forever in a relationship so holy that it calls to everyone to escape from loneliness, and join you in your love. And where you are must everyone seek, and FIND you there.

But this relationship that you are forever in, that is so holy that it calls to everyone, won't seem to be actual until you finally decide to say, "Been there! Done that!" with regard to special relationships. And you simply abandon that mindset relative to relationships with everything.

The simple fact is that when you do that, when you do abandon it, your holiness will shine, your holiness will radiate, you will be effulgent with the Love that you Are—that is You.

And where you are must everyone seek, . . .

. . . and they will and they'll be attracted . . .

. . . and FIND you there.

You know, right now, people turn to you for help, people turn to you for experiences of fulfillment and wholeness. But they're orphans turning to orphans, or we could say, they're bodies turning to bodies and that's not where the wholeness is.

So, if . . .

. . . where you are everyone must seek, and FIND you there.

You had better be there yourself. If everyone is supposed to be able to find you there, then don't let them find you in a special relation mindset. They won't find the Love that you are, the forgiveness that you are that will be transformational. Be willing to be where you are divine, which is in your holy union with the Holy Spirit, and thereby, the Father, so that God's plan for salvation can register and begin to grow and finally hit the news . . . finally be so practically real that it is newsworthy news . . . that isn't bad news.

One last thing: The Real relationship is between you and God and then you and your brother through God's perspective.

Don't approach your brother with any agenda if you're not riding on God's shoulders, having His perspective available to you and wanting only to have His perspective expressed where you appear to be.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 19th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, we're reading from a section entitled, The Holy Instant and Real Relationships and we found that the first sentence said:

The holy instant does not replace the need for learning, for the Holy Spirit must not leave you as your Teacher until the holy instant has extended far beyond time.*¹

. . . which simply means, until the holy instant has moved you beyond the place where you're only experiencing holy instants—an instant here, an instant there, but where you are moved beyond time entirely and the learning is complete and your mind is integrated, it's no longer the Holy Spirit and your private, puny, little arrogant self-important, self-expressive mentality.

Learning is very key here. Because although you can absorb information, it doesn't necessarily mean that that information changes you. You can be full of information that doesn't cause any growth whatsoever—doesn't cause any learning whatsoever. And learning is the key factor.

The Bible says, "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your minds."²

Well, transformation is a good word for learning, isn't it. Transformation means that the form of a thing has changed—has become something new.

"Be ye transformed . . ." by what? "The renewing of your mind."

Well, how does that renewing of your mind occur? In the holy instant. Learning occurs when you say, "What is the truth here, Father?" In other words, when instead of providing the meaning and providing the definition and asserting it, you back off a little and you are willing to acquiesce to another point of view—another way of looking at it. But not just another way of looking at it, because you're specifically asking the Holy Spirit, Who is the Voice for God or which is the Voice for God—the Voice for truth.

So, what you are inviting is transformation in you as a result of the renewing of your mind which will inevitably occur when you ask of That which will be telling you the truth—the ultimate truth—revealing to you the real experience of what things Are, of what Creation Is, of what the Meaning is of everything. You see?

"Be ye transformed . . . " be ye not like you were yesterday . . . be ye not like you were just before that holy instant . . . "Be ye transformed by the renewing of your mind" is another way of describing translating radical idealism into practical realism.

Now, all of this is very important. Because learning must occur or you will not Wake up. Learning will occur or the Holy Spirit will not have accomplished It's function. That which is nothing more than your right Mind will not have succeeded in reuniting all of you—all of what you Are—so that there is no longer an imagined portion of yourself that you are choosing to identify as the whole of yourself, and you have yielded and let that private little tiny portion of the totality of you be released into the totality of you.

Ah-h . . . now, that which is nothing more than your right Mind becomes the renewing of your mind, which means the transformation of you, called, "Waking up," called, "returning to your Sanity."

Now, we have to stress the learning part, we have to stress the change part so that you might, for lack of better words, apply yourself in the direction of actual change and not just a different frame of mind—a beautiful spiritual frame of mind that amounts to radical idealism that hasn't been translated into practical realism where the Allness of God hasn't yet been made real to you where you are.

Now we ended last time discussing the fact that as this section is called, The Holy Instant and Real Relationships, the real relationship is with God. And then from the perspective you find yourself having as a result of experiencing the real relationship with God, you have a holy relationship with your Brother. And that is the specific order of things.

I'm going to go into the Book.

Think but an instant on this: God gave the Sonship to you, to ensure your perfect creation.

A little bit difficult to comprehend. Because the Sonship of course, would be all the Sons and Daughters of God—the whole Family—no one left out.

God gave the Sonship to you, to ensure your perfect creation.

Why would that ensure your perfect creation? Because if any minute part of the Allness of God, if just one of the Sonship, one of your Brothers or Sisters was not given to you, was left outside of you, you would not be whole. You would not be the full representation of the Mind that is God. So . . .

God gave the Sonship to you, to ensure your perfect creation. This was His Gift, for as He withheld Himself not from you, He withheld not His creation.

Absolutely nothing was withheld from you.

Nothing that ever was created but is yours. Your relationships are with the universe.

What a statement!

Your relationships are with the universe.

So, let's talk for a moment about learning. In other words, there's going to be some learning about learning. If your relationships are universal, if they are with the universe and there's no other option available to you, then obviously the experience of it is not going to be like anything you comprehend at the moment.

It's important for you to understand that all of you have a tendency to imagine God, to have a . . . like a role model that God fits into. And part of that is helped by the use of the word, "Father," and even the words, "Father/Mother God." And so there's a tendency to look at God as a Father with the characteristics of a human father, but totally spiritual—totally unflawed.

Now, that's a limit. It's a limitation that you have to abandon. And when I tell you that you are confronted by nothing other than the Kingdom of Heaven, and that you need to be curious to see the more of what God is Being right where the universe seems to be—as the Kingdom of Heaven—I'm inviting you, and there is a necessity for you to be willing to be as non-conceptually open to the greater experience, willing to let it be unlike anything you've ever experienced. I don't mean foreign. And when I say, "unlike," I don't mean that it's really going to be strange or weird or unlike. The necessity is, though, for you to be willing to let it be unlike anything you've ever experienced so that you might not be providing a filter through which the Presence of God must pass in order to get to you and thus deprive you of the full experience of what you would have experienced without the filter there. In other words, to put it simply, you need to be willing to be completely open.

Now, here's some of the practical realism:

God gave the Sonship to you, . .

Now, that's somewhat comprehensible. We've discussed it before. We've discussed the fact that your completeness is constituted of everything that exists, including your Brothers and Sisters—that your brothers and sisters ultimately are some aspect of the infinitude of you—the infinity of you. They are essential to you and you are essential to them because together you all constitute wholeness.

Now, that sounds wonderful, something to be looked forward to. And I know you hope that somehow, God or the Holy Spirit can wave a magic wand and you would have the experience of harmony and unity with all of your Brothers and Sisters. Uh-h, but that's not the way it's going to work. Learning is going to have to happen. Change is going to have to be allowed. You're going to have to be willing to look at your Brothers and Sisters, especially the ones you don't like and especially the ones who don't like you, and be willing to have your mind transformed by a renewal process.

The renewal process will not occur though, if you're not intent upon learning, if you're not intent upon changing the status quo.

If there are those who say you are their enemy, what's going to change that so that this Gift of the Sonship that God gave to you as part of your wholeness, can be experienced without strife? Well, somehow, these ones who consider themselves to be your enemy, you must make friends with. Oh-o-o, somehow those who you don't like, you're going to have to find a way to make a friend.

Well, you know, you know you have a few people who don't like you. You know that you have some people you don't like. And you probably don't think too much about the fact that globally, there are people who don't like you just because of where you're from. And if you were to sit down and look at it, you'd be surprised to find that you spend every day of your life in the midst of tension caused by your negative feelings toward people, and others' negative feelings toward you—even those you've never met, those who've never seen you, but who are nevertheless harboring negative feelings about you. And, as you look at that, you could say, "My God, I'll never Wake up! God gave the Sonship to me to ensure my perfect creation. This was His Gift, for as He withheld Himself not from me, He withheld not His Creation from me.

“Some Gift! But at least I guess I understand a little bit that I have created a mess out of the Gift. And others in their sense of their orphanhood have made a mess out of the Gift. And there are so many people . . . there are so many who don’t like me and so many that I don’t like, and they probably are not any more willing than I am to suddenly be friends with the people we don’t like. It’s impossible!”

Well see, that’s thinking. And if you paid attention to the thinking, there will be a learning. You will be distressed, you will be discouraged, and you might even be immobilized. That’s not good learning.

What you need to understand is something that you can’t figure out for yourself. What you need to understand is that when you genuinely turn to the Father by whatever name you call Him, and you desire of Him to know the truth, or if you turn to the Voice for God, the Holy Spirit, and ask to know the truth . . . and the truth is revealed, I’m going to tell you, that no matter what the details of the question might have been, you’re going to get not only the answers to the details, but you’re going to get, like an “up-front package,” one that’s automatically included in any answer to any question that you address to the Father. This package is an experience of being Loved.

Very simply, it’s to find yourself Loved. And those who have allowed a holy instant and had the experience, have not yet forgotten it.

Now, the important point here is that when you feel loved by God, something happens to your mind. It is transformed. And the first part of the transformation is that it seems totally reasonable for you to be loved this way. In other words, there’s a learning that has already occurred that you have not yet put into words. And that learning is: “I am loveable!” And you just experience it. You are moved by it without words. There’s no need to think about it, it’s just the truth—you just know it.

And in that transformation where you have joined with the Father first, you find yourself having a brand new experience regarding your Brother. You can’t mistake the fact, it’s a new experience of a fact, that your Brother’s just like you—lovable—and loved by God just like you are being loved by God. And just as it’s totally reasonable for you to be loved, it’s in your mind totally reasonable that your Brother or Sister is loved by God, and you know with all the fullness that you’re experiencing of God’s Love for you.

And so you find yourself spontaneously embracing your Brother whom you thought it was going to be impossible to embrace. In fact, you will be able to embrace all of your Brothers that had been called, “enemies” because you know they’re loveable, because you know you’re loveable first, because you let God love you first before you looked upon your Brothers and engaged in a holy relationship—not on purpose, not because you said, “Oh, I’m going to have a holy relationship with my Brother!” All of a sudden you were having a holy relationship with your Brother because you had learned by virtue of God’s love for you, how holy you were.

Now that’s learning. And that is learning that transforms your mind because your mind was renewed. You see? That’s why it’s so important—it’s imperative to turn to the Father first Whom you have the Real Relationship with.

THE HOLY INSTANT AND REAL RELATIONSHIPS

I’m going to start the paragraph over again because now it will have even more meaning:

Think but an instant on this: God gave the Sonship to you, to ensure your perfect creation. This was His Gift, for as He withheld Himself not from you, He withheld not His creation. Nothing that ever was created but is yours. Your relationships are with the universe.

It’s a brand new kind of experience.

Your relationships are with the universe. And this universe, being of God, is far beyond the petty sum of all the separate bodies YOU perceive.

You see, your discouragement would come from all the petty sum of all the separate bodies you perceive and how on earth, given their backgrounds and your background and their likes and dislikes and your likes and dislikes, how on earth could this Gift of the Sonship that was given to you ever become a Gift you would want because it felt so good to be One with the whole?

But that problem becomes a non-issue, you see. You don’t have to learn how to make the petty sum of all the separate bodies you perceive, become harmonized. That’s not what’s called for. What’s called for is a transformed mind where learning has occurred that causes Vision to be true and accurate.

Now, here’s a little bit more of the practicality of the translation of radical idealism into practical realism. When you have this experience—this holy instant in which you feel God’s Love for you—and you immediately understand your Brothers and Sisters and their loveability because of what they so clearly divinely Are as you're now seeing things, it doesn't mean that your Brothers and Sisters are going to see themselves that way yet.

But you know what? Now that you've had this experience, you have the basis and the premise for making friends because you're no longer blinded by your prejudices. And so, you will have to engage in the pleasurable work of creating friendships, inviting them, allowing them, nurturing them, something you will have—I'm going to say—the stamina to do, because the Vision will never leave you, just as those of you who have had the Vision have never lost it in the slightest. The point is, it is to be the basis for Being with your Brothers and Sisters in new ways.

Your relationships are with the universe. And this universe, being of God, is far beyond the petty sum of all the separate bodies YOU perceive. For all its parts are joined in God through Christ, where they become like to their Father.

And you know what? When God loves you and you feel it, and you suddenly discover that you are loveable and worthy of that experience of being loved, you will know what the Christ is and you will know it is you because you will know you are God's Son, you will know you are God's Daughter, you will know that you are His perfect Self-Expression and that is the Christ.

For all its parts are joined in God through Christ, where they become like to their Father. For Christ knows of no separation from His Father, Who is His One relationship, in which He gives as His Father gives to Him.

You see, the steps . . .

. . . His Father gives to Him.

. . . and he gives as

. . . His Father gives to Him.

That's what happens as a result of the two-step. That's what happens as a result of the holy instant. That's the movement and action of the holy instant.

The Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

. . . is God's attempt to free you of what He does not understand.

. . . of what God does not understand.

And because of the Source of the attempt, it will SUCCEED.

Well, God is the Source of the attempt. And it is God's attempt . . .

The Holy Spirit is God's attempt to free you of what He does not understand. The Holy Spirit asks you to respond as God does, for He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . would teach you what YOU do not understand.

[repeats] what YOU do not understand.

God would respond to EVERY need, whatever form it takes. And so He has kept this channel open to receive His communication to you, . .

. . . this channel being the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind.

. . . He has kept this channel open to receive His . . .

. . . God's . . .

. . . communication to you, and yours to Him.

. . . yours back to God.

God does not understand your problem in communication, . .

[chuckling] . . . that's what God doesn't understand. There is no problem in communication, actually, and God experiences only that which actually is.

So, . . .

God does not understand your problem in communication, for He does not share it with you. It is only you who believe that it IS understandable.

. . . that orphan mentality. Now listen to this:

The Holy Spirit knows that it is not understandable, and yet He understands it because you have MADE it. In Him alone lies the awareness of what God cannot know, and what you do not understand.

Now, there's nothing mystical here about it. That which is nothing more than your right Mind is your right Mind in its totality, which includes this little boundaried-off portion of itself in its totality. And It knows exactly how you are maintaining the boundaries, because of course, you're using It—the Holy Spirit—to create these artificial boundaries and then convince yourself that they're real. You see?

So you're using the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—to create an artificial experience, something that God, Who Created You cannot understand.

So, the Holy Spirit knows how it's being done. The Holy Spirit recognizes the mental slight-of-hand, you might say, that you are using with your mentality in order to have this artificial experience that you're having, and therefore, knows exactly how to undo it. It's that simple.

Again, . . .

The Holy Spirit knows that it is not understandable, and yet He understands it because you have MADE it. In Him alone lies the awareness of what God cannot know, and what you do not understand. It is His . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . holy function to accept them both, and by removing every element of disagreement, to join them into one. He will do this BECAUSE it is His function.

The Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—will demonstrate sanity in every part of Itself, because sanity is the only thing that is actually there. And you do not have the will to maintain the illusion indefinitely. It is not a capacity the Father gave you.

Leave, then, what seems to you to be impossible to Him Who knows it MUST be possible because it is the Will of God.

Now, let's be careful here:

Leave, then, what seems to you to be impossible to Him Who knows . . .

. . . blah . . . blah. Well, don't just leave it to Him [chuckle] and continue to have your day in the orphanage—day after day. Leave it to Him in the sense of not trying to imagine what the new learning will be, without trying to come up with an answer that must necessarily be built from materials you already have at hand. And the only materials at the moment you have available to you are the ones provided by the orphanage. And they're not going to get you out of the orphanage.

So, you abandon every attempt that you might be inclined to bring to bear upon the problem—abandon every one of those—and turn the problem over to the Holy spirit, with great attention. And I cannot stress that strongly enough.

Leave, [then,] what seems to you to be impossible to Him Who knows it MUST be possible because it is the Will of God. And . . .

. . . what?

. . . let Him Whose teaching is ONLY of God teach you the ONLY meaning of relationships.

That is what you must be diligently attentive to, else learning will not occur, change will not occur. And at the bottom line, change is going to have to occur in order for peace to show up on your planet, or anywhere else you may take your imagination.

A bunch of you could all migrate to the moon and another bunch of you could all migrate to Mars and set up colonies and be the forefront of evolution. Glory, hallelujah! . . . and never have learned a thing. Never have been transformed by the renewing of your Mind. Never having arrived at a place where you don't have to guard yourself against your Brother, because you don't like him and he doesn't like you and it's not natural to like each other. It's natural to be suspicious because you're all undependable. You're all undependable. You're undependable and they're undependable. And you rely on that. You base your laws . . . you base your behaviors on that. You're committed to that. None of you are dependable. None of you are trustworthy. Bullshit . . . or as Paul likes me to say every once in awhile, "camel dung."

Now, . . .

. . . let Him Whose teaching is ONLY of God teach you the ONLY meaning of relationships. For God created the only relationship which has meaning, and that is His relationship with YOU.

Well, don't jump to imaginative conclusions. That doesn't mean that you will end up having a relationship with God and no one else, as though all of your Brothers and Sisters were part of an illusion, when the only relationship there really is, is with your Father. You could jump to that conclusion and have another false learning, and set yourself back so that you don't dare do the two-step, you don't dare to practice the holy instant.

You see, you can't know that your fellowmen are your Brothers and Sisters if you don't know that you have a Father. If you think you're an independent free agent that has no First Cause, that isn't yourself, then you have no capacity to experience your fellowman as your Brothers and Sisters.

Your real relationship is with your Father and it is your connection with your Source that connects you with everything else in the Universe.

So, "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and His righteousness; and all these things will [shall] be added unto you."³ . . . automatic! [snaps fingers] It's called learning. It happens in the holy instant when you actually let yourself be undefended enough to let God in and feel His Love for you and feel your worthiness of His Love.

You see, learning . . . the learning that will count, will be the learning of things you don't know about at the moment. And yet your prayers tend to be to ask God to conform the grounds of your orphanage and the goings-on in your orphanage . . . to fix them, to improve them, to make what you have better, but still in the same mold, you see.

This learning that is so important, this renewal by the transforming of your mind is going to require you to be undefended against miraculous revelation—miraculous revelation that will not snap you out of the world and universe, but will snap you out of a perception of the world and universe that won't just allow peace on Earth, goodwill toward men to come to view, it will impel it—not with willfulness, like setting up rules in the orphanage so that there won't be any dissonance, but change that happens because you understand the truth, you have the experience of the truth.

You're having trouble, or your country is having trouble, or the company you work for is having trouble, or your marriage is having trouble . . . and you ask for the specific trouble to be fixed. You ask God to fix that. And yet, what's that package that comes along with your contact with God, whenever you let God in, in a holy instant? The package that you get that you didn't even ask for and that you're not really expecting the first few times, is an awareness that you are Loved by God and that you deserve it—that you actually are loveable. You can't explain it and you're not interested in explaining it. It doesn't matter to you why the truth is that you're loveable. You just know it and you accept it and you live with it and you let it be.

Now, that's what you get when you ask for this situation or that situation or the other situation to be resolved the way you think it ought to be resolved because you know what principle is and you know what love is and so-on, you see. You don't know what to ask for. Ask anything . . . ask anything. But don't get hung up on the request. Don't get hung up on the prayer. Get hung up on the connection. Do whatever it takes to let God in. And the whatever that it takes, is you abandoning self-assertive concepts about how things ought to be working, or self-assertive concepts about how God ought to answer you, you see?

So, tonight we're learning about learning.

As the ego would limit your perception of your brothers to the body, so would the Holy Spirit release your vision and let you see the great rays shining from them, so unlimited that they reach to God.

Wow! Now, did you think that was going to happen when you wanted a better salary, or when you wanted so-and-so to mend his ways, or pay you back for what he stole from you. See, don't think too small.

As the ego would limit your perception of your brothers to the body, so would the Holy Spirit release your vision and let you see the great rays shining from them, . .

. . . from your brothers . . .

. . . so unlimited that they reach to God.

Now, there have been questions in the past about what the great rays are. And I began to touch on them last week when I spoke about effulgence. Effulgence is a glow—you might call it a streaming of light from a center. It doesn't move forward. It doesn't move backwards. It is a radiance . . . rays.

Now, what is this effulgence that I spoke of last time? It's the radiance of Love. There are not many rays, you know, like particular colors . . . this color, the red ray or the blue ray or the purple ray. The rays are the effulgence of Love. And I've discussed before, that Love is Light, Love is illumination and Love is the Substance of everything.

Where does the effulgence come from? See? Now mind you, we're talking about things you haven't had the experience of before and that you might not be expecting when you say, "God, I really need you to get that guy to pay me back, what he stole from me." You see? You might not be expecting this. And I'm wanting you to stop being so narrow in your desire to know the truth, in your desire to learn and in your willingness to let your mind be transformed—renewed, you see.

Absolutely everything that exists, every idea in the Mind of God, its substance is Light, its substance is Love. And that Love is an effulgence that of course, fills all of infinity—radiating from everything. The reason being, that everything is loveable and therefore, everything is actually Loved by God. The Love is part of the Gift God gives His Creations, because his extension is motivated by Love and so what He is being there, in all of His Creation, is registered by the great rays of Love—effulgent Love, emanating and as it says here:

... so unlimited that they reach to God.

Well, of course, they reach to God because when you're in this place, when you're in this Awakened state, you can see that because your attention has been given to God and your attention on God has caused you to have this transformed experience, your attention has returned to God and that completion of the circle of Awareness you might say, demonstrates to you the natural, eternal state of being that everything is engaged in. And so you can see and experience the full circle of radiance.

Now remember, the great rays are simply the rays of effulgence of one thing, Love, the Father's Love.

And God saw everything that he had made, and behold and it was Himself. "God saw everything that he made, and behold it was verily God."⁴ And likewise the Son, God's Creation, looks at God and sees Himself and knows that it is good and can be nothing else. This is real learning.

It is this shift in vision which is accomplished in the holy instant.
Yet it is needful for you to . . .

. . . here's that word . . .

... learn . . .

Yet it is needful for you to learn just what this shift entails, so you will become willing to make it permanent.

Which means, so you will be willing to commit yourself to it.

Given this willingness it will not leave you, for it IS permanent.

You see, it hadn't ever left . . . ever! Right now when you're not having the experience, doesn't mean that it has left you. It's there. It's present. It's here. It's your very Being insisting upon you being willing to embrace it.

For once you have accepted it as the only perception you WANT,

... see, that's where the commitment lies.

For once you have accepted it as the only perception you WANT, it is . . .

... what? . . .

. . . translated into knowledge by the part which God Himself plays in the Atonement, for it is the only step in it He understands. Therefore, in this there will be no delay when you are ready for it. God is ready NOW, but YOU are not.

There's no penalty. You're not guilty for not being ready. Your unready-ness is not unredeemable. It just means that at the moment you're not doing the two-step yet, at the moment you're not letting in the fullness of what the transformation of your mind can mean. But you also haven't known what it could mean. And it's hard to have impetus or desire to do something you don't really understand.

But we've uncovered more of the meaning here so that you can understand more. And even though understanding isn't the answer, it can lead you to the point of a willingness to become undefended, simple, vulnerable with God, with the Father, with the Holy Spirit, so that you can let it in and experience the holy instant.

I will tell you that you are all bathed in the Love of this lesson tonight. And you will remain bathed in it. And you will feel it if you don't insist upon the right to be angry or in charge. And even if you claim that right, you will at any moment be able to abandon it and return to the holy instant and return to the meanings that have been shared tonight, so that you might be encouraged to actually practice the holy instant and allow for incredible learning—incredible change.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 27th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

There's so much to talk about—so much to consider. A sign outside a church said: "If you want to find your way Home, use GPS: God's plan for salvation."

That is what the sign said. And we've been talking about God's plan for salvation, haven't we? . . . for quite a few weeks. We've been talking about the holy instant and special relationships, the holy instant and the Laws of God, the holy instant and communication, and the holy instant and real relationships—and all of those were preceded by practicing the holy instant.

The holy instant, simply put, is God's plan for salvation.

Now, when you're depressed, when you're ill, when you're discouraged, when you're experiencing hurt feelings, whenever anything negative is going on, it's from one of two things: It is either from you saying, "God's plan for salvation doesn't work!" Or, you're picking up on the energy of someone else saying, "God's plan for salvation doesn't work!" And there's one other option, and that is, that either you or someone else whom you're picking up on, is saying, "I don't want God's plan for salvation to work!" [chuckles] which means, "I want my plan for salvation to work."

Now mind you, none of those things create a good feeling. None of those things allow for peace to emerge or for love and joy to emerge from the peace and provide the environment in which a sudden shift of perception can occur. Those things simply cannot happen. But God's plan for salvation does work. And God's plan for salvation is guaranteed to work.

Now, there should be a cartoon drawn that shows a view of hell with flames, brimstone and thousands of souls crying and whining and moaning and talking about their distress and the unfairness of it all . . . and talking story and never-ending grumbling. And on a pinnacle overlooking all of this, stands me, stands Jesus. And the caption says, "If you want to get out of hell, the first thing you must do is SHUT UP!" which of course, is the first step of the two-step, isn't it.

If you want to get out of hell, if you want to get out of the constant rehearsing of your bad luck and the constant rehearsing of the unreasonableness and the injustice of what's going on in your life, the first thing you must do is shut-up!

The two-step is another description of the holy instant. You can't hear God when you're talking. You can't hear anything else when you're talking and complaining. The reason you're talking, the reason you're complaining is so that someone else will hear you. So you're not interested in listening, you're interested in someone else listening—you're interested in occupying someone else's mind and attention with your story, with your distress, with how terrible it is in hell and the fact that God's plan for salvation doesn't work. So therefore, you are eternally stuck in hell, right?

But there is a way out. There's a way out of the hell that's called, "The human condition," the hell that is made up of the constant state of ignorance and the suffering that accompanies not knowing the truth. There is a way out. It requires you to utilize the holy instant. It requires you to get what you want to say out of the picture. It requires that you stop being the authority—the asserter, if you will. It requires that you become still and receptive. It requires you to bring yourself into the quietness, which will always bring your attention to the instant you're in—free of the past, free of the future—the holy instant.

Because you're Mind, because you are the state of attention Itself, when you bring yourself into the quietness of the present, you are a natural presence of curiosity—an invitation to know something. And since you are not determining what it is that you must know, that simple pure attention, that simple pure presence of curiosity will constitute a prayer: "I want to know . . . I want to know . . ." and the only thing there to respond is the Father through the Voice for Truth, the Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

Now we've talked at lengths about this for a number of weeks. And I want to take a moment tonight to point out to you that the purpose of talking about this has not only been to emphasize the fact that the Father's plan for salvation works and is guaranteed to work, the goal of the plan for salvation is not the specific answers to your specific prayers, but is to bring you back into your right Mind. To bring you to that place of inquiry within yourself of the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind, that which when it responds to you, is your right Mind connecting you in your very private sense of a small mind and undoing the boundary between the two, which allows the influx of the Father's perspective. And when you find that state of being to be more important to you than anything else, a right mind and a wrong mind disappear. Your right Mind, the Holy Spirit, and the little separated off part of that Mind, which you've claimed to be the entirety of you, which has been designated as the ego, those two things cease to be two things because the boundary—the artificial boundary separating off a small part of what you are in your entirety—has dissolved and unity, wholeness, totality has replaced it. The integrity and wholeness of you that is in no way different from the Mind of God has re-emerged as your actual conscious experience of Being. And for lack of better words, sanity has returned to you.

Now, the point of all of it is, not to get a leg up on the human condition, not to have a way to make the human condition improve—although that will happen. The point of it all, is to no longer be crazy—if I may be blunt—is to no longer be experiencing distortions and thinking that what you're experiencing is actual, real, orderly and the stuff of life which somehow you have a way of imagining that God created that way so that you're completely at peace with an experience of stress, of sin, disease, death, suffering. You see?

So, a sudden shift of perception—a Miracle—occurs in the holy instant. And at the bottom line, the sudden shift of perception that is the point of it all, is you experiencing the healing of insanity—you coming fully back into your right Mind—your inseparable Oneness with God where every aspect of you reflects an intent, that intent being "Thy Will be Done, God—Father."

That's what you were made for. That's what you experimented with having a slight twist on, and it's that, that you will come back to. Because as I said last time, you cannot maintain that distorted perception indefinitely.

Now, I'm going to back up one paragraph . . .

As the ego would limit your perception of your brothers to the body, . . .¹

"Oh yeah, she's a body, he's a body, she's a body, I'm a body, she's a she and I'm a he and, wow, we can do great things together as he and she bodies . . ." and so on, you see?

As the ego would limit your perception of your brothers to the body, so would the Holy Spirit release your vision and let you see the great rays shining from them, . . .

. . . shining from what? Their bodies, or shining from them, your Brothers? The illumination of the great rays is the illumination emanating from your Brothers and Sisters—the presence of God called You and your Brothers and Sisters. Again:

As the ego would limit your perception of your brothers to the body, so would the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing but your right Mind that intends for you to regain your sanity . . .

. . . so would the Holy Spirit

. . . accomplish this by releasing your vision . . .

. . . and let you see the great rays shining from them, so unlimited that they reach to God. It is this shift in vision which is accomplished in the holy instant.

The holy instant is God's plan for salvation.

Yet it is needful for you to learn just what this shift entails, so you will become willing to make it permanent.

To make commitment to it.

Given this willingness it will not leave you, for it IS permanent.

You see. It's only your willingness to give your attention to it that is impermanent at the moment.

Given this willingness it will not leave you, for it IS permanent. For once you have accepted it as [what] the only perception you WANT, it is translated into knowledge by the part which God Himself plays in the Atonement, for it is the only step in it He understands.

It's actually at this point that your right Mind and your ego—personality, your wrong mind—disappear as a twosome, because, as I said, the artificial boundary separating off this small part of you from the Totality of you dissolves. Now it's all the Presence of Mind that is God Being all there is of You, and your having no further different experience of that.

Therefore, in this there will be no delay when you are ready for it. God is ready NOW, but YOU are not.

Now, continuing:

Our task is but to continue, as fast as possible, the necessary process of looking straight at all the interference, and seeing it EXACTLY as it is. For it is impossible to recognize as wholly WITHOUT gratification what you think you WANT.

You see. You wouldn't want it if there was not some form of gratification in it. And so what doesn't contribute to your sanity, even though you presently find gratification from it, has to go through a transformation of some sort that allows you to see that it's not gratifying you, that although the thrill of the chase may be exciting, the fact that you never consummate it by catching what you're chasing, that should be all it takes for you to abandon what doesn't work and to abandon thinking that there's satisfaction in trying to accomplish what can't be accomplished.

Now:

The body is the symbol of the ego, as the ego is the symbol of the separation.

Okay, so here we are . . . here you are . . . you are the Presence of Mind as God has Created you . . . as God is Creating you . . . as God is Being you.

You are the unseparated totality of the conscious awareness of infinity and eternity that's called Creation—the conscious experience of all that God is Being eternally. And then for some strange reason, it's as though you've blown a little soap bubble right in the middle of this infinite Mind that is your presence—that is presencing itself, and it's you. And this little soap bubble has enclosed a small part of the totality so that everything in it is some part of the totality of God, of You.

Everything in it's Real, but the boundary's artificial, but the boundary is being interpreted as you. And it's a novel experience. And you have fun with it initially. You're enjoying the autonomy, the separation. Okay?

This part of the infinity of you that is enclosed in this very delicate bubble, that has no strength really to maintain itself, we have identified as the ego.

So, the separation, which really means that a flimsy surface—a sphere—has enclosed a part of the infinity of you, it becomes the symbol of separation. And then from that tiny vantage point something that hadn't been important on its own before suddenly has become important. And it's what you call your body.

And so, the body is the symbol of the ego as the ego is the symbol of the separation. You see?

And both are nothing more than attempts to limit communication, and thereby to make it impossible.

Oh communication . . . communication with what? Communication with the whole of you, because you know what? That which God Created called You, is that infinite awareness that God Is. And God's Self-expression is infinite and so there is the Brotherhood. And all of your Brothers and Sisters, all the Sons and Daughters of God, we'll say, are present in this infinite Mind that is God, that is Creation, that is your conscious experience of Being.

The moment you drew this little sphere around a small portion of the infinitude of You and then identified it very specifically with this body, this visibility and tangibility of you—although not the totality of you—you lost communication, you lost direct communication with all of the Brotherhood.

And I've described this before in a helpful way: If you would imagine a large crystal ball with many facets all around the surface of the ball and if you were to imagine every facet as what you could call an individuality—you and all of the Brotherhood, all of the Sonship—well if you were to be inside this crystal sphere with all the facets and you saw all of the facets from the interior, you would recognize Mary and Joe and Peter and all of the Sonship. And they would just be over at the other side of you, so to speak, as you would be over at the other side of them. And the interior of the crystal ball would be the continuity of you extending to everything and everyone else. For everyone else the interior of this ball and all of the other facets would constitute part of the totality of them. All of you would be the same One, you might say. In this way you could see that you have communication with everyone and no one is different from you, but no one is the same as you.

But now, you've had this little imaginative experience of separating a small part of you from the totality. And in effect it's as though the facet you are, on the surface, that you were experiencing from the interior, flips, and suddenly you're on the exterior. And now there's Mary and Joe and well, you can't quite see everybody anymore, but there are a bunch that are close by, but now you have to yell, you have to do something to get their attention because they're not all connected with you, but they're all close by.

And so you've lost communication, you've lost union, you've lost communion. You see? You've lost communication.

The body is the symbol of the ego, as the ego is the symbol of the separation. And both are nothing more than attempts to limit communication, and thereby to make it impossible. For communication must be unlimited . . .

. . . you might say, it must occur from within where the wholeness of all is continuous and unseparated . . .

. . . in order to have meaning, and DEPRIVED of meaning it will not satisfy you completely.

Yeah, flipped over on the outside, trying to experience connection and relationship . . .

. . . will not satisfy you completely. Yet it remains the only means by which you can establish real relationships.

Unlimited communication . . .

. . . remains the only means by which you can establish real relationships.

So you might say, that Waking up is doing the two-step, leaning into the Father, you might say, it's sort of like leaning into the interior of the crystal ball so that a sudden shift of perception can occur—a flip-flop. You see? Why? Because you've abandoned the glory you thought would be embodied in your being on the outside where the facet that you were was quite distinct from all the rest and might become something of importance on its own, you see.

But . . . continuing . . .

Real relationships HAVE no limits, having been established by God.

Real relationships are the relationships from the interior of the crystal ball.

Now, we're going to leave the crystal ball simple and continue here:

In the holy instant, where the great rays REPLACE the body in awareness, the recognition of relationships without limits is given you.

What does that mean, where the great rays REPLACE the body in awareness? In other words, when the illumination of Love that is the substance and character and nature and motivation and presence of your Brothers and Sisters and You, when they replace the body in terms of importance, when they replace the body and the uses you've been putting the body to for communication, the recognition of relationships without limits is given you. It doesn't mean that there's no longer anything there identifying you, it means that the meaning of body has shifted from a limited means of communication to an effulgence of love that reaches all the way to the Father, completing the circle of communion, of communication, of making one a wholeness out of what had been two.

In the holy instant, where the great rays REPLACE the body in awareness, the recognition of relationships without limits is given you.

Sudden shift of perception: A whole new way of being with each other, where the meanings of being with each other are new, not usury, not stemming from smallness, defense, self-protection, but which are an interactive acknowledgement of truth, an interactive acknowledgement of God in each of you, in all of you all at the same time, an experience of joy that also is unlimited, an experience of joy that you feel but is shared by all of the Sonship. And then their joy that they are sharing with you gets shared back with you, so that the joy becomes a Movement of Love spreading through the Sonship, engulfing it in its wholeness, in its totality.

It's a new experience, far more meaningful than what you've been experiencing while thinking that you're just bodies communicating to each other through bodies.

But to see this, it is necessary to give up every use the ego has for the body, and to accept the fact that the ego has NO purpose you would share with It . . .

. . . you see? Here's where you have to arrive at discovering that what you want isn't what you want, because what you have wanted is this "chase after the carrot" that can't ever be accomplished, or consummated. It's meaningless and you're ready to see it as meaningless and to give it up—to just abandon it! [snaps fingers] That's how the flip of the facet from the outside to the inside occurs.

For the ego would limit everyone to a body for ITS purposes, and while you think it HAS a purpose, you will choose to utilize the means by which IT tries to turn its purpose into accomplishment.

[Chuckling] . . . which is to continue running after that carrot forever! And thereby provide yourself for a forever experience of frustration and seeming justification to think that God's plan for salvation doesn't work.

The learning here is, you arriving at a point where you're willing to look straight at exactly what is happening and not gloss it over with imagination, so that you say, "Hey, I've been chasing this carrot for my whole life and I've thought it was getting me somewhere. But if I'm going to be honest with myself, it hasn't gotten me where I thought it was going to get me and therefore, I'm going to give up on that and I'm going to try God's plan for salvation."

Well, you know what? You can practice the holy instant and maybe because there's residual reluctance to believe that what it represents can be true, you don't experience it. And then you seem to have justification for saying, "But, God's plan for salvation doesn't work!" Well, I'm here to tell you that it does and that it is guaranteed to work and that if you have a seeming incapacity to believe that it works, you have to persist in the face of it.

Now, you know what? The way to experience your Real relationship, which is with God, is to join with the Holy Spirit, which is the Voice for God, but is also that which is nothing more than your right Mind. And you say, "Well, I can't hear my Guide . . . God's plan for salvation doesn't work . . . I can't hear my Guide!"

Well, you know what? You may wait from week-to-week to hear Paul let me speak, so to speak, as a substitute for hearing your Guide. But you know what? More than the information that I lovingly share with you every week, you are seeing a demonstration of the fact that the two-step works. You are seeing a demonstration of the fact that the holy instant works. You are seeing a demonstration of the fact that God's plan for salvation works, even though Paul hasn't made total commitment yet.

The point is, that when you say, in so many words, that the only way back Home that you've been told about—which is to connect with your Guide, which is the Holy Spirit—doesn't work for you, [repeats] that the only way back Home that you've been told about doesn't work for you, you're creating a false learning for yourself and delaying the inevitable. You could call it a learning failure. Don't do it!

You think Paul just [snaps fingers] one moment said, "I want to talk to my Guide, are you there?" . . . and I was there? Well I was there, but he didn't hear me. And he didn't hear me the second or third time, and days went by. The only reason he heard me was because he persisted and he finally arrived at a point where his listening wasn't conditional.

In other words, he wasn't saying, "If you speak to me tonight, I will listen," or "If you speak to me within the next two weeks, I will continue to listen, but I'm not going to do this forever." He tried that. And then he arrived at a point where he said, "You know, if it takes a year, if it takes two years, I want to be able to experience what the truth is when I need to know what it is. And that's more important to me than a time limit, that's more important to me than trying to leverage the universe, to get it to do what it's going to do when I want it."

And so he started sitting down to listen with resolve, not force, not willfulness, but with an absence of impatience. And you're going to have to do the same thing because it's the only way Home.

If you want to get out of hell, the first thing you're going to have to do is shut up! There...ain't...no...other...way! And it is a very direct route. But you're used to complaining. You're used to what might be called, an orphanage welfare system, where the worse your need is the more help you get and the less need there is for you to do anything to upset the status quo. You see?

So . . .

. . . the ego would limit everyone to a body for ITS purposes, . .

. . . which are to chase after the carrot, . .

. . . and while you think it HAS a purpose, you will choose to utilize the means by which IT tries to turn its purpose into accomplishment. This will never BE accomplished.

See, that's the honesty that you have to arrive at, the awareness:

This will never BE accomplished. Yet you have surely recognized that the ego, whose goals are altogether unattainable, will strive for them with all its might, and will do so with the strength which

. . . what? . .

. . . YOU have given it.

You know what? The capacity to have an intent that exists inside the bubble that's floating around in the middle of the infinity of you is the same intent that's outside of it. You, the holy Son of God, express an intent with all of the power of the holy Son of God.

. . . the ego, whose goals are altogether unattainable, will strive for them with all its might, and will do so . . .

. . . what? Not with its strength, but . . .

. . . with the strength which YOU . . .

. . . the holy Son of God . . .

. . . have given it.

The only thing is, you really like this little delicate bubble. [chuckles] And you say, "I have no power! I want something, but I don't have any power! I'm not connected with any power source. I just have my own guts and my own capacity to try to do things. And I'm improving it all the time, you see, but I'm really helpless and hopeless. And I'm really struggling in my life." And oh, there you are down by the river sticks with all the flames and talking story about how awful it is and how stuck you are. You see? And it's all crap! It's all imaginary! And it all seems believable because you just love this bubble—which I must repeat—is so delicate that it really is not going to take any force from you to pop it. Okay? And that's what we're learning about the two-step and the holy instant.

It is impossible to divide your strength between Heaven and hell, God and the ego, and release your power unto creation, which is the only purpose for which it was given you.

You see? You can't split up your attention and give your full attention to two different things at the same time. Thus communication is interrupted, thus wholeness is unavailable to you as an experience, thus sin, disease and death and suffering and stories to tell as you burn, burn, burn, occupy your time. And you willingly let it. But you don't have to. And it's not appropriate and it doesn't work, and that's where you need to become honest so that you dare to go through your day tomorrow or today, willing to see things new, willing to let the bubble pop.

And the way you will to have it pop, without using force or bringing force to bear upon it, is to simply neglect to do anything else. You see? Simply neglect to do anything else. In other words, shut up!

Shutting up brings you into quietness. Shutting up brings you into quietness that is peace. Shutting up brings you into quietness which is peace, which is the now, which is the instant in which the attention that you are, because you are Mind, constitutes an unwillful desire that allows the Father to answer, that allows the Holy Spirit to answer [snaps fingers] and break, pop the bubble and bring back into Oneness that which always had been One except for this little flimsy bubble that looked like it separated this part from the big part.

Your power, your presence is meant to extend unto Creation. It is meant to be in constant communication with every part of eternity, of infinity. And because its nature and function is Love, it's a Movement—a forever Movement of "Behold I make all things new"—Creation.

Love would ALWAYS give increase. Limits are demanded by the ego, representing its demands to make little and ineffectual. Limit your vision of a brother to his body, which you WILL do as long as you would not release him from it, and you have denied his gift to YOU.

If you refuse to look at your brother with a willingness to see something new and very different from him as a physical organism, if you will look at your brother with a curiosity to see God there, truly—truly because you've been told that God is the only thing that is there—and you release him from your expectation that he will behave like the body you always thought he was . . . what's happened? You've provided the environment in which an influx of revelation can occur that will help you see your brother through the Holy Spirit's eyes, through the eyes of your right Mind. And that recognition about your brother will tell you that it's the truth about you as well. And so the gift you give to him you get to keep. And you are put in the position of finding that a Movement has occurred that you can only identify truly as learning, because you're not where you were just before the holy instant.

His body CANNOT give it.

His body CANNOT give the gift you need, which is the realization of the holy Son of God that you Are, which is a realization that you are, your very Being is an effulgence of Light, an effulgence of Living Love, constituting great rays that return to God and fill the universe, fill Creation.

Your determination to see your fellowman as a body disallows for that experience, disallows for that revelation and learning.

His body CANNOT give it. And seek it not through YOURS.

How many times do you use your body to elicit a good response or a gift from another?

. . . seek it not through YOURS.

Seek it not through your body.

Yet your minds are ALREADY continuous, and their union need only be accepted, and the loneliness in Heaven is gone.

Again, when that facet flips to the inside so that your view of everything is an interior view, you find that your minds, the minds that appeared to be individual and separated from the outside of the faceted crystal ball are really continuous and unseparated in any way when viewed from the interior. And even though they are continuous, the facets do not disappear. The Sonship does not dissolve into an undifferentiated mass of Love.

. . . your minds are ALREADY continuous, . .

. . . right now when you're not experiencing it all simply because you're flipped to the outside and you're looking around on the surface . . .

. . . your minds are ALREADY continuous, and their union need only be accepted, and the loneliness in Heaven is gone.

If you would but let the Holy Spirit tell you of the Love of God for you, and the need your creations have to be with you forever, you would experience the attraction of the eternal.

[Repeats] If you would but let the Holy Spirit tell you. . .

If you would but let the telling of the Holy Spirit register with you, this would be your experience, cause the Holy Spirit hasn't stopped for a moment from that time when you decided to ignore It—the totality of you—in favor of this interior of a flimsy little soap bubble.

Remember, we're not here to repair or reform the orphanage. We're not here to improve the human condition. We're here to have sanity returned, so that the Kingdom of Heaven is re-recognized as the Kingdom of Heaven, because you've decided not to observe it through the lens of private selfhood and independence that cause it to be nothing more than a physical universe, having nothing to do with God and being Holy in no way.

You might say, "Wow, I could never have gotten all of that out of those few paragraphs all by myself." And that would be the truth. Thank God you have a Guide. Thank God there is the More of you outside of the little flimsy bubble, called the Holy Spirit that is your right Mind. Because the fullness of Reality becomes available to you like this, without your having to tune in to someone else when you stop whining about your situation and shut up. That's the way out of hell. That's the way out of suffering.

Enjoy shutting up this week—often! And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 10th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, when the automobile was first invented, it was styled, we'll say, after the buggy, as in horse-and-buggy. And the tendency is, as unfoldment occurs, as growth occurs, as change occurs, the new is modeled after the old and as a result, what is new doesn't change as rapidly or is not as new as it could be because you carry forward the old habits into the forming of new ones.

Now, I'm bringing this up because there's something important. We read a short time ago:

. . . it is necessary to give up every use the ego has for the body, and to accept the fact that the ego has NO purpose you would share with it. For the ego would limit everyone to a body for ITS purposes, and while you think it HAS a purpose, you will choose to utilize the means by which IT tries to turn its purpose into accomplishment.¹

Well, what might that mean? Well, I'm going to put it simply: You know, if you find yourself having nothing to do and you find yourself having nothing to do over a period of days or weeks—much like someone who's retired, we'll say—a feeling of depression can develop because there's no feeling of purpose, right? There's no feeling of purpose. And one could say, "Well, why don't you find something to do. You could do this, or you could do that."

But when you're confronted with that, it isn't really just about having something to do. Purpose is about having a goal in the process of which you're bettering yourself. Purpose, in order for it to be truly Purpose—we'll say, with a capital "P," and I'm not really meaning divine purpose, I'm meaning ultimate human Purpose—isn't something that's accomplished by being . . . um . . . the best housekeeper or the best cleaning lady for twenty years, or the best mail-clerk in a corporation for thirty years. Purpose involves climbing up the ladder of success in the corporation, so that at the end of the thirty years you are more than you were in the beginning. You have made something of yourself, right?

So Purpose amounts to engaging in a process of accomplishment, and therefore, activities which don't serve that Purpose are not seen as activities of Purpose. It's important to understand this.

So, if you have come from a family and an upbringing in which Purpose is important and you have become Purposeful, and then A Course In Miracles or religion in general comes into your experience and you learn of things like God's plan of salvation, it seems utterly natural to you to transfer your definition and practice of Purpose into this new arena—which really doesn't fit in this new arena. It's meaningless in this new arena.

And then when you read something like we just read recently:

Our task is but to continue, as fast as possible, the necessary process of looking straight at all the interference, and seeing it EXACTLY as it is. For it is impossible to recognize as wholly WITHOUT gratification what you think you WANT.

Whoa boy! Now that gives you something to do, doesn't it? However, if you remember, I didn't read it that way when we were at that point. Whew!

And so, you know what? You can become as the old hymn says: "An onward Christian soldier." A soldier for Christ . . . a soldier for God. And you can go out to ferret out every single error there is, and uncover it so that you can see what's keeping you back or you can apply it to others so that you can show them what's holding them back. Why? So that you have Purpose. And so that through the practice of this Purpose you might weed out and clear out those negatives in you that are keeping you from moving forward, or so that you can help others weed out what's keeping them from moving forward.

Oh-h . . . but then we have the first sentence in the text for tonight:

If you would but let the Holy Spirit tell you of the Love of God for you, and the need your creations have to be with you forever, you would experience the attraction of the eternal.

Well, where does that leave you if you are supposed to be diligent and even militant in terms of routing out error and uncovering it and getting rid of it? Well, it's very important to understand that because you don't know what Reality is yet . . . you don't really know what the illusions are yet . . . and so you don't know what needs to be routed out.

Now the simple fact is that as I've said before, as you proceed in your Awakening, you are retracing the steps you took away from the Father. You're undoing the creation of an illusory experience that you created for yourself.

And you know what? If you're undoing the ten thousandth step, if that's where you are and you try to undo the fiftieth step, it isn't going to work. And how do you know which step it is? I'm going to tell you something really important:

If you would but let the Holy Spirit tell you of the Love of God for you, . . .

. . . and I'm just going to stop there.

You say, "Well, I don't have time to let the Holy Spirit tell me of the Love of God for me because I've got too much work to do to clean out all the crap that's going on in my mind."

Well, like I said, you don't know which is the next crap to get rid of because you don't know what the most recent one was that needs to be undone. But . . .

If you would but let the Holy Spirit tell you of the Love of God for you, . . .

. . . if that's where you would give your attention, if you would say, "Holy Spirit, I want to know about the Love of God for me," you're going to find out if your desire is genuine. You're going to find out very quickly what stands in the way of that. You'll find out very quickly what the argument is against your having that. You're very likely to find out that you don't think that God loves you. Maybe because you read that He is a jealous God, visiting the iniquities of the fathers upon the children under the third and fourth generation. So He probably doesn't love you. Okay . . . so there's the next thing to deal with.

Or perhaps you think—the thought arises—because you're engaging in actually, genuinely desiring to have God's Love for you revealed to you by the Holy Spirit, you're very likely to find out that you feel unworthy of His Love, because of course, you haven't bettered yourself enough yet. Your Purpose of "bettering yourself" hasn't brought you to the place yet—you say—where God would love you or where God would give you the time of day, even though He may be watching you, waiting for you to arrive at the first threshold where He can appropriately acknowledge you by letting you know of His Love for you, you see.

You know, I keep saying, ask: "What is the truth here? What is the truth about this situation?"—meaning what is God's truth about this situation? What's God's truth about this place called Earth? Well, the truth about this place called Earth is that it's Heaven. It is not the truth about this place called Earth that it's a difficult place to live—a place where you have to be on guard all the time, it's a place where you have to be sure that iniquities don't get out of hand and on and on and on.

The truth is, about this place called Earth, that it's the Kingdom of Heaven. Wow, that turns your head in a new direction. That turns your contemplations and your willingness to be aware into a far more expansive arena, doesn't it? And the moment you let that happen, whatever means you have been using to keep yourself from experiencing it, will come to your attention. And that's what you will deal with.

And you know what? You may not have a hell of a lot of time to be noticing what your brother is doing wrong, so that you might bring him up to speed [snaps fingers] being the warrior that you are for God. You see. [deep sigh]

What I'm trying to bring out here is, that it very often slips past you . . . the fact slips past you that you try to bring the buggy design into the horseless carriage design—the automobile design. It escapes you that your sense of Purpose which involves a process of bettering yourself because your not good enough yet, into what I'll call the area of spirituality in which the real opportunity you have is to discover that you're neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, you're at that point and must understand yourself therefrom.

Now, if you're not behind and you're not advancing toward, then what are you doing looking for faults? I've pointed out before, that if you go on an internal witch hunt, the ego will give you an endless list of faults to find and take care of. And in that process you'll never withdraw your attention from the ego's teachings. You're going to stay bound tight, in a tight relationship with it. But turn your attention toward God and His Love, with a desire to experience It. And those things which it's as necessary for you to let go of in order to have the experience, will present themselves to you, within you, as arguments against It, that you can take a look at and say, "Wow, I need to release that!" "Father . . ." um-m, see don't try to figure out how to release it yourself . . . "Holy Spirit, help me release this. What is the truth that is so evidently the truth that I will recognize it as the truth and will have no difficulty letting go of what isn't true." You see? "Help me." But this has to be done in the arena of Love.

If you would but let the Holy Spirit tell you of the Love of God for you, and . . .

. . . in other words, as well as . . .

. . . and the need your creations have to be with you forever, you would experience the attraction of the eternal.

Now, you know what?

. . . you would experience the attraction of the eternal.

And I'm going to add: In that experience there would be the realization that you would feel the attraction of the eternal for the eternal—meaning for you. You see, that's realization. That's even revelation. And it doesn't leave you where it found you.

In that realization, the words "you are the holy Son or the holy Daughter of God" begins to mean something to you as an experience. And that makes it much easier to let go of what wasn't true about you, that you were believing was true about you and which was binding you to an illegitimate experience of limitation and suffering.

No-one can hear Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

No-one can hear Him speak of this . . .

. . . of the Love of God for you . . .

. . . and long remain willing to linger here.

But you know what? I'll tell you something: Discover a fault in yourself or discover a fault in your brother and sister and you're liable to get stuck there in clearing out those god damn faults . . . a soldier for God . . . and feeling a sense of purpose of engaging in an act of bettering yourself and you will be willing to linger there longer and longer and longer and longer, because you're not engaging in the thing that will release you.

No-one can hear Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

... speak of this ...

... of God's Love for you ...

... and long remain willing to linger here. For it IS your will to be in Heaven, where you are complete and quiet, in such sure and loving relationships that ANY limit is impossible.

This is the truth about you. This is your nature. This is the natural environment of Being for you. But you will not experience it. You will not discover it as long as you're engaged in attempting to better yourself by being a purposeful divine agent for change.

Would you not exchange your little relationships for this? For the body IS little and limited, and only those whom you would see WITHOUT the limits the ego would impose on them can offer you the gift of freedom.

You see, it's time for everyone to begin looking at their Brother and seeing the great rays. It's time to begin looking at each other with an awareness that you, looking at them, are the holy Son or Daughter of God, and those who you are looking at are the holy Sons and Daughters of God, so that your curiosity is not about their flaws but your curiosity is about seeing the effulgence of the great rays, of the light of their Being more and more clearly, because it's your nature and function to be seeing That. Why? Because when you're seeing That you're seeing God in them. And your seeing them, glorifies God. And the gift you give them heals them, if healing is needed. And you get to keep the gift that you've given to them. And this is what is supposed to be happening in your days—this week, last week, next week.

You have no conception of the limits you have placed on your perception, and no idea of all the loveliness that you could see.

You know, believe it or not, you're having a certain kind of evening this evening ... or you're having a certain kind of day, depending on when you might be listening to the recording of this. And you're taking it all for granted and you're believing it's all Real. Now, right now ... you might be having a sort of negative overtone about this evening because the meeting started so late and in your time zone it's really inconvenient. On the other hand, there's something good about this evening, because you really did want to hear the meeting, you really did want to hear what I have to say and you are appreciating what I'm having to say. And something else that contributes to the feeling of the evening in a positive way, might be that ... well, at least tomorrow isn't Monday, and so you can sleep in. And so that makes this evening and the circumstances a little bit lighter. You see?

So you have all of these threads of concepts that get woven together. And those are the things that are giving you an experience of this evening. And those things have absolutely nothing to do with what's happening this evening. They are things that are being overlaid on the presence and sharing of Love that is going on in both directions—from me to you, from you to me.

This is a gathering. This is a union. This is a manifestation of infinite Oneness. It's, in a way, a rather elegant experience of the Presence of God and what It all means. But you're not experiencing It totally as what It is, because you're letting It all be colored by conditioned thinking.

And what I'm trying to point out is, that you, at any time, can dare to ask yourself, "Are any of the feelings I'm having about this moment Real? Do I really need to be feeling this way at this moment?" You know . . . is the fact that tomorrow is Sunday and you can sleep in—so being up late tonight isn't as bad as it could be—is that a reason for feeling good? Is the fact that it's late and inconvenient a reason for feeling bad? Well it is, if you have your attention be in the wrong place.

If you would but let the Holy Spirit tell you of the Love of God for you, . .

If you would be willing to be in this moment as though you are a holy Son of God, in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, experiencing the Movement of God, then whatever reasons you were using for feeling the way you have been feeling about this moment are meaningless. They're just not valid or valuable in any way because they are not addressing the actuality, the reality of communion that is occurring—you see—of communication.

So another way of uncovering what might need to be undone without going on a witch hunt is to ask: "If I'm the holy Son of God, and if all of this is the Kingdom of Heaven, then are any of the feelings I'm having legitimate?" Asking that question and being truly open to an unconditioned response will illuminate you in new ways or it will illuminate first, the reasons you are withholding that experience from yourself. And now you have been presented, like in the game of pickup sticks, the next stick that can be removed without toppling the whole pile, you see? You can pick up and remove the part of the pile that doesn't need to be there any longer and is the next one to be removed. You see?

You have no conception of the limits you have placed on your perception, . .

. . . these threads of perceptions, these threads of conditioned thinking.

You have no conception of the limits you have placed on your perception, and no idea of all the loveliness that you could see.

And so, there is the Course and there's me and there's your Guides to tell you that there is loveliness that you could be seeing and it is available for you to see and you're supposed to be seeing it. And so you could say, "Okay, I'm going to desire to see it." And if you desire it and you don't see any change, you don't see anything different, you need to persist. And if you persist and you don't see, reasons are going to pop up in your mind that say why you're not seeing it. "Well, it's not there. This is all a bunch of bullshit . . ." You see. "There is no God's plan of salvation. And if there is, God's plan of salvation doesn't work." You see.

Now those are the things that you need to take a look at with the Holy Spirit and have the Holy Spirit explain away. Because those are the sticks that can be taken up next, they're the ones ready to be released from. And they're the ones that are easy to get to, because they're next.

Again . . .

You have no conception of the limits you have placed on your perception, and no idea of all the loveliness that you could see. But this you must remember; the attraction of guilt OPPOSES the attraction of God.

Now, listen to this:

His . . .

. . . God's.

His attraction for you remains unlimited, but because your power, being His, is as great as His, . .

You see? Negatively put, that's saying you're the holy Son of God.

. . . but because your power, being His, is as great as His, you can turn away from love.

And I'll tell you one of the best ways to turn away from love is to become a fault finder! . . . is to go on that internal witch hunt and be most unkind to yourself, or go on a witch hunt on behalf of someone else and be very unkind to your brother or sister.

Again . . .

His . . .

. . . God's . . .

. . . attraction for you remains unlimited, but because your power, being His, is as great as His, you can turn away from love. What you invest in guilt you withdraw from God. And your sight grows weak and dim and limited, . .

. . . depressed eventually and mean spirited . . .

. . . for you have attempted to separate the Father from the Son,

. . . you've tried to separate yourself from your Father—get your divorce, be an independent agent . . .

. . . and limit their communication.

The Father's and the Son's, your communication with your Source and therefore, your experience of your Birthright and who you Are. And so you don't think you're the holy Son of God or the holy Daughter of God. And you're quite convinced of it. And if you start to challenge that by saying, "Father, Holy Spirit, help me to see that I'm the holy Son of God, help me to see that I'm the holy Daughter of God." Wow, if you're convinced that you aren't, your arguments will come up and you will close your ears.

Seek not Atonement in FURTHER separation.

You just can't afford to argue against the truth about yourself. Oh, you can, but it won't do any good. And Atonement won't occur, and joy won't occur, and perfection won't occur, and the capacity to love will remain hidden in you—present because it's always there, but hidden . . . hidden.

And limit not your vision of God's Son to what INTERFERES with his release, and what the Holy Spirit must UNDO to set him free.

Well, . . .

And limit not your vision of God's Son to what INTERFERES . . .

Well, if you insist upon looking at your Brothers, who are the Sons of God, as bodies, on planet Earth, in a physical universe, you're limiting your vision of him to what interferes with his release, because he's the holy Son of God and the great rays, the effulgent illumination of Love Itself, the Presence of the Father, that is Love. That is what is there for you to see. That is what it is your Birthright to be seeing, and without increasing a sense of purpose in you that's improperly based, it's your obligation, I'll say. It's your obligation because it is exactly the truth. And there's just no reason to be seeing anything else. It's your nature to be seeing it. You will be seeing it.

You don't fulfill the obligation to see it by becoming forceful and militant, but by letting your heart soften, by letting Love in, by being willing to be the Presence of Love that wishes to see the Presence of Love.

. . . limit not your vision of God's Son to what INTERFERES with his release, and what the Holy Spirit must UNDO to set him free.

You see, you want to be knowing what the truth is so that you can participate in the undoing of what will set your Brother free.

For his belief in limits HAS imprisoned him.

Just as your belief in limits has imprisoned you. And just as my being with you in a Real way, not in a process of uncovering your faults, but uncovering what the truth is about you—those limits that have imprisoned you can be released by you because you realize there is another way to look at things and you choose to look at the more intelligent way.

Now, . . .

When the body . . .

. . . in other words, when that which is not seen as the great rays, the effulgence of the Living Light of Love . . .

When the body ceases to attract you, and when you place no value on it as a means for getting ANYTHING, . .

. . . you see, like accomplishing a goal, like bettering yourself, like making others better themselves, you see.

When the body ceases to attract you, and when you place no value on it as a means for getting ANYTHING, then there will be no interference in communication, and your thoughts will be as free as God's. As you let the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . teach you how to use the body ONLY for purposes of communication, and renounce its use for separation and attack which the ego sees in it, you will learn you have no need of a body at all.

You see, it didn't say: You'll find that you have no body at all. You'll find you'll have no need for a body.

Um-m, you know, the militant Christian soldier, you know, not only has a body which is used to express his militancy, he put a suit of armor on to make that body even more impregnable, even more damaging, even more enduring in its act of aggression against the sinner, the enemy, the one in whom the one wearing the suit of armor could see no worth, no love, no reason to be loving. You see?

The body is very important if you're going to be a militant soldier. And that doesn't mean a body of great rays, a body of effulgent Light that is Living Love that is transforming. No it doesn't mean that.

As you let the Holy Spirit teach you how to use the body ONLY for purposes of communication, and renounce its use for separation and attack which the ego sees in it, you will learn you have no need of a body at all.

Because you'll be through with accomplishing things with it. You will accomplish things with your Vision, with your recognition of the great rays, with the recognition of the holiness of your Brothers and Sisters and with your insistence upon disclosing the truth in ways that inspire the acceptance of truth, because the one it's being shared with does not feel threatened by militant action.

In the holy instant there ARE no bodies, and you experience only the attraction of God.

And I'll be very clear here: There are no bodies as paraphernalia of war. But there are still bodies, which aren't where your attention is, because your attention is with the desire to be the Presence of Love and see the Presence of Love. In other words, your desire and focus of attention is on the Movement of God that happens to look like Creation, but the look of the Movement of God is not more important to you than the Movement Itself, which is the Movement of Mind—the infinite Mind that God Is and which you are inseparable from. And without your holding yourself apart any longer from God, you become co-Creators with God. And you are experiencing Purpose. And Purpose has nothing to do with bettering yourself. Purpose has to do with being the presence of Peace and Joy that has no goals of its own—that Joys in and expresses and acknowledges Creation in Its totality with an undistorted experience of what It Is.

In the holy instant there ARE no bodies, and you experience only the attraction of God. Accepting it as undivided you join Him wholly, in an instant. The reality of this relationship becomes the only truth that you could ever WANT. All truth IS here.

All truth is in the holy instant, in which you abandon—truly abandon—your independence. And so again, the way you abandon your independence is by wanting to know the truth, by wanting to experience God’s Love for you and letting that desire bring up whatever needs to be cleared out in you, by your willingness to let the Holy Spirit declare even more fully to you what the truth is so that the resistances and reluctances that you have can be willingly and gladly and joyfully released. That’s the process.

That’s the good news.

I love you. I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 24th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We've been talking at some length about the holy instant. We've talked about the fact that it is the place in which God's laws prevail. The word, "prevail" is a significant word. The holy instant is the place where God's laws prevail. No other laws prevail. The holy instant is in the little gap between the past and the future. The past and the future are not an unbroken line, there is a break in the little gap, in the now is the holy instant.

How many of you have been willing to engage in the holy instant? And more importantly, I have a question for everyone tonight. What will it take, or what does it take to warrant involving yourself in the holy instant?

You all say you'd like to have a different experience from the one you're having. You would like an improved experience. You even talk about experiencing Awakening—enlightenment—as though it's preferable to what you're experiencing. You want to have a new experience, but you can't have a new experience with all of the same goals you have been carrying with you. If you want to have a different experience, you're going to have to have different goals, because your goals determine your experience. It's that simple.

"Oh-h . . . you mean I'm going to have to give up my goals? I'm going to have to give up all the wonderful, dirty, sneaky, techniques I have learned in the orphanage in order to better myself and become the top dog and even help others become closer to top dogs without taking my place so that I get their allegiance? I'm going to have to abandon these goals in order to have a different experience? Hey . . . No! Here's the scoop: I want to engage in the holy instant for the purpose of improving my lot in the orphanage. I want to engage in the holy instant to get my way more quickly, more efficiently, with less complaints from everyone else . . .”

What will it take for you to engage in the holy instant where the laws of God prevail?

You know, how many of you over thirty years old, over fifty years old even, are trying to recapture your childhood—a lost childhood? How many of you had such a horrible experience as a child or such a demanding one because of poverty and illness, and so on, that you missed childhood? And right now you are engaged in doing all the things you missed out on, even though when you’re fifty years old it doesn’t really fit with the fulfillments of you now.

How many of you are engaged in “getting even?” How many of you have been hurt and you’re pissed off and you are enjoying the opportunity to give back what was dished out to you? How many of you are engaged in these kinds of activities that cause you to say, “I’m not going to engage in the holy instant yet, I need to recapture my childhood. I have been looking forward to going to Disneyland for my whole life and finally, I’m going to get to go and I’m not going to give that up for the holy instant!”

How many of you have what you think are excellent reasons for delaying?

And so I ask again, “What would it take, or what will it take to cause you to engage in the holy instant?” It’s a simple question with a profound answer. Profound because the correct answer will change your existence. And it’s what the holy instant is about and it’s the reason we’ve been talking about it for so many weeks.

“Oh, I’ve been waiting my whole life to meet Mr. Right” or “I’ve been waiting my whole life to meet my soul-mate. My desire to have a truly meaningful relationship is huge, is overriding in my experience, and I know Mr. Right is out there and I know that my soul-mate is out there. And I’m not going to abandon the quest until I find her, or until I find him.”

Has it ever occurred to you that in the Kingdom of Heaven, in your right Mind, your goals might not involve any of the things I’ve just described? Oh, well then, what is it going to take in order for you to engage in the holy instant? If doing it is going to constitute the loss of all of these goals and activities, what kind of a payoff are you going to have to get before you engage in the holy instant? What is it going to take?

So far, since you haven’t Woken up, you haven’t found what it will take.

Even though you've been inspired by the things I have shared, especially over the last weeks when we've been talking about the holy instant, you still haven't found what it will take to engage truly, fully, wholly, in the holy instant.

So what will it take?

This next section is called:

THE TIME OF CHRIST

It IS in your power, in TIME, to delay the perfect union of the Father and the Son. For in this world, the attraction of guilt DOES stand between them.¹

Which means it stands between you and your Father . . .

. . . the attraction of guilt . . .

Of course, you don't like to think about yourself being guilty, but you don't mind thinking about your fellowman as being guilty and making him pay for his guilt, or getting even for him with it because of his guilt, or neglecting to forfeit and abandon the expression of anger that your brother so clearly deserves.

It IS in your power, in TIME, . .

. . . not eternity, but . . .

in TIME, to delay the perfect union of the Father and the Son. For in this world, the attraction of guilt DOES stand between them.

It keeps all of you pre-occupied. Now, . . .

Neither time nor season means anything in eternity. But here, it is the Holy Spirit's function to use them both, though not as the ego uses them.

In other words, the Holy Spirit can use those things which find no real place in eternity to help you Wake up. And so, the Holy Spirit uses time and the Holy Spirit uses seasons, and the Holy Spirit uses seasonings to make delicious food many times to cause you to have an enlightening experience or an occasion for an "Ah-ha" to occur. The Holy Spirit can turn anything in your experience to your advantage whether those things have any place in the eternal scheme of things or not. And the Holy Spirit does.

Now we could say, continuing:

This is [almost] the season . . .

. . . but the actual words are:

This is the season when you would celebrate my birth into the world.

At the time that I was dictating this to Helen, it was that season, which was the reason for discussing the fact that the Holy Spirit can use time and season, you see? So . . .

This is the season when you would celebrate my birth into the world. Yet you know not how to do it.

Be willing to live with that statement.

Yet you know not how to do it.

Learning to use the holy instant is part of how to do it, as you'll find out.

Let the Holy Spirit teach you, . .

. . . how to do it.

Let the Holy Spirit teach you, and let me celebrate YOUR birth through Him. The only gift I can accept of you is the gift I GAVE to you. Release ME as I will YOUR release. The time of Christ we celebrate TOGETHER, for it has no meaning if we are apart.

This is very literal.

The time of Christ we celebrate TOGETHER, for it has no meaning if we are apart.

If you see me as having been born two thousand years ago and having lived for thirty-three years and then left, no longer available to walk with you and chat with you as I did with my disciples, and you gather around Christmas trees and in churches and sing Christmas carols and praises of God relative to my coming and my leaving, all without a sense of my actual presence that you would have if we were walking and chatting together, then it has no meaning because we are apart. And everything you're doing is in remembrance of an event you've heard about but not an actual experience you've had.

The time of Christ we celebrate TOGETHER, for it has no meaning if we are apart.

Wow . . . so that's why you know not how to do it, because you're doing it without being with me. You're doing it without taking the steps that allow for the joining to occur. You're doing it without abandoning your orphanhood and the very firm beliefs you have about being alone and on your own and probably not the effect of an eternal God at all.

The holy instant is truly the time of Christ.

Not two thousand years ago. The time . . .

The holy instant is truly the time of Christ. For in this liberating instant no guilt is laid upon the Son of God, and his unlimited power is thus restored to him.

Very key point. Guilt takes your unlimited power away from you. Guilt obscures it from you. Guilt causes you to believe with fervor and commitment, nothing but weakness. But in the holy instant . . .

. . . no guilt is laid upon the Son of God, and his unlimited power is thus restored to him.

That is how you celebrate the season, truly causing the season to actually have Meaning because it gives entrance into the world to the Christ . . . to me through you, thus illuminating the Christ of you in the world. That means everything "in the world" has changed.

What other gift . . .

. . . can you offer me, when only this I will to offer YOU?

You see? That was my reason for being present. That is still my reason for being with you. I will for you to know who you Are. Because I know it's impossible for you not to know who you Are. It is impossible for you to actually have forgotten. It is impossible for you to actually be insane. And I'm here to speak to you, to talk to you, to be with you, to chat with you in this fashion and we'll say, within your own mind, so that you know you're not alone. And that because of Who is speaking to you, you may realize that you're worthy of being spoken to by Him and in that realization it can begin to dawn upon you that you are truly my Brothers or Sisters, that we both have the same Inheritance. We both have the same Birthright.

Now I'm going to back up a moment because the fact is that you all know you need miracles. You all know that there are circumstances in your lives that deserve to be changed for the better no matter what seems to have brought the situations into existence. You see. No matter what causes there seem to have been, they cannot legitimately obscure the Presence of God Being everything there. And they cannot have any power to cause God to be invisible and lose His Presence—impossible.

If you want to see transformation, then you've got to be willing to be in the instant with different goals, with different motives than the ones you normally have. And when you abandon yourself into the holy instant, having left the past behind, and therefore carrying forward no grievances and abandoning any thoughts of the future and fear that might be associated with it, you are in a place of innocence and you are in a place where you have absolutely no control. And when you allow yourself to be there humbly and with faith that there is a God, and you wish to know of God what the truth is or you wish of God for Him to reveal to you the truth, and you bring no force into it, just watch your experience transform. Just watch what you couldn't possibly have brought into existence or what you couldn't possibly have caused to happen, happen or appear.

But again, I have to ask, "What will it take? What is needed in order for you to engage in the holy instant?"

What other gift can you offer me, when only this I will to offer YOU? And to see me is to see me in everyone, and offer everyone the gift you offer me.

Oh boy . . .

And to see me is to see me in everyone, . .

So, you're in a line in the grocery store and somebody behind you has gotten pissed off with you—says you're taking too long or with so many groceries why didn't you get in another line or whatever—and is making a fool of himself and a scene and embarrassing you . . . Oh-h boy . . .

And to see me is to see me in everyone, . .

. . . everyone right at that instant! What is it going to take for you to be willing to enter into the holy instant when you're embarrassed, you know? What is it going to take to cause you to abandon your embarrassment, to disregard how you think the event is making you look to everyone else? That seems very important, doesn't it. That seems more important than your sanity or a miracle, right? If you're not careful, it does . . . and it sucks you right in and you make commitment to that.

And so the question is, "What will it take for you to enter into the holy instant, to avail yourself of the holy instant in which God's laws prevail and not the bad behavior of some fellow, and not the misunderstanding of everyone else who's observing?" You see, that isn't what prevails in the holy instant. But what will it take for you to engage in or indulge in the holy instant right on the spot there?

See, this is where it counts, this is where it matters, this is where you get off the wheel of history and you just don't repeat the old habits—habits you may have made up for yourself or habits which you may have copied from your parents or your friends or your relatives. You see?

I am as incapable of receiving sacrifice as God is, and every sacrifice you ask of yourself you ask of me.

Oh yeah, you know, you do penance by sacrificing. Or you are sure that because you're so awful—you're such a bad orphan—that you need to engage in some obediences which constitute giving up something for a period of time.

But you know what? When you engage in sacrifice, especially for pious reasons, for spiritual reasons, you are withholding your Self, you are unwilling to stand in receipt of the Father's Love . . . "Behold it is the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom," not withhold it from you. And it's not the Father's good pleasure for you to say, "I will not receive it because I have been a bad boy and I'm going to engage in sacrifice for awhile and not receive the Gift." And then you come to me and you pray to me or you say you want to enter into the holy instant, but you enter into the holy instant as this poor orphan who is dutifully sacrificing in one way or another.

So you're not giving your whole Self to me, you're not bringing yourself fully into the relationship with me, and obviously you cannot be bringing all of yourself as you truly Are into any of the relationships you're in with your fellowman.

I am as incapable of receiving sacrifice as God is, . .

. . . so don't waste your time indulging in it . . .

. . . and every sacrifice you ask of yourself you ask of me.

But [chuckling] I'm not going to agree and I'm not going to join you.

Learn NOW that sacrifice of any kind is nothing but a limitation imposed on giving. And by this limitation you have limited acceptance of the gift I offer YOU.

The gift I offer you is the acknowledgement—the full true acknowledgement—of what you divinely Are, of what you truly Are. And I know It with God's Mind. And I want you to know It about your Self with God's Mind. Because in giving you the Kingdom, God has not withheld His Mind from you and His perspective is your Birthright to be experiencing. That's the gift I offer you. That's the gift you need to offer back to me.

It's like saying, "Hey, Brother." And you say, "Hey, Brother." And we acknowledge each other knowing who we Are and Who the other Is, you see?

If this doesn't happen in your exchanges with your brother who you can see, or your sister or your class mate or your work buddy, you know, if you don't do this with them, if you can't do this with them, you're missing out and you're disallowing for a different kind of experience—a healed experience, a miraculous experience—one in which things reconfigure in a manner that you could only describe as glorifying God . . . glorifying good.

And yet these things are happening . . . these things are happening. These things happened last week . . . the week before . . . they will happen next week, because some of you will take the opportunity—usually out of a severe feeling of incapacity in the face of great need—to enter into the holy instant and join with the Father and ask for help, and give up control.

But these experiences need to be more frequent, so that they can begin to register with you as being more normal than what you've been experiencing, so that you, with less resistance, embrace them. You see?

We who are one CANNOT give separately.

How can that which is one give separately? You and I are Brothers and Sisters. We are kin. When we truly give, we can't give alone. We can't think that we're indulging in a private act that no one else is experiencing, except perhaps the individual toward whom that act is being extended. That isn't the way it works.

We who are one CANNOT give separately. When you are willing to accept OUR relationship . . .

. . . yours and mine. When Paul is willing to accept our relationship, his and mine as real. And because I'm your Brother, every single one of you has this relationship with me.

When you are willing to accept OUR relationship as real, guilt will hold NO attraction for you.

Well, there's a goal for you that you haven't been engaging in . . . to accept our relationship as real . . . I mean, really, Real—as real as a relationship you think you could have with Paul because he's here where you are and you think I am somewhere else.

When you are willing to accept OUR relationship as real, guilt will hold NO attraction for you.

And so I ask, what will it take to let that be a goal instead of getting even, or instead of protecting yourself or any of the other things you do? How about having that for a goal, and what would it take to do it.

For in our union you will accept ALL of our brothers. The gift of union is the only gift that I was born to give. Give it to me, that YOU may have it.

You see, I'm Real and I gave the gift. And the gift was given to all Brothers, all Sisters, not just my disciples and not just those who were on your planet at that time, but to all of the Brotherhood.

The gift of union is the only gift that I was born to give. Give it to me, that YOU may have it.

Give to me your recognition that I am Real and that I am your Brother. And then you'll know who you Are—not an orphan—A holy Son of God, a holy Daughter of God.

Give it to me, that YOU may have it.

Acknowledge that I'm Real and I'm your Brother, and then you'll know you're my Brother and you'll know who you Are and you will have It.

The time of Christ is the time appointed for the gift of freedom, offered to everyone.

Why, what, today, tonight, just now? No, it was the gift that was given two thousand years ago. It was the meaning of what happened. And it has forever since been the meaning.

The time of Christ is the time appointed for the gift of freedom, offered to everyone.

Now, the time of Christ is also the holy instant. So the holy instant . . .

. . . is the time appointed for the gift of freedom, offered to everyone.

It is the point in which, where God's laws prevail, you experience your freedom and you behave as though you're free and are a new presence in the world. And therefore, the gift of freedom is being made, is being given in the world like it hasn't been before. You see? And the Christ is present. And so the season—the meaning of the season—is embodied, manifest.

And by YOUR acceptance of it, you have OFFERED it to everyone.

You know what?

It IS in your power to make this season holy, for it is in your power to make the time of Christ be NOW.

Not off in the future, you see. That's the way to "celebrate the Season," by making the time of Christ be NOW. And by making the time of Christ be now by joining with me, letting me, through the Holy Spirit, reveal your right Mind to you and your true Identity to you, so that you become in expression the Christ that you Are, rather than a pretence of an orphan that you aren't. You see?

Now, I've been asking, "What will it take?" And you may have been thinking about this as I've been speaking. And you might have come to the conclusion that it's going to take a catastrophe, or that it's going to take some world shaking event, or it's going to take something significant enough to grab your attention—to, in so many words, force you to do it.

Well, it's simpler than that. The answer is, that what it's going to take for you to engage in the holy instant is Love.

You might say, "Wow, where is that going to come from?" And it's a good question. It's a good question for you to be asking with all seriousness, with all intent to have the answer. And it's an answer, for lack of better words, that you're going to have to come up with. It's not an answer I'm going to give you. And it's not an answer that anyone else is going to give you.

Where is the willingness to Love going to come from, out of the blue, while you're in the checkout stand at the grocery store, or when somebody else has gotten upset with you, or you feel justified with being upset with someone else? It's going to come from somewhere. And it just might have something to do with, um-m . . . dare I say, there being an unreasonable willingness to Love right then, right there. I'm not going to say anything more than that.

The question . . . the significant question is, "What's it going to take for you to engage in the holy instant?" And the answer is, "What it's going to take is Love."

And you know what? I'm going to be blatantly clear with you, each one of you has it in you. I know that from time to time you've taken my counsel and you've said, "I wish to see the evidence of Love," and you've also said, "I wish to be the evidence of Love." What's it going to take for you to go ahead and be the evidence of Love?

And please keep in mind, there's only going to be one answer. And the answer is going to be the way to do it. It's not going to be, "Well, you don't really have the capacity to do it." The answer won't be, "Well, you're going to have to refine your soul for a few more lifetimes before you can do it." No. The answer won't be the ways in which it can't happen. It's already in you. And the answer will be how it can . . . the answer will be what spontaneously slips into the doing of it.

Now, letting this question be foremost in your mind and abiding with it with attentiveness to the answer is a goal that you haven't ordinarily engaged in, in your life. It's a different kind of goal. And it is the different kind of goal that is more typical of what you divinely Are. And it's a goal for you to be willing to embrace with gratitude and commitment. And it's a question to be asked in the grocery line. And it's a question to be asked in every single encounter you have with your Brother.

Now the question isn't, "What will it take," because now you know that it'll take Love. The question is, "Where will the Love come from? What will cause It to slip into expression so that the embodiment of the Christ happens in the grocery store? Christmas happens while you're standing in front of the clerk as she tallies up your groceries, whether it's June or December.

Don't think too much about this. When you're in the grocery store line and something happens, ask, "Where's the Love going to come from that will allow me to enter into the holy instant right now?" Ask the question as though you expect an answer right there in that grocery line—not after you've loaded your groceries in the car and gotten half way home—because I'm there and the Holy Spirit is there and the will of God is there for you to find that Love and let it out—embody It!

We will end there tonight. And although I am always with you and have been, and the Holy Spirit, of course, is inseparable from you and the Father is inseparable from you, I want you to know that during this coming week, we are specifically engaged in consciously being with you in support of the holy instants that await you at any given moment. You have Great support . . . You have Great support.

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 31st 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

So, what will it take?

How many of you are better prepared to talk about the answer this week than you were when I asked it last week? What will it take to warrant your utilizing the holy instant—availing yourself of it?

How many of you tried and found that your inclination to be reactive or self-defensive took priority over any inclination to find a way to be the presence of Love? And so how many of you—if you tried earnestly—feel frustrated and disappointed, and that the task might even be futile because you have to say, “I don’t know what it takes.”

The key here is, you can acknowledge that you don’t yet know what it takes. But don’t get hung up on it . . . don’t become devoted to the awareness that you don’t know what it takes, DAMN IT! You see? Don’t become emotionally passionate about not knowing yet. Because I’m telling you something: It’s in you. The capacity is in you. The answer is in you. It has been in you and with you since Creation, if I may put it that way.

You know, someone who seems to be insane—incarcerated in an insane asylum—has not lost the capacity to be sane. It is impossible to have lost the capacity. But the capacity simply isn’t being used. At some point, the choice to use the capacity was rejected. And at this point, the reason that which triggered the decision isn’t even remembered—it’s been put out of mind, out of sight, out of memory. And so that one simply feels that his or her current mindset—state of affairs—is normal and natural. It’s just the way things are. Not being able to remember the reason for having made the decision, the fact that a decision was made is also forgotten.

And so, if someone with clarity were to approach those who are designated as insane and told them “You have the capacity. Sanity is resident in you. The capacity to be sane hasn’t been lost. You are not suffering from incapacity. You are simply suffering from not using the capacity.”

Well, that one would be likely to say, “You know what? Look around me, buddy . . . look at all the other people here, they’re just like me. You’re trying to tell me that this is not normal? You’re trying to tell me that all of us here are simply not using a capacity that we have? You’re speaking outrageously. You’re the one who’s crazy!”

But you see, someone has to say it. Someone has to tell the one who doesn’t remember having made the decision and doesn’t remember why the decision was made not to employ sanity, that such an event occurred. Why? So that that one might find the justification somewhere within them, from somewhere they’re not recognizing the impulse to become inquisitive about a capacity they didn’t know they had, a capacity they’re sure that they don’t have, a capacity that their life and their environment demonstrates to them doesn’t exist together with the verdicts of all of the psychiatrists that say to them, “You’ll never be able to go home. You’ll never live anywhere else. Accept your lot.” You see?

Now, you are not incapacitated. The capacity to avail yourself of the holy instant is present. Persist in desiring to experience it. Persist . . . persist . . . persist! All you’re persisting against is a reluctance based upon a belief that you are the definition you currently have about yourself, and nothing more.

“What will it take? I don’t know what it will take but I will persist in desiring to know—desiring to have and feel the impetus to reach beyond what I know at the moment—to experience the more of myself that I’ve been told is going on outside the definition that I’m currently defining myself by.”

Now, we ended up last week with this sentence:

It IS in your power to make this season holy, for it is in your power to make the time of Christ be NOW.¹

And this sentence is making reference to Christmas time and the way in which the season can actually be made holy, rather than it being a spiritual remembrance of holiness of another time.

It IS in your power to make this season holy, . .

. . . by letting the Christ through. And in the process of letting me through, you will find yourself exhibiting, manifesting Christhood. And in that process, you will find yourself experiencing the re-emergence, you might say, of the true definition of yourself as you're remembering Who you Are.

So, we're talking about something rather significant. We're talking about something worth persisting toward the experience of.

It IS in your power to make this season holy, for it is in your power to make the time of Christ be NOW.

The holy instant is the time of Christ. The holy instant is when there's no future and no past in which to imagine or remember anything that isn't true. It's the moment in which truth is the only thing. It's the moment in which you are only what you truly Are. So it is really worth giving your attention to, being unwilling to be distracted by anything else.

Now, continuing . . .

It is possible to do this all at once because there is but ONE shift in perception that is necessary, for you made but ONE mistake. It seems like many, but it is all the same.

Okay. The only reason I can seem to be monotonous is because the truth is so simple and there's a tendency to overlook it and imagine that it's more complicated and look for the greater complication. Or to assume that it's complicated and you won't be able to understand it, and move into self-criticism or a self-appraisal that's less than the best and then getting emotional about it.

It is possible to do this all at once, in other words, instantaneously. Because there is but one shift in perception that is necessary, for you made but one mistake. The one mistake you made was, you said, "Father, I'd rather do it myself!" You said, "Father, I would rather break my union with You and act on my own. I would rather imagine that I'm an independent agent and experience everything from that vantage point, from that belief, from that imagination." That's the one mistake.

So, it can be simple and it can be quick. Because there's only one thing you're undoing and you need to keep this in mind, because this book is full of what seems to be a lot of complicated ideas or a lot of complexity. So many different ways have been taken to say the same thing that it can seem like it's going to be very hard to understand because there is so much here to digest.

Well, not really. There's just a lot of ways to say 'undo your divorce from your Father.' Undo your withdrawal from the Father, by simply turning your attention to your Father and saying, "Father, help! Father, I am going to stop providing definitions for everything based upon peculiar inclinations that I've been able to come up with that make things far more interesting [chuckle] than what You came up with . . . and exciting to boot, because they're scary as hell and nothing You made is scary as hell, and I'm sorry to say, but . . . borrrring."

It is possible to do this all at once because there is but ONE shift in perception that is necessary, for you made but ONE mistake.

Yeah, all you have to say is, "Father, I'm back. Father, fill me with all that You Are. Help me be conscious of what Your Being all that I Am, means.

. . . you made but ONE mistake. It seems like many, but it is all the same. For though the ego takes many forms, it is ALWAYS the same idea.

Now, we've talked at length about the fact that when you decided to see things on your own, you found that you were suddenly unaware of your Birthright of the fact that you are infinite Mind and you're suddenly confronted with the experience of being one isolated form in Creation coping with and dealing with a bunch of other forms of Creation, dealing with form and not doing it from the place of peace that it has been your Birthright forever to experience Creation in.

And so you found that there was fear and its side-kick, guilt. You see? And you get fear and guilt playing off of each other, and the simple decision to want to do things your way becomes very complicated—so many things to fear, so many things to defend yourself against, so many things to overcome, so many things to accomplish in order to feel competent—a complicated mess! When actually, to un-complicate it, only one thing needs to be undone: The decision to pretend to be alone.

For though the ego takes many forms, it is ALWAYS the same idea. What is not love is ALWAYS fear, and nothing else. It is not necessary to follow fear through all the circuitous routes by which it burrows underground and hides in darkness, to emerge in forms quite different from what it is. Yet it IS necessary to examine each one as long as you would retain the PRINCIPLE which governs all of them.

So, what's up here, we started out, . . .

It is possible to do this all at once because there is but ONE shift in perception,[etc.]

And now it says:

Yet it IS necessary to examine each one [of them]

. . . each of the forms that fear seems to take and emerges in a different form.

Yet it IS necessary to examine each one as long as you would retain the PRINCIPLE which governs all of them.

There's a commitment present and as long as the commitment is there and one refrains from saying, "Father, help," one refrains from abandoning independence, each one will need to be examined . . . each one that's keeping you from going Home.

When you are willing to regard them, not as separate, but as different manifestations of the SAME idea, and one you do not WANT, they go together.

All of these complex forms, all of these complex interlocking circumstances that seem to effectively bind you, they will simply leave together.

So what is this principle?

The idea is simply this; you believe that it is possible to be host to the ego or hostage to God. This is the choice you think you have, and the decision which you believe that you must make.

You're quite committed to that. You're quite committed to imagining that you would be host to the ego but hostage to God.

Hostage to God . . . well, perhaps we can talk about it this way: You're eighteen, nineteen, twenty . . . maybe twenty-five, single, independent, having a great time exploring all the things you can do now that you've left home. You're not under the control of Mom and Dad and the family, and you've finished school and you've got a job, you know, things are great and you're enjoying your independence.

And then, the possibility of marriage comes up. And you consider what it would be like to get married and have a partner. [chuckle] One of the first things that might come to your attention for consideration is that you're going to have to give up some of your freedom. You're going to have to stop being self-centered. You're going to have to shift from a general demeanor of self-protection, which you have covered up by simply being skillfully, socially appropriate so that it doesn't really look like you're being defensive when you are. And you have to be willing to shift from defense to embrace if you are truly, meaningfully going to join into a relationship that would crystallize as marriage. And, that of course, makes you vulnerable. Embrace is very different from defense.

One could even imagine that if you were to get married, you would become hostage to your partner. Because of course, you would have to cooperate, wouldn't you? You would have to abandon carefree freedom without consideration for anything except what you want. That's a sacrifice, isn't it?

Are those who are married to each other hostage to each other? No. And because marriage isn't a hostage situation, and because marriage, well embodied, is a matter of embrace and caring cooperation, it has been appropriately called, "The cement of civilization." Contemplate it.

Abandoning independence and joining with your Father is never a matter of becoming a hostage, even though it does mean giving up a so-called capacity you think you have or that you have imagined that you have, to be independent, to be authoritative, to make things happen and to determine what everything means. You will have to give that up. Much of that you have to give up in a marriage. And in a good marriage, it makes for miracles. It makes for greater harmony in society because it's a presence. It could be called a force for good but it's really the presence of Love that naturally harmonizes without force, and brings out and illuminates the best.

Many people get divorces because they can't get it out of their mind that they're in a hostage situation and they're not willing to abandon their defense in order to be the presence of embrace that inspires and harmonizes and brings out the best.

The idea is simply this; . . .

. . . the principle which governs all of your illusions . . .

. . . you believe that it is possible to be host . . .

. . . oh, isn't that nice . . .

. . . host to the ego or hostage to God.

And of course, you imagine being host to the ego as good, because in so many words, the whole ego frame of reference is one of making something of yourself and being successful at it, with this constant promise of fulfillment that never, ever comes. But it's a promise that God isn't going to give you.

[chuckles] And the only reason God isn't going to give it to you is because that isn't . . . [sigh] that isn't what fulfillment is. That isn't what fulfillment is about.

Fulfillment is about fitting in with the illumined Movement of Creation so completely that the joy of Creation is fully experienced by you and your inseparability from it is experienced by you and you are unseparated from the conscious experience of everyone of your Brothers and Sisters as they joy in being co-creators of Creation, because they're not distracted by imagining they could be doing something else.

So you believe this promise of the ego and you doubt what the Presence of God means for you. You see your good as sacrifice . . . you see what is truly your good as sacrifice. And what you see as good is an illusion. That actually is a sacrifice. But you don't believe it and so you're unwilling to let go of it.

What will it take to participate in the holy instant? Part of what it will take is a willingness on your part to believe what I'm saying, so that you'll explore the possibility and abandon your blind commitment to what doesn't promise what I'm telling you.

The idea is simply this; you believe that it is possible to be host to the ego or hostage to God.

No other alternative.

This is the choice you think you have, and the decision which you believe that you must make.

You see no other alternatives, for you cannot accept the fact that sacrifice gets NOTHING.

Yeah, you say, "Why do you talk about sacrifice at all? I wasn't thinking about sacrifice. And I don't think that sacrifice . . . I don't even think about sacrifice. It's not part of my world. I'm too busy doing good things. I'm too busy going to work every day. I'm too busy raising my family and sharing all the good that I can . . . but make the best out of . . ."

I beg your pardon! You've got to be honest! You all are daily overcoming the tendency toward not having. You busy yourself, because if you're not busy, you will not generate fulfillment—meaning income. You will not impart to anyone else what they need to learn. And so you will end up not getting credit. You will end up not being respectable.

Not one of you believes that if you sat down and were absolutely present with NOW that you would have everything you need, not because you had done something to deserve it, but because it's the nature of Being. Not one of you believes that. So, every single one of you believes that sacrifice gets you something, that sacrifice is something you're dealing with constantly, you see?

Lack . . . the tolerance of lack is normal . . . tolerance of lack is what sacrifice means. You see, so now this sentence will mean something to you:

Sacrifice is so essential to your thought system that salvation APART from sacrifice means nothing to you.

If it meant something to you, you would actually consider as a viable truth, the possibility that, "It's the Father's good pleasure to give you the Kingdom," and therefore, has given you the Kingdom, and therefore is in the act of Being you at this very moment, giving you the Kingdom, withholding nothing of what He is and nothing of what Creation is from you. You would be willing to consider that.

And man, if you would be willing to consider that, you would find the fragrance, if I may put it that way, because it wouldn't be totally tangible, but the fragrance of real peace inviting you to consider this further. You would find the impulse to struggle subsiding, and in its absence promising something far different to you, you see? You don't have that experience often because sacrifice is so essential to your thought system.

Now, just because I say that and just because it's true at the moment doesn't mean you have justification for self-criticism. Just be aware of it so that you can say, "I don't want to do that anymore. I think I may give the holy instant a chance. I think I might try and see if there's an actual different experience of being conscious that would be so wonderful that I would look back and say, 'Yes, I was insane, but I am no longer.'"

Your confusion of sacrifice and love is so profound that you cannot conceive of love WITHOUT sacrifice.

"You know, I love my wife. As a result, I don't go out with the boys as much, you know, I don't drink as much as I used to. I've become sort of a home-body and I've begun to do things around the house. I'm actually beginning to enjoy taking care of the property—landscaping a little bit. You know, I really have a talent for that. I never knew it before." You see?

But the idea is that in a marriage you sacrifice . . . love and sacrifice go together. You've got to abandon your freedom—that's sacrifice.

Your confusion of sacrifice and love is so profound that you cannot conceive of love WITHOUT sacrifice. And it is this that you must look upon; sacrifice is ATTACK, not love.

To see your mate as the reason you're sacrificing something of meaning and value to you is mean-spirited. It's not love. And if, in fact, you are sacrificing those things "to keep the peace" or to have a certain modicum of harmony that looks like a loving family, when there's really a grievance there, that's mean-spirited. That's not love. And yet, love is real. And love relationships are the appropriate place for love. And love in relationships is the cement of civilization, we could even say the cement of society.

And so it's worth abandoning the appearance of love and the justification of sacrifice for what love really is, because it brings into place a new order of things, just like abandoning your independence and joining with the Father uncovers a larger order of things—a universal order of things—fulfillment, salvation. Any of those good words apply here.

. . . it is this that you must look upon; sacrifice is ATTACK, not love. If you would accept but this ONE idea, your fear of love would vanish.

Your marriage would become stronger and there would be less control, perhaps no control being exercised, just joy and peace and meaningfulness shared without inhibition, without reluctance, without sacrifice.

Guilt CANNOT last when the idea of sacrifice has been removed. For if there is sacrifice, as you are convinced, someone must pay and someone must get.

So you see, a relationship of love that is really a relationship of sacrifice is something that someone's going to pay for, and someone is going to get something for. And you know what? It's time for that kind of relationship to stop. It's time for it to shrivel up and die for lack of attention, for lack of energy. It's time for the holy instant to come into play.

You know what? You have a tendency to look at your world—especially if you're on your spiritual path—and to look at it and say, "This world is getting in my way. It's distracting me from my peace. It's distracting me from knowing what the truth is." And you can begin to see your world as an opponent, something holding you back from your spiritual growth.

This is why it is so important, so essential not to play into the idea that the world and universe is an illusion, because then you can let it be the opponent and you can not challenge that definition. And you know what? You will deprive yourself of the very thing that your true Vision is supposed to be a vision of.

Initially, as you are emerging out of preoccupation with self-consciousness and selfishness, you may indeed have to go into a quiet place, and you may have to be where there is not a whole lot of stimulation from “your world,” just so that you can remember what silence is like, so that you might know what the meaning of the word “attention” is, because in the silence you are conscious, and being conscious silently is the state of attention. And because you may have to do this in the beginning, it may seem to establish an artificial boundary between your spiritual quest and your environment, your world. And it might seem to you that you need to remove yourself from the world in order to follow through on your spiritual quest. But the fact is that your vision, your spiritual Vision, is supposed to be your vision of everything—the world and universe not colored by false definitions, not colored by emotion, anger, fear, guilt.

And so the time must come where you find, we could say, a seamless interface between your clear, mental vision and everything you’re looking at . . . where embrace becomes what you employ relative to your world.

You must stop seeing your world as material as opposed to spiritual. If you don’t stop seeing a separation, you will sacrifice the very thing you are to be conscious of with your right Mind. You see that?

. . . if there is sacrifice, as you are convinced, someone must pay and someone must get. And the only question which remains to be decided is HOW MUCH is the price for getting WHAT.

Whew! Isn’t that being held hostage? Where in that is any conscious awareness of Reality or truth or love? Why, . . . I believe that’s called “business,” isn’t it?

And the only question which remains to be decided is HOW MUCH is the price for getting WHAT.

See, now this seems to be perhaps psychologically complicated, or it might seem to be really relatively simple but as you are being able to relate it to yourself, it’s not making you too happy. And therefore, although it’s not complicated, it’s not really something that you want to easily or willingly be present with, so that you can see you’re uncomfortable with it because it’s an illegitimate imposition upon your freedom and your Birthright. If you see that, then it becomes really easy to abandon it—it’s so unattractive that any natural, we’ll say, attraction toward it leaves.

And when you do not value something you do not pursue it and it doesn’t hang on to you.

Now, what do I want of you?

What I want of you is for you to be in touch with yourself in the simplest of ways, in a genuineness, in the most genuine of ways. Because availing yourself of the holy instant will come out of a simplicity in you, a rather simple common sense that you find is present in you when you're not all hyped up with guilt and with fear and the overcoming of it, and the promise of becoming something while never acknowledging the Father you have that determines what your identity is.

I want you not to read this book and get so intellectually complicated that you forget to be simple and be in the place where things are clear and your natural, I'm going to say, divine common sense comes into play with willingness, because it's your common sense, it's your makeup, it's the way you really have felt all along, but you haven't tapped into.

And so as we're reading here . . . as we continue to read and as we continue to consider the holy instant, I want you to approach it this way. I want you to be with your fellowman this way. I want you to be with yourself this way. And I want you to continue to ask, "What will it take to avail myself of the holy instant?" Remembering that I said that the capacity is in you already, you see? It is that simple common sense that's in you already. You're already wonderful. You're already the Sons and Daughters of God. You're already divine. And right here is where your divinity is to be experienced. And right here, in what you call this world and universe, is where the Kingdom of Heaven and Creation is to be experienced all in a simple simplicity—a Birthright that's yours.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 14th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the internet.

I'm going to re-read the last sentence from last week—the last couple sentences:

If you would accept but this ONE idea, your fear of love would vanish. Guilt CANNOT last when the idea of sacrifice has been removed. For if there is sacrifice, as you are convinced, someone must pay and someone must get. And the only question which remains to be decided is HOW MUCH is the price for getting WHAT.

Now the next sentence should elicit a smile at the least if not some laughter:

As host to the ego, you believe that you can give ALL your guilt away WHATEVER you think, and purchase peace.

Now, either that's very clear to you or you have an example of how you block—period.

As host to the ego, you believe that you can give ALL your guilt away WHATEVER you think, and purchase peace.

Well you say, "What does that mean . . . I believe that I can give ALL my guilt away? I can't think of a way to give my guilt away." You see, that should make you smile. It's really easy—and you do it all the time. It's called, laying a guilt trip on your brother! That's how you give your guilt away. You make someone else responsible for your dilemma or your problem or the results of your bad decisions or the result of your one faulty decision.

So, let's look at it again with a little bit more of a fine tune:

As host to the ego, you believe that you can give ALL your guilt away WHATEVER you think, . .

. . . now those three words, . .

. . . WHATEVER you think, . .

. . . are key words because thinking is what produces guilt. Thinking is the bad behavior, if you will. It's what you do instead of listening and having the experience of Knowing, which is your natural way of being conscious.

It's your thinking that gets you into trouble. Because you think you think for a purpose. And that purpose is to come to conclusions different from the Father's—understandings, definitions—different from the Truth.

So you think . . .

. . . you can give ALL your guilt away WHATEVER you think, . .

. . . in other words, without stopping thinking, . .

. . . and purchase peace. And the payment does not seem to be YOURS.

You know, your brother's the one with the guilt trip laid on him—he's the one that's got to defend himself. And if you're really good at what you're doing, he won't throw it back at you. You will have snookered him and he's caught. And he'll become very defensive and try to straighten things out and get you to see the truth, you see?

And the payment does not seem to be YOURS. While it is obvious that the ego DOES demand payment, it never seems to be demanding it of YOU.

Why? Because you have this subterfuge you can bring into play, called, laying a guilt trip on your brother. Then you can discuss it, argue it, work your way through it with your brother, finesse him into agreement—maybe giving him a little bit back so he's not quite as guilty and doesn't have to feel quite as bad—and appreciates your generosity. You see?

But, you're still paying and you're still the only one paying, no matter how interesting the interchange became, no matter how much friendlier you both seem to be with each other as a result of your beneficent giving—a little here and there, while taking a lot here and there. You see?

All the while that it seems like something is going on that's meaningful, it's costing you something. And so I'm going to ask you right now, "What is it it's costing you?" I'm not going to answer the question. You do know the answer already. But I'm throwing the question out for right now: "What is it costing you when it seems not to be costing you anything?"

While it is obvious that the ego DOES demand payment, . .

. . . nobody will deny that . . .

. . . it never seems to be demanding it of YOU. For you are unwilling to recognize that the ego, which you invited, is treacherous only to those who think they are its host.

Well, you're the one who thinks you are its host, not the one you've blamed for what you're guilty of.

So, the ego isn't really being treacherous to your brother or your sister, it's being treacherous to you. But you can't see the treachery because you don't know what you've lost. You've forgotten what you paid in order to have the experience of an ego and the experience of guilt and fear. You've forgotten what you paid. What is it? What was it?

The ego will never let you perceive this, since this recognition would make it homeless.

You would no longer invite it. You would no longer be its host. You just wouldn't.

For when this recognition dawns clearly, you will not be deceived by ANY form the ego takes to protect itself from your sight.

You see, there's only one problem. And when that one problem becomes perfectly clear to you . . . when that one mistake becomes perfectly clear to you, then the impact of the mistake becomes clear to you and the whole ball of wax becomes unreasonable and unwanted. And you put it down.

Each form will be recognized as but a cover . . .

. . . or what you might call, "a cover-up."

Each form will be recognized as but a cover for the one idea that hides behind them all;

. . . that idea being . . .

. . . that love demands sacrifice, and is therefore inseparable from attack and fear.

That's the one idea that hides the blatant truth about what the ego is and what the ego does, and what the effect is, and who the effect is on.

Again . . .

Each form will be recognized . . .

. . . each form the ego takes . . .

Each form will be recognized as but a cover for the one idea that hides behind them all; that love demands sacrifice, and is therefore inseparable from attack and fear. And that guilt is the PRICE of love, which must be paid BY fear.

Love costs you something. We discussed that at length last time. Love constitutes sacrifice as you perceive it, and as you practice it, and as you think it is. If you love something, if you love someone, you must give up for them.

And at the bottom line, not giving up constitutes a self-disrespect, at least in the ego's terms. And that self-disrespect is something you're guilty of. It constitutes a lack of integrity, even though you are attempting to pretend to have integrity by giving up things as an expression of love. Convolutioned, isn't it?

How fearful, then, has God become to you, and how great a sacrifice do you believe His Love demands! For total love would demand total sacrifice.

Not true. But the mindset you currently entertain about love and about sacrifice causes you to come to that conclusion and no other—that causes God to be very fearful and something you don't really want to approach.

And so the ego seems to demand less of you than God, and of the two is judged as the lesser of two evils, one to be feared a little, but the other to be destroyed. For you see love as DESTRUCTIVE, and your only question is who is to be destroyed, you or another?

You see, those are the blacks and whites of it . . . or the black and white of it. You don't necessarily come to the point of destroying another or being destroyed.

But relationships tend to be a way of keeping perceived balance where imbalance prevails, so that relationships are a constant defense, a defense that doesn't appear to be defensive because it's expressed in the language of love . . . of caring . . . of being considerate. Why? Because love is felt and it's a gift that simply pours forth or because it's practice soothes the savage breast and brings peace, or a certain amount of peace where peace would not prevail.

And so love is always a defense being used in a hostile environment. That's a sacrifice. And as I said last time, there's a certain mean-spiritedness to it. It's not love, it is attack.

It is important to see this. Because you thought you were going for something good. But the recipe being used doesn't allow for the good you're wanting to bear fruit truly, because it is an act of defense. It is you, not letting yourself into that peace of your Being in which you can dare to be vulnerable, because in your peace you know you are utterly safe. And then from that peace and safety, you can embrace your Brother, your Sister, your world, without the defense that alters love and causes it to be an expression of mean-spiritedness.

Without mean-spiritedness being added to it, the love you are expressing is pure and is an aspect of the Movement of the Love that God is embodied in you, as you, and finding expression "in the world."

. . . you see love as DESTRUCTIVE, and your only question is who is to be destroyed, you or another? You seek to answer this question in your special relationships, in which you are both destroyer and destroyed in part, but with the idea of being able to be neither completely.

In other words, you can be a destroyer in part, you can be destroyed in part, but you can't ever be destroyed completely. And you can't ever be a destroyer completely.

Talk about wishy-washy, talk about no commitment . . . and yet it's engaged in as an act of defense, it's engaged in and is an act of mean-spiritedness.

And this you think saves you from God, Whose total Love would completely destroy you.

Mind you, this isn't true. God's love constitutes the unalterable permanency of your divine Being. That's the truth—the unalterable and unaltered truth.

But as long as you are insisting upon pretending to be an independent autonomous agent, you will have fear and guilt accompanying you. And love will be a defense—not love. And you will be paying the cost of what? Of being unconscious of who you Are because you are unconscious of your Source—unconscious of God, unconscious of your Father. You see?

All the time you seem to be having meaningful ongoing relationships, that are really negotiations for the best amount of peace that can be had without everybody having to sacrifice everything, as long as that is going on and it seems to be a worthwhile activity to engage in, you are absolutely unconscious of what your real function is, which is not to negotiate with your “bad” Brothers, and work out problems, but is to be in communion with your Father; a communion in which you are experiencing your true divinity and therefore, the true divinity with your Brothers so that you are relating to your Brothers, not in negotiations at all, but in activities of fulfillment and joy, because there's no apparent need for anything else.

The key element that stands in the way of your participating in the holy instant—of your employing the holy instant—is this ridiculous idea. It's a malicious idea actually, that you have a choice between being host to the ego or hostage to God.

You would only be a host to that which would in some way, be your ally. And you would only be a hostage to that which would be your enemy. As long as you think that this is what you're faced with, you're not going to choose to be the host of your enemy . . . no way.

And so you will not embrace the holy instant. And you will not let yourself in to that place where only God's laws prevail.

This has to become crystal clear to you so that you can see exactly how black and white it is. So that you can see that there's either fulfillment or no fulfillment as an actuality.

Let me ask you this: “What would you imagine you will be engaged in . . . what would be the activities you would be involved in if you knew you were invulnerable, if you knew that the environment of every aspect of your Being and experience was Love? Do you think you would be engaged in the activities you're presently engaged in?” Well, perhaps some of them. But a lot of them you will not be engaging in.

And so you will be abandoning many things. But here's the big question: "Will you abandon the chase after the carrot that's being dangled in front of you, with the promise of your fulfillment, with the promise of your becoming a real boy . . . a real girl?"

Now, there's an activity that you'll have to abandon. And indeed, if you were Awake, you wouldn't even be enticed into that activity—you certainly wouldn't be engaged in it.

The one activity that you're engaged in that keeps you from being Awake is your attempt to be an independent agent for change. And I mean by that, not in any divine and any healthy sense, but an independent agent for change—meaning something that can exist separate from its Source with a capacity to cause things to happen. That's the one and only thing . . . that's the one and only thing you have to abandon—that's the simplicity of it.

Continuing . . .

You think that everyone OUTSIDE yourself demands your sacrifice, . . .

Why would you think that? Because that's what you demand of everyone else. And so you're suspicious of them, knowing yourself.

You think that everyone OUTSIDE yourself demands your sacrifice, but you do not see that ONLY you demand sacrifice, and ONLY of yourself.

Here's more of the black and whiteness:

. . . you do not see that ONLY you demand sacrifice, and ONLY of yourself.

Now, you don't think about sacrifice and you don't say, "I intend to sacrifice and I intend to sacrifice myself." You say, "Well, here's another day. I have a lot of things to do, a lot of problems to solve. And I'm gonna get up, get dressed, go to work and do the best damn job I can."

Sounds like a respectable thing to do . . . no? Of course. But that's how you demand sacrifice of yourself. And that's what has to become clear. You're demanding sacrifice of yourself because there's not one aspect of your decision regarding your upcoming day that has involved abandoning thinking, abandoning personal, private decision making, abandoning the attempt to be able to cause change, and becoming still enough that you can hear what we might call the "still small voice of God" or your divinity, providing the awareness of what fits in your upcoming day that will uncover the Kingdom of Heaven that is the actual nature of the day you're entering into and participating in.

So, your very good intent, your very principled plan for your day to make contributive changes is the way you sacrifice the direct experience of your divinity, the direct experience of your holy Sonship, the direct experience of the truth about you. That's the way you sacrifice it.

The sacrifice is covered up by a good intent to be carried out by an independent agent trying to be the best damn independent agent you can be, so that ultimately you can become a real boy and a real girl, on your own without a Father, without a Source. Do you see?

You think that everyone OUTSIDE yourself demands your sacrifice, but you do not see that ONLY you demand sacrifice, and ONLY of yourself.

You demand it of yourself by preoccupying yourself and giving your attention where your atonement, where your fulfillment, where your conscious ascension into your divine Selfhood cannot possibly occur. That's how you do it.

Yet the demand of sacrifice is so savage and so fearful that you CANNOT accept it where it is.

Well, you know what? It may be savage and fearful, but you can dare to take a look at it. We're doing it right now. And you can dare to look at it even more closely. And the reason for looking at it more closely is not so you can be condemned for it but so that you can see what a useless thing you're engaged in. Why? So that you can spontaneously and effortlessly cast it aside—let it go, not employ it anymore.

But the REAL price of not accepting this has been so great that you have given God away rather than look at it.

You'd rather not think about God. You'd rather not care. You'd rather that it not be meaningful to you. You'd rather that it not be something that was supposed to be meaningful to you to know who your Father is. And that knowing who your Father is, is something that would have awesome and infinite impact on you that didn't constitute or that doesn't constitute a sacrifice at all, but fulfillment beyond your wildest imaginings.

Nevertheless . . .

. . . the REAL price of not accepting this has been so great that you have given God away rather than look at it. For if God would demand total sacrifice of you, you thought it safer to project Him outward and AWAY from you, and not be host to Him. To Him you ascribed the ego's treachery, inviting it to take His place to PROTECT you from Him.

Now why? There's a reason you would find that justifiable. And the reason is: That the whole ego frame of reference is such that it is telling you that through your own personal efforts and your own ongoingly developed skill, you can become successful in your own right and therefore, worthy of unlimited respect, appreciation and valuing. The promise has been great.

The promise has been that when this happens, you without God, without holiness, without anything outside of your own skill and effort, will be immutable—incapable of sin, disease, death, damage, injury and therefore, eternal, forever perfect, unchangeably perfect. Quite a promise. And it's something that you will have secured for yourself at your own hand. You will have proven to yourself your worth and your validity. And who better to prove it to you than you, yourself . . . who more trustworthy to prove it to you than you, yourself and your experience.

Can you see how black and white it is? That's the way you sacrifice and that's the justification for the sacrifice. But what you've forgotten is that what you're sacrificing is your sanity and your divine joy and your Birthright as the Son of God.

To Him . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . you ascribed the ego's treachery, inviting it to take His place to PROTECT you from Him. And you do not recognize that it is what YOU invited in that would destroy you, and DOES demand total sacrifice of you.

Let this sink in. Let this be so perfectly clear.

No partial sacrifice will appease this savage guest, for it is an invader who but SEEMS to offer kindness, . .

[chuckling] It is so kind that it will dangle that carrot of success in front of your nose forever, without your ever achieving it.

No partial sacrifice will appease this savage guest, for it is an invader who but SEEMS to offer kindness, but always to make the sacrifice complete.

In other words, it does it so as to always keep you so preoccupied with getting the carrot and becoming something on your own that the furthest thing from your mind is to ask how did you come to exist so that a carrot could be dangled in front of your nose? Where were you before the carrot got dangled? You're so preoccupied with the chase and the potential accomplishment that there's not enough peace and presence of mind [chuckling] to cause you to stop and say, "Wait a minute, how did all of this get started?" But now someone's telling you that not only can you do this, you must do it—it's time to do it.

It's time for someone to tell you, you've been sacrificing the totality of the Good life (the capital "G" Good life)—the God life. You've been sacrificing it. It's not required. You can stop. And it's not something that's being afflicted upon you. It's something you're creating by virtue of an unintelligent activity. You know, you've heard of "skirt chasers," you've heard of "women chasers," but you better become aware that you're a "carrot chaser." And let it sound silly. Let it be silly, so that it's that much easier for you to say, "Father, help!" . . . so that it's enough for you to abandon the independence and try something different.

You will not succeed in being partial hostage to the ego, . .

. . . again, here's the black and whiteness.

You will not succeed in being partial hostage to the ego, for it keeps no bargains, and would leave you nothing.

It leaves you nothing, because in your preoccupation for the quest for the carrot you're not thinking about God, you're not looking toward your Source, your attention is not where your sanity can register with you. So it leaves you with nothing, nothing that's Real about you anyway.

You will have to choose between . . .

. . . again, black and white.

You will have to choose between TOTAL freedom and TOTAL bondage, for there are no alternatives but these.

Either you're chasing the carrot or you're not chasing the carrot. There's no in-between.

You have tried many compromises in the attempt to avoid recognizing the one decision which must be made. And yet it is the recognition of the decision, JUST AS IT IS, . .

. . . the simple decision to stop chasing the carrot, to stop trying to be something on your own, to rejoin with your Father—to get rid of the divorce.

. . . it is the recognition of the decision, JUST AS IT IS, . .

. . . in its simplicity . . .

. . . that makes the decision so easy!

Listen:

Salvation is simple being of God, and therefore very easy to understand. Do not try to project it from you and see it OUTSIDE yourself. In you are both the question and the answer; the demand for sacrifice and the peace of God.

So, we have come logically step-by-step to a clarity. So, what's next?

What's next is The End of Sacrifice, which is the sub-heading of the next section. The End of Sacrifice will come as a result of making the one single decision that undoes all of illusion. And that's what this is all about.

Yes, if you insist on pretending that you have a choice between being host to the ego or hostage to God, then you will have to address each struggle, each suffering experience that identifies the fact that you're going against the grain of your Being to find out the truth of it. And undoing each one could take you a long time. And it's unnecessary because you can make the one decision now. You can take the black and whiteness of the truth that we've been discussing and on the basis of it, change your mind.

I'm not interested in . . . I'm not fascinated by messy struggles, ongoing conflict. Don't you be either. It's not necessary!

This week I want you to consider the actual uselessness of being or attempting to be an orphan, an independent agent for change. There is so much more clarity now available to you that it is much easier for you to do the one essential thing.

"Oh, I don't want to be the first one. I don't want to stand out like a sore thumb. I'm going to wait until next week and see if anybody else has done it and how it's going for them." What, while you continue to chase the carrot? Okay . . . okay . . .

I love you. I love you all and I wish for you instantaneous Awakening. And if you don't opt for that, I will stand with you until you do.

I will stand with you constantly pointing out to you what you should be doing instead, because that is love.

I look forward to being with you all next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 22nd 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well . . . sacrifice—a wonderful concept—something that has been lifted to a high level of importance and value. You've even spiritualized it.

And so, you see my death as a sacrifice when it wasn't anything of the sort. But you say, "It says in the Bible that the greatest thing a brother can do is lay down his life for a brother, which is exactly what you did."

Well, let's not be confused. The holy instant is a moment in which you have laid down your right—your supposed right to think on your own, your supposed right to be an independent agent for change. It's a moment in which you lay down your position as authorizer. It's a moment in which you lay down your orphanhood because it's a moment in which you turn once again to your Source, your Father, your Creator—whatever word you want to use—no longer claiming independence, and you say, "Father . . ." followed with a desire of some sort. There's a rejoining that occurs in the holy instant.

In that joining, as we've been discussing, and you let the Father in, you let the Father's perspective as His Gift to you infill you so that you stand in receipt of it as an experience—that's not a sacrifice.

Now, when I apparently "sacrificed," or was sacrificed—"the sacrificial lamb" as it's put—I wasn't engaging in sacrifice at all. I was demonstrating for everyone in the only way it could be demonstrated, that life is eternal, that life is deathless, that mortality is not the rule. Of course, it's what everybody had been experiencing forever, and so there was no capacity at the moment from within that mindset—that belief structure—to imagine that life was eternal, that it was as a fact uninteruptible and that the experience of death was an illusion.

And so, someone from outside of the mindset, someone not experiencing that confusion, had to demonstrate it objectively, you might say, so that everyone might learn that life is deathless and that they should begin to immediately challenge their willingness to die, challenge the idea that it's unalterable, that it's unchangeable, that it's a fact of life. You see?

Sacrificing disappears . . . and all of the spiritual definitions added to it, and all of the non-spiritual interpretations that have been developed to explain the human condition, all of those things will disappear when you indulge in or engage in the holy instant consciously and on purpose. Your sense of yourself that seems to be unholy will be replaced with the experience of your holiness. Not as a thing to flaunt, not as a behavior to acquire, but as the very nature of your Being that finds its presence in God—in the Creator, in your Source. And because it does that, it identifies who you Are truly, so you're not confused about that.

Now, you've heard all of the wonderful stories about mothers who have sacrificed their personal goals for the benefit of their children, who've given up this or that because they loved their children so much that they worked three jobs to take care of them through the Depression and abandoned a career move, or whatever. And you might notice that mother-love is one of the strongest forms of sacrifice present on your globe and has been for some centuries.

It's time to challenge these ideas. It's time to stop embracing them. I don't mean by that, that it's time to go out and tell everybody else to stop doing it. I mean that in the quietness of your very own being, relative to yourself, you need to stop it! You need to stop valuing sacrifice. You need to stop doing without because that "matures" you.

You know, talking about maturation—becoming mature—if you noticed as you go through life, as a child you stand in the experience of being loved and as you mature, you shift from being loved to being Love. You shift from constantly standing in receipt, into the atmosphere and attitude and action of Loving—of Being Love and extending it.

Well, you know you could say that when that shift occurred, you gave up your life in some respects for your brother, for whoever it is that you're now standing in the position of giving to, of caring for, of caring about, of having their best interests at heart. You see?

That's laying down your life, we might say, as a "getter" so that you might be a "giver." Is that sacrifice? Everyone who's done it has learned that it's fulfillment. And everyone who has watched someone who hasn't made that transition and is fifty years old and still expecting the world to serve him his good on a silver platter, you recognize that that is sick. You understand that it's not appropriate.

I'll tell you something: The only sacrifice which could be identified as laying down your life for a brother, is your arriving at a point where everything other than yourself is more important to you than you. Because when that happens, your capacity to love, your capacity to be Love—your Birthright—infills you and overflows and is a blessing to everything your attention falls upon.

Is this something new? No. It's as old as the hills. Did you know that that's what the Course is talking about in its new language? Well, now you do.

THE END OF SACRIFICE¹

Fear not to recognize the whole idea of sacrifice as SOLELY of your making.

You know, just because others may practice sacrifice, may value it, may have lifted it up to lofty positions, and just because they may have talked about it to you, it wasn't necessary for you to pick it up. How many people may have talked to you about being an automobile-mechanic? And you didn't become an automobile-mechanic and you still don't know the first thing about what goes on under the hood of the car. You see? Everything about caring for automobiles did not become a part of your life—you didn't make it part of your life even though there are auto-mechanics all over the world. So . . .

Fear not to recognize the whole idea of sacrifice . . .

. . . or anything else . . .

. . . as SOLELY of your making. And seek not safety by attempting to protect yourself from where it is not.

That's really not difficult . . .

. . . seek not safety by attempting to protect yourself from where it . . .

. . . sacrifice . . .

. . . is not.

Well, where might those places be? Well, one of them is in your Brother. Another one is in God.

But you think your Brother demands sacrifice and you think God demands sacrifice. And so you protect yourself from both your Brother and from your Father through the developed art of skillful negotiation where you have a relationship but it's one that you are controlling with only one goal and that is to protect yourself against the inevitable loss that you will experience if you were undefended with your Brother or with your Father.

. . . seek not safety by attempting to protect yourself from where it is not. Your brothers and your Father have become very fearful to you. And you would bargain with them for a few special relationships in which you think you see some scraps of safety. Do not try longer to keep apart your thoughts and the Thought that has been given you.

When you listen, when you hear Guidance, when the Holy Spirit speaks to you, when your Guide speaks to you, when the Father speaks to you and you hear it . . . what? It happens in the same place where your thoughts occur. But, you say, "I've had a revelation or I have had a spiritual insight." And although you experienced it in your conscious awareness, you say it came from somewhere else. It came from Heaven. It came from the Father, Who's "out there" somewhere. It came from the Holy Spirit—part of the Trinity—again, somewhere else.

And you keep your thoughts and the Thought apart by definition. Don't do that anymore.

Do not try longer to keep apart your thoughts and the Thought that has been given you. . .

. . . or any Thoughts that have been given you.

When they are brought together and perceived where they ARE, .

. . . which means, perceived as present in your mind, not present "out there" somewhere that you overheard, and other thoughts present in your mind that you call, "yours."

When they are brought together and perceived where they ARE, the choice between them is nothing more than a gentle awakening, and as simple as opening your eyes to daylight when you have no more need of sleep.

See, it's simple. It's complicated if you've got to reconcile yourself with the Holy Spirit "out there" or God "out there" and you "in here." That's difficult to reconcile. You might say that's difficult to wrap your mind around. But when you realize that they're both occurring in the same place, then reconciling them is simple. You just shift your attention. You just value this more than that. Do you see? All of this is, at the bottom line, utterly simple. You make it complicated and sacrifice is part of the way you make it complicated.

If you're shifting from a misperception in your mind to the Knowing of Truth in your mind, that's the "Journey without Distance," that's you coming back into your sanity. You see? It's a simple shift and it's a shift that occurs in the holy instant, which is why the holy instant is such an important thing to be discussing.

The sign of Christmas is a star, a light in darkness. See it not outside yourself, but shining in the Heaven within, and accept it as the sign the time of Christ has come.

This light, this shining star in you, is the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—your Christhood. It's that simple.

But, you see, that's scary! You'd rather have God and the Holy Spirit "out there" different from you, unapproachable but of some benefit to you because They love you. You see? As long as they're "out there," you don't have to change. You don't have to sacrifice what has come to be important to you, even though it's a bunch of illusions.

Christmas is the penetration of the Christ consciousness, of the Christ into human experience. Christmas is when you let the Holy Spirit in. It's when you let your right Mind register with you and change you by enlarging you, by increasing your capacity to Know the truth instead of be unconscious of it and live your life as though it's nothing more than what you call the human condition, in which sacrifice constantly occurs and is important.

He comes . . .

. . . the Christ . . .

. . . demanding NOTHING.

"Oh-h . . ." but you say, "He does. He wants me to give up my right to get angry. He wants me to give up my passion for achievement. He wants me to stop chasing the carrot!" You see? That's because all of those forms of ignorance you value and you find no way to appreciate yourself without your engaging in them. And yet Someone who Knows the truth, the greater truth about you, must tell you so that you just might hesitate a moment—just an instant—on your chase after that carrot, because what will happen will not be sacrifice, but fulfillment.

No sacrifice of any kind, of anyone, is asked by Him. In His Presence, the whole idea of sacrifice loses all meaning.

Why? Because the experience of fulfillment is absolutely satisfying, an experience that you've never had in the practice of sacrifice and you know what satisfying is.

In His Presence, the whole idea of sacrifice loses all meaning.

In the Presence of your right Mind, sacrifice loses all meaning. Why? Because you find yourself made whole.

For He is Host to God . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

. . . is host to God.

Now, it already is. We read last week:

Salvation is simple being of God, and therefore very easy to understand. Do not try to project if from you and see it OUTSIDE yourself.

Like I said, "Holy Spirit 'out there,' God 'out there.'"

Do not try to project it from you and see it OUTSIDE yourself. In you are both the question and the answer; the demand for sacrifice and the peace of God.

You see, that's the point you have to remember. Both, you might say, both sides of the conflict are in one place and that's why all it requires is a shift of attention—a shifting of valuing—in you . . . like opening your eyes, if they've been closed.

For He is Host to God. And you need but invite Him in . . .

[repeats] And you need but invite Him. . .

Paul: Just a moment . . .

And you need but invite Him in Who is there ALREADY, by recognizing that His Host is One, and no thought alien to His Oneness can abide with Him there.

You see? The Holy Spirit is there already in you because it's your right Mind being held in trust while you're dallying with an ego perception—with a thought of being an orphan. It's already there.

Love must be total to give Him welcome, . .

. . . all that means is that Love must be present without any distractions of fear, of guilt, of hate, of anger, blah...blah...blah.

Love must be total, . .

. . . which simply means that it must be there without anything else being practiced. You see? It's not like . . . "Oh-h, you've got to find some way to embrace the wholeness of love." No. All you have to do is stop practicing fear and guilt. Just stop it for a moment and Love will be total. You see? Simplicity.

Love must be total to give Him welcome, for the Presence of holiness CREATES the holiness which surrounds it.

The presence of holiness is what you are when you abandon fear and guilt. And it creates the holiness that surrounds it. It creates the holiness of all because nothing extraneous is being introduced because you're neglecting to practice fear and guilt.

No fear can touch the Host Who cradles God in the time of Christ, for the Host is as holy as the Perfect Innocence which He protects, and Whose power protects Him.

Now, you can think of a manger scene here if you want, but that would misdirect your attention.

The holiness of it all is the holiness that is embedded in you because you are the holy Son of God—you are God's direct expression of Himself, totally. The meaning of this, the experience of this is awaiting you as you dare to practice the holy instant, meaning, you dare to become quiet and set aside the practice of fear and guilt, you neglect to value it and you say, "Father, what is the truth here? I wish to have the experience of Your perspective which I understand is mine, is my Birthright, but haven't had the experience of yet." **

This Christmas, give the Holy Spirit EVERYTHING that would hurt you.

Well, remember we're giving Christmas a different definition here, aren't we? So here we are very close to Thanksgiving—November—very close to Christmas. And so, when it says:

This Christmas, give the Holy Spirit EVERYTHING that would hurt you.

You could say, "Okay, timely that we're reading about it at this time of year, right?" [chuckles] But what will happen in January and February and March? Are you going to then wait until twelve months later, where these words have some significance or are you going to take this moment . . . and this moment . . . and this moment . . . and avail yourself of the holy instant with the desire to shift from the childhood "getting" to the mature presence of mind that is Love, that does care, that exists for the purpose of blessing his brother and everything because you recognize that what your brother is and what everything is, is Creation Itself—the Presence of God—and is therefore, worthy of the blessing of your seeing it for what it is and joying in it?

Joy to the World. What . . . the world out there? The world, when the shepherds 2000 years ago were out on the hills? No. The world of any given moment that you are experiencing because you have no choice, you're conscious. And if you're conscious, you're going to be conscious of something. And the something that you're conscious of is Creation Itself. Let It in, so that you can Joy to the World, because you're experiencing what It is and not inserting anything between you and It that alters your experience of It and causes you to be ignorant of your Birthright, holy Son of God that you Are.

This Christmas, . . .

. . . this moment . . .

. . . give the Holy Spirit EVERYTHING that would hurt you. LET yourself be healed completely that you may join with Him in healing, and let us celebrate our release together by releasing everyone . . .

. . . else . . .

. . . by releasing everyone with us. Leave nothing behind, for release is total, and when you have accepted it with me you will GIVE it with me.

Listen:

All pain and sacrifice and littleness will disappear in our relationship, which is as innocent as our relationship with our Father, and as powerful.

Lay down your life as the up-and-coming orphan. Join me as who you actually Are. Let me in. Want to experience the truth—whatever that might actually turn out to be—more than you want to continue the centuries-old habits that have just been handed down generation after generation, after generation and have neglected to illuminate the fact that everybody is in bondage to an illusion, to a practice of sacrifice, of being incomplete, of never having enough but striving for it and enjoying the strife and feeling blessed by what the strife brings to you.

Pain will be brought to us and disappear in our presence, and without pain there can BE no sacrifice. And without sacrifice there love MUST be.

Oh my, . . . you're coming up upon the Christmas time and you will be seduced into admiring and valuing the entry into the human condition of the Christ, which was the first of two steps as it's believed. The first step was the birth of the Christ and the second step was the death of the Christ. They go together like bookends, they're inseparable and they teach an incredible lesson—a religious lesson . . . CRAP! DON'T BUY IT! Sacrifice proves nothing except insanity. Sacrifice demonstrates nothing but confusion. Sacrifice is the result of nothing but ignorance.

Be alert this week. Watch for all the places where sacrifice seem to come into play, either as a "suffer it to be so now," or as something of great value that is going to bless those for whom sacrifice occurred, or even bless the one who did the sacrificing. Watch for it. Let red flags go up so that you don't experience them unquestionably, or at the worst, with reverence.

If you're not willing to look at sacrifice as it comes up in your daily life with an immediate intent to reject it, you're not going to be primed for the holy instant. The holy instant will not happen. You will be impressed with the sacrifice and the qualities of it, whether they are uplifting or whether they down-trod you.

Be alert! This section is called The End of Sacrifice. And I promise you the end of sacrifice will not come as long as you employ it and value it and revere it instead of the holy instant.

You may not truly grasp what the blessing of the holy instant is, but you won't find out until you employ it, until you engage in it. And you do know . . . you do know that the practice sacrifice—of fear and guilt—does not ever in any way constitute true fulfillment. It doesn't constitute healing.

We are to join together in the conscious awareness of truth so that ignorance and confusion can be dispelled or healed and all of the evidences of it disappear.

. . . without sacrifice there love MUST be.

And therefore, there it is.

You who believe that sacrifice IS love must learn that sacrifice is SEPARATION from love.

He gave up his life for you—the son or daughter in the Armed Forces. They gave up their lives for the sake of freedom. Wow! I do not mean to be disrespectful, but it's time to be lifted out of the arena in which the sacrificing of ones life is noteworthy and praiseworthy and the raising of the dead replaces it! It's time for something new to happen that constitutes fulfillment for everyone rather than suffering sacrifice and finding ways to tolerate it.

This is the meaning of Christmas. It's not a date on a calendar. It's an intent, an action of an individuality to rouse himself out of his stupid rest, to rouse himself out of his insanity by abandoning privacy—the right to independence, because there is so much more to be experienced that is unquestionably satisfying, unquestionably fulfilling, unquestionably the presence and evidence of Love—not just kindness from one to another, but the presence of Love that God is, . . . divine Love.

Again:

You who believe that sacrifice IS love . . .

. . . and sort of melt when you hear of the marvelous sacrifice that someone went through.

You who believe that sacrifice IS love must learn that sacrifice is SEPARATION from love. For sacrifice brings guilt as surely as love brings peace.

Why would I take this time? Why would I work with everyone, we'll say, for 2000 years? Because it's your Birthright to be experiencing peace—the peace that Love brings. That's something I want you to join me in. Why? So you can do something nice for your brother? No. So that you might, in your conscious intent to know the truth, find yourself seeing God in each and everything and stand in awe and amazement and praise of it . . . that you know what? Your brother, whom you're looking at, will recognize as an experience he's not had before, that blesses him therefore, or that blesses everything that you're looking at. It's your Birthright to be that Presence and it's the Birthright of everything to be experiencing that Movement or Presence in you.

Guilt is the CONDITION of sacrifice, as peace is the condition for the awareness of your relationship with God.

What does that mean . . . your relationship with God? It means your connection with your Father, your inseparableness, the fact that you can't be divided from Him and therefore, your Identity is forever intact and forever unchangeable, forever divine, forever holy. And therefore, your Being—your very existing—is constituted of an ever present joy to the world, an ever-present joying in the world. I don't mean inside the world, you're joying in what It is.

This calendar Christmas season, can end up being when the Real Christmas occurs in you, in you, in you, in you, in you, . . . in all of you. That's what the holy instant is about.

Through guilt you exclude your Father and your brothers from yourself. Through peace you invite them back, and realize that they are where your invitation bids them be.

Does she piss you off? Does he gripe your ass? Are all of them worthy of your disdain or discrediting or criticism? Well, then that's where you invite them to be . . .

. . . they are where your invitation bids them be.

And you invite them to be separate and different and less than and different from you, and therefore, incompatible, therefore alien and on and on and on.

However, . . .

Through peace you invite them back, and realize that they are where your invitation bids them be.

You see? Take responsibility back. You're the one deciding what they're there for. You're the one inviting them to be where you see them to be, where you want them to be, where you need them to be so that you might become more credible, so that you might be on a higher rung on the ladder than they are. You see?

What you excluded from yourself seems fearful, for you endowed it with fear and tried to cast it out, though it was part of you. Who can perceive part of himself as loathsome, and live within himself in peace? And who can try to resolve the perceived conflict of Heaven and hell in him by casting Heaven out and giving it the attributes of hell, without experiencing himself as incomplete and lonely?

It's impossible! Sacrifice is not valuable. Sacrifice is mean-spirited. Sacrifice is the expression of hate, because pain is associated with it, not peace. Be very black and white about it in your mind, because it is very clear. And until it becomes very clear and you consciously embrace it, as I said, the red flags won't go up as evidences and occasions of sacrifice occur during your day. And you'll amble on in your ignorance through another day and you'll probably feel that what Raj is saying just doesn't cut it. You know what? My saying things doesn't cut anything. My saying things occurs only to inspire you to engage in a new way of being in your mind—where both the question and the answer are, where the demand for sacrifice and the peace of God are.

Sacrifice is not a pleasant subject. But I haven't only talked about sacrifice tonight. I've talked about joy. I've talked about fulfillment. I've talked about love and peace that are healing. I've talked about engaging in the holy instant and joining, wanting to know the truth that transforms you and what you've been experiencing, from just a world and universe, to the direct spot-on clear view of Creation here and now.

So I am making a Christmas gift. A joyful gift. A Gift of joy. And I'm saying, and I'm saying this to each of you for you to practice on yourself, within yourself: Stop valuing sacrifice. Embrace the holy instant. Give the Holy Spirit everything that would hurt you.

That which is nothing more than your right Mind has only one intent: To reunite your Mind, to cause the distractions that seem to fragment your mind to dissolve so the fragmentation ceases.

Love surrounds you. The Father's Love surrounds you. My Love surrounds you. The Holy Spirit's Love surrounds you. And you know what? We're all actively engaged in providing you with the stimulation—the stimulus to have a light bulb go on—another word for the Christmas Star.

And so I soberly join with you in this coming week, in your willingness to give your attention to the truth, to give your attention to the light bulb going on, to give your attention to that in which sacrifice does not exist.

I love you very much. Love Peace, stop loving sacrifice. Treat it like trash. You don't get excited about trash. You just drop it in the trashcan, don't you?

You go over and you pick it up, a little bit of litter, and you walk over and drop it in the trashcan and you go on your way doing joyous, fulfilling things.

The Holy Spirit will send the trash men around to pick up the trashcans. You don't have to worry about cleaning up your trash—your old used sacrifices.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 28th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, after almost thirteen months we're coming to the end of the chapter entitled, The Purpose of Time. And during this thirteen months, we've been mostly talking about the holy instant, finding out what significance it has. And it's great significance is, that it is the threshold of Awakening. It's that simple.

It is the moment in which, for whatever reason you might come up with, you're willing to dare to abandon the concept that you're an independent authorizer—an independent agent. And you're willing to join with whatever it might be that is the Cause of it all . . . that is the Cause of you.

It is the point at which you say, "Our Father, Who Art In Heaven, Hallowed Be Thy Name, Thy Kingdom Come, Thy Will be Done on Earth as it is in Heaven."¹ You see, the uniting of what have been believed to be two separate un-unifiable things—Heaven and Earth. The willingness to find God in each and every thing including yourself, and the willingness to let That which was and is Cause to all, be That which you yield to, That which you follow, That which you let yourself be the offspring of.

Paul is almost sorry to see this chapter pass and well might all of you. Its meaning, though, had better be kept in the foreground. It's like getting directions to your Good and then tucking them away while you move on and consider other things. Don't. As you consider other things, do them in the context of the holy instant. Do them in the context of being joined. Do them in the context of an actual practice you engage in, rather than think about. Consider them with your Guide. Consider them with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

Don't do anything alone ever again!

And if you find yourself lazy or if you find yourself inclined not to apply yourself that diligently and you end up doing a lot of things all by yourself again, catch yourself and stop! And use some self-discipline.

You know what? All I'm saying is, look where your Answer is. Don't look where your answer is not. Give your attention where the truth is to be seen because truth is more important to you than your illusions.

Now, continuing in the book:

As long as you perceive the body as your reality, so long will you perceive yourself as lonely and deprived. And so long will you also perceive yourself as a victim of sacrifice, justified in sacrificing others.²

So . . .

As long as you perceive the body as your reality, . .

. . . it seems to be a pretty straight-forward thing but it implies something. Now for those who do perceive the body as their reality, in other words, "Oh-h this is me, [patting himself] I am this thing, this shape, this physique that says, 'I'm a male or I'm a female with two arms and two legs, etc.,'" most everyone does see themselves that way and its inconceivable to think that maybe there's another way to experience yourself than as a form among forms.

Now I'm just pointing this out because there is another way to experience it. And I'm telling you and someone needs to tell you, so that you might become curious to experience it.

On the other hand, many of you are students of what you would call, "metaphysics," and you have come to value your mind and you have come, through your studies, to an understanding that it is mind in which all experience of form is occurring. So, rather than body being the ground of your being, mind is the ground of your being. And if you have been raised in a metaphysical environment your whole life where you may never have actually identified yourself with body, it might seem inconceivable to you that there are others walking around on your planet who literally do just see themselves as just another form in the chain of evolution along with fish and cattle and insects and so on.

I mention this because whichever vantage point you might be looking from, if you're unaware that there are others having different experiences, you can end up being very unkind and thoughtless and find yourself ridiculing something that you didn't understand was going on.

Now the fact is, that one of the most effective means of having both experiences is to meditate or not meditate. The simple fact is that for those who are identifying with their body, who think they are their body, their body is them, they can, through meditation, arrive at an experience of being conscious—without thoughts—of being aware of everything without identifying with the things, but rather the frame of reference in which he or she is experiencing all of those things. This place of experience is a place of perfect peace, whereas the place of identifying with the body is inevitably and always to some degree, an experience of fear and guilt.

Everyone is able to have this experience, which is an inner experience. Because you can, it makes it easier for you to understand what we've been talking about with reference to making a shift—the Journey without Distance that we discussed last time—where there is a shift of attention from illusion to truth, or a shift of attention from problem to solution, a shift of attention from that which generates disease to that which heals disease, a shift of attention that occurs in one place—the mind.

Waking Up is not complicated. And it is only as difficult as you make it by being reluctant to bring your attention with consistency to the holy instant, to that place where you shut up and you ask the Holy Spirit or the Father or me to help you experience the truth, another way of saying, to help you Know the truth not as an intellectual exercise, but as an experience of "What is." You see?

Now, something that will also help in the understanding of what we're reading tonight, is the image I have been providing of your having said, "Father, I want a divorce, Father I want to stand in my own right." And that when you imagined that such a decree was made and given you, you became in effect, an orphan, living your life in an orphanage among others who see themselves as orphans.

Now this is very identical with identifying as a body and it's important to understand it.

Now, as long as you perceive the body as your reality, so long will you perceive yourself as lonely and deprived. As long as you perceive yourself as an orphan and insist upon it, so long will you perceive yourself as lonely and deprived. Your Birthright will be gone. And you will be alone because you chose to be independent not exactly realizing that independence meant isolation. Independence meant isolation and aloneness. You see? But nevertheless, that was what you found yourself faced with.

So, as long as you perceive yourself as an orphan, you will perceive yourself as lonely and deprived.

And so long will you also perceive yourself as a victim of sacrifice, justified in sacrificing others.

You see? The minute you abandon embrace, the moment you abandon the Father, you abandon that which gives you Identity. You abandon that which gives you truth—gives truth to your Being. And that's the sacrifice. You see?

You think you're sacrificing because you're doing a kindness for the guy down the hall in the orphanage. You see? Or you think you're sacrificing because you've decided to do some good things instead of the things you've really wanted to do, to help the staff in the orphanage, to make some "brownie points." You see? You think the sacrifice is going on between you and others in the orphanage not realizing that the sacrifice occurred and continues to occur as long as you're saying, "Father, I'd rather see it my way," as long as you haven't abandoned your so-called imagined right to define what everything is. You see?

That's where the sacrifice occurs. Get this straight, else you will continue to think that you're sacrificing for others and you will be angry because of the sacrifice or you will be jealous because someone else has something you've sacrificed. You see?

The absolute essential thing is for you to be willing to abandon the tension that you have created in your mind between yourself and everyone else you're sacrificing for, or between you and everyone else who isn't sacrificing enough for you. That just keeps you bound—tied up, kept, incarcerated—in the orphanage. And that's not where the sacrifice is occurring.

The sacrifice is occurring in your continued act—and I mean act as in a play, as an actor—your continued act of independence. The holy instant literally is when you decide to abandon the act of independence if only for an instant.

You see, it's in the absence of the act of independence that you, in your right Mind, can have an experience of sanity. And that is why the holy instant is so important. It's the way out of the dream. It's the way out of suffering.

For who could thrust Heaven and its Creator aside WITHOUT a sense of sacrifice and loss?

Now, it isn't just that you thrust something called, "Heaven" out, and it isn't that you just thrust your Creator out, like putting them in exile for awhile, while you play around with other things. In doing those things, you have become insane. You have become confused with commitment. You have become confused and you are committed to it. You see?

So . . .

. . . who could thrust Heaven and its Creator aside WITHOUT a sense of sacrifice and loss?

No one. [chuckle] Because in so doing, you became insane or you become insane and that's an unnatural experience which is best described as sacrifice and loss . . . severe loss . . . depressing loss . . . hurting loss . . . debilitating loss. . . sacrifice that can make you feel like killing yourself. You see?

"Oh-h, . . . I'm going to get out of the orphanage . . . I'm going to put a bullet through my head and get out of the orphanage!"

Well, hey everybody! The way you get out of the orphanage is abandoning being an orphan. In many ways, all of you are too caught up in the dynamics of the world, you might say, the dynamics of the orphanage, the dynamics of the orphan experience.

And as we've said before, the tendency is to want to learn about spirit and about truth and about God to improve the orphan experience. But truth has another purpose, the Holy Spirit has another purpose and that is to restore you to your sanity in which there is no orphanage in which to become more successful, or to rise to the top, etc.

. . . who could thrust Heaven and its Creator aside WITHOUT a sense of sacrifice and loss? And who can suffer sacrifice and loss without attempting to RESTORE himself?

Easy to understand, . . .

Yet how could you accomplish this yourselves, . . .

. . . meaning, as the orphan you think you are . . .

. . . , when the basis of your attempts is the belief in the REALITY of the deprivation?

In other words, when the basis of your attempts to restore yourself from the vantage point or standpoint of being an orphan, is the belief that you really are an orphan!

As long as you've forgotten your Birthright, as long as you have forgotten your holiness, you're unholy miserable human self will try to improve itself and restore itself but only as a miserable human doing it. And the only way it can be done is to abandon the belief that you are an independent orphan and let your Birthright as the Son or Daughter of God be restored to you because you invite it in.

Again . . .

. . . who can suffer sacrifice and loss without attempting to RESTORE himself?

You mean, get back your balance, get back some joy that you know you should be experiencing.

Yet how could you accomplish this yourselves, when the basis of your attempts is the belief in the REALITY of the deprivation. . .

. . . the reality of the orphanage, the reality of your orphanhood?

For deprivation breeds attack, . .

. . . deprivation breeds jealousy. Deprivation breeds anger. Deprivation breeds self-righteousness as an attempt to better yourself or as an attempt to be better than someone else, with mean-spirited actions, with mean-spirited actions engaged in to make yourself better than someone else and to demonstrate well, the lesser status of someone else.

For deprivation breeds attack, being the belief that attack IS justified.

You see? You say, "Father, I'd rather see things my way . . . I'm going to see things my way," click, [snaps fingers] and now you're seeing things your way and it's an uncomfortable experience. And the uncomfortable experience makes you feel bad. It makes you feel upset. And so now the way in which you deal with your life and your world and your fellowman all comes out of anger. It all comes out of fear. It all comes out of guilt.

Since you're suffering, you've got to make somebody responsible. After all, it can't be you. You've been watching yourself in your independent state and you think you've been pretty good. But you haven't been standing far enough back to look at yourself and see that in looking at yourself as an orphan, you're not taking into consideration that you're really the Son or Daughter of God, ignoring your Birthright—ignoring your Identity. You see?

And therefore, you're incapable of abandoning the suffering, abandoning the sacrifice and no longer finding value in working through the life situations which are inseparable from sacrifice, which it's your task to move through successfully so as to become valid in your own right. You see?

. . . deprivation breeds attack, being the belief that attack IS justified. And as long as you would retain the deprivation, . .

. . . in other words, as long as you insist on saying, "But Father, I'd rather see it my way, . .

. . . attack becomes salvation and sacrifice becomes love.

It just can't be put any clearer than that. How skillfully you can sacrifice and how skillfully you can attack so that people don't recognize what you're doing, and you can leverage yourself into a better position—you cement yourself in the experience of separation, of loneliness.

Waking Up is about the release of all of that. The holy instant is about the release of all of that.

So is it that, in all your seeking for love, . .

. . . as an orphan, mind you . . .

. . . you seek for sacrifice and FIND it. Yet you find not love. It is impossible to deny what love is, and still RECOGNIZE it.

You see? I'm going to put it simply: The capacity to love is derived from your Creator because it is extended to you by Him as Himself expressed. The capacity to love was not given to you as an independent entity to have and to hold, [chuckle] till death do you part, as a possession.

No. The capacity to love is what you find yourself having, we'll say, or more appropriately, Being, when you let the Father back in. That's why it constitutes fulfillment. That's why it constitutes joy.

The meaning of love lies in what you have cast OUTSIDE yourself, and it has no meaning at all apart from you.

You say, "I'd rather see things my way . . . I'd rather be an independent agent, which means, I'd rather be what we're calling an ego." And so that of yourself, which you're ignoring, became the Holy Spirit held in trust while you dallied with the ego.

Now I know I have said this over and over again, but it's simple and it's clear and it helps to make clear what we're reading about right now.

The meaning of love lies in what you have cast OUTSIDE yourself, . .

. . . in other words, in the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind but which you have disowned because you've insisted upon being able to determine for yourself and by yourself what everything means.

The meaning of love lies in what you have cast OUTSIDE yourself, and it has no meaning at all apart from you. It is what you preferred to KEEP that has no meaning.

And what you are preferring to keep are the definitions you're making up and the right to make them and therefore be unconscious of what really means something. You've done this because no one's told you there was something else you could be doing.

Well now, the Course is. And now, I am.

While all that you would keep AWAY holds all the meaning of the universe, and holds the universe together in its meaning.

Again:

It is what you preferred to KEEP that has no meaning. While all that you would keep AWAY holds all the meaning of the universe, and holds the universe together in its meaning.

Why is that? Because what's outside that you're ignoring is God—the Creator—Being the Movement of Creation, giving it all the Meaning it has which can't help but escape your attention and awareness if you're insisting on your private, puny little mind. Again, it's that simple.

For unless the universe were joined in YOU it would be apart from God, and to be without Him IS to be without meaning.

Now listen:

In the holy instant the condition of love is met, for minds are joined without the body's interference, and where there is communication, there is peace.

In the holy instant is in the stillness, is in the place where you've let your mind be silent, where you have abandoned thinking, where instead of, through thought processes providing meaning, you are becoming silent with the desire to have meaning be revealed to you by that which is responsible for All That Is.

In the holy instant the condition of love is met, for minds are joined without the body's interference, . .

. . . they're joined without a claim of orphanhood. It's met because there is no body identification occurring, just Mind identification—Mind being the vantage point, the totality in which all of Creation exists to be experienced.

The Prince of Peace was born to re-establish the condition of love by teaching that communication remains unbroken even if the body is destroyed, provided that you see not the body as the NECESSARY means of communication. And if you understand this lesson, you will realize that to sacrifice the body is to sacrifice NOTHING, and communication, . .

. . . and I've been using the word "communion" in this respect . . .

. . . and communication, which MUST be of the mind, cannot BE sacrificed. Where, then, IS sacrifice?

Now you better know that I will not let this opportunity pass us by to be very clear.

The Prince of Peace was born to re-establish the condition of love by teaching that communication remains unbroken even if the body is destroyed, . .

That does not mean the body isn't real. It does not mean that the body is not eternal. It does not mean that the visibility and tangibility of a divine idea is meaningless. It just means that it's not the focal point. And even if it could be destroyed, it wouldn't alter in any way the divine facts of Being—that's all it means.

As with my example: If there could seem to be the destruction of a body, it would be raised up, it would be re-identified, you might say, because although it's not the focal point, it's inseparable from the Idea which formed it. This is very important to understand.

. . . if you understand this lesson, you will realize that to sacrifice the body is to sacrifice NOTHING, . .

. . . yeah, that's right! To sacrifice the use of the body as the means of identifying yourself, instead of it being the visibility and tangibility of your identity . . .

Paul: I'm sorry, this is me, Paul, I lost it.

The simple point is, that the body is immortal, it is eternal, it will forever identify your individuality, but it's not your identity. It's just the rendering of it visible, experiencable.

To sacrifice the use of your body as the focal point, doesn't constitute a sacrifice. It's like: To abandon the orphanage does not constitute the loss of anything actual, but in actuality uncovers the truth of you as the holy Son or Daughter of God, therefore, fulfilling Purpose in all ways relative to you.

. . . if you understand this lesson, you will realize that to sacrifice the body is to sacrifice NOTHING,

. . . the concept . . . any discussion about it is totally meaningless . . .

. . . and communication, . .

. . . or I'm going to say communion . . .

. . . which MUST be of the mind, cannot BE sacrificed. Where, then, IS sacrifice?

Nowhere! It only seems to be present in the orphanage because you've insisted on sacrificing or ignoring your conscious awareness of Who you Are. And that's what needs to be addressed.

The lesson I was born to teach, and still would teach to all my brothers, is that sacrifice is nowhere and love is everywhere.

What does that mean? For example:

. . . sacrifice is nowhere and love is everywhere.

Well, it means that wherever sacrifice seemed to occur someone gave up his life for freedom, etc. That's a misunderstanding that binds everyone until the awareness of the capacity to raise the dead becomes actualized. And the moment that becomes actualized and demonstrable, the whole concept of sacrifice goes out the window—and the valuing of it and the standing in awe of it and the reverence around it—it will all go out the window no matter how meaningful it had been for how many centuries. It will go out the window because it serves no purpose. When raising the dead occurs, sacrifice serves no purpose. It can't hold a candle to resurrection. You see?

This is where your head needs to begin to make new connections and allow for new awarenesses.

The lesson I was born to teach, and still would teach to all my brothers, is that sacrifice is nowhere and love is everywhere.

The undoing of any supposed need or value of sacrifice disappears in the presence of Love.

For communication . . .

. . . communion . . .

. . . embraces EVERYTHING, and in the peace it re-establishes love comes of itself.

Being in the orphanage or in the orphan mindset is not an experience of peace. And peace doesn't seem to be important and so you ignore that. There are more important things to take care of, like vengeance, and getting even, and getting justice. But none of those activities Wake you up, none of those activities return your sanity to you. You see?

In the holy instant when you're willing to become still and you're willing to say, "Father," or "Holy Spirit, help!" and you are being genuine, the help will be received because it has ever-presently been there.

. . . and in the peace it re-establishes love comes of itself. Let no despair darken the joy of Christmas, for the time of Christ is meaningless apart from joy.

What's "the time of Christ"? Oh-h, let's see, we're reading a chapter called, The Purpose of Time, yes! So the time of Christ is the holy instant. The time of Christ is that moment in which your mind clears and you experience being where God's laws prevail and nothing else does and your sanity is returned to you and your awareness of your holiness is experienced.

Let us join in celebrating peace . . .

. . . um-m, . . . that thing that isn't really too valuable to anybody in the orphanage . . .

Let us join in celebrating peace . . .

. . . I'm going to say, by valuing it enough to choose for it . . .

. . . by demanding no sacrifice of anyone, . .

. . . in order not to demand sacrifice of anyone you're going to have to abandon any picture you have of him or her as having more than you, or being able to take advantage of you. You're going to have to abandon the definition of orphanhood that you are placing upon him or her, and you're going to have to be willing to recognize your brother's Father, your brother's Source as God—just as it is with you.

You know what? You're not going to stop demanding sacrifice from your brother until you stop imagining and believing with commitment that you are in a state of existence called sacrifice. And that experience or belief is not going to leave you until you abandon your independence—in the holy instant where you say, "Father, help," and you genuinely invite Something in besides good old you. You see?

Let us join in celebrating peace by demanding no sacrifice of anyone, for so will you offer me the love I offer you.

Now mind you, these are the last few paragraphs of a chapter called, The Purpose of Time. Looks like the purpose of time is to let your Christhood register with you, and your Brotherhood with me register with you, so that we might join together. Wow . . . The Purpose of Time.

Now the purpose of time isn't to have unending earthly pleasures and to have all the newest and latest imaginations and fears and threats and traumas, and all those good things that cause you to grow and mature and become more than you were . . . and finally real, . . . finally valid in your own right.

What can be more joyous than to perceive we are deprived of NOTHING? Such is the message of the time of Christ, . .

Mind you, this could be considered to be speaking about the calendar celebration of Christmases—the time of Christ. No . . . but the time of Christ is the holy instant, that place in you where a decision is made to abandon isolation and independence.

Such is the message of the time of Christ, which I give you that YOU may give it, and return it to the Father, Who gave it to me. For in the time of Christ communication is restored, . .

. . . union resumes, because you've abandoned the isolation . . .

. . . and He joins us in the celebration of His Son's creation.

When you're not claiming to be an orphan anymore, you're able to rejoice in your holiness, you're able to rejoice . . . what? In the simple but profound experience of sanity that you've been missing. Being is a celebration of the truth, it's celebratory, it's joyous, it's amazing.

God offers thanks to the holy host who would receive Him, and let Him enter and abide where He would be.

Now who's the holy host? You! Every Son or Daughter of God, every Individuality, even if he or she thinks he or she is nothing more than a body, it doesn't change the fact that the unalterable fact is that each one is the holy host of God. It's the coming back into the conscious experience of that, that constitutes Waking up and is the purpose of time.

God offers thanks . . .

. . . rejoices in other words, is happy . . .

. . . offers thanks to the holy host who would receive Him, and let Him enter and abide where He would be. And by your welcome does He welcome you into Himself, for what is contained in you who welcome Him is RETURNED to Him.

The Prodigal Son comes Home. That which belongs to him is returned to him by your willingness to not try to do every little thing all by yourself anymore.

And we but celebrate His Wholeness as we welcome Him into ourselves. Those who receive the Father are One with Him, being host to Him Who created them.

Now, I know these words can be understood just as words. But mind you, we're talking about an actual experience, an actual experience like when you meditate and you do move out of the level of thinking. You have an experience of profound peace. When you allow yourself to abide in it, it seems to you as though that peace becomes filled with love, an emerging moving love. And then behind that comes joy. It's just the way it works. And you recognize that joy and that peace and that love as being utterly divine, flawless, perfect, infinite, dependable, unalterable, exquisite.

Those who receive the Father are One with Him, being host to Him Who created them. And by allowing Him to enter, the remembrance of the Father enters with Him, and with Him they remember the only relationship they ever had, and ever WANT TO HAVE.

Mind you, when you find yourself in relationship with God as an experience, you find yourself in relationship with all that God is (and I'm going to be even clearer) with all that God is Being. And that means you're in relationship with all Creation—nothing lonely about it, no sacrifice associated with it, no misery.

. . . with Him they remember the only relationship they ever had, and ever WANT TO HAVE.

An infinite all inclusive relationship with all that God is Being, called Creation.

This is the weekend in which a new year will be born . . .

. . . doesn't matter that it's not the weekend when December 31st occurs, any weekend can be the weekend.

This is the weekend . . .

. . . let this be the weekend . . .

. . . in which a new year will be born from the time of Christ.

From the holy instant.

I have perfect faith in you to do all that you would accomplish. Nothing will be lacking, and you will make complete, and NOT destroy.

Of course, if you're being in the holy instant . . .

. . . you will make complete, and NOT destroy. Say and understand this:

And I want it to be utterly clear that the very end of this chapter about The Purpose of Time has to do with union, has to do with actually abandoning isolation with what? . . . your Father, because it's your experience of communion with your Father that bares witness to your true identity and therefore, your inescapable awareness of the true identity of everyone and everything, and that's called sanity.

Say and understand this:

"I give you to the Holy Spirit as part of myself.

Wow, guess it must be talking about my Brother, my Sister or some part of Creation.

"I give you to the Holy Spirit . . .

"I'm not going to give you to the headmaster of the orphanage, you little bastard—fatherless being . . ." No.

"I give you to the Holy Spirit . . .

See, you've walked out of the orphanage. You've abandoned it. And you've abandoned the mindset that causes you to see your Brother in any other way than truly. And you say:

"I give you . . .

. . . my Brother . . .

. . . to the Holy Spirit as part of myself.
I know that you will be released, unless I want to use you to imprison MYSELF.

Why might you want to do that? Well, if you value being an orphan and all that goes along with it, you've got to have someone else to be an orphan with you. You need someone else to confirm that your insanity is truly sane. You need someone else to agree with you.

Now that you're coming out of that you say:

I know that you will be released, unless I want to use you to imprison MYSELF.

That's a great deal of sanity right there.

In the name of MY freedom I will your release,
Because I recognize that we will be released TOGETHER."

It's the only way. And when you say this, realize that you can't say it from the standpoint of an arrogant little mind. You've got to say it from the context of your awareness of the truth of your divinity, the truth of your Sonhood, the truth of your Being the Son or Daughter of God.

In the name of MY freedom I will your release, . .

Incredible. I can't have what I don't give you. I won't have what I won't give you. So . . .

In the name of MY freedom I will your release, . .

Do you see, this is the finale of the purpose of time.

In the name of MY freedom I will your release,
Because I recognize that we will be released TOGETHER.”

So will the year begin . . .

. . . or so will this next week begin . . .

. . . in joy and freedom. There is much to do, and we have been long delayed. Accept the holy instant as this year . . .

. . . or this week or this day . . .

. . . is born, and take your place, so long left unfulfilled, in the Great Awakening. Make this year different by making it all the SAME. And let ALL your relationships be made holy FOR you. This is our will.

And I would say, this hasn't been your will on your own, but join with me, it is our will and it is your release and your Brother's release . . . period.

And the last word of this chapter is:

Amen.

Nothing wishy-washy about it—all of it clear. All of it black and white. All of it simple. Don't find anything better to do than this. And I could say, see what kind of a week you have, or see what kind of a world you have, or see what kind of wonderful Brothers and Sisters you have.

And again, the simple truth: Sacrifice has nothing to do with the way your world behaves or the way your Brothers and Sisters behave. Sacrifice has entirely to do with your claiming a right to engage in being unconnected with your Source, like a lamp that tries to shine its light without being plugged in. It never will become a real lamp. And you never have become a mortal.

Let's join together as the holy Sons and Daughters of God, Now!

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

December 5th 2009

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, as you heard, we're going to be talking about empathy. And you might be wondering, in the context of what we've been reading, where empathy popped up from. So I want to back up to the end of last week's text—the prayer that says:

"I give you to the Holy Spirit as part of myself.¹

This is addressed to your Brother or your Sister, or even to any part of your world.

"I give you to the Holy Spirit as part of myself.
I know that you will be released, unless I want to use you to imprison MYSELF.
In the name of MY freedom I will your release,
Because I recognize that we will be released TOGETHER."

I want to home in on the first line:

"I give you to the Holy Spirit . . .

You hear this often . . . you know . . . you have a brother who's having a problem: "Turn him over to the Holy Spirit!" And many of you treat your brother as though he's one of the discs in a tiddlywink game. And you take your disc and press it against the disc that he is, on the edge, and you pop your disc off of the edge and it makes his disc jump—it makes the other disc jump. And with a little bit of practice you develop a skill and can direct the direction of the jump and the length of the jump so that you can, hopefully, pop it into the bowl in the center of the playing board.

And so, it is as though you say to your Brother, "I give you to the Holy Spirit—kerplunk...bump...bump...bump" and hopefully, he goes into the dish. And you say, "Ah-h, what a relief . . . I'm going to let the Holy Spirit take care of this." And you walk on your way thinking you have done a wonderful thing. After all, you've turned him over to the Holy Spirit—you've released him from your caring, you might say, from your efforting, to the Holy Spirit. It says to do it in the Course.

And so, you walk on your way and you attend to other things without giving another thought to your brother whom you have "kerplunked to the Holy Spirit" and no blessing as occurred.

You see, as an orphan, as someone who is an independent authorizer, you see yourself as a body automatically. And you see everyone else—all the other orphans—as bodies, things "out there" that you can sort of "kerplunk . . . release to the Holy Spirit." You know, you don't think you're releasing his mind to the Holy Spirit, your releasing "him," this him that's located where the object is, called "his body." And your releasing him from the concern you, as a body have, or the efforting of caring that you, as a body, have been providing. All of this through space.

Now it's very important to understand this because . . .

"I give you to the Holy Spirit as part of myself.
I know that you will be released, unless I want to use you to imprison MYSELF.

Why you might even think that by having done a good "kerplunk" you are succeeding in releasing yourself. But let me ask you something: In this scenario that I've described, where's the holy instant? In this scenario, where is it that you have stepped back—the first part of the two-step, you know—that you have stepped back, become still and expressed a desire to the Father, or to the Holy Spirit, or to me to know what is the truth here? About what? About your Brother. Where, in the scenario I've just described has that occurred? And what's the purpose of that two-step being taken? What is the purpose of practicing the holy instant?

It is so that you might become infilled, suffused with the awareness of truth about your Brother as God sees Him, as God sees It, as the Holy Spirit truly sees your Brother, etc.

Now, that is a definition of true empathy. And yet, what I've described has nothing to do with relating to your Brother through space, as a body that could be kerplunked into the Holy Spirit, or where involvement with him would end and you would be free to go on about your business hopefully having been released yourself.

So, this needs to be understood.

Empathy has nothing to do with becoming sensitive to your Brother through space, body-to-body—bodies that have brains and sensory organs that allow the body to be conscious of the world and of life. You see? Empathy has nothing to do with that.

And yet, relating in that fashion is the only thing you're really used to. It's the way it is in the orphanage. It's the way those who don't know who they Are relate to each other, as bodies. And this is what you're released from: Is the goal of the Course, is the goal of the Holy Spirit that would have you Wake up.

You're not here to accomplish things through space by the force of will that does nothing but further substantiate and seem to solidify the existence of organismic bodies—matter, density. You're not here to further substantiate your orphanhood and further bind yourself in ignorance to who you truly Are.

Now, every week, every time we meet, every time you hear me speaking through Paul's mouth, Paul has provided an example of the two-step. He has provided an example of the holy instant. He has no idea what is going to happen. And he is willing to allow himself to be in that not-knowing place. Why? Well, because he cares about everyone who listens.

But, he has learned that in order for his caring about everyone to bear fruit, he had better not be empathizing with them. He had better be withdrawing his attention from them, as bodies "out there" in his experience. And instead, become still and go within, and desire to know the truth from the Father.

Now, every week we speak and we relate to all of you. And then, during the following week, at various times, many of you express distress with something I said or that something I said could easily have been taken the wrong way, and that person thinks I need to clarify what I said so there would be no misunderstanding. Or others will say . . . well, they'll have another gripe, a constructive one, you know, always wanting the truth to be brought out more clearly, yes, and their expression of these ideas are accompanied with an emotion of distress.

Now, Paul could come in on the following Sunday or Saturday night and sit down, knowing that there are those listening on the internet or in the group here, who have expressed these concerns, who might not be happy once again with what I have to say. And he could approach me, start listening to me with a bit of a bias, with a bit of a willful request for me either to address these issues or perhaps, to see that these individuals will not be distressed in the coming week so that he won't have to be bothered either. You see?

Now, his desire to have me respond in a certain way so his Brothers or Sisters won't be distressed is Paul playing tiddlywinks with his friends and kerplunking them into "my will" . . . kerplunking them into an answer that will relieve him of distress, because he cares.

Well, you know what? If he does that, he won't hear me because he will be coloring whatever goes on between us. And his apparent caring that would be called, "empathy," will not constitute what will bring forth answers that are needed.

The simple fact is that none of you know what the truth is that Wakes you up. None of you knows what the truth is that heals because if you did, the healing would be evident. So your memory banks do not include the Answer yet.

And so, you don't have the means to express true empathy.

Now, Paul has learned from doing it over and over and over again, that when he withdraws his caring about those who are listening and what they might be feeling, and brings his genuine, quiet, sole attention to me, when he speaks, answers that constitute the truth that heals comes out of his mouth. And those listening feel that true empathy has been expressed—true empathy has been shared because they feel heard, and they feel that they have been heard because the language has been so clearly appropriate for them.

Now, you see what I'm saying? I'm saying that true empathy occurs when you join with the Holy Spirit or you ask the Father for His perspective and regardless of what your friends and acquaintances are saying or wanting or feeling, you share what the Holy Spirit is revealing. That will always demonstrate true empathy. And because no attempt was made to reach your brother through space, body-to-body, the density of bodies is lessened. The density of the experience of the mortality of a physical form is lessened because you are not behaving as a form, you are behaving as Mind, you are behaving as the Movement of Love which has no form, but always has focus.

Again, it never has form but it always has focus. And the focus is a Movement and the Movement is rendered visible and tangible but not as matter! You could say it's rendered visible and tangible as the incredible glory of God—things, yes, but things that are a moving experience . . . totally Mind.

Now, when that happens, you will be in constant involvement with your Brother or your Sister. Doing this will not put you in a position of being released from a relationship, released from an involvement, released from caring. But you know what? The involvement will not be manipulative. The involvement will never involve any aspect of control. And that's the incredible beauty of it. And it's the incredible difference between a holy relationship and a special relationship.

Chapter Sixteen

THE FORGIVENESS OF ILLUSIONS

The forgiveness of that which never really was. To abandon the orphanage is to forgive the fundamental illusion.

To empathize does not mean to join in suffering, for that is what you must refuse to understand . . .

. . . or to pretend that you understand or to think that you understand.

To empathize does not mean to join in suffering, for that is what you must refuse to understand. That is the ego's interpretation of empathy, and is always used to form a special relationship in which the suffering is shared.

Not only in which the suffering is shared but in which body as form becomes more solidified. Because why? Because more willfulness, more self-determination has been brought into play for the purpose of control and it comes clothed in this friendly word: empathize. To have empathy is a wonderful thing . . . not if it doesn't happen in the context of a holy instant.

Think about it. Is it not more often than not, that you empathize with someone when they're having a problem rather than when they're having a joy? And although the practice of empathy done well even fools you into thinking that you are experiencing with your Brother his or her sorrow or trauma or distress, the fact is, that all you're doing is picking up on cues or clues in their behavior—their tone of voice or their words—that remind you of an experience you had which throws you right into memory, doesn't it? . . . right out of the moment you're in. Your relating to them in their distress is a matter of you abandoning yourself to your memory of similar circumstances and the feelings you had, the feelings of loss that you had—loss of control, loss of superiority, loss of ability to be effective, loss of ability to be well and expect to get well.

And there may be warm moments of tender embrace and quiet togetherness and tears shed, demonstrating that you truly are understanding them, feeling with them and even on film it might be a beautiful poignant moment. But without the empathy occurring in the context of the holy instant, it's only a temporary salve. It does not constitute the truth that will snap that one's or your awareness out of the illusion into the Reality—God's Reality—because you cannot draw from your memory an experience of empathy that's based on truth when you are joining with them in their suffering. It's just that simple.

Because the relationship that occurs is not happening in the context of the holy instant, which means in the context of your actual connection with the Holy Spirit or the Father or me, there literally is nothing present to transform the moment you're in and it further solidifies a special relationship, which is a relationship of bondage . . . to what? . . . to ignorance—bondage to your ignorance of what and who you truly Are, the awareness of which [snaps fingers] would lift you out instantaneously of the whole situation that seems to call for this wonderful element called, e-m-p-a-t-h-y. You see?

Now, . . .

The capacity to empathize is very useful to the Holy Spirit, provided you let Him use it in His way. He does not understand suffering, and would have you teach it is not understandable.

He would not have you teach that you understand as you sit there gently crying with your brother or sister in joined suffering over his predicament.

When He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . relates through you, He does not relate through the ego to another ego.

You know, from this body here to that body over there so that he might tiddlywink him into his Awakening. No.

He does not join in pain, knowing that healing pain is not accomplished by delusional attempts to enter into it, and lighten it by sharing the delusion.

You see? That's the normal practice of empathy. And that has become the acquired intent of the practice of empathy: To relieve your brother of his suffering by sharing some of it—sometimes called, "taking on part of the problem yourself." That isn't Brotherhood and that's not Brotherly love. And you must begin to find the holy instant more practical and more truly empathetic than the prevailing use and definition of empathy.

The clearest proof that empathy as the ego uses it is destructive lies in the fact that it is applied only to certain types of problems, and in certain people.

Well, people who have problems. There's a certain kind of people that it's used with. It's seldom use with people who are not having problems.

These it selects out, and joins with. And it never joins except to strengthen itself.

A really good empathy, if I might put it that way, is seen as very valuable because he helps people not feel alone when they're in misery. Well, you know what? I don't want any of you to help people feel not so much alone when they're in their misery, I want you to be a Presence who's listening to the Father for His perspective on your Brother who is suffering, so that it is your conscious awareness of the Father's Perspective of your Brother that you bring into the moment with your Brother, instead of drawing upon memory to identify with him. So that what? So that you begin to relate to your Brother and empathize with him on the basis of your experience of what he divinely Is, which has no part in problems and problems have no part in him. And that is the source of healing.

Make no mistake about this maneuver; the ego always empathizes to weaken, and to weaken is always to attack.

I know this is very difficult to see, but the fact is that when you empathize with your brother and you join with him in his sorrow, in his misery, you're not coming from strength within yourself. And in your joining weakness-to-weakness, you're emphasizing and substantiating and seeming to prolong weakness.

You do not know what empathizing means.

Although now you do, because I've been talking about it.

Yet of this you may be sure; if you will merely sit quietly by . . .

. . . that's the first part of the two-step: To back off and become still.

Yet of this you may be sure; if you will merely sit quietly by and let the Holy Spirit relate through you, you will empathize with strength, and both of you will gain in strength, and not in weakness.

Now, again, why all of a sudden are we talking about empathy? We're talking about empathy because when you go into the holy instant and you say—of your Brother and to your Brother—"I give you to the Holy Spirit as part of myself, I know that you will be released unless I want to use you to imprison myself. In the name of my freedom, I will your release because I recognize that we will be released together." And that's the only way it will be happening.

So we're discussing empathy because that prayer is what brings true empathy into play. What brings true empathy into play is participating in the holy instant, using the holy instant to learn of the Father what the truth is about your Brother, so that you might with feeling, relate to what is true about your Brother—your Father's Son, the holy One.

And this act is the beginning of a permanent relationship—not a relationship that you will become released from—a relationship you will be happy to be involved in forever because it doesn't involve empathy with suffering, but it involves the ongoing joined experience of the joy of Being.

Your part is only to remember this; you do not want anything you value to come of the relationship.

What does that mean? It means that you do not want anything that you have learned in the orphanage. You do not want any of the concepts about what it means to be an orphan to become embodied or manifest in your relationship with your brother that you're having true empathy with.

You will neither to hurt it nor to heal it in your own way.

According to your best judgments—your highest spiritual learning.

You do not know what healing is.

Just like when Paul sits down on Saturday nights, he does not know what healing is, he does not know what needs to be said, he does not know why it needs to be said. But in his allowing, what needs to be said is said and what needs to be learned is being learned, and healing is occurring whether he can pin-point it or not.

Continuing . . .

All you have learned of empathy is from the past. And there is nothing from the past that you would share, . . .

. . . why? You say, "We've learned from the past . . . the past is what helps us to be in the present better." But if a fundamental premise of the past is that you're just a physical organism, that you are just a body with a brain and that's it, then your past does not include within it what is essential to being free—of Waking up. It doesn't include it.

It also preoccupies you from the present, so that you are not able to be present in the present with innocent eyes. They are biased by your past, they are biased by your well-established beliefs, they are biased by the learning that has been handed to you that once again has appealed to this funny something in you all, that says, "I want to get to the end of learning. I want to get to the end of involvement. I want to get to the end of what causes me to put forth effort. I want to arrive at that point where I don't have to pay attention and can just, as silly as it sounds, pay attention—just be conscious but without effort being associated with it."

You know what? You tend to think that Creation is a movement occurring in space and time, a developing movement of objects or a movement of developing objects, things or forms. But you see, that's based on the idea that Creation is form—it's matter in time and space. But what if Creation is a Movement of Being, that can best be described as the conscious experience of learning—not a development of things, but a capacity that each one has to know more than he or she has ever known before.

Star Trek says, "To go where no man has gone before." What about, "To be what no man has been before." What about, "To be the conscious Movement of Mind that constitutes learning what wasn't known before,"—which obviously is going to mean that Being, existing, the experience of Life, is going to involve your, for lack of better words, focused attention infinitely eternally.

You're not going to get rest from being conscious. And you're not going to get rest from knowing more than you knew before, which, if you think you're something tiny, is going to feel like you being stretched and stretched and stretched beyond your capacity, when it's nothing but the incredible Movement of Creation.

If you weren't an orphan, if you were a holy Child of God, what would the experience be like? Well, that's my first clue. It's you experiencing Creation, not as a body, a physique, a form in a material universe, but rather as Mind learning, forever learning, forever discovering—not discovering anything that makes you better, not discovering anything that puts you ahead of anybody else, but discovering the incredible infinite Mind of God—an infinitely joyful and fulfilling experience.

I'm going to back up again:

Your part is only to remember this; you do not want anything you value to come of the relationship.

What you want is what the Holy Spirit would value. What you want is what your right Mind would value. And you will not find out what that is without shutting up and desiring to know what it is and staying with that focus until the clarity dawns on you.

You will neither to hurt it nor to heal it in your own way. You do not know what healing is.

See? I've just shared with you that you haven't known what Creation is. I've revealed to you that It's an intimate experience of learning of infinity eternally.

All you have learned of empathy is from the past. And there is nothing from the past that you would share, for there is nothing there that you would keep.

Is this becoming clearer? There really isn't anything there that you would keep, because there's a fundamental flaw which you're all in the process of abandoning to one degree or another—God bless you.

Do not use empathy to make the past real, and so perpetuate it.

Listen . . .

Step gently aside, . .

. . . step gently aside from your willfulness, from your focused determination to have the good you would think is best, be brought forth.

Step gently aside and let the healing be done for you.

How? By doing the two-step, by engaging in the holy instant. Understand that engaging in the holy instant is going to bring forth empathy, your capacity as a holy Son or Daughter of God, to know of your Brother or Sister's holiness because your understanding has come as a direct revelation from the Father. That's empathy.

Step gently aside and let the healing be done for you. Keep but one thought in mind, and do not lose sight of it, however tempted you may be to judge any situation, and to determine your response by judging it.

"Oh-h, I would help him if he would do this . . . Oh-h, I would help him but I can see that he's not practicing the holy instant. He's not this. He's not that."

Focus your mind only on this:

And we have another prayer:

"I am not alone, and I would not intrude the past upon my Guest.

Your Brother, whom you're no longer giving to the Holy Spirit as though he's a tiddlywink.

"I have invited Him, and He is here.
I need do nothing except not to interfere."

How do you not interfere? By silencing your human will. And how do you silence your human will? By doing something other than engaging it. And the something other is, that you say, "Father, what is the truth here? Father, reveal to me the holiness of my Brother so that I might feel with him his holiness that will heal and transform and lift us both out of the illusion of being orphans in an orphanage, so that I might enjoy being in relationship with him forever and no longer want relief from my relationships."

It just keeps getting better and better. I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time.

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, it's slightly less than a week until "my birthday." It's a time when it's very easy to abandon the holy instant because of course, when you celebrate "my birthday," you're celebrating something in the past with no compensation, if I may put it that way.

What I mean by that is, that ordinarily, you don't celebrate the birthdays of the dead. Ordinarily, you celebrate the birthdays of those who are alive. And what do you do? You spend your time with him or with her enjoying that one's presence, having fun with that one.

And so, you don't abandon the instant in which the holiness of it all can be experienced, whether you actually take advantage of it or not.

I'm going to ask you this year, on my birthday, for you to make a point of being with me. You know, next Friday, be with me in the present by asking things of me, by reaching out to me and by listening for my response. Next Friday . . . you know, in the "now" at that time, so that you have, on my birthday, an experience of the living me, my presence and my availability to you—not as a Godhead but as your Brother, as a friend.

And I hope that while you're with family or whoever you're celebrating Christmas with, that while you are being with them, you will make a point of just addressing me with a remark here or there—just a conscious moment of your extending yourself to me. And I want you to know, that every time you do that, I will respond whether you hear it or not.

I will also tell you that by virtue of doing it, you are more likely to hear me, than if you don't do it at all. Because then you will be occupied with, you know, the turkey or the gifts or the family or the music, or whatever it might be.

Now, we have a new section here called, True Empathy. And before we go on to what true empathy is, I want to take a little bit more time to talk about what it isn't, but what you believe it is and what you use it for.

Empathy, as you think of it, is a way for you to be present with a Brother or a Sister, a friend, to be intimately present with them, where, in so many words, you feel what they feel or you try to feel for what they are feeling without any blocks in the way—you try to let down obstructions.

But as long as you are behaving as though you're an orphan and are therefore in a constant state of vulnerability, every single act of empathy that you engage in will, at the bottom line, be able to be traced back to self-protection, to securing safety in what otherwise is a hostile environment—a hostile world, a hostile universe, a polarized existence.

Very often your practice of empathy is engaged in, so that you will not be caught off guard by your "untrustworthy" Brothers' behavior. And so you will be sensitive, especially to the Brothers or Sisters who seem to be the least trustworthy, whose behavior tends to show that they're likely to behave in unloving ways.

When you make a point of expressing empathy toward a Brother in a helpful, non-self-protective manner, and you really have their best interests at heart, you will find that what makes it reasonable for you to do this is that that one provides you with something meaningful. And if you're not able to be empathetic, if you're not able to be present with that one well, you may lose whatever that one provides that has meaning for you.

And so if you have a loved one who is suffering from something, you will tend to help them because you love them, but also because if something happened to them and they were no longer around, you would be at a loss that you don't want to have to cope with. And so it behooves you to be empathetic, it behooves you to be sensitive to that one so as to be able to help them still be around and fulfill your needs.

Now, I realize that you may feel that what I'm expressing is rather harsh and unreasonable, but you know what? It's important for you to know, that when you think you are doing something good—ultimately good in some way or another—and you are not actually doing something ultimately good, somebody needs to tell you.

Now, I am not telling you that when you behave from your orphan mentality, even though it's with well-intentioned empathy, that you are not doing something good. When I tell you that, I also tell you what you can do and what you need to do in order to, for lack of better words, express empathy that is good and that does have benefit. And that's what we've been discussing for a couple of weeks.

Empathy as you currently use it from your orphan mentality is always manipulative and always has at its bottom line, righteousness. You do it to demonstrate your capacity to be right.

Now, you say that you do it so that you can be on top of things—so that you can respond well. Well, if you've done that, you say, "I did it right." If you behave in a way and it doesn't turn out well, you feel, "I did it wrong."

Empathy is something more than a means of expressing and achieving rightness. Empathy has nothing to do with being right. But being right is important to all of you. There's a saying, "Right is might!" as though right is strength. But that very statement is an intellectual conclusion arrived at through thinking. It's not divine insight. It's not you knowing the truth. And because it's not you knowing the truth, and is the result of an intellectual process, the statement can be reversed. And it is reversed, and it says, "Might is right!" And so whoever has the "might" to assert and conquer or control is by virtue of the expression of "might," right!" You see?

Right is not might. And might is not right. Oh-h . . .

Empathy does not help you be appropriate in your blindness, in spite of your blindness. Empathy is what uncovers your Vision—uncovers the fact, reveals the fact that you are not blind. And you know what? It accomplishes it through a state of intimacy.

As we've said, in the practice of the holy instant, you step back, you shut up and you ask of the Father, you abandon your privateness, and you ask of Something else than yourself and your best judgments, "What is the truth here? How do You see my Brother? How do You see my Sister? How do You see that tree? How do You see this world, what is the truth about it?" And then you listen . . . and you let it be revealed, you let the Father speak or you let the Holy spirit speak or you let me speak.

That is a moment of intimacy. It is a moment of connection. It is a moment of union.

Now, true empathy is Knowing. Knowing with a capital "K." That's true empathy. How do you arrive at an experience of Knowing? You arrive at it by abandoning your attempts to be right. You experience it as a result of abandoning your need and your attempts to control. You accomplish it by abandoning your privacy.

Now I cannot make this clear enough, and unfortunately, I cannot paint the picture black enough to make you want to spontaneously abandon it. But everything you do, absolutely anything you do privately as a result of your own thoughts going on in your, "you say," in your own head, without involvement with anyone else, any activity that you engage in privately, deprives you of your sanity. It deprives you of your fulfillment because it keeps you securely in the state of orphanhood.

Now that means it keeps you in a state of illusion because you aren't an orphan and you did not create yourself.

As long as you use empathy to establish righteousness so that you might be something in your own right, or you might say, in your own rightness, you are using your mind in a way that absolutely inhibits any experience of intimacy because you're not letting anything else in to be with you or for you to be with.

Now, another way you use empathy is to sometimes connect with God. You want to have empathy with God. You want to feel what God feels. But here's the flaw in it: You ask God for a favor. You ask God for help in this situation or that situation. And so it is as though you send a message out and you don't know whether He receives it or not, and then, if something happens in your experience that resolves the problem, you say, "Oh, God heard my prayer and God answered my prayer."

But where's the moment when God picked up the phone and you heard Him say, "Hello" and you could say, "hello" back to him? It didn't happen. But if He had said, "Hello" and you said, "hello," empathy would have occurred. You see?

You would have been in a position to feel God's Meaning. And God would have been in a position for you to experience His Meaning. And there would have been joy. You see? It's similar to what I'm asking you to do next Friday: Have a direct Real experience with me on this birthday of mine, that you're celebrating by being absent from the moment you're in (in which you could connect with me) because your attention is on a day two thousand years ago.

Don't do that. Let's make the connection. Let's let the intimacy be there. Let's provide the environment in which empathy can occur, empathy being, Knowing—the Knowing that occurs when God speaks to you, when I speak to you. I am speaking to you right now, every one of you, I am speaking to you right now. It's real. In other words, what I'm saying is, that empathy is the result of intimate involvement.

Now, another way in which empathy occurs in unreal and inadequate ways, is when you do ask God for an answer: An answer that will help you function better in the world or that will allow you to function in a way that resolves dissonance in your relationships. In other words, you're asking for intimacy with God so that your intimacy with God is not the subject of your intimacy, but the resolution of a problem with others is the topic of the intimacy. And the moment God tells you the answer, you say, "thanks" and you attend to applying the answer to the experience.

Like, "H-e-l-l-o . . ." God might say, . . . "H-e-l-l-o . . . are you there? I thought we had a chance for being together . . ." You see? So that's not real empathy.

Now, when I speak to you through Paul, as right now, what you're seeing is a joining that is occurring between Paul and me. He's not asking me questions, but we are involved together in a mutual endeavor, I'll put it that way. So, you might say that our reason for communicating is to have the experience of communicating. You see what I'm saying?

You want to have an experience of God for the purpose of having an experience of God. Not so that you can use God for a third or another reason. Paul is getting practice at what? He's getting practice at intimacy with me that is more than just a question and an answer here and there to solve another problem. In other words, do you see what I'm saying? Paul is getting experience at ongoing intimacy that is a direct communion. And so, he's getting more and more experience at not being an orphan. And the more experience he has at not being an orphan, the less he'll want to have more of an experience of being an orphan. And there is a point at which he will yield on an on-going basis to our union.

Now, there is a purpose for this union. There is a purpose for the union I am encouraging each of you to have with your Guides on an on-going basis. And although in the beginning, you need encouragement and somewhat of a push to discipline yourself to return to the joined state when you find yourself getting distracted, ultimately the reason for being joined is so that you might permanently experience co-operation with another.

Have you ever had an experience of working with someone who is so attuned to you, or it seems as though the two of you are so attuned to each other that you can almost do things without talking—each of you being one jump ahead of the other so that if something is needed the other has it already there for you and vice versa and there is cooperation that's not by, let's say, mutual agreement, that's not by negotiation, not by discussing and coming to conclusions and agreements about how to be . . . you just be together spontaneously?

You see, I'm trying to clarify something, especially since we're less than a week away from the day that you would celebrate my birth and could use that day for an even greater purpose to make some commitment to joining and practicing the holy instant and allowing empathy to occur which is the experience of Knowing which is a gift from God—His Perspective given to you so that you might see everything as it is, enlightened, in other words.

But, in addition to having a new experience of everything in its actuality, in its beauty, in its primitive perfection, there is this thing called, "being joined." And it's not like being at a dance and everybody is standing around in a circle against the wall and everybody holds hands—it's not that kind of a sort of joining by touch. It's a joining by involvement. It is a joining in a dance, if you will, of cooperation that will begin and you will decide not to bring it to a stop ever again.

Now, I will tell you something you can't understand. But I will tell you this: When you join in this way with commitment, what is it that you think the two of you might do together? What mutual activity would you engage in?

Well I will tell you, that you will engage in observing Creation occurring. You will participate together . . . how can I put it . . . energetically? . . . See, there are inadequate words for it. But you might say, it would be like the two of you being near the crest of a mountain, the crest of a hill, and you see lights off in the distance over the hill and the two of you run to the top of the hill so that you can see what glorious thing is happening that is causing this light.

So, it's like the two of you joined together in running to the top of the hill, the two of you joined in mutual anticipation, the two of you joined in consciously revering and loving and being interested in the same things . . . do this thing, of observing Creation.

Now, I'm aware that's totally inadequate to give you reason to make commitment today or next Friday to the holy instant. But, well, there was something Paul heard during the last week: A sentence that said, "If it's of any value, let it change you." And he thought immediately of the Course . . . if it's of any value, let it change you. You see, it isn't something here to read and to grasp intellectually and to, you know, savor the little morsels of truth that you glean from it here and there.

It's here to change you. It's here to inspire you to do something you haven't been doing. Because what you have been doing amounts to being asleep and missing out on the fulfillment and the wholeness of Creation as it actually is confronting you but which you are misinterpreting as a physical world and universe, and blinding yourself by those definitions to its glory.

Now, you deserve not to be alone. You need not to be alone. You need to be free of the experience of loneliness. You also need to be free of living life as though you're just staying one jump ahead of failure, one jump ahead of tragedy, one jump ahead of lack.

I'm telling you that the practice of the holy instant which provides the environment in which empathy can occur which amounts to Revelation—the Revelation of Knowing the truth, the clarity that God gives you, involves you becoming joined with others.

In running to the crest of the hill to experience the glory of Creation that's occurring there . . . there . . . there . . . there, everywhere, it's an involvement, it's not a loneliness anymore, and you don't "develop" this intimacy with another who you can enjoy Creation with together. It isn't for the purpose of gleaning truths from that other one so that you can—in this other place where the Kingdom of Heaven looks like we're all a physical world and universe—manage to manipulate things better than you've ever done before so that you can be more secure and safer than ever before and therefore experience a sense of relief and be able to take a deep breath for a little bit at least, before you have to start protecting yourself again. You see?

If it's valuable, if it means something, let it change you, let it move you into an involvement that will become a forever involvement of awe, shared, not just with your guide but with all of the Brotherhood. But you know what? You've got to take it one step at a time. And so you have to start out practicing the holy instant with the Brother who's next to you. You have to practice it by using your Brother as the reason for turning to the Holy Spirit. In other words, turning within to that which is nothing more than your right Mind or, I'm going to say, turning within to me or turning within to the Father and abandoning your privacy and your love of authority—independent authority.

You won't be able to join with the whole Brotherhood. But the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind, has one goal only. And that is to reunite the little part or your mind, your infinite mind that you are identifying as you, with the totality of your Mind that constitutes You. Because that experience of your Mind is the experience of the Presence of God being all there is of You. And there's that intimacy again. And you want to hang out there in that intimacy so that God doesn't have to say: "Hello . . . h-e-l-l-o . . . anybody home?" You see?

You want to hang out there with God because that's where the true experience of Creation is available to you. And you want to hang out with God with your Brothers and Sisters with whom you can share as though you are all mutually running to the crest of the hill to see the glory of God that's occurring—an infinite joined experience where you all feel each other having the same motives and the same desires and the same capacity to embrace Creation infinitely.

Now that is not understandable to you. But I know that it's understandable to you that there can be One of the Brotherhood that you could have an intimate experience with and it would be easier to have an intimate experience with One than an infinite number. And so that's why you have a Guide. That's why you have a Guide who's been assigned to you for the sole purpose of supporting you and nudging and pushing and gently coercing you without overriding your will, so that you may, through the use of your will, abandon your insistence upon being private and independent authority and joining once again so that you may return to your sanity and your joy and your abundance and your fulfillment, and on and on and on.

So, you know, don't wait until Christmas Day to try to talk to me. Put forth the effort now even while you're hearing me speak through Paul's mouth, because I can answer you while I'm speaking through his mouth—it's easy.

Now, I'm trying to convey to you that you exist in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. You exist in the middle of the awesome, even though you look at it and say it's just a material world and universe. Nevertheless, you stand in the middle of that which is awesome and its awesomeness awaits your willingness to see it and let it register with you.

There's incredible reason for hope. There is incredible reason for reaching for the unknown, for reaching for unreasonable good and letting it happen and letting it change you, letting it cause you to be with everything in a new way.

And I've talked about joining with your Guide or the Holy Spirit or God. You know what? You can join with a flower. You can join with a lampshade. If something is going on that you're experiencing, it has Meaning—it has divine Meaning. And it would love to join with you in the true experience of what it is and the true experience of the relationship that you have—the relationship you have with the lampshade, because you certainly have a relationship with the lampshade. You see?

Now this may sound a little silly, but you know what? The lampshade would love to run to the top of the hill with you to see the glory of God that's going on over the crest of the hill. There isn't anything in all of Creation, there isn't anything in your experience that doesn't wish to join in the conscious appreciation of its Source—God.

I'm saying that there's a living true relationship that exists between you and everything, a relationship of involvement like running to see the glory, anticipating seeing the glory—nothing passive, nothing where you just sort of pass information between each other for another reason, not because you really like each other but because you're convenient and might be able to help. It's more than that. It is a marvelous involvement of joined purpose that none of you figured out or calculated or negotiated—which would, of course, mean that you would have to be willing to renegotiate and refigure because, of course, you don't want things to get dull, so you have to keep things unsettled and renewed.

The purpose of your Being is in you already. And it moves spontaneously. It moves in all of you spontaneously and therefore, moves in harmony. This movement in all of you is in perfect harmony with everyone of you—all of the Brotherhood. And it's experienceable as a togetherness.

I've used the word "family" before to try to convey to you this non-calculated experience—this experience that has nothing to do with figuring things out or intellectual processes—because it's an experience of intimacy, of infinite incredibly joyous involvement.

So, let's go into the book.

TRUE EMPATHY¹

True empathy is of Him Who knows what it is.

Which at this point, as far as you're concerned, is the Holy Spirit—it's not You yet.

True empathy is of Him Who knows what it is. You will learn His interpretation of it if you let Him use your capacity for strength, and not for weakness.

Okay, so here's a case where the holy instant is called for . . . why? So that you can shut up and listen for Him who knows what true empathy is, to teach it to you because you don't know what it is yet. An involvement, but not just a teacher/student involvement, where the student goes from home to school and the teacher teaches him things and the student goes back home to a different environment and has no association with the teacher until the next day. No. This involvement is you learning how not to be alone by virtue of asking and listening for an answer and getting an answer. The getting of the answer is not the point. The point is the time you spend together and in that act, learning what it means not to be alone, so it's easier for you to choose to abandon the thrill you thought you were getting from being alone. The learning is in the involvement while you're being taught. The learning is in the not being alone as opposed to being in the orphanage and suffering.

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . will not desert you, but be sure that you desert not him.

Well, the simple fact is, you will desert him. You're not used to giving your attention there and staying with it. You're used to worrying, you're used to being afraid, you're used to being on alert to protect yourself against whatever is biting at your heels. You see? And so you will desert him and you'll have to remember, "Oh, I lost the connection. Oh, I lost the joining. I'm alone and I don't need to be. I'm going to bring my attention back to that which can teach me what empathy really is, as well as what all the rest of truth is."

Humility is strength in this sense only; to recognize and accept the fact that you do not know is to recognize and accept the fact that He does know.

Well, it's simple. You know what? You won't be willing to adopt this crazy idea that you "don't know" if there isn't anybody that knows at all, because that will really put you in a black hole. But when you learn that the Holy Spirit does know, then you can dare to accept the premise that you don't know, because that will not cause you to be abandoned to oblivion. It will allow you to listen for the truth to be revealed because you know someone is there to reveal it to you. And it will save you rather than cause you to be lost.

You are not sure that He will do His part because you have never yet done yours completely.

It's hard to have faith that someone will do something that you can't bring yourself to do yet. If you can't bring yourself to do it, it's hard to believe that anyone else can or will.

You will not know how to respond to what you do not understand. Be tempted not in this, . .

. . . now this, you have to be careful here to read this in its meaning.

You will not know how to respond to what you do not understand.

What that means is, first of all, what you do not understand is what you cannot understand. You cannot understand that this is a material world and universe. You cannot understand that you're an orphan. You cannot understand that your brothers and sisters are orphans, and you cannot understand that they are undependable because they have no dependable, underlying, grounded Source of their Being.

What is not understandable is that there is everything to fear. That isn't something you can understand . . . why? Because all of those things are not the truth, they are beliefs that you are entertaining and maintaining and reasserting because you haven't known who your Are.

But I'm teaching you who you Are. And the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—is teaching you what you Are. So you're getting confirmation to what I'm saying from within, no matter how reluctantly you're willing to embrace it.

So, . . .

You will not know how to respond to what you do not understand.

You never have known how. And that is part of what has caused you to constantly feel insecure. You have tried to understand the un-understandable. You have tried to understand illusion.

Be tempted not in this, and yield not to the ego's triumphant use of empathy for its glory.

You see, you're constantly tempted to come to conclusions about what everything means based on the idea that you're just a physical organism in the chain of evolution—a fluke of nature.

So you're constantly tempted to come to your own conclusions using your best reasoning without ever shutting up long enough to inquire of That which can answer you with the truth, so that you might learn what the truth is and in the process of doing that, slowly shift from, or maybe faster, shifting from your confidence in your own capacity to do what will actually keep you ignorant longer.

Be tempted not in this, and yield not to the ego's triumphant use of empathy for its glory.

You see? And we started out by talking of the ways the ego uses empathy for control and self-protection and so on.

The triumph of weakness is not what you would offer to a brother.

You know . . . what's the triumph of weakness? It's when you have asserted yourself based on your own best judgments as an orphan that you think you are and managing somehow to bring about a good affect that other people recognize as beneficial to them—something you've done without ever being joined, without ever having made connection with that in you which knows the truth. You see? That's the ego's triumphant use of empathy for its glory.

Be tempted not in this, and yield not to the ego's triumphant use of empathy for its glory. The triumph of weakness is not what you would offer to a brother. And yet you know no triumph but this. This is not knowledge, and the form of empathy that would bring this about is so distorted that it would imprison what it would release.

You see? The form of empathy that's used for self-protection keeps you clearly in your mind as a vulnerable solitary thing in the middle of a bunch of other solitary things that are undependable. And if so, . . .

. . . it would imprison what it would release.

You use the empathy to get release, but it just reconfirms the call for release.

The unredeemed cannot redeem, . . .

. . . that's like saying the uneducated cannot make clear, the confused cannot express clarity.

The unredeemed cannot redeem, yet they have a Redeemer. Attempt to teach Him not. You are the learner; He the Teacher. Do not confuse your role with His, for this will never bring peace to anyone.

So let's be very clear here. We're talking about your letting yourself into a profound experience of intimacy, in which you join in mutual intent, in mutual action, you might say, where neither one of you are attempting to behave independently, but especially you are not attempting to behave independently because you need the influx of what your Brother Knows that he can reveal to you that you don't know yet.

And so part of the dance that you're doing here, part of the intimacy here, involves your being willing to completely release authority. And this isn't easy for you to do. But, here's one of those valuable things that because it's valuable, let it change you.

Ultimately, you will not express authority. You will not be an "I" among "I's," you will have shifted to a state of "us" and "we," where we join together in this spontaneous appreciation of Creation. Because authority will not remain once you let yourself be changed and you experience yourself as the holy Son of God. It is reasonable and valuable for you to be willing to abandon it now in the first stages of your involvement with your Teacher—One who is your Teacher only temporarily until you decide not to practice loss of memory, ignorance.

The unredeemed cannot redeem, yet they have a Redeemer.

You have a Redeemer.

Attempt to teach Him not. You are the learner; He the Teacher. Do not confuse your role with His, for this will never bring peace to anyone. Offer your empathy to Him,

. . . wish to feel with Him. Feeling with Him is like the mutual running to the crest of the hill to see the glory of God, to understand the truth more clearly, but not by yourself and not because a separate entity has relayed the information to you, but because the two of you together are allowing it to be a mutual conscious experience of unity that does not destroy your individuality.

Offer your empathy to Him, for it is his perception and his strength that you would share. And let Him offer you His strength and His perception, to be shared through you.

The meaning of love is lost in any relationship which looks to weakness, and hopes to find love there.

Any relationship that looks to weakness, and hopes to find love there is one that occurs in a context of privacy, independence, aloneness, loneliness, the orphan mentality, and truth is not to be found there, and your being changed is not to be found there, and your Awakening is not to be found there.

But you, celebrating next Friday of my Birthday by looking to the past and remembering this marvelous thing that happened then, and removing yourself from the present and not being available to me next Friday—that's a matter of looking to weakness.

Weakness is the state of being when joining is absent. It's simple.

I want you to understand that when I'm talking to you about joining with the Holy Spirit or with your Brother or with the Father, I'm talking about an act that amounts to an experience of overwhelming proportions, of incredible proportions, involving incredible involvement of a mutual infinite Movement in which everyone involved in that Movement feels everyone else's involvement with him or her in looking to see the glory of God that is occurring and attracting everyone's attention, and by giving that attention to it, participating in it by being the acknowledgement of it, because no one is running back to the orphanage with all the news about the Movement of Creation, or running back to the orphanage to function better there because of everything that was gleaned from the direct experience of Creation. You see?

It amounts to ending up being finished with doing anything in the orphanage or believing anything about being orphans, or of fear and guilt—the two partners—and all the bullshit we've been reading about that has to do with the ego state of being that is an illusion. It's total fraud.

So Chapter Sixteen is a wonderful chapter: The Forgiveness of Illusions. And now you know that forgiveness of illusions is you abandoning them in favor of an incredible involvement of being with all of your Brothers, but One which you will start to allow yourself to have with just one: Me or the Holy Spirit or the Father or maybe all three of us. But it will start out simple.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time. More than that, I look forward to being with you frequently, more often, because you are bringing your attention to me with, for lack of better words, an inquiry because an inquiry starts an involvement, it is a movement of involvement. It's a movement of desire. And every desire includes within itself everything necessary for its fulfillment.

I gladly look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 2nd 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I won't ask how everyone did on Christmas Day in terms of joining with me, but I do want to address the practical fact that you all forget to maintain the contact. And it is totally understandable that you do. It is not something that you should continue to do but it is understandable. You're in the habit of thinking—you say, "thinking on my feet"—thinking in the moment, being ready with an answer when it's needed [snaps fingers] spontaneously with the best intelligence you can bring to bear upon the situation.

You are not used to hesitating. You want to be "Johnny-on-the-spot!" And yet, the call is for hesitation if you want to get out of the habit of loneliness, if you want to get out of the habit of being alone—isolated and uncomfortable. Uncomfortable because that is not natural to you and your innate sanity still holds sway and lets you know that you're not supposed to be comfortable doing things all by yourself.

Now, something that might help you get the feel for taking advantage of the holy instant is the children's game called, "Mother, may I?" It's a game in which there's one person who gives directions to however many other kids are playing together, and he will say, "Mary, stand on one foot!" and she's supposed to say, "Mother, may I?" before she does it and get an answer, "yes or no."

The skill that's brought into play is brought into play by the person giving the directions because it's his or her task to give the direction in such a way that the person will respond without saying, "Mother, May I?"

Now, as you go through your day, when you're having an encounter with a Brother or Sister, when you have to make a decision, when it comes time to vacuum the floor, instead of saying, "Mother may I?" You need to say, "Holy Spirit, are you with me? Holy Spirit, may I begin now? Raj, is it time to do this?" And start out with yes or no questions, questions that can be answered, yes or no. Because you will find yourself able to hear the yes or no answers more easily than a complex answer.

Now, you're going to find that if you're taking this seriously, that your ego is going to object. "Come-on, you mean I've gotta ask every single time? You've gotta ask every single time, that's not right—just do it!—just do it! You know how to vacuum the floor, you know how to load the dishwasher, you know how to wash the car . . ."

Well, you may know how to do those things, but when you're doing them by yourself, you're impaired. You are not experiencing the fullness of your Being that it's your Birthright to be experiencing. And as we've discussed, it causes you to see this world in which you're doing these things all by yourself, as something other than the Kingdom of Heaven. Why? Because it's the only way you can see it from a private mind—from a mind that is functioning, it thinks, entirely on its own.

The reason for remembering to say, "Mother, may I?," the reason for remembering to say, "Should I do this now, shall we do this together?" is to consistently break the conscious awareness of aloneness—of independence. The purpose of it is not to insult you but to cause you to be in a state of mind which is an invitation to be doing something together with Someone else.

Now, we ended up last week referring to the Holy Spirit as your Redeemer: That which is nothing more than your right Mind is the Redeemer of the private little you that you think you are, because when you let your right Mind back in, when you let it register with you, your sanity returns to you.

We read:

Attempt to teach Him not. YOU are the learner.

See, you've got to realize your position—your function—your role:

YOU are the learner; He the teacher.

See, right there, that's insulting. You grew up, you finished school, you went out into the world and you've succeeded to one degree or another. And now, you're to be the learner? And the Holy Spirit is to be the Teacher? And because it's the Holy Spirit, it's some ultimate teacher that you might think twice about disregarding? How insulating—that's a backward step. That's losing your independence that you worked so hard to achieve.

YOU are the learner; . .

. . . nevertheless . . .

He the Teacher. Do not confuse your role with His, for this will never bring peace to anyone. Offer your empathy to Him, . .

Let the Holy Spirit's perspective mean more to you than your present perspective. And I want to embellish this a little bit. When you are interested in experiencing the Holy Spirit's perspective, that perspective is not an intellectual perspective. It's not a lot of words pulled together in an explanation that makes sense. The Holy Spirit's perspective does know the truth, does involve the truth but it also involves soul. It also involves Principle, it also involves Love: Meanings of great depth and great significance which, when you let them in, when you let the Holy Spirit's perspective in, which is ultimately your true perspective, it's not just a mental intellectual experience, it's a heart experience, it's a soul experience. It is a God experience—impactful, if you will: Significantly meaningful.

So this is the perspective that you are leaning into—that you're inviting—that you're willing to defer to. And I'll tell you something: If your perspective doesn't involve any of those things I just mentioned, then it would be extremely interesting and meaningful to try something new, like practicing the holy instant.

Offer your empathy to Him, . .

. . . offer your interest to know the truth of Him, to feel the Love of Him, to have no other mind, in so many words, than the Mind that is creating the Universe.

Offer your empathy to Him, for it is HIS perception and HIS strength that you would share.

Now I know that's not your habit. That's not been your life-long habit or even perhaps, an hour's worth of habit, consistently. But that's what this is all about. That's what abandoning the orphanage is all about. It's about rejoining with your Source as a full conscious experience.

Offer your empathy to Him, for it is HIS perception and HIS strength that you would share.

You've got to be willing to abandon wanting to share your perspective because you want to have and you deserve to have a fuller experience of Reality than you're having.

And let Him offer you His strength and His perception, . .

. . . what? . .

. . . to be shared through you.

You see, you're not only going to listen, you're not only going to desire to know the truth of the Holy Spirit, you're going to desire to know it so that you may share It, instead of your pet theories, and instead of your best reasonings.

Like we said last week, if any of this is of value, let it change you.

Now, I want to refer once again to something I shared a few weeks ago from the Course:

There is another advantage, – and a very important one, – in referring decisions to the Holy Spirit with increasing frequency.

That means availing yourself of the holy instant with increasing frequency.

Hopefully, every time an opportunity for action comes up and you say, "Mother, may I? Father, may I? Holy Spirit, will you be with me while I do this? Will you let me know if I shouldn't be doing it, or if I should be doing it differently? I want to know what is appropriate and I don't want to lean unto my own understanding. I want to know of You. Why? Not because I'm unimportant, but because I don't want my perceptions to be distorted by an insistence on my part to behave as though I am all alone and so that I turn a deaf ear to the Source of my enlightenment and of my good. I want to experience my wholeness again instead of my tiny privateness. That's why."

Perhaps you have not thought of this aspect but its centrality is obvious.

. . . and here it is:

To follow the Holy Spirit's guidance is to let yourself be absolved of guilt.

Why? Why would that be? Because the only thing that introduces guilt into the mix is your insistence upon trying to do things independently which constitutes a denial of your Source—a blocking out of That which is your Cause—That which is your reason for Being, not your reason in your mind, but the divine Reason for your existence is that God is Being you, right now . . . right now . . . right now . . . and nothing else ever is.

When you're willing to make that joining, you've abandoned the position of independence. And in the abandonment of independence, guilt and fear disappear. It's that simple . . . it's that simple . . . it's that simple!

This book, A Course In Miracles, is a big book, thousands of words, many complex ideas expressed. But every single one of those complex ideas and explanations leads to one thing: You abandoning your independence. Your participating in the holy instant.

Again . . .

To follow the Holy Spirit's guidance, . .

. . . to follow the Guidance of That which is nothing more than your right Mind, . .

. . . is to let yourself be absolved of guilt. It is the essence of the Atonement. It is the core of the curriculum.

In other words, it's the bottom line of what all of this learning is about that we're engaging in.

The imagined usurping of functions not your own . . .

. . . in other words, you're taking on functions that aren't yours, your imagining that you have taken on functions that aren't yours . . .

. . . is the basis of fear. The whole world you see . . .

[repeats] The whole world you see reflects the illusion you have done so, . .

. . . it reflects the fact that you think you've done that, . .

. . . making fear inevitable. To return the function to the One to Whom it belongs, . .

. . . which is the Holy Spirit, . .

. . . is thus the escape from fear. And it is this that lets the memory of love return to you.

Oh-h, that's no small thing, is it! . . . the return of the memory of Love. Something that you have not been able to feel fully ever since fear took form and held its ground, you might say, as you persisted in trying to behave as though you were an independent entity in your own right.

Do not, then, think that following the Holy Spirit's guidance is necessary merely because of your own inadequacies.

You know, think not that the Holy Spirit's Guidance is helpful for "poor little independent you" to get a better toe-hold in his independent world and manage things better and become more successful.

Do not then think that following the Holy Spirit's guidance is necessary merely because of your own inadequacies.

It is the way out of hell for you. It's the way out of the experience of inadequacies. It's the way out of having to find ways to compensate for inadequacies, without ever becoming actually adequate.

The practice of "Mother, May I?" all through your day, in effect, your turning to the Father, or your turning to the Holy Spirit, or your turning to me, or your turning to your Guide, that practice persistently engaged in, causes you to experience being with Something other than yourself. It constitutes a willingness to not be the grand one in his own right and the one who consequently finds his life full of suffering because he's trying to be something it's impossible for him to be. You see?

If this is valuable, let it change you. Let it bring you out of hell. Let it bring you into a daily experience where you feel the fact that you haven't been alone for a moment, and where you feel the support of that One who's joined with you and so that you experience a transformation of your mind which causes you to see the Kingdom of Heaven more like the Kingdom of Heaven, than the material world and universe that you had been defining it as.

Now, going into the Book . . .

The meaning of love is lost in any relationship which looks to weakness and hopes to find love there.

And remember, last week we determined that weakness is the description of the place from which you do everything when you are claiming to be an orphan and proud of it! Or, even that you're claiming to be an orphan and you're miserable, but you have no other choice. That's the place of weakness because you're like a toaster that isn't plugged into the wall, or a lamp that isn't plugged into the wall. There's no means of turning you on. There's no means of your function being fulfilled. The lamp just can't shine without joining with Something else. And neither can you.

So . . .

The meaning of love is lost in any relationship which looks to weakness . . .

. . . in other words, any relationship which is based upon your interpreting everything about it from a premise that says you're independent and on your own and ultimately, that you're just a result of a physical process called, "evolution" and there's nothing divine about you.

The meaning of love is lost in any relationship which looks to weakness, and hopes to find love there. The power of love, which IS its meaning, lies in the strength of God, which hovers over it and blesses it silently by enveloping it in healing wings.

You see, that's what's missing when you do anything on your own. When you try to be "loving" all by yourself as the ultimate development of evolution, an organism called, "man" the most complex of all organisms—the height, crowning height of evolution. But everything you do from there is minus the strength of God because the strength of God doesn't hover over it and doesn't bless it silently by enveloping it in healing wings.

Now, I'm going to clarify a little bit: The strength of God hovers over you always and blesses you silently all the time. But I promise you, that when God is no part of your awareness, and when your behavior arises out of an absolute sense of independence, the reality of God's Love and its blessing is invisible to you and the point is, it's not supposed to be. You're supposed to be feeling it every moment.

You want to experience the fact that the Meaning of love is its power, and its power . . .

. . . lies in the strength of the Presence of God which hovers over it and blesses it silently by enveloping it in healing wings. LET this be, and do not try to substitute YOUR "miracle" for this.

See, it's "Mother, may I? . . . Father, may I? . . . Father, will you share with me what I need to do? . . . Holy Spirit, will you reveal to me what is appropriate here in the context of God Being all there is? I don't want even the best thing I can imagine, I don't want my miracle, I don't want what I think what the miracle ought to be, because I don't have the whole picture. I don't know enough to know what would constitute a miracle. Please fill me in. Please fill me up.

Continuing . . .

We once said that if a brother asks a foolish thing of you to do it. But be certain that this does not mean to do a foolish thing that would hurt either him or you, for what would hurt one will hurt the other. Foolish requests are foolish for the simple reason that they conflict, because they contain an element of specialness.

Now, another part of the problem here is that if you respond to the request to do something foolish as an orphan, all by your competent little self, well, the strength of God is missing and you're going to miss the mark. Why? Because you didn't stop first and say, "Father, may I?" You didn't stop first and say, "What is the appropriate response to this foolish request?" You see?

Continuing . . .

Only the Holy Spirit recognizes foolish needs as well as real ones. And He will teach you how to meet both without losing either.

In either case, you won't lose the opportunity to be the Presence of That which fulfills purpose and blesses everyone.

YOU will attempt to do this only in secrecy.

What does that mean? It means that your gonna say, "Father, I'd rather do it my way" and then you're gonna come off and you're gonna pretend that you have become invisible to God and in this little place that you've created for yourself of independence, you're gonna do something in secret and what you're gonna do in secret is help all these other little orphans who are, in their little secret places, being secretive. You see?

It's like a fetus without an umbilical cord. Right now, you're all like fetuses without umbilical cords. How long are you going to last? You can't continue to deny your nourishment, you can't continue to deny your Birthright and stand in a place where you're blocking it's receipt even though it's being given to you . . . given to you . . . given to you . . . eternally.

YOU will attempt . . .

. . . as an orphan . . .

... to do this only in secrecy ...

... to do everything in secrecy.

And you will think that, by meeting the needs of one you do not jeopardize another because you keep them separate, and secret from each other.

So you have this little special relationship with this other little secretive guy over here . . . and you think that because you're doing it secretly with him, and secretly away from the Father and secretly with Him but secretly away from all your other Brothers, and the Father, that it's of no consequence to anyone and it may well, you hope, cause this one you're helping secretly with your own private skill, to become a friend—somebody who likes you—somebody who will honor you, someone who will tell you you're real and that you are meaningful. You see?

That is not the way, for it leads not to light and truth.

You see, what you do in your imagination secretly with a Brother, is not done in private and all of the Brotherhood feels it. And so, because you don't realize the unity of the whole of the Brotherhood, you lose in the process even if your secretive Brother likes you for what you're doing. And you lose the experience of your Brotherhood with everyone else and everyone else loses their experience of their Brotherhood with you and all of the, I'm going to say, elegant manifestations of love that you're able to bring forth.

So everyone loses. Absolutely everyone loses.

But, (it doesn't say "but" here, I'm saying, "but") Continuing . . .

No needs will long be left unmet if you leave them all to Him Whose FUNCTION is to meet them.

"Mother, may I? May I do it now? Is now the time to do it? Is this the thing to do? What is the thing to do? I want not to do anything until I've heard from you. I know that I will have to continue doing the best I can until I hear you, but my new ongoing desire is for You to tell me before I feel I must act, what is appropriate, so that everyone is blessed because I'm not doing it privately. I'm not doing it secretly. I'm not doing it in the way that causes me to be totally unconscious of the Kingdom of Heaven when I'm right in the middle of it."

No needs will long be left unmet if you leave them all to Him Whose FUNCTION is to meet them.

This is where the clarity is. That is His function and not yours.

I know that might seem, as I've said before, harsh. That is His function and not yours. "What do you mean, I don't have any function?" Yes you do, but doing it by yourself is not your function. And you won't find out what is your function until you stop and you defer to Him Who knows, which you can dare to do with integrity because I'm telling you that He Who knows what to do is nothing more than your right Mind. And therefore, to yield to it is to yield to the integration of you in your totality.

But in order to have that experience, you've got to be willing to say, "I, as I know myself at this moment, don't know for sure. And I want to know. And so I'm not going to look to myself for the answer. I'm not going to look to the poor little orphan, who's done a pretty good job in this life. I'm not going to look to that for the answer. You see? "Father, help break the isolation, establish the union."

. . . leave them all to Him Whose FUNCTION is to meet them. That is His function, and not yours. He will not meet them secretly, . .

. . . you see the big difference? A little private entity does things secretly. That which is the Son or Daughter of God does things wholly, all inclusively, and experiences the unity of the whole.

. . . for He would share everything you give through Him. And that is WHY He gives it. What you give through Him is for the whole Sonship, NOT for part of it.

When you say, "Holy Spirit, what do I need to know here?" And what you need to know is revealed to you, and you know how to behave because you know what the truth is, and your behavior reflects the love that is the Meaning of it and the Principle that is the nature of it, and the Truth that is the essence of it. Absolutely everything and everyone is blessed. Because your action is an uninhibited expression of the Father's Will.

Wow . . . something to be hoped for and appreciated in every instant that it happens during your days. And the thing is, that you need to be willing to play this "Mother, may I?" game, spiritualized, we'll say. So that everything you do, you ask for help from the Father, or you ask for help from the Holy Spirit. You do the two-step, you hesitate, and you say, "Help!" And you don't immediately begin to try to figure things out for yourself. You say, "Help" and you listen because you actually expect an answer to come from someplace other than your imagination.

Leave Him His function, for He will fulfill it if you but ask Him to enter your relationships, and bless them FOR you.

You see? This involves a shift in you. You've got to let a willingness to not be number one in your life, occur and make room for that which actually is Number One. You could say, That of you which is utterly sane and whole and complete. You've got to make room for It. And you've got to make room for It to enter and bless your relationships for you.

Now remember, I talked before about the fact that you're in relationship with everything: You're in relationship with the wall, the floor, the flowers, the birds, the trees. You walk down the street and you enjoy them—you see them—you're in relationship with them. You're in infinite relationships right now.

The need is for you to bring the Holy Spirit into all of those relationships. You need to be willing to say and mean it, "I don't really know what my relationship with the wall is. I have no idea what a holy relationship with the wall might mean. I have no idea what the holiness of the wall feels like. I have no experience of what its divine Meaning is or what its function is. But I want to know."

You might as well all be babies at this moment. Because you are in a world that you know nothing of even though you think you know pretty much a lot about it. But there is so much of what it divinely is and what it divinely means and what aspects of you, all of these things are, that's all there for you to be experiencing—for you to discover.

But you're not going to discover it until you say, "Father, what does this mean? Father, what do I need to do now?" To do the two-step, to practice the holy instant. To let every moment of your day be a moment in which you are actively feeling curious—actively feeling a curiosity to know what of God is confronting you, what the holiness of what you're seeing actually is.

Well, that's true prayer, right there. And to invite the experience and be undefended against it significantly enough for it to register with you, will constitute what the words, "true empathy" mean.

True empathy is you in any given moment, abandoning your confidence that you know what something is, so willingly and so humbly, that there's simply is nothing present in you to resist or to block the influx of the conscious awareness of truth and the conscious experience of Love and all of the divine qualities of Being that will rush in and fill you and transform you and lift you out of hell.

Again: If it's valuable, let it change you. Yes, I'm getting a little pushy. I am pushing for an experience. I'm pushing you out of your head. I'm pushing you out of your intellect. I'm pushing you out of your privacy and your valuing of it. And I'm saying, "let's get on with this, this week, tonight, tomorrow!"

Play "Mother, may I?" and if it's insulting, do it anyway. Don't listen to your ego complain. It will complain, you don't have to honor it. Let's get on with Waking Up. Let's get on with Redemption. Let's get on with Atonement.

And let's make room for true enjoyment of Being, of Life. Don't be so passive. Don't be so laid back in your "wonderful awareness of spiritual things." If they're valuable, let them change you. And I would like for you to write that down and put it on your refrigerator this week. To remind you that none of this is to keep the status quo. If it's valuable, let it change you.

Go through your day with an attitude of expectation of change and a willingness to embrace it. That's one way to stop resisting it. And I promise you the only reason you're not experiencing the ultimate is because you're resisting it.

I love you. I love you all. And because all of this is meaningful, is significant, I desire for you to let it change you. And I support the changes that will occur.

Bless you.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 16th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

A new section:

THE MAGNITUDE OF HOLINESS ¹

I will tell you, we may not get past the first or second sentence tonight.

You still think holiness is difficult because you cannot see how it can be extended to include everyone. And you have learned that it must include everyone to be holy.

Well, you know, another thing that makes holiness difficult when it's supposed to include everyone, is that you believe that to engage in holiness is something you do alone. It's something between you and the Father or between you and the Holy Spirit or between you and Jesus or, at the least, between you and one other Brother or Sister at a time.

Let me ask you this: How many of you have had the experience of being in pursuit of your holiness and having life get in the way? How many of you have had the experience of taking some quiet time with God or some quiet time with the Holy Spirit, and the children come running in, boisterous, demanding: "We want this! We want that! Can we do this? Can we do that?" And because they are children and because they need your care, you shift your attention, and perhaps you feel a little perturbed at not being given the quiet time you need to contemplate the truth and to be present with the Father.

Now, let's say that one of your children is lying in bed with a low fever, not feeling well, not too happy. Your husband's home from work expecting dinner. You're in the kitchen working away getting it ready, and again, the other children are unusually rambunctious, noisy and bothersome, making it difficult for you to manage the cooking as well as prayerful contemplation of the healing of the one that's lying in bed not feeling well. And you feel like: "It's just too much! It's just too much!"

You see, the problem is, that it's not clear that holiness is to be extended to everyone and it must be extended to everyone in order for it to be holy. You see, the mistake has been made to think that the pursuit of spirituality is private and not all-inclusive, not embracing, that you need to pull in from everyone into a nice mental cave, if you will, and in the aloneness of that cave which is excluding everyone else for the moment, you pursue your spiritualization. That's the mistake that's been made. That's the mistake that's being uncovered so that it can be abandoned.

You know, learning about doing the two-step, learning about the holy instant—where indeed you become still and you do join with the Holy Spirit—the purpose of doing this is to allow Revelation. It is to allow insight. It is to allow the Father's perspective, the Holy Spirit's perspective to register with you so that you might share it with a Brother, so that in the sharing of it with the Brother it becomes yours as well.

As I've said before, that's as simple as it gets.

So, there's no way for this to be private. There's no way for you to be uninvolved. No way at all.

Now, you know, there's been an event in the world this last week . . . devastating for those who were involved. How many of you have let yourself be present with them? How many of you have let yourself be conscious of the needs? And how many of you have tried to find a way either prayerfully or tangibly, to help? Or, how many of you have read the news that say, "This country is no stranger to tragedy," as though tragedy is the norm for everyone there and that they have grown accustomed to it—almost as though it's their karma.

You know, if you've heard that and if you have assumed that they're having the experience they're having because of their frame of mind—their beliefs that their behavior has caused them to deserve it and that therefore, the correction of their problem is a correction of their mind and therefore, it's that truth that you need to be aware of to apply to them in your thought—if that has happened, you have missed the point.

In the process of utilizing the two-step and the holy instant, you will become a better, more meaningful Brother. You will become a greater point of the evidence of fulfillment in the Brotherhood. And it will be recognizable to your Brothers that they're loved.

Now, when I talked about the good Samaritan, he didn't pass by on the other side of the road, he didn't judge and leave the poor soul to "correct his thought." No. Nor did he say, "God will take care of you" with all faith, and then walk on. Nor did he say, "You need to do prayerful work for healing." No. What did he do? He cleaned his wounds. He bound his wounds. He picked him up and carried him. That's not very much of a head-trip, is it. It's a Brother being even more brotherly. Do you see what I'm saying?

In a way, I am putting down my foot tonight and I'm saying, as I told Paul along time ago, "Keep your feet on the ground and your head not too far away." You say, "Well, I really don't want to give too much thought to the devastation there. I've seen a few of the pictures . . . it's awful!" You know, out of sight, out of mind.

You know, I'm going to ask you a question. You appreciate knowing people who have a broad life experience because their broad life experience—and I mean humanly speaking—allows them to recognize need and know how to address it in practical terms. And they recognize it because they didn't ignore it somewhere along the way. And when you meet someone else who has very little life experience, you wouldn't want to be dependent upon them or needing to rely upon them in an emergency.

Now, in order to be aware of your Brother's need, you've got to be willing to be present with them. And here, it might seem as though I'm contradicting myself regarding the term, empathy.

You know, it won't hurt you a bit . . . it won't hurt you a bit when you hear of a Brother in need or a country in need or a city in need, to allow yourself to be present in your mind with those kinds of circumstances so that you might think about what it's like when there's no electricity, when the stores can't function because the cash register won't work, when all the perishable food perishes and where fresh water isn't available and none of the utilities work and none of the regularities of life occur anymore . . . suddenly they're gone. What happens to you or anyone who is used to a routine of some sort? It throws you out into the middle of the sea, so to speak.

Now, if I say, "Take some time to be present with a situation like this," am I saying, have empathy for them in an unhelpful non-Course In Miracles sense? No. I'm saying, "Use your mind to approximate to the best of your ability an experience that you may not have had, so that you might become aware through what experience you have had of what might be needed, so that you might turn to the Holy Spirit, so that you might stop and inquire of the Holy Spirit—engage in the holy instant—to know what is needed here. So that you might have enough presence of mind, relative to that situation, to be able to realize that miracles are needed and in spite of infrastructure having collapsed, in spite of no electricity, miracles can occur and miracles will occur.

And no matter how devastating it has been, those who are left will report back and share with their families miracles that happened, experiences that evidenced to them the Presence of God, the presence of good, right in the face of a situation that says, "Good evaporated, there is no reason to have faith." Just a simple awareness that the Holy Spirit might share with you that here, where the devastation is, is a hotbed of miracles. Just that realization may be all that's necessary for the clarity that heals and transforms to be further evidenced there where the problem is.

But you know what? I promise you, you won't have that kind of realization if you don't let yourself abide with the need.

Oh I know, you want to be able to sit down and have your quiet time in your comfortable chair with your Bible, or with your Course In Miracles or with your holy book and have quiet time to contemplate the realities of Being. But you know what? It isn't the words that you would use as mantras in your mind that need to get your attention, it's the everyday needs that need to be the mantra in your mind. And you need to be willing to be present with them without letting them discourage you or depress you, but rather be the clear call for a clear answer so that you might turn your attention to the clear answer and be infilled with it and share it—extend it!

I encourage every single one of you, and many of you think it might be totally inappropriate for me to do this in this context, and I promise you this is not Paul saying this, I encourage every one of you to find a way to contribute even just one dollar. Do you know why? So that your conscious presence of mind, your very Being becomes involved, joins—the key word—joins in the meeting of need where there is great need.

And you know what? I know there are those of you from all over the globe listening and you know it doesn't matter where you're listening from, it's part of your globe where the need is. It's part of your Brotherhood that has the need. And it is an opportunity for you to join consciously and conscientiously in undoing tragedy, in being the Presence of Love that makes a difference—not an intellectual difference, not an uninvolved difference—but one that washes and cleans the wounds and puts the balm on and wraps it, you know, get your hands dirty, be involved in the practical meeting of the need while the love that motivates you to be practical registers with the one in need and inspires that one in his Spirit and in his mind to remember, there is a God.

You still think holiness is difficult because you cannot see how it can be extended to include everyone. And you have learned that it must include everyone to be holy.

What will help break your ignorance about holiness will be involving yourself where need exists—in the practical meeting of need—while at the same time engaging in the holy instant where radical idealism can become practical realism through you. Do you see what I mean?

Keep your feet on the ground and your head not too far away.

Right here is the Kingdom of Heaven and right here is where the Kingdom of Heaven needs to be uncovered. And where there is need, is where the Kingdom of Heaven is covered up, but still there.

Yes, all of your Brothers and Sisters are spiritual ideas of God. They are thoughts of God. They are the Presence of an Idea in God's Mind. You are the Presence of an Idea in God's Mind. But don't be so lofty in your interpretation of that, that you think that human need is meaningless. The meeting of human need inspires the only thing it can inspire, an awareness of God.

Do you want to inspire the awareness of God? Then let your attention rest with the human need, so that the human need is what gives impetus to your turning to the Holy Spirit in the holy instant and begin to nurture the awareness that multiple demands coming from your world are not in opposition to your holiness or your spiritual growth, but are themselves the places where the Kingdom of Heaven awaits coming to view. They are hotbeds of miracles.

You see, you all tend to be looking in the wrong place for miracles. And you get mad at the circumstances where the hotbeds of miracles come to your attention, because you think that's not where the opportunity is, you think that's not where your attention is supposed to be, because it's, um . . . it's just, too, too, down-to-Earth.

Love . . . Love arises out of caring. Love arises out of caring and caring, when you know "the secret," causes you to turn to the Holy Spirit and inquire what the truth is and then you shut up and listen so that it might be revealed . . . register with you . . . inspire you and allow you to extend it to your Brother. And in your Brother's receipt of it you are blessed—both of you are healed.

You see, it just doesn't work any longer to say, "Well, if he had handled himself better he wouldn't be in this mess. If he had been thinking the right thoughts he wouldn't be having this experience. It's his business to take care of, not mine." There's no love in that, is there? Why? Because there's no joining in that . . . there's no connection . . . there's no caring enough to stand there where your Brother is experiencing a dilemma and perhaps have enough life experience to understand more than an intellectual theory, that he's just getting what he deserved—where there's enough life experience for you to recognize, while listening to the Holy Spirit, what the flaw in the thinking might be that can be illuminated, so that one can see it and can easily set it aside because the light bulb went on. You see?

Concern yourselves not with the extension of holiness, for the nature of miracles you do not understand. Nor do you do them. It is their extension, far beyond the limits you perceive, that demonstrates you did not do them. Why should you worry how the miracle extends to all the Sonship when you do not understand the miracle itself? One attribute is no more difficult to understand than is the whole. If miracles are at all, their attributes would HAVE to be miraculous, being part of them.

Might miracles not be the natural and inevitable result of caring enough about your Brother to cut through your own intellectual crap that gives you all the reasons you don't need to actually relate to your Brother so that you can, in your Realness, address the need so that the need is met. You see?

Love's gotta come out! And you know what? I've said it before in so many ways: Love is pretty meaningless where it's not needed. "Oh yes, I know, love is needed everywhere and Love is everywhere—Love is omnipresent. Yes, I know that." But there are places where it doesn't seem to be because to one degree or another all of you are not seeing the Presence of God everywhere. And so the Presence of Love needs to be shone like a Light, where it seems not to be. It needs to be brought to the wound or the distress, not to confirm it, but to address it so that it's healed.

Needs are the hotbeds of miracles. Needs are where miracles are surfacing if they are not denounced or denied or discounted, if they're looked at squarely. If they are looked at squarely, that does not constitute false empathy . . . Oh, unless you agree with what you see and if you commiserate with the one who is suffering—now that's empathy. But to be clearly aware of the need and to be clearly aware of the fact that the need is an illusion that your Brother needs to come out from under and be free of, that's not empathy. That's knowing the truth. You know: Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free.²

Oh, if a Brother is in need, sometimes everyone gets a little self-righteous. "You know, I don't like to hang around people who are always in need. Oh, you know . . . needy people . . . oh, they can be a real bore. Wow . . ." Or, they could be a hotbed of a miracle!

You will never Wake up . . . the holy instant will never move you suddenly into your Awakening if you think that needs are beneath you or something you dare not look at, or the consideration of which has nothing to do with A Course In Miracles or any other teaching.

Find your Love. That's what I'm saying. Don't hide it. Don't withhold it. And remember to value the evidence of need, because need is where the miracle is going to occur. The uncovering of wholeness is what the miracle will accomplish. Where wholeness is already in place, no miracle will happen.

Am I scolding anyone? No. I'm trying to make utterly clear where Love is needed, what your Love is for, and why you practice the two-step and the holy instant. There's no point in practicing it in a place where it doesn't count.

Now, you could say that everything I've shared is totally self-serving because of what I'm going to say next. It's not! I have been teaching . . . I have been disclosing to you more about the purpose and function of the holy instant and more about what its practice means, so that no one offhandedly overlooks the very place where the miracle awaits you.

Now, I must share once again that there is a need that the Foundation has in order for Paul and Susan and Chris and Judy to do the work that is done—to make these sharings possible. It cost money. It requires support. There is need. When the need is not met, the experience is not pleasant. And you could say the situation becomes a hotbed for miracles.

And you could say, "Well, . . ." like the Pharisee walking by on the other side of the road, "Well, if Paul had a better sense of unlimited wholeness, there would be no need." That's a convenient way to say, "I don't want to be involved. I don't need to be involved. Joining means nothing here." But I promise you it does.

A short while back a call for help was put forth and much Love was expressed, much joining occurred, much was shared. Thank you. It was appreciated. It was put to work. Comfort was experienced. Love moved in both directions. Please be willing to give some attention to Paul and Susan and Chris and Judy.

The Foundation does not support Chris and Judy, but Chris is reimbursed for the experience and excellence he brings to making these broadcasts available, and the audio and the web site and the servers that the web site is on.

Keep your feet on the ground and your perspective clear enough and loving enough to keep alive what you love that's happening here, so that it may continue to be extended without suffering for those who are engaging in extending it.

I love you. I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time. And I thank you for listening.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 30th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, every once in awhile it's necessary for me to refresh a point . . . that point being: That you will not understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. And to be even more pointed about it, you cannot understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven.

As I've said, you will feel your way in.

Now the reason it's necessary to remind everyone of this is because you are educated with the purpose in mind of understanding. Why? Because understanding gives you control. Understanding, you think, allows you to function in an orderly manner that has orderly results. Because you believe that the universe functions according to orderly laws, which when understood allow you to be a presence of power—a presence of power that makes you safe. And if you are generous, it's a presence of power that you can use to help others be safe.

As a result, you find a wonderful book like A Course In Miracles or many other books—spiritual books—and you devour them for the purpose of digesting what is being said so that you might learn and therefore understand.

What does learning mean? It means that something has come to your attention that was unknown to you before and you digest it, you embrace it and you commit it to memory. That's really what it means. It becomes a bit of information, which when added to other bits of information, constitute an intelligent configuration of ideas that allow you to function in the future dependably, intelligently, successfully and beneficially.

Now, learning is a process that ends up with a result. The result is called, "What you have learned." And "What you have learned" is a memory—is stored away for future use.

To the degree that you depend upon the learning, to the degree that you live in the present based upon what you learned in the past, you are not present in the moment you are in with innocent eyes. In other words, with eyes capable of seeing the newness of Creation, of seeing what is actually going on instead of the concept you have about what is going on.

This section that we're beginning to read tonight is difficult to understand because it's going to explain that you cannot understand your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. It is going to illuminate the fact that in order to understand, you have to abandon understanding.

Now, what makes it more difficult, we could say, what makes it worse is that it makes it very clear that you don't have a capacity to understand and you must be willing to abandon the idea that you do. In other words, you must arrive at a point where you understand that you are incompetent. Not a pleasant thing to do. Not a thing one would dig into. Definitely something one would avoid—distract themselves from.

Now, until you are willing to acknowledge that you in your own right, you as an orphan, as we have been speaking, have no capacity to understand Reality, you have no capacity to grasp your Father's Point of View—God's Point of View—because you have abandoned it, avoided it, denied it and disowned it, that's what causes you to be an orphan or to have an experience of orphanhood when you are actually the holy Son of God.

Until you arrive at the humiliated place of acknowledging that you don't know, you won't genuinely ask to Know the truth. Until you arrive at the point where you're willing to consider the possibility that you don't know and that you, as puny little you can't know, not until you reach that point will a miracle occur. Not until that point will the influx of the Father's Point of View, the truth, enter in your mind and dawn on you. Not until that point will your Sonship register with you. Not until that point will you know that you belong, that you fit in, but not as an independent separate entity.

Now, this section, which we actually started the last time we were together, is entitled:

THE MAGNITUDE OF HOLINESS ¹

And I'm going to start back at the beginning and I will do a lot of reading tonight with perhaps not as much talk, at least the part we've discussed.

You still think holiness is difficult because you cannot see how it can be extended to include everyone. And you have learned that it must include everyone to be holy. Concern yourselves not with the extension of holiness, for the nature of miracles you do not understand.

Now, that is not a criticism. That is a fact. You, as you presently experience yourself, do not understand. You as the orphan, the dissociated one, do not understand. But it's not a criticism. It's a point to accept as though it is a constructive building block toward an intelligent realization that will remind you of the truth of you because you've let the Father reveal your Mind to you which is His Mind, in a manner that registers with you and that you can "understand," grasp the meaning of without misinterpreting it.

Concern yourselves not with the extension of holiness, for the nature of miracles you do not understand. Nor do YOU do them. It is their extension, far beyond the limits you perceive, . .

. . . from your present narrow-minded perspective . . .

. . . that demonstrates you did NOT do them . . .

. . . miracles. But you have done them. But the fact that they were so much more extensive, so much more all-inclusive in incredible ways that you would never have thought to pull together as part of the "miracle." That's what demonstrates you did not do them.

Why should you worry how the miracle extends to all the Sonship when you do not understand the miracle itself? One attribute is no more difficult to understand than is the whole. If miracles ARE at all, their attributes would HAVE to be miraculous, being part of them.

Miraculous. What does that mean? You might say it means, surprising—magnificently surprising, not negatively surprising.

Now, there is a tendency to fragment and then to be concerned about the truth of just a little part of the whole. Let's say that you're confronted with a problem and you've been listening to me and you actually practice the two-step—you hesitate before you act on your best spontaneous memorized judgments and you reach beyond your memory banks and you ask, "Father, what's the truth here? Father, what needs to be known here?" And then, as you're listening quite openly, you get the feeling that the answer is going to be far more inclusive than you thought and therefore, probably not understandable.

"Where should I take my wife out to dinner for our anniversary?" And as you begin to listen . . . wide open . . . including the possibility of catching a plane and flying to Paris to go to a special restaurant—I mean, that open. And as you listen, you think, "Uh-oh, she's been having a little indigestion lately and so whoever's going to answer me, you might better take that into consideration when you tell me where the appropriate place is . . . Oh-h, and maybe, you know, it might mean we have to get some new clothes for her if we're going to a really nice place."

And you begin to fragment it. And the purpose is to pull the answer down to a smaller and smaller size, embracing less and less because it will be easier to understand the little part and by considering all the little factors—all the piss-ant little factors—that you can, rather than listening for the big answer, for the simple answer that the Father knows fits and would bless and would be enjoyed and would make for a wonderful loving anniversary. Instead of that, you try to take care of all the little parts to make sure that they are right. Why? So that your wife won't be disappointed with you when you say, "I would like to take you out to dinner at such-and-such a place on our anniversary."

There is a tendency to fragment, and then to be concerned about the truth of just a little part of the whole.

The description I gave could be applied to many things. It's a tendency that you have to not let in the whole. But guardedly let in the little parts that will build up to the whole.

You know what? It's an exercise of control. It's still an assertion of the tiny orphan sense of self. It isn't an abandonment to the Father. It isn't really saying, "Father, what is the truth here?" You say, "What is the truth about what she will like? What is the truth about what she won't like?" You see? Not like, you know, "What is the wonderful truth that we will enjoy beyond anything I could come up with as a result of being careful . . . careful . . . careful . . . careful?"

There is a tendency to fragment, and then to be concerned about the truth of just a little part of the whole. And this is but a way of avoiding, or LOOKING AWAY from the whole, to what you think you might be better able to understand. For this is but another way in which you would still try to keep understanding to YOURSELF.

You see? You want to be the “understand-er.” You want to be the one who has the understanding. You want to be the one who came up with the understanding. You see? You want to keep it to yourself. You want to keep it as a personal possession because then it becomes part of your personal authority in being successful by the intelligent use of your understanding—the intelligent use of your memory banks.

When you listen for the truth, the Father isn’t going to give you an intellectual process. The Father isn’t going to give you a string of words that express certain concepts that will be the answer to that question for all time—forever permanently the answer.

You see, the Father’s answer to everything is Love. I mean by that, that the Movement of Love that the Father Is, has meaning. And the meaning elicits words. It is as though the Movement of Love clothes meaning with words. But the words aren’t the point. It’s the Meaning that’s the point. It’s the Love that has been given form at that point.

But I want you to understand that the Movement of Love is like a breeze that moves through the hills and the valleys and graces the blades of grass or the leaves on the trees or the boughs—the branches of the trees—in different ways. It’s the same Movement of Love with different meanings, because the tweaking of a leaf is not the answer as opposed to the bending of the grass being the answer, even though in both cases it’s the breeze—it’s the Movement of Love. You see?

I may be approaching this obliquely, but I must get past your intellect subtly.

What I’m talking about here has to do with the magnitude of holiness and why you don’t understand the magnitude of holiness. It’s because you’re taking holiness as you might take love—the Movement of Love—and you’re taking the way that Movement drapes itself in words so as to take the words as though they are the point.

You take the word, and like the breeze moving through the hills and the valleys, it’s like the tweak of the leaf. You take the tweak of the leaf as though that movement, that sharpness is the answer. And as a result, you don’t see that it’s the same Meaning as the bending of the grasses—the tall grasses. Because the bending of the tall grasses isn’t the point either. You see?

The minute you focus in on the tweaking of a leaf or the graceful bending of a blade of grass, and you focus in on that, you lose the magnitude. The magnitude of what? Of the breeze . . . of the Movement that clothes its presence in all of these various, we’re going to say, effects. You see?

The minute you narrow it down to this or that, you've lost the magnitude. And therefore, you don't grasp the magnitude. And when it's presented to you, you don't see it. Magnitude is moving. And you say, "Oh-h, it's a tweaking of a leaf. . ." and somebody else says, "Oh-h, it's the bending of a blade of grass . ." and you've missed what's actually happening.

Why? Because you tried to understand instead of feel.

Bear with me because this needs to be understood, [chuckle] it's meaning needs to be grasped so that you will ultimately be willing to abandon the gathering of and the memorizing of "understanding." You see?

You say, "Oh-h, the Movement of Love is the tweaking of a leaf. And now I know, whenever I see the tweaking of a leaf, it will be Love." You see, "Tweaking, that's the Love." No. The Love is the Movement of Presence that moves kindly, that moves infinitely and is touching everything in every hill and valley in all of the vastness of space and all of the various environments, you might say, of different planets.

Mind you, right now what's happening? Is it Paul speaking? Is it Raj speaking through Paul? Or is it a Movement of Love that has magnitude? Am I speaking to those of you who have tuned in and are listening? Am I speaking to those of you who, at this moment, are listening to a recording that you downloaded, and is that it? No. While I'm speaking at this very moment, I am speaking wholly. I mean by that, that all of the Brotherhood is experiencing the Movement of Love together with the specific intent of everything I'm sharing. And it is a joyous thing for all of Them to be experiencing.

Mind you, at the same time that all of the Brotherhood, everywhere infinitely, is experiencing the Movement of Love that is specifically identified as me speaking right now, they are also fully aware of all the Movements of Love that everyone of the Brotherhood is engaged in at this moment, infinitely.

So, those of you on your planet who didn't tune in tonight who never heard of Raj, are blessed by and touched by the Movement—the breeze—of the Movement of Love that I am being. There's the magnitude. You do not have to understand how it happens. But you do need to know it happens. And you do need to know that letting yourself be the place that Love infills so that you can share it, is much greater than you think. It has magnitude. It is omnipresent.

You may not understand how it works, but I am expressing it intelligently enough for you to dare to experiment, for you to dare to embrace and embody and we'll say, practice the two-step, practice what I'm talking about, so that you might, along with those you are caring about, be blessed by a miracle—be blessed by healing. And as a result, discover that indeed, miracles happen without your understanding them from the orphan mind-set.

Now let's continue here:

[Raj did not read] A better and FAR more helpful way to think of miracles is this:]

You do not understand them, . .

. . . miracles . . .

. . . either in part OR whole. Yet you have DONE them. Therefore, your understanding cannot be necessary. Yet it is still impossible to accomplish what you do not understand. And so there must be something in you that DOES understand.

Not as complicated as it sounds. The something in you that does understand is the Holy Spirit. It's that which is nothing more than your right Mind, which you are currently ignoring in its entirety in favor of having this tiny private selfhood that is a small circumscribed part of the totality of you. You see?

. . . it is still impossible to accomplish what you do not understand. And so there must be something in you that DOES understand.

You see, the difference though is, that the orphan you—the orphan that you pretend to be—wants to be the creator of a miracle. And you want to be the creator of a miracle by having an understanding of how things work—a concept that you can endorse by your will, and hold to, and cause to happen. But a miracle only happens when that sense of yourself that tries to accomplish its sense of what a miracle ought to be is set aside—is abandoned temporarily—and you are willing to reach beyond this sense of self that you have of yourself and you ask for that which has greater knowledge than you to reveal it to you.

Now you can ask the Father, but the Father has already answered by providing the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind. And the Father provided it before you decided to be an orphan. [chuckling] You're not going to get something that you never had before, called your right Mind, you're simply going to be re-minded, you're going to be re-introduced to your Mind, to your Wholeness.

And when you do that, miracles will occur. But you won't ask, "How did I do that?" You will glory in the miracle. You will rejoice along with those who shared in it. And you will not say, "I'd better find out how I did that so I can do it again," you know, and therefore, create a little bit of knowledge, a little bit of learning that gets stored away for future use. Because you see, the breeze blows, and at this moment the leaf moves that way and the next movement, perhaps it bends like the long blade of grass. You see?

And so, you want to know the truth now, now, now, now. And so you're going to have to listen, listen, listen, listen, with innocence, innocence, innocence, innocence.

The moment you say, "I'm going to pull this from my memory and use it as the appropriate response now," you've lost innocence. Your mind is not clear, it's being cluttered by things you've collected and the things you've collected are like dust on a window that inhibit your seeing clearly, the view—what's really going on.

To you the miracle CANNOT seem natural because what you have done to hurt your minds has made them so UNNATURAL that they do not remember what is natural to them.

You see? You become very committed to the gathering of information and knowledge and understanding and storing it away as though what was the answer yesterday is the answer today . . . is the answer now, is the answer now, is the answer now. No. The answer is an actual connectedness with now, which is the Movement of Creation as God is being it now—forever fresh.

And when you are TOLD about it, you cannot understand it.

Now, I know that right now what I'm saying is not understandable to some of you. "I don't understand it. It doesn't make sense." Okay . . . okay, that's good. But don't feel bad about it. Let yourself be in that "not knowing place." Because in that not knowing place that you accept for yourself—instead of fuss about—you will become susceptible to insight, you will become susceptible to revelation, you will become susceptible to inspiration. You see?

The recognition of the part as whole, and of the whole in every part, is PERFECTLY natural. For it is the way God thinks, and what is natural to Him is natural to you.

[Repeats] The recognition of the part as whole, and of the whole in every part, . .

You can understand that in this way: In terms of holograms, because you can have a picture . . . a holographic picture, where you can see everything in three-dimensional relief and you're looking at, like a film strip—a large acetate picture. Now, if you take and cut the corner out of that picture and look at it, you'll see everything that's in the large picture—in the large hologram, in this little tiny part that you just cut out away from the hologram—the whole is in the part and the part is the whole. You can understand that experientially, but maybe not intellectually.

The point is this: You're not alone. The point is, that if you're part of the whole, the whole is in you and you are in the whole and that is why, when you know the truth, when you allow the Movement of Love—the breeze—to move through you and you rejoice in it, all of the Brotherhood rejoices.

And I'll tell you something else, every leaf, every tree, every rabbit, every porcupine, every thing, even the rocks rejoice. [chuckling] I'll tell you, the rocks haven't forgotten the Movement of Love. The rocks haven't forgotten the magnitude of the holiness of All.

Wholly natural perception would show you instantly that order of difficulty in miracles is quite impossible, for it involves a contradiction of what miracles mean. And if you could understand their meaning, their attributes could hardly cause you perplexity.

I invited everyone the last time we spoke, to participate in an act of unity in the expression of help for those in Haiti. I invited you to be part of the addressing of a situation through an actual act of giving that you might otherwise have felt unable to be an effective contributor to. "It's too overwhelming. What can I do—hundreds of thousands of people homeless, hundreds of thousands of people suffering anguish, loss, lack of peace, fear for having no food, fear for after shocks . . . fear . . . fear . . . fear."

What can you do? Well, as an orphan, nothing. And as long as you see yourself as an orphan, not only will you think you can do nothing, you will be inclined to neglect to do what you could actually do. And that's missing the whole point.

THE MAGNITUDE OF HOLINESS

The Magnitude Of Holiness—I'm going to say the power of the wholeness of Creation—will only be illuminated when Love is expressed, when extension is made. And so the call is for every one of you to get in that frame of mind, I'm going to say, where you feel the rightness of making extension, no matter how incompetent you feel.

The situation has been so grave and so great that not only the people in Haiti feel powerless, but anyone else who cares feels powerless. But I'm going to tell you something: That feeling of powerlessness is the threshold of a miracle because the minute you say, "I do not have the means as a puny little orphan to help in anyway," and you believe it and you abide with it rather than kicking against the pricks and fussing about it and being upset about it and jumbling up your mind with anger, you will find in that awful sense of incapacity, which feels like humiliation, that you're actually in a state of humility. And in that state of humility the Father can act, the miracle can happen, the sudden shift of perception can occur, because you in your accepted incapacity, are bringing no force of personal will into play.

This is very important and it has to do with the magnitude of holiness. Because you will not experience the magnitude of holiness until you abandon, and I will say, the inconsequentiality of tininess, even though to you tininess is extremely stimulating and gives you the gumption to get bigger.

You HAVE done miracles, but it is quite apparent that you have not done them alone. You have succeeded whenever you have reached another mind and JOINED with it.

It's happened whenever you cared enough to connect without bringing your will into play for whatever reason. It's usually accidental. And that's just fine.

When two minds join as one and share one idea equally, the first link in the awareness of the Sonship as one has been made.

But, please understand, this is not talking about two minds joining as one and sharing an idea that you came up with or an idea that the other fellow came up with independently. It's talking about sharing an idea together that was insightful, that was what was revealed as a result of engaging in the two-step and saying, "Father, what is the truth here?"

When two minds join as one and share one idea equally, the first link in the awareness of the Sonship as one has been made.

You see? Two little orphans joining with each other doesn't bring about a link in the awareness of the Oneness of the Sonship. It's just a partnership of two lonely little orphans. You see?

When you have made this joining, as the Holy Spirit bids you, . .

. . . because you've stopped, you've hesitated, you've done the two-step, and you've asked, "What is the truth here?" . . .

. . . and have offered it to Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . to use as He knows how, . .

. . . listen to this . . .

. . . His . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's . . .

. . . natural perception of your gift enables HIM [repeats] enables HIM to understand it, . .

. . . not you, it enables the Holy Spirit to understand it because it's been a gift without strings from you—nothing to interfere.

His natural perception of your gift enables HIM to understand it, and YOU to use His understanding on your behalf.

Do you see that all the way through this you never arrive at a point where you've got a little bit of understanding that gives you a little bit of an edge in the future? No. Right up to this point:

His natural perception of your gift enables HIM to understand it, and YOU to use His understanding on your behalf.

Sort of puts you in second place, doesn't it? You can carry out His orders. You can carry out His clarity. Yes, that's the good news. That's the point. The point is to Know the truth. The point is to not be distracted by the twitch of the leaf or the graceful bending of the grass, but to experience the Movement of Love—the breeze—and know that that's the Movement of God—the Presence of God. That's the point.

It is impossible to convince you of the reality of what has clearly BEEN accomplished through your willingness . . .

. . . not through any skill you have, not through any power—personal, private power you exercised—but that it's clearly been accomplished only through your willingness.

It is impossible to convince you of the reality of what has clearly BEEN accomplished through your willingness as long as you believe that you must understand it, or else it is not real.

You see? This is so insulting to the ego. You don't have to understand anything in order for it to be real. What is real is real whether you understand it or not.

You think your lack of understanding is a LOSS to you, and so you are unwilling to believe that what has happened is true.

You're unwilling to believe that the miracle that happened is true. Why? Because you haven't been able to glean from it the fact that will constitute a little bit of understanding that you can file away for future use, in order to have control and power and stability in your private little selfhood and in the conflicted world you see because of your private stance, even though it's the Kingdom of Heaven, unconflicted.

You think your lack of understanding is a LOSS to you, and so you are unwilling to believe that what has happened is true.

Oh, maybe you think it's real, but it was a fluke. And you can't afford to go through life waiting for flukes to happen. [Laughing] You need to be able to take positive control through the use of learning. And when you say that, and you identify a miracle as a fluke . . . oh wow, you missed the understanding that's there to be had, which was, that understanding has nothing to do with it. And the miraculous—the wonderful, glorious miraculous—that it's your pleasure to be experiencing, is available to you and your understanding not only has nothing to do with it, you need to stop bringing the intent to understand into the picture.

Again:

You think your lack of understanding is a LOSS to you, and so you are unwilling to believe that what has happened is true. But can you REALLY believe that all that has happened, even though you do NOT understand it, has NOT happened?

It's a good question.

Yet this is your position.

You claim it all the time. You say, "It didn't happen." It didn't happen in the significant way that I'm talking about. "Oh, it was significant. The transformational healing was incredible, but nothing dependable. At the moment it's easy for me to grasp that there may be a God. But you know what, it also could have just been the turn of events, fate could have been just stacked that way in this instant."

And you undermine and undo the miracle. And you keep yourself searching for more understandings that you can tuck away to use in the future.

You would have perfect faith in the Holy Spirit, and in the effects of His teaching, if you were not afraid to ACKNOWLEDGE what He taught you.

You see? Oh, I know, you're willing . . . you think you're willing to acknowledge what He would teach to you. But you can't really dare to honor it fully, because if you're going to take what He teaches you, you're going to have to abandon what you've learned and what you've taught yourself. And that's going to put you in a position of second-class-citizen who exercises no competence of his own. And that's awful. That's unacceptable.

You would have perfect faith in the Holy Spirit, and in the effects of His teaching, if you were not afraid to ACKNOWLEDGE what He taught you. For this acknowledgement means that what has happened you do not understand, but that you are willing to accept it BECAUSE it has happened.

You see? You can accept the tweaking of the leaf and the graceful bending of the long grasses, not as answers in themselves, not as ultimate things in themselves, but as indicators of the presence of the Movement of the breeze—as evidence of the Movement of Love because the evidence is there—which means, because there is a God.

It is so important for you to understand that studying this Course or any other system of religious education is not for the purpose of acquiring knowledge to be stored away as permanent answers. It's to be used to abandon your committed practice of gathering information so that you might become respectable and all of the other good things an orphan tries to become. And be willing instead to say, "Father, what's the truth here? Father, help me to feel the Movement of Love that looks like this. Because I know that the Movement of Love is the Meaning, is the Presence of You Being Creation.

"I am willing to abandon my competence as a puny little orphan so that I might come into a clear awareness of myself as the holy Son of God, whose holiness is of great magnitude that embraces and includes everything in All of Creation. I want to have that experience of what I truly already am. And I want to have that instead of what I think I might be able to create as an identity for myself in the absence of being the holy Son of God and in the absence of being holy at all and therefore, in the mental frame of mind in which magnitude cannot be experienced and will not exist because of my infatuation with inconsequential tininess."

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next time.

And now you know that that was a universal sharing of appreciation and love. Absolutely everything in the universe, because of the magnitude of holiness, was embraced by that expression of Love and felt it whether some parts of that universe were willing to acknowledge and accept it or not. And your Presence, your very Being in this very moment, your existing in this moment is a universal event . . . as is mine.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

February 6th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

It's an interesting thing. Whether you know it or not, whether you remember it or not, every single one of you, every one listening to my words at this moment, has [been] at some point in your lifetime, no matter how young you might be, the cause of a miracle, if I might put it that way—the facilitator of a miracle, the one who allowed innocence to be present in his or her mind and, as a result, [has been] an “agent for change,” as I've used the phrase—so much so, that someone else was most significantly blessed by you.

Some of you can think of at least one such incident that has happened in your lifetime. An incident in which something you couldn't have planned happened that lifted a great burden—physical, mental, emotional—from someone else. An event that you could probably only best describe as an experience of inner illumination, not necessarily of anything specific, it may just have been a feeling of infiniteness. It may have been an experience of being bathed in light that was embracing you in a most loving way. It may have been a point at which on some part of your body, a fragrance came forth that was not the result of after-shave lotion or perfume, a fragrance that was never applied to your body by you.

Now mind you, these are the sorts of experiences you might have found yourself having at a point in which another was suddenly released from bondage, we'll say. And what I just described was for you, or had for you, nothing to do with directing your thought or your energy toward your friend or acquaintance, or the one who was blessed. And yet it was obvious that there was a relationship there between you and them at that point at which the miracle occurred.

Most of you will say that that may only have happened once. It certainly wasn't very frequent. Some of you who don't remember having had that kind of experience are blocking the memory. Why? Because when it happened, it drew attention to you in the form of gratitude—such gratitude that you found yourself embarrassed by being the focus of attention relative to an incredible thing happening. It made you feel self-conscious. And so, the best way you could handle it was to back away and then push it out of memory.

I promise you that even if you don't remember events happening like this, those people in your lives who were blessed have not forgotten it to this day. They know you were part of the blessing.

Now why am I mentioning this? I'm mentioning it because not many of you think you are participants in miracles. Your mindset—the orphan mindset, the mindset that doesn't recognize itself as the holy Son of God or the holy Daughter of God—is uncomfortable with anything that smacks of the Reality of God, such as a miracle.

“Uh-h, leave that to the healers, leave that to the ministers.” As for you? No.

But you know what? To the degree that you don't allow yourself to be comfortable with miracles, with being a significant “other” in someone's life, you are denying who you Are. You're denying that you're the holy Son or Daughter of God. You're willing at that point to settle quite comfortably with just being a human being living out his or her lifetime and perhaps, having a certain degree of comfort or smoothness to that lifetime because of your spiritual studies and your spiritual understandings which we talked about last week.

In other words, as a general rule, you avoid being associated with holiness. And it's very important for you to recognize that.

To the degree that you find it difficult to have the meaning of holiness applied to you, to that degree you are holding fast to the orphan mentality. Specifically, you are holding fast to being one who is ignorant of his Father, Father-Mother, God.

Now, as we continue in the Book here, it says:

How can faith in reality be yours while you are bent on making it unreal?¹

Now, if I hadn't shared what I just shared, you might have said, "Oh-h, what do you mean I'm bent on making Reality unreal?"

Well, this is the way you're bent on making Reality unreal: When you don't want to have the meaning of holiness associated with you, who Are a holy Son or Daughter of God—and that is your Reality—you're making that Reality unreal.

"Oh-h, it would be very nice to just be able to brush my holiness under the corner of the carpet, or under the pillow or in the closet, out of sight."

But you know what? [chuckle] The unholy sons and daughters of egos die. The unholy daughters and sons of the ego become ill. The unholy sons and daughters of the ego—of a private self-originated authoritative mind—suffer sin, disease, death, hardship, lack, stress, plagued with prejudice and hate and fear. Yeah, it really is a lot easier to ignore one's holiness. I understand that. Yeah, you get along quite well in your suffering sense of reality.

But we're talking about Waking up, aren't we! That's the whole point. The whole point is discovering that Reality is Real. And that the Reality that is Real is different from the one you've been identifying with. And therefore, Waking up is going to constitute a considerable change in your mental makeup—your attitudes, your atmosphere.

When you get up in the morning, how often does it occur to you, how many mornings a week or a month does it occur to you to be curious: "Wonder what the miracle is I'm going to see today? I wonder what miracles I'm going to experience as a result of my letting go of control and authority over my day? I wonder how many miracles I'm going to experience as a result of asking for the Holy Spirit's perspective?" . . . the perspective of that which is nothing more than your right Mind.

And yet this is what needs to happen. These are the thoughts and ideas that need to be crossing your mind. There need to be lights going on during your day that say: Look! Look! Look for that which goes beyond your present concept of what you're seeing! Look for what God is Being there, right where you think something material is going on.

You want your day to be filled with new, correct, true perspective that constitutes a direct experience of Reality, meaning the Presence of God right here.

You know, as long as you acquire a spiritual perspective, as long as you are a human being growing older—first growing up, which is very intriguing and you look forward to it, and then growing older in which you abandon looking forward to the newness, because you associate growing older with newness fading. And this is the way you walk around every day. And this sense of yourself is the one that picks up A Course in Miracles and reads it and finds himself or herself nourished—provided with an experience of peace in the midst of getting older.

And I want this to stop! I want you to want this to stop!

Because the reason for learning of God and of your Sonship or Daughtership—of your true Identity—is so that growing older stops. So that sin, disease and death disappear. So that hate and suffering and jealousy that consumes you and debilitates you, leaves your mind—simply doesn't come up—as a way of being aware.

The truth isn't supposed to be a means of being comfortable in a life of suffering.

The Holy Spirit, that which is nothing more than your right Mind, is intent on reuniting the little separated—imaginatively separated—sense of self that you are embracing, back into the whole of your Self. And it's only a shift of perception away . . . it's only a shift of perception away.

Now, you say, "What is that shift of perception? Tell me what it is. I'll gladly embrace it!"

Well, it's a shift of perception that occurs when you abandon all sense of authority that you think you personally, privately have. It's a shift of perception that occurs in a moment of humility, which means, in the absence of arrogance and in the absence of confidence—confidence born out of personal experience.

You know what? Invulnerability is the divine equivalence of confidence born of experience. Invulnerability is the state of being when you are in humility, when you are not holding yourself apart from God—from your Father, from your Source.

Remember, the holy instant is where the laws of God prevail. The holy instant, in the silence, is the moment in which a shift of perception can occur because there's no self-will blocking it. Humility is what you could call, silence—silence of human will.

Now this means that right here in this world, as you go through your day, you can experience invulnerability on the freeway, in the middle of an accident, or working with sharp knives in the kitchen, or carrying hot liquids. Invulnerability is available to you when you engage in those activities in humility. Invulnerability, the absolute incapacity to be damaged—injured, altered from your divine originality that the Father is being as You, in every single moment. Now that's significant! Far more significant than the way I used the word, "significant," just now.

It's worth reaching for. It's worth practicing the two-step for.

So again:

How can faith in reality be yours while you are bent on making it unreal? And are you REALLY safer in maintaining the unreality of what has happened than you would be in joyously accepting it for what it is, and giving thanks for it?

No of course not. In maintaining that no miracle really happened or you'd rather not look at it because it embarrasses you to be involved in that, or you'd really rather not be thought of as being holy, you'd really rather not look at yourself and have to willingly embrace the totality of what the words mean, "holy Son of God."

. . . are you REALLY safer in maintaining the unreality of what has happened . . .

. . . those miracles that have happened in a moment of humility . . .

. . . than you would be in joyously accepting it for what it is, and giving thanks for it? ? Honor the truth that has been given you, and be glad you do not understand it.

Mind you, in every case where you were an agent for change, even those cases where it might seem that you were consciously contributing to change, of benefit, it was the Holy Spirit that moved—the Holy Spirit that moved in you and the Holy Spirit that moved in the one that was blessed with you. And it wasn't any skill or power you had. And it happened not because you understood it, but because in the moment of humility, the Movement of God—the breeze moving through the hills and the valleys—was able to be felt because it wasn't interfered with by arrogance in any form.

Understanding had nothing to do with it. And understanding will never have anything to do with it. But learning how to be in the flow of your Being, learning how to be in the flow of the Movement of Love . . . by what? Engaging in humility. Engaging in an absolute lack of arrogance. In every case, that will exhibit your holiness. And it will exhibit the Presence of God and it will confirm reality as Reality rather than the misunderstanding of Reality that everyone has been going around confirming and believing.

Honor the truth that has been given you, and be glad you do not understand it. Miracles are natural to God, and to the One Who speaks for Him.

Who is the One that speaks for God? Well, as long as you're claiming not to be the holy Son of God, it isn't going to be you, is it?

But it is going to be You. It's going to be the Holy Spirit, that in you which is nothing more than your right Mind—the Presence of God.

[par.]
So . . .

Miracles are natural to God, and to the One Who speaks for Him.

. . . the Holy Spirit.

For His task is . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . to translate the miracle into the knowledge which it represents, and which is lost to you.

His task is to translate the flow of the breeze through the hills and valleys gracing and caressing everything on its way in ways that have effects on it and translating the effects, we'll say, into a clear awareness of the Movement of Love that is actually happening, so that it isn't obscure to you.

Again:

Miracles are natural to God, and to the One Who speaks for Him.
For His . . .

. . . the One who speaks for Him . . .

. . . His task is to translate the miracle into the knowledge which it represents, and which is lost to you.

Why? So that it will no longer be lost to you.

Let His understanding of the miracle be enough for you, and do not turn away from all the witnesses that He has given you to His reality.

In a way, you don't see the Holy Spirit move. The Holy Spirit in a way is very much like the breeze—the Movement of Love. But when, in a moment of humility—an absence of arrogance—you are willing to be present without manipulation of any sort, the Movement of the Holy Spirit can register with you and a miracle occurs, healing occurs, blessing occurs, release from bondage occurs and someone is blessed and you are blessed. The Presence of God has been confirmed and the Presence of the Holy Spirit has been confirmed.

Now, here's the hard part to take: The Presence of the Holy Spirit that has been confirmed, has been the Presence of what You divinely Are, confirmed. Uh-oh! The Presence of the holy Son of God that you Are has been confirmed. You see?

You are not going to Wake up without being involved. You are not going to Wake up without being blessed. Awakening is not going to occur without you being changed from the tips of your toes. Where you won't be reluctant to realize and know and embrace the fact that you Are the holy Son of God. And that it's your good fortune to have as your right, and even your obligation, I'm going to say, to live in this world as a holy Son of God, as the presence of holiness.

I know some of you are feeling uncomfortable at these words. You think you're going to stand out like a sore thumb.

Well, let me ask you this: If you're walking down the street tomorrow knowing you're the holy Son of God, well, something outlandish will happen. Anybody who's near you will be near someone who's not sick [chuckling] or they'll be walking past someone who isn't full of fear. They'll be walking by someone who has a full head of hair. Really outrageous, right? They'll walk past someone who's incapable of being reactive or misinterpreting what they might be doing. Really outlandish. They'll be walking past someone who will never die. They'll be walking past someone who apparently is in the prime of their life—not overly young, not overly old. They'll be walking by someone who's rather good-looking because symmetry and balance is there in everything about them. No. You know, you'll probably go unnoticed, except that your presence will be a blessing.

So let's stop using these silly excuses for not Waking up, for not embracing the idea and the reality of holiness and the magnitude of holiness and therefore, the magnitude of your holiness. Let's stop using silly arguments for delaying the embrace and embodiment of your holiness. And in the process, you'll stop denying God. And in the process, God will be confirmed in the world . . . "Thy will be done."² Oh, many of you say it everyday: "Thy will be done on Earth as it is in Heaven. Oh, wait a minute. On Earth, here . . . now? No, no, all that stuff for after you die in the by-and-by?"

You know what? If your invulnerability becomes yours, if your symmetry and balance becomes yours, if your wholeness becomes yours, what in the hell are you bulking at? What are you delaying for? What self-righteous reason could you possibly have that justifies suffering a moment longer?

Continuing:

Let His understanding . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's understanding . . .

. . . of the miracle be enough for you, . .

. . . whether you understand it or not . . . no, even though you don't understand it.

Let His understanding of the miracle be enough for you, . .

. . . yield to it. Just let it be and let it be that which affects your presence at every moment, every day in the here and now.

. . . and do not turn away from all the witnesses that He has given you to His reality.

Do not turn away from the blessings that have occurred for others in your life because you were there in a moment of innocence and humility with them—the healings, the transformations that have occurred. Don't turn away from them. Those are the witnesses. Those are the leafs tweaking and the long blades of grass gently arcing in the breeze. And they say the breeze is here. And these blessings that have been extended from your presence have confirmed that your holiness is here . . . that your holiness is here . . . that your holiness is here . . . that your holiness is here.

No evidence will convince you of the truth of what you do not want.

But I'm going to say, stop not wanting to know the truth, stop not wanting to have holiness evidenced in your life. Forget about what you think you'll look like to others. As I said, you'll probably be unnoticed, because you'll just be so darn perfect. Do you know what perfect means? It means nothing out of the ordinary, nothing unusual, nothing inconsistent, no friction present, no antagonism present, no conflict about you in any aspect of your affairs.

The only thing that would make you stand out to anyone would be the utter peace and harmony that you exhibit. And that's not what usually people are looking for or paying attention to. They want a little drama. So don't be afraid of the magnitude of your holiness.

Again:

No evidence will convince you of the truth of what you do not want.
Yet your relationship with Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . IS real, and HAS been demonstrated.

I've already made this clear. It has been demonstrated a number of times in your life that it is possible for you to remember, and many times in your life that you may not have noticed simply because [chuckles] it was easier not to be reminded of your holiness. So it was easy to discount things that happened, "Well, it's their good karma," or, "they got up on the right side of the bed this morning," or, "it was bound to happen." On and on.

Regard this not with fear, but with rejoicing. The One you called upon IS with you.

Of course. In your humility, the doors of your mind, of your being, are thrown wide open because it takes arrogance to do the only thing arrogance can, which is to close doors, and to isolate and to barricade. You see?

Bid Him welcome, and honor His witnesses, who bring you the glad tidings . . .

. . . you see, right now it's becoming perfectly clear to you that you're going to have to change the way you view things as you go through your day. You're going to have to start paying attention to and looking for the witnesses to what? Your holiness. And the witnesses to the magnitude of holiness.

Now, because you're so deeply embedded in the habit of arrogance, you're going to say that it's going to take great discipline, great self-discipline on your part to be attentive for the witnesses to the Presence of God. And that's a safe way to say it—witnesses to the Presence of God—cause that's not you. But the witnesses to the Presence of God are the witnesses to holiness on Earth here and now. "As in Heaven so on Earth." These witnesses are the witnesses to your holiness. You're going to have to get used to that. And you're going to have to be willing to stop denying it and stop pushing it out of sight out of mind, ignoring it, because the good news is, that as the holy Son of God, you will Wake up, as a puny, piss-ant little mortal you're going to keep on dreaming.

Bid Him welcome, and honor His witnesses, who bring you the glad tidings He has come. It is true, just as you fear, that to acknowledge Him IS to deny all that you think you know.

We better say that again:

It is true, just as you fear, that to acknowledge Him . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than whose right Mind? Your right Mind.

. . . that to acknowledge Him IS to deny all that you think you know.

In other words, that which is nothing more than your wrong mind.

But it was NEVER true.

The wrong mind never actually existed. And to lose it is to lose nothing that seemed to be something, and blinded you to Who you Are and the Kingdom of Heaven that it's your Birthright to be joying in the experience of right here, right now, today.

What gain is there to you in clinging to it, . .

. . . clinging to the denial of the truth. Clinging to your unholy humanness that you have no trouble embracing at all, even though it's a terminal experience.

Where is the intelligence in that?

Oh, I know, you didn't know you had an alternative. Well, the good news is you have an alternative. And we're talking about embracing the alternative—laying claim to it. Except that laying claim to it isn't something you aggressively do, like grabbing it. It's something you allow to happen by indulging in humility: Silence—the absence of arrogance, the absence of willfulness, the absence of accomplishing, so that you might be that pure conscious awareness which is, for lack of better words, the arena, the hills and valleys through which the Movement of Love—the breeze—flows, causing your very Being to be the Movement of fulfillment as well as the observation of it and the rejoicing in the conscious experience of it.

And I promise you that when in the midst of humility you have this experience here and now, what you called a material world and universe will become obvious to you as the Kingdom of Heaven. It always has been the Kingdom of Heaven. It always has been the more that you imagined the Kingdom of Heaven is than what you have been experiencing. The only thing is it's not something you get into by virtue of dying sometime in the future. It's something you're in at this moment and the only thing necessary to experiencing it is a simple sudden shift of perception.

This really is true. A shift of perception that automatically occurs in moments of humility and eternally endures when nothing but humility is engaged in. In other words, in the interminable absence of arrogant willfulness.

What gain is there to you in clinging to it, and denying the evidence for truth? For you have come too near to truth to renounce it now, and you WILL yield to its compelling attraction. You can delay this now but only a little while.

Only a little while. You really know too much. You really, I'm sorry to say, have already learned too much to successfully go back to what I'm going to call, a peaceful life of suffering—one that you've managed to cope with quite well, "thank you very much." Right?

You're on your way Home. And as with the hundredth monkey principle, the more who get it, the more who go Home, the fewer there are left to join in the mutual agreement to be unconscious of truth. And you'll just be swept along whether you like it or not.

Now, it won't be against your will. You'll be swept along because the obviousness of truth will begin to register with you more and more and you won't be able to deny it and you won't want to deny it. And so you won't deny it. And that will thrust you, impel you into the realization of truth.

Now, if you want to drag your feet and be one of the last ones who are impelled to it by the simple fact that truth becomes more obvious than you want it to be, faster than you want it to be, go ahead. But you know what? Your help's needed now, if I may put it that way. Now is the time to have the curiosity and the gumption to indulge in holy instants, to indulge in the two-step—to go through your day in a new frame of mind which expects to see greater witnesses to the Presence of God than you've been seeing, even though you're not about to conceptualize how that should appear.

You can delay this now but only a little while. The host of God has called to you, and you HAVE heard. Never again will you be wholly willing not to listen.

Oh, yep, there's that word again, "listen." Listen, shut up and listen! Stop asserting yourself and become receptive: "Be still and know that I Am God."³ That's God's expression of Love to all of His Creation. Be still and know the only thing there is to know: That God is all there is to everything. And therefore, you can stop this silly practice of arrogant control and self-improvement and relax back into your pre-existing holiness in which you are not only whole, but you are that conscious awareness of wholeness in which no aspect of wholeness escapes your attention and the fact that it is all evidence of the breeze—the Movement of Love—that causes it to be awesome and fulfilling to be experiencing and to have no other function than to experience that. Far from boring, far from monotonous.

But you see, your goal is different. In a way that's sort of what's meant by a shift of perception. You're going to be where you've always been. But you can look at it differently. A shift of perception will occur. Not a shift of what's perceived, not a shift of Creation that's being observed, but a shift in the way it's being looked at.

This is a year of joy, in which your listening will increase, and peace . . .

. . . oh-h, that element that is ever present in humility . . .

. . . and peace will grow with its increase.

Now you know, this is not a prediction, it happens to be true: This is a year a joy in which your listening will increase. And last year was a year a joy in which listening increased. But I am going to tell you, that the increase will be greater this year than it has been. And it will be easier this year than it has been, if there's the slightest bit of willingness. If there is not the slightest bit of willingness, it will be a more difficult year.

Listen:

The power of holiness and the WEAKNESS of attack have BOTH been brought into awareness.

That's why it's going to be a year of joy in which your listening will increase.

The power of holiness and the WEAKNESS of attack have BOTH been brought into awareness.

Like never before.

And this has been accomplished in minds firmly convinced that holiness is weakness, . .

. . . right? You know, you'd rather not have that word, "holiness" attached to you. You would rather not have people think that you think you're holy. You would rather not have things happen [chuckle] that cause you to seem to be holy.

Why? Because you think holiness is weakness instead of the strength of your Being and the invulnerability of your Being, which is the thing you greatly want.

"Oh, come-on! I don't have to put my shingle out, do I? I mean, do I have to have a sign out on my door that says, 'His holiness, her holiness?' I mean, I can just keep it to myself, right?" That's called, "the human condition." You're already doing that. You're keeping it a great secret from yourself and from everyone else. And that secret constitutes a terminal existence—it seems to. And it doesn't need to seem to any longer.

Okay. I'm going to back up:

The power of holiness and the WEAKNESS of attack have BOTH been brought into awareness. And this has been accomplished . . .

. . . listen to this:

. . . in minds firmly convinced that holiness is weakness, and attack is power. . .

. . . aggression is power.

Should not this be a sufficient miracle to teach you that your teacher is NOT of you?

What you're being taught is the opposite of what you want to hold onto for dear life . . . or should I say, "for dear death."

But remember also that, whenever you have listened to His interpretation, . .

. . . the Holy Spirit's, whenever you have been in a moment of humility and have been infilled, . .

. . . the results have brought you joy.

A little bit of honesty here:

Would you prefer the results of YOUR interpretation, considering honestly what they have been? God wills you better. Could you not look with greater charity on whom God loves with perfect love?

Wonder who that might be? Who might you look on with greater charity? Maybe yourself. Maybe you are the holy Son of God, maybe you are the holy Daughter of God. Maybe the magnitude of holiness has a direct bearing on you and your identity and your salvation. And maybe not experiencing it in the here and now is a ridiculous loss, a ridiculous loss because it can't be taken away. And so it is present, and it's a ridiculous thing not to be experiencing it.

The breeze is blowing, gently caressing every single one of you into the clarity of your Being and your joy and your invulnerability. Let's make a point of enjoying it together, of being conscious of it together.

And let this coming week be different.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

February 13th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Last week we read that:

This is a year of joy, in which your listening will increase, and peace will grow with its increase.¹

As you went through this past week and made a point of listening more frequently, practicing the holy instant more frequently, and being willing to look at your world with a desire to see the Kingdom of Heaven that I've been telling you "the world" really is, and in doing that, how many have discovered the ways in which you block the pursuit of that kind of peace and clarity? How many of you have been able to identify the tricks you play upon yourself to distract you from doing something that your history, [chuckle] your life practices have proven to you to be more valuable than? (I know that's not good English.)

Now, we begin tonight with this:

Do not interpret AGAINST God's Love, for you have many witnesses which speak of It so clearly that only the blind and deaf could fail to see and hear them.

Now you could read that and turn it against yourself: "Well, I haven't seen that many witnesses that speak so clearly of it and therefore, I must be the blind and deaf that you're speaking of."

No. Someone perfectly sighted with perfect hearing can ignore what they're seeing and hearing and give preference to things they love more than seeing the Kingdom of Heaven at hand and being willing to be the presence of the

Now mind you, I promise you, the Voice of God is not still and is not small. But you practice such volume in your self-will that you drown out the Voice of God. It’s still as loud as it was, but because you’re making so much noise in the immediate vicinity of your personal you, that it does seem to drown out the Voice of God. And so, you can’t hear it and you can’t see the evidences. That’s why God says, “Be still and know . . .” what? “. . . that I am God.”³

If you cannot hear the Voice for God, it seems that the Voice of God must be soft-spoken, at a low volume. And so what does that require if you want to hear it? It requires you to reduce the volume of your practice of willfulness and your committed practice of habits and interpretations and definitions that you attempt to hold the Kingdom of Heaven to, rather than allowing the Kingdom of Heaven to be What It is. And letting It register with you so that you might have the glorious experience of It in which you will rejoice and in which you will feel safe, invulnerable.

You deafen yourself, not by becoming deaf, but by making such great noise in the presence of everything else, that all you can hear is the noise of your own will. It’s that simple.

So, this is good news, because it says you’re not deaf and it says you’re not blind. And it provides you with the answer as to how not to interpret AGAINST God’s Love. You stop interpreting AGAINST God’s Love by doing this very simple thing: Shutting up!

The addiction, though, that justifies not shutting up, is your belief that the more vocal you are in terms of building yourself up and presenting a picture that convinces others that they can trust you and depend upon you and serve you, that it seems totally unreasonable to you and unjustifiable to you to be still.

To you, and in your current mindset, that is like letting all of the air out of the personality doll that you have built and called yourself and that you are trying to convince everybody else you are as well. If you shut up, there won’t be any more hot air to fill the doll up and give it presence and you think that without that, you will be invisible.

No. And you know this from the months and months and months that we have been talking together.

The way you become free of sin, sickness and death, the way you come into a full experience of the holy Son or Daughter of God that you Are, is by letting this fake image filled with air, deflate and disappear.

True, as we've talked about, when you let that happen, you feel incompetent. You feel deflated. You feel powerless. Because the source of what you thought your power was, is gone—that being your loud voice, your assertion of will.

But here's the wonder of it: In that void, you will involuntarily reach out. You will involuntarily engage in asking for help—reaching out for joining with Something. And you'll do that, because in the very basement of your being you know you're not alone and you know it's not your Birthright to be alone. And so you do involuntarily say, "Help." And that's the open door to God to register with you once again. That's the open door for the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—to enter and fill you with inspiration and revelation that brings you back into your sanity, as we've said before, in which you Know that you are the holy Son of God or the holy Daughter of God.

So, the simplicity that this brings everything down to is, once again, whether you are going to choose to assert yourself all by yourself in your own right as you have been doing and which has constituted your existence in a state of orphanhood, or are you going to find all the ways in which you reaffirm and reestablish your orphanhood so that you can identify them and say, "Oh, I'm not going to do that anymore. I don't need to do that, I'm not an orphan. I'm not going to occupy my mind with those activities because I know they keep me from Knowing the truth. They keep me from having the truth revealed to me that sets me free. And I'm not going to do that anymore. I clearly see that that's insane. But because I clearly see that it's insane and can choose to do otherwise, I Know from this experience of clarity that I'm not insane and so I'm not going to hold onto any of the particulars that I kept filed and organized that caused me to think I was insane and justified it and caused me to think I was finding a way to be relatively happy in my insanity."

Now, do you think that Paul can hear me right now if he's not in his peace?

Do you think that in his daily life he doesn't have things come up that seem to justify his being upset, concerned, angry, jealous, judgmental, superior, respectable? Mind you, he experiences justification for all of those things that do not in any way come from an experience of being joined. They come from his ability to look at his life and how he's behaved and how he relates to others, et cetera, and [he] has been able to come to the conclusion that all of these feelings are justifiable.

Whether [they are] momentary hate or jealousy or fear or self-respect or self-pleasure, whether [they are] good or bad, if they are not being experienced by him because he's in his peace and he's joined, he can't hear me, he can't hear the Father. He can't hear the Holy Spirit and neither can you.

So you see, the simplicity of the bottom line of what the Course is teaching and what the truth is, is that you have to choose for your peace over all of the alternatives, all of the justifiable alternatives that you bring into play every day and that you use to interpret AGAINST God's Love. It constitutes an interpretation AGAINST God's Love because it causes you to become blind to It. It causes you not to see It. It causes you to look and see a material world where the Kingdom of Heaven is the only thing confronting you. And where the incredible, awesome nature of everything you're seeing simply doesn't register with you when it's supposed to, and when, because you're not blind and you're not deaf, you have the capacity right now to experience.

Again, the only reason you're not experiencing It is because you're giving preference to other things.

You interpret AGAINST God's Love by using your mind to be upset about the way someone else is behaving. You also use your mind to interpret AGAINST God's Love by being upset because someone else is upset with you. Those are just two simple ways.

But tell me . . . how foreign an experience is that for you when you go through your day? How many times during the day do you feel upset because someone else is upset with you—either rightfully or wrongfully, as far as you're concerned? And how many times during the day are you upset at somebody else because of the way they've behaved? And you're using your mind in this way, when the use of your mind in that way constitutes an absolute block to your being joined with the Father. But I'm going to say, more importantly, it causes you to be unable to be joined with the Holy Spirit.

Now that's more significant at the moment. Why? Because, as I say over and over: "The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind,"—the one significant sentence that was deleted from the Course in all of the subsequent editions: The Key thing. It's significant because if the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, then you're blocking yourself from it, you're distracting yourself from it by insane practices in the use of your mind. You are unable to experience yourself truly. And the only word to describe the inability to experience yourself truly, is insanity.

Insanity is not a fact, it's an aberration, it's a stretching out of shape something that is perfect that doesn't cause what is perfect to become imperfect, but distorted. And the moment the stress applied to it to distort it is abandoned, that which is perfect comes back into its state of perfection that is undeniable—perfectly recognizable—and it's called "You coming back into your right Mind," your sanity returning to you . . . that is You joining with the Holy Spirit.

Now it happens that the Holy Spirit is God's Voice abiding at the altar in the center of your Being. And so when you let the Voice for truth, the Holy Spirit, register with you, in effect you are letting God in. And in letting God in, your identity becomes utterly clear to you and you are not confused about who you Are. And you are not confused about your holiness.

So, what are some other ways that you might have found that you interpret against God's Love, that you discovered you indulged in during the past week?

Well, maybe you were called upon to engage in something that wasn't in your plans. Maybe you were called upon to give your attention to something that didn't fit into your good works—your definition of what your good works are. And so, although you had to give your attention to them because they didn't fit into your good plans for yourself, you resisted and resented participating in them.

Maybe they were too human? Maybe they were too material? I mean, maybe it involved putting gravel in on your driveway, or weeding, or doing the laundry when you would rather have been out doing some work in the community; helpful, gifted work in the community . . . and was too mundane, the things you had to give your attention to.

Now, why would attending to normal mundane activities be beneath you or offensive to you? How is there anything—any activity that you could engage in the day—that would be incompatible with Awakening? How could that be, unless you were giving some sort of definition to the activity or the materials you were having to work with.

Well, it's easy. You think it's a material world. And so there are some activities that are more "material" than others, while there are other activities that are more "spiritual." And of course, the more spiritual ones involve less involvement with matter—with the material. Heaven forbid that you might have to help somebody do their laundry, or clean up after the cat pooped or the dog threw up.

You know what? You can't afford to forget that all you're confronted by is the Kingdom of Heaven. That means that all you're confronted by is the Presence of God. The Substance of all form is not matter—and we've discussed this—it is Spirit. And the experience of all form is a mental experience.

You say, "No it isn't. I touched the table with my fingers. My fingers sense the table. My fingers, which are a different form of matter than the matter in the table, come in contact with the table and I am able thereby to experience through that three-dimensional outer experience, that there is something there that I can call a table and there are fingers here that I can call a part of me." You see? Uh-uh...No. The table, the fingers, all of it is a mental experience going on in mind. Form is the visibility and tangibility of the Ideas that God has, the ideas that God is having—the infinite divine Mind. The Substance of Ideas is Spirit.

Now, the next time you pick up the dirty diaper, catch yourself when you say, "Eewww, why do I have to deal with such gross, mundane, unspiritual things?"

My God, you're handling God—the Substance of It is Spirit. What does that mean? It means that it is of God. It means that it is not limited by laws of physics. It means that it is permanently, forever flexible enough, you might say, to render visible God's intent. It is the presence of total freedom to be what God desires for it to be.

The Substance of Spirit is Love. And love is illuminated. Love is the Light of the World. And Love is the motive of Creation. And the Love that moves and is identified as the leaves tweaking and the long blades of grass arcing gently in the breeze, these things are glorious. They are the Movement of God, no matter how they appear and no matter how you are currently defining them.

But you interpret AGAINST God's Love. You interpret against the breeze by claiming the right to fill your mind with anger and jealousy and envy and superiority, self-aggrandizement, a well-defined list of good deeds, and on and on and on. That's how you do it.

And you stop doing it by shutting up, by abandoning those activities, by abandoning the value of them because something in you has arrived at the point where it wants to Know the truth. It doesn't want to be deluded and it doesn't want to engage further in that which obscures the truth and keeps you bound to sin, sickness and death.

Do not interpret AGAINST God's Love, for you have many witnesses which speak of It so clearly that only the blind and deaf could fail to see and hear them. This year, determine not to deny what has been given you by God, for that is the only reason He has called to you.

He's called to you. The Father calls to you. The Holy Spirit calls to you to . . .

. . . determine not to deny what has been given you by God, . .

. . . what does that mean? It means stop calling this is a material universe. Start calling it the Kingdom of Heaven and start having curiosity to see the Kingdom of Heaven where you've been seeing that which doesn't look like the Kingdom of Heaven. Because until you bring that clear conscious desire to your intent to see, you're just going to go on the merry-go-round of ignorance, stuck, day after day, year after year. And you don't want that. And that's not what's in store this year.

This year, determine not to deny what has been given you by God, for that is the only reason He has called to you.

The Father wants you to look and see Him. Well, if you're going to see Him, you're going to have to abandon the love you have for your self-centered attitudes and practices.

He has called to you so that you might see Him in everything. And in seeing Him, letting Him back in as part of your awareness of what you Are. And that's the way you come Home.

His Voice has spoken clearly, . .

. . . Creation, the Kingdom of Heaven confronts you at every moment. God has spoken clearly. He has called to you.

His Voice has spoken clearly, and yet you have so little faith in what you heard because you have preferred to place still greater faith in . . .

. . . what? . .

. . . the disaster YOU have made.

I know it doesn't seem like disaster, because you can keep the lid on it pretty well. But the fact is that sin, disease and death still prevail where God's laws actually prevail. That's a disaster. It's a disaster you have made and which you could feel guilty about—but don't waste your time with that. Just know that it's a disaster you have made. And because it's a disaster you have made you can unmake it. You can do something else. And then do something else.

Do the two-step. Practice the holy instant. Be still with an intent to see God where you haven't seen Him before. And a desire to experience the Holy Spirit where you haven't experienced It before—which is right in you as the presence of your right Mind.

Today, let us resolve TOGETHER to accept the joyful tidings that disaster is not real, and that reality is not disaster.

Do you get that?

Today, let us resolve TOGETHER . . .

. . . let's abandon independence. Don't have the perfect concept all by yourself. Know the truth with me. Want to know the truth with your Brothers. Don't know the truth to Lord it over your Brothers. And don't see the truth as something your Brothers would Lord over you, which would therefore, justify defense and get the scrabble going and keep the scrabble going.

Today, let us resolve TOGETHER to accept the joyful tidings that disaster is not real, and that reality is not disaster.

Reality is safe and sure, . .

Reality . . . Oh, I know, you see me moving my hand in an embrace of everything and saying:

Reality is safe and sure, . .

. . . and that's not your experience. But it is what's going on and it's your Birthright to be having that experience. And it's not your Birthright to be blind and deaf to all of the witnesses to the Presence of God.

What are the witnesses? It's the glass-topped coffee table. It's the potted palm. It's the blinds on the windows. It's the carpet on the floor. It's the trees outside and the rain falling. These are the witnesses to God. The leaves and the long graceful bending grasses are the witnesses to what?—the movement of the breeze, the presence of the flow of Love.

But you know what? You won't understand the graceful grasses or the tweaking leaves. You won't understand them unless you're seeing and being sensitive to the movement behind them—the breeze. And you won't sense the Movement of Love behind them if you're judging them to be matter, mundane, material, beneath you to have to touch and clean with a little Windex. Whoa . . . what, the Windex isn't God? What, the glass isn't God? What, the rag in your hand or the paper towel isn't God? It isn't Spirit—the substance of which is Love, which is Light, which communicates the glory of God? You see?

A miracle is a sudden shift of perception. And what I just described involves a shift of perception. But you won't have that shift as long as you're committed to looking at everything the way you have always looked at them, the way you have been educated to look at them.

Well, I'll tell you something: You go and look at some of the most current documents about Physics and you will find that the scientists are beginning to consider the possibility that everything that is being observed is a manifestation of that which is observing it.

So, what are you going to do when finally the scientists say, "There's an entirely new way to experience everything you've been experiencing and it will be available to you if you will abandon what we've educated you to believe?"

You don't have to wait. You don't have to wait for them to lay down their edict of what truth is now. You are being invited to engage in a shift of perception, shifts of perception . . . sudden shifts of perception—not delayed or protracted because, hmmm . . . you just can't do it all at once. Or, what that really means is, you just can't abandon your attempts to secure your safety and importance for something as radical as what I'm talking about.

Again:

Reality . . .

. . . and I embrace everything with this Movement . . .

. . . is safe and sure, and wholly kind to everyone and everything.

I know . . . you say, "That's hard to believe." And when you say that, you're interpreting AGAINST God's Love. When you say that, you're saying, "I'm unwilling to shift my perception to the degree that that calls for.

There is no greater love than to accept this, and be glad.

[Chuckling] Now that doesn't mean that there's no greater love than to accept this and be glad. You know, I mean do it! Do being glad! You know. No. It means that there's no greater love than to accept this and have the spontaneous experience of being glad from the tips of your toes because Reality is registering with you in Its glory.

There is no greater love than to accept this, . .

... what? That:

Reality is safe and sure, and wholly kind to everyone and everything.

That is what everything that confronts you is extending to you. But because of your tiny, personal, separated sense of self, all of it is experienced in polarities that don't allow you to see the harmony and the safety, etc. But it's there! And you've got to make a choice to see it, instead of continuing to insist upon confirming your current definitions.

There is no greater love than to accept this, and be glad. For love asks only that you be HAPPY, . .

... not fake happy. Not a façade of happiness. But the kind of happiness that moves you, the kind of happiness that is moving, that is deep and broad and unlimited and light and buoyant and might even bring tears of joy.

For love asks only that you be HAPPY, . .

... the breeze . . .

. . . asks only that you be HAPPY, . .

... the Movement of Being, which looks like tweaking leaves and bending grasses and also looks like you, . .

. . . asks only that you be HAPPY, and will give you everything that makes for happiness. You have never given any problem to the Holy Spirit He has not solved for you, nor will you ever do so.

See, that says that you're incompetent to do it by yourself. But that's the wonderfulness of it. You're not supposed to be able to do it on your own. The fullness of Being is in the Unity. The fullness of Being is in the blending. The fullness of Being is in the experience of family. You understand that.

You have never tried to solve anything yourself and been successful.

Never. And that's not bad news, but to the ego it is. Things never worked that way. That's not the setup.

Is it not time you brought these facts TOGETHER, and made SENSE of them?

Listen again:

You have never given any problem to the Holy Spirit He has not solved for you, nor will you ever do so. You have never tried to solve anything yourself and been successful. Is it not time you brought these facts TOGETHER, and made SENSE of them?

When you bring them together, the sense of them is obvious. You've never succeeded at anything you tried to do all by yourself and there has always been success when you have joined with, I'm going to say, the way things work in which you had no authority. You've never done that and not experienced the resolution of a problem or a miracle.

So bring these facts together and make sense of them. You see, it's all simple. It's not complicated. You bring these facts together and make sense of them and it makes it even clearer to you that it's time to stop interpreting against God's Love by all of these other mental activities that you engage in. And all you have to do is to abandon engaging them. Just stop doing them.

Now . . .

This is the year for the APPLICATION of the ideas which have been given you.

Now, you must be careful, because that doesn't mean that this is the year for the application . . . the year for you to put your shoulder to the wheel and make things happen on a new spiritual Course In Miracles basis.

What are the ideas that have been given you? The ideas that have been given to you are: Shut up . . . "Be still and know that I am God." Hesitate before you act. And reach out beyond your own best understandings and say, "Father,"—which does constitute an abandoning of independence—"What is the truth here? Father, what step should I take? Father, what needs to be known now? Father, what action do I need to engage in?" These are the ideas to be applied.

You better not go out and apply them to the table. You better not go out and apply them to the potted palm. You apply these ideas by engaging in an inner action that causes you to be able to experience the truth.

As I said, if Paul did not decide that at this hour any other concerns that he had, any justifications he might feel for being upset were not worthy of his attention, if he did not acknowledge that and abandon the pursuit of those mental activities, he would not be hearing me. What that means then is, that if you want to know the truth, you've got to abandon the things that keep it hidden from you. And it means that those things that would occupy you or preoccupy you with emotional tension, conflict, etc., really have no practical value at all.

Now, Paul hears me saying this and yet when the meeting is over, he is very likely to pick up some of the concerns he has and some of the things that feel good to be self-righteous about, and like you, he will be faced with exactly what I've talked about tonight: The need to stop doing that because he, like you, really does want to Know the truth, because he really wants to be sane, because at the bottom line, he really doesn't want to experience another moment of sin, disease and death.

So . . .

This is the year for the APPLICATION of the ideas which have been given you. For the ideas are mighty forces, to be used . . .

Now mind you, we're not talking about the Crusades, you know, and mighty forces to accomplish things in the world. The ideas to be still and Know that God is All, the idea to hesitate and abandon independent action, whether physical or mental, and to join with that which is beyond your present orphan mentality, constitutes a shift into the conscious experience of Reality that changes one's behavior so that it's not defensive or coercive but yields to the awareness of the movement of the breeze and thus reflects God's Will, we'll say. That constitutes a mighty force because the fact is that all illusion will collapse: Sin, sickness, death, anger, fear, jealousy, hate, all of it will collapse.

. . . the ideas are mighty forces, . .

. . . it's not power against something, but it's the presence of truth that knocks the wind out of illusion and causes it to no longer be able to fool you. That is mighty!

. . . the ideas are mighty forces, to be used and not held idly by.

It means to be practiced, as I've said each week: Practice these things. Take the opportunity in the grocery store, on the freeway, wherever, take the opportunity to say, "Father, what's the truth here? Father, I know this has to be the Kingdom of Heaven and I want to see It more than I want to continue to be angry and fill my mind with that which blocks my experience of the Kingdom of Heaven here."

They . . .

. . . the ideas . . .

. . . have already proved their power sufficiently for you to place your faith in them, and not in their denial.

You all have faith. You may not be able to say where it comes from but it's there. It's there because of the witnesses that you haven't been able to completely block.

They have already proved their power sufficiently for you to place your faith in them, and not in their denial.

Now watch it, because the words will just come up . . . "Oh yes, I can deny it. Oh yes, I'm going to deny it. I can't swallow this. I can't give my support, my unequivocal support to the idea that reality is safe and sure and holy kind to everyone."

And so there you've done it: Interpreted against God's Love. There you have practiced being the blind that stands between you and Reality and causes you to be unable to experience It.

This year invest in truth, and let it work in peace.

Let it work in the peace that you bring to the moment to the holy instant.

Have faith in what has faith in YOU.

Now I know you all have your moments where you are convinced that there is nothing that has faith in you, not even God. And you have behaved so atrociously that God couldn't, if He would. There you are interpreting against God's Love again. And you believe yourself. And you've got to stop. And I'm saying, "Stop!" It's an insane way, an idiotic way of blocking any possibility of hearing the "still small voice" of God, of having a sudden shift of perception.

Think what you have REALLY seen and heard, and RECOGNIZE it.

Now, I mean it.

Think what you have REALLY seen and heard, and RECOGNIZE it.

In other words, don't immediately deny it. Again, I know, you have your moments where you deny it absolutely because you have lost faith and hope entirely, at least that's the drama you're playing out at that moment. But sooner or later, you all abandon that and revive your faith. And so, you do a different play.

Think what you have REALLY seen and heard, . .

. . . think of the truth you really do know and that you really have experienced . . .

. . . and RECOGNIZE it.

In other words, don't deny it, acknowledge it. That's what it means. Recognize it, acknowledge it, like acknowledging your holiness. And don't soft-pedal it to yourself, don't minimize it. Recognize it.

Can you be alone with witnesses like these?

You know what? Not one of you has time to be disturbed or offended by another's behavior. And not one of you really has the time to try to correct another with righteous and god-like determination. Just taking the time to engage in the holy instant is going to keep you busy—too busy to be a busy-body and too busy to react to other's who are upset with you. Because being upset, is the use of your mind that will keep you insane. Choosing for your peace will allow you to behave differently with those who are upset with you.

But you know what? It won't be because you were trying to change the graceful grasses or the tweaking leaves, it will be because you've shifted identification from things to the breeze, to the Movement of Love that is God Being Creation.

So, look forward to a week of miracles.

Okay, I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

March 6th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're starting a new section entitled:

THE REWARD OF [HEALING] TEACHING¹

And in the first edition and the second edition, the wording was changed and I feel it's important to share the difference. It reads:

We have already learned that everyone teaches and teaches all the time. You may have taught well, and yet you may not have learned how to accept the comfort of your teaching.

Now, when I was dictating this to Helen, I did not say, "We have already learned that everyone teaches and teaches all the time." And I did not say, "You may have taught well."

Here's what I said:

You have taught well, and yet you have not learned how to ACCEPT the comfort of your teaching.

Now I shared this because as I said it to Helen, I was speaking directly to her about her. And it was an abrupt shift in context. In the first edition, a segway was given:

We have already learned that everyone teaches and teaches all the time. You may have taught well, and yet you may not have learned how to accept the comfort of your teaching.

Now, that reads well for subsequent readers of the Course but I want it to remain as pointed as it is in the Sparkly Book, the way I said it to Helen:

You have taught well, and yet you have not learned how to ACCEPT the comfort of your teaching.

Now, I'm going to be very frank: Anyone who has studied the Course, and anyone who has been in any way involved in teaching it or sharing it with others, with explanation, this statement would apply to you:

You have taught well, and yet you have not learned how to ACCEPT the comfort of your teaching.

Now the reason this is true—and its part of the meat and potatoes of this whole section we're reading—the reason I say that is because if you have not joined with the Holy Spirit and shifted your allegiance to the Holy Spirit so that you are in communion with . . . so completely in communion with the Holy Spirit, so completely that you're no longer holding yourself apart as someone leaning into or depending upon the Holy Spirit, then you still have the comfort of what you've been teaching to be embodied, embraced, and to have moved you into a new experience of your identity—no longer an orphan, period.

So . . .

You have taught well, and yet you have not learned how to ACCEPT the comfort of your teaching.

You haven't embraced it completely enough to have done this most difficult thing called letting go of control—of abandoning the practice and exercise of control. You haven't arrived at the point where, in doing so, you find that chaos has not occurred, but rather, pure peace, pure safety, pure security in a context of living love that is the environment of your being and of all things.

Now . . .

If you will consider what you have taught, and how alien it is to what you thought you knew, you will be compelled to recognize that your Teacher, . .

. . . that being the Holy Spirit, . .

. . . came from beyond your thought system, and so could look upon it fairly, and perceive it was untrue. And He must have done so from the basis of a very different thought system, and one with NOTHING in common with yours. For certainly what He has taught, and what you have taught through Him, have nothing in common with what you taught before He came. And the results have been to bring peace where there was pain, and suffering has disappeared, to be replaced by joy.

The reason it's important to understand this, is because your experience of the Holy Spirit communicating with you, addressing you in language that you can understand and that means something and is transformational to you, this is experienced in the very same place where you have done all of your orphan-minded thinking, you would say, that you hear the Holy Spirit in your mind and you think in and with your mind. And so, hearing the Holy Spirit is occurring in the same place. And yet, what you hear is entirely different from what you, as the orphan you thought you were—taught, believed and “understood.”

So, it can seem as though you're experiencing two selves: One, yours—the orphan you've always been, who's learning new wonderful things—and another Mind, another Presence in the same place. Another Self that thinks differently from you and yet speaks with you, embraces you in a way that you haven't been embraced before and treats you in a way that transforms you without causing you to feel great guilt.

Now, what I have taught you as we have been moving through this book, is what the book has told us: That the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. Therefore, this is not another self, let's say, a self that is part of the Holy Trinity, which is very different from mankind, the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. So it would seem that in your mind there are two selves: This One that teaches like you've never taught before, and the you that you think you are who takes up most of the space in your mind with all of your thinking.

Why is this important? It's important because salvation lies in a simple shift from where you're giving your allegiance—what you're valuing. It's not complicated. It doesn't require complex learning processes. It constitutes a simple behavior and the most significant one is the easiest one. And that is the practice of neglect. Neglect is effortless and it's the one thing essential to Waking up.

What do you neglect? You neglect to value and practice thinking. You neglect to make so much noise yourself that you can't hear anything, which then makes it possible for you to hear effortlessly.

Now, it's time for you to stop having an “understanding” of the principles of A Course In Miracles. It's time for you to be through having these understandings that you can easily share and rationalize about. It's time for the intellectuality of the Course to be neglected because it's essential for what you've been learning to be embodied.

Now, does that mean through effort of your own? No. It means by indulging in the two-step: Stepping back, hesitating . . . stepping back, not acting immediately out of habit, and asking, "What is the truth here?" Asking of the Holy Spirit, asking of That which is nothing more than your right Mind which, as long as you are pretending to be an orphan, is the Voice for God—the Voice for Truth. The Holy Spirit in you is the Voice for God—the Voice for Truth. It's That of you which you've disowned because you've said "Hey, I would rather have charge of things and make things happen on my own and become somebody by virtue of what I've done." That's all.

You have taught freedom, but you have not learned how to be free.

You see, you can talk a good talk but you haven't learned how to embody it and actually be free. You still haven't found it of more value than anything else to be constantly enquiring of the Holy Spirit, to know how to be, what to say: "What is happening? What's the truth here?"

I have told Paul, "Let me respond to everything."

Now, I have the same function as the Holy Spirit, whether it's with Paul, or any of you. And so, when I say, "Let me respond to everything," I'm not asking him as he sometimes believes, to defer to someone else—to become nothing himself, and just always be the mouthpiece or the actor, acting out someone else's desires. I'm not. That is not what I am when I say, "Let me respond to everything."

I am saying, "Be Still and let me reveal your responses, the you that you divinely Are. Let me share those with you. Let me guide you in using your own true voice and your own true mind, to be in your daily experience so that you might come into a feeling of less awkwardness around this, so that you come into a feeling of its naturalness, so that you don't resist it or feel that it's not really you, or it's better than you."

The point is that you have to let down your intent. You have to withdraw your intent to enact things, authorize things, be the cause of things, so that you might be able to join with the Holy Spirit or with me, and have your true Being and your real Mind illumined for you so that you might lean into It—It being the real You. And as a result of that, feel the naturalness of It and allow yourself ultimately to stay there without asking for my help. This is the point and this is when the comfort of your teaching will be experienced by you.

You have taught freedom, but you have not learned how to be free. We once said, "By their fruits ye shall know them, and they shall know themselves." For it is certain that you judge yourself according to your teaching. The ego's teaching produces immediate results because its decisions are immediately accepted as YOUR choice.

You accept them as YOUR choice. And that's why you have the visibility and tangibility immediately of the ego's thought system—belief system, etc.

But, if you turn to the Holy Spirit and ask: "What is the truth here? What should I say here? What is the appropriate way for me to be right now?" And you let that flow, you will have the immediate results because you're willing to say and acknowledge that it's your choice. That's the point! That's the shift we're talking about. Where, when you listen for the truth and you express it, you don't treat it as though it's some third person event, but rather a first person event. And they are your words and they are your choice.

You say, and Paul does too, he says: "I want to know the truth above and beyond my pet theories and best concepts; I want to know the truth." And I share the truth and he hears it and shares it and lets it be the truth that Raj has shared and does not get the comfort of the truth he has shared that he would get if he claimed it as his choice, if he knew that it was his choice. That the silly thing is; that he asked to know what the truth was. He wants to know the truth—that is his choice. You see?

And you do the same thing. And it's very important when the truth is revealed to you that you acknowledge that it's your experience of truth. Not someone else's. And that to know that truth is your choice. And the truth that is being said will have its instantaneous immediate results when...you...let...it...be... your choice. Because that's the way it works. When it's your choice, you've got it. When it's your choice, you get it.

Everyone says they wish they were wealthy. Well they don't wish they were wealthy because if that was their choice, [snaps fingers] they would instantly be wealthy.

The ego's teaching produces immediate results because its decisions are immediately accepted. . .

. . . I'm going to add, by you . . .

. . . as YOUR choice. And this acceptance means that you are willing to judge yourself accordingly. Cause and effect are very clear in the ego's thought system because all your learning has been directed towards ESTABLISHING the relationship between them. And would you not have faith in what you have so diligently taught yourself to believe?

Of course, you're too proud to do otherwise. All orphans are.

Yet remember how much care you have exerted in choosing it's witnesses, and avoiding those which spoke for the cause of truth and ITS effects.

So what is this saying? It's saying that you have to pay attention. It's mandatory that you pay attention to how you're using your mind so that you are not using it against what you want and thereby denying you the experience of your Birthright as a holy Son or Daughter of God and of the Kingdom of Heaven that is what you are in the middle of.

Does not the fact that you have not learned what you have taught . . .

. . . this meaning, the truth that you've been teaching, the truth that you've heard by virtue of doing the two-step and listening and hearing . . .

Does not the fact that you have not learned what you have taught show you that you do not perceive the Sonship as one?

You say . . . "Well, Raj said it." And some of you may say, "Well, Paul said it."

If you've heard the truth and you recognize the truth, it's yours. It's not someone else's. And yet, the fact that Raj said it and Paul voiced it and you heard it and you claimed it, that demonstrates that the Sonship is One. Because you've let it be One. You haven't held part of it away from you.

"Well, that's what Raj said. I know it's the truth but it's the truth that Raj said."

You keep it at a distance. It needs to be embodied, incorporated. It needs to be owned. You need to let your mind be changed in the sense of recognizing yourself in a declaration of truth that comes out of your mouth as a result of Revelation. It's that simple and it's that beautiful.

Does not the fact that you have not learned what you have taught show you that you do not perceive the Sonship as one? And does it not also show you that you do not regard YOURSELF as one? For it is impossible to teach successfully wholly WITHOUT conviction, and it is equally impossible that conviction be OUTSIDE of you.

Yeah . . . I know. If you let the truth come from the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—and you let it come through your mouth and it is beautiful and it is healing and it is incredible . . . well, that's going to say something about you, isn't it. That might disclose your holiness, which, you're not sure you really want—you're not sure you want anybody to think that well of you. They might start leaning on you, they might start making demands on you and so on and so forth.

They may give you credit which you would appreciate, but in giving you the credit, they may start to lean on you and that part of it is not so hot. So you keep it in the third person. You keep it at a distance and you don't let it show as you, you don't let yourself feel it as you. And that's the call. That's the shift.

You see, it's not just an intellectual shift of ideas where you suddenly grasp the truth as opposed to the error. It's a shift in you that affects your experience of your identity. It renders you holy and if you allow it, you will embrace your holiness with gratitude, you see? . . . with embrace, without resistance, in a way that allows the experience to be identified to you as you, thus changing your experience of yourself.

You could never have taught freedom unless you DID believe in it. And it must be that what you taught came from YOURSELF. And yet, this Self you clearly do not KNOW, . .

. . . this capital "S" Self . . .

And yet, this Self you clearly do not KNOW, and do not recognize . . .

Again:

And yet, this Self you clearly do not KNOW, and do not recognize It even though It functions.

Your holiness, your divine mindedness is ever present and always functioning. And it's always functioning as you experiencing yourself as that. But you've lost the direct experience of it because you have chosen for awhile—too long awhile—to play at being an orphan who has a capacity to do things on its own.

What functions must be THERE.

If you ask the Holy Spirit a question and you get an answer, the Holy Spirit must be there. Simple. Now, if the Holy Spirit responds and you hear it, and the Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind, then you have clearly experienced yourSelf, even though you don't recognize It as such. And so it's necessary to reiterate it as I'm doing tonight. And it's necessary for you to remind yourselves so that you don't easily forget and you can keep doing what will promote your Awakening rather than doing what will prevent it.

What functions must be THERE. And it is only if you deny what it has DONE that you could possibly deny its presence.

This is a course in how to know yourself.

That's it!

This is a course in how to know yourself. You HAVE taught what you are, but have not let what you are teach YOU.

You do . . . even when you're acting as an orphan, you do express love. Love is something the ego, the orphan, is incapable of expressing. Love doesn't exist in it. But even though you're claiming to be an orphan, you do express love. But you haven't let the love that you've expressed teach you. You haven't been willing to acknowledge that that love is divine, that it has its Source in God. And that its expression through you is an expression of God through you. And that's why when it is genuinely expressed it heals.

And then you say, "It was a miracle. God performed a miracle." See, as though you weren't involved. Oh, course, you don't want to be too involved in that kind of thing, you know. But you don't want to suffer sin, disease and death. So you've got to become clear and you've got to stop standing on both sides of the fence. That's what this is about.

You have been very careful to avoid the obvious, and not to see the REAL cause and effect relationship that is perfectly apparent.

[Repeats] You have been very careful to avoid the obvious, . .

. . . the obvious is that you're the Son of God or the Daughter of God. And you haven't not wanted . . .

. . . to see the REAL cause and effect relationship that is perfectly apparent.

. . . in the Son or Daughter of God.

Yet within you is EVERYTHING you taught. What can it be that has NOT learned it? It must be this that is REALLY outside yourself, not by your own projection, but in TRUTH.

So . . .

What can it be that has NOT learned it?

Well, it has to be this fanciful sense of selfhood—of independent selfhood—that doesn't really exist in actuality. And that's why it must be outside yourself. You see? And it's not outside yourself by your own projection. It's outside of you because it has to be outside of you. It doesn't exist. It doesn't exist, therefore, its being outside of you is not a projection. It is the truth.

And it is this that you have taken in that is NOT you. What you accept into your minds does not REALLY change them. Illusions are but beliefs in what is not there. And the seeming conflict between truth and illusion can only be resolved by separating yourself from the ILLUSION, and NOT from truth.

So, how do you separate yourself from the illusion? By not creating the illusion through continued thinking and reasoning that starts from a faulty premise.

There's only one way to separate yourself from illusion and that is, to neglect to energize and seem to create a false sense of self with rights and capacities, abilities that it couldn't possibly have because God didn't create it.

And how do you do that? You do that, as I said last week, by shutting up, becoming silent. In the silence, the conscious awareness that you Are, continues to be what it Is, the paying of attention—attentiveness. Attentiveness, you could say, is inquisitiveness. It's an aliveness, an awakensness to Something. And in that attentive silence, the Movement of Creation that has been going on constantly, can register with you. Truth can register with you. You will call it Revelation. That's how you separate yourself from illusion.

You join with the Holy Spirit by neglecting to energize the ego you thought you were, the ego that you have been taught that you are. Hmm. . . that means coming humbly. You see? Arrogance doesn't exist in the quietness of your being. Arrogance, authoritativeness, willfulness does not exist in the silence—in the silence that is an attentive conscious mind.

Your teaching has already done this, for the Holy Spirit is part of YOU. Created by God, . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

... is both God AND you, as you are God and Him together. For God's answer to the separation added more to you than you tried to take away. He protected both your creations and you together, keeping one with you . . .

Paul: I'm sorry . . .

... keeping one with you what you would exclude.

This is important.

He . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

... is both God AND you, as you are God and Him . . .

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

... together.

Now, I've said before, that you are not God, but God is all there is of you. Therefore, where you are, God is all there is. You see, there's a unity and an integrity: You, the Holy Spirit and God are One. And that One is God. The incredible perfection of Being, the incredible perfection of all existence becomes available to you to experience when you let you, the Holy Spirit and God be all there is, and that being God.

What does that mean? It simply means that you neglect to reenergize and reinforce your thinking, all of the past results of your thinking, all of your memory and you say, "I know nothing of myself. I never have known anything of truth of myself. And as a result, my experience of being the Son of God has been a troubled one, a difficult one, a painful one, a sick one, and I don't want to have that experience any more. And so this me, who I have tried to build up into a big voice, is going to become silent and just be the presence of Mind that can recognize things. And I'm going to let the silence endure until it's filled with what God is filling it up with, until everything that God has been filling it up with registers with me." That's your prayer. That's the practice. And it's practicing this that will bring you back into the comfort of your teaching, the one that you're not yet experiencing, but you need to be, you should be, you deserve to be.

Will you yield to God? Will you defer to that which is nothing more than your right Mind? When I ask the question, it sounds a little silly. Will you be willing to defer to that which is your right Mind? “Well, yeah, why wouldn’t I?” Well, why aren’t you?

But that’s the call. And so, instead of pretending that you know everything, you need to start asking, “What is everything?” You need to become curious again, full of vibrant attentiveness and expectation. You won’t find that as long as you’re looking to yourself and relying upon yourself. And life is not going to be joyful.

But life is going to be joyful because more and more individuals are getting it. And as a result, more and more individuals are willing to lean into their Source, lean into their right Mind, lean into the Brotherhood, do exactly the opposite of what has caused an experience of orphanhood, which is separation—a holding of oneself apart. You see, that’s where the neglect comes in. Neglect to reinforce that. Neglect to value it.

What you accept into your minds does not REALLY change them. Illusions are but beliefs in what is not there. And the seeming conflict between truth and illusion can only be resolved by separating yourself from the ILLUSION, and NOT from truth.

And again:

Your teaching has already done this, for the Holy Spirit is part of YOU. Created by God, He left neither God nor His creation. He is both God AND you, as you are God and Him together. For God’s answer to the separation added more to you than you tried to take away.

Such love, such love that you are constantly being held in, nurtured by and kept eternal while you pretend to be a mortal enjoying the thrill and the challenge of getting the most that you can before you die, and becoming the most that you can before you die.

He protected both your creations and you together, keeping one with you what you would exclude. And they will take the place of what you took in to replace them. They are quite real, as part of the Self you do not know.

The Self that you claim not to be, the Self that is the holy Son of God, that you would rather nobody knew you were. You see?

And they communicate to you through the Holy Spirit, . . .

. . . your creations . . .

. . . and their power and gratitude to you for their creation they offer gladly to your teaching of yourself, who is their home.

You see? Your teaching of yourself . . . your teaching of yourself is your accepting the comfort of your teaching. Everything is teaching you about yourself, because everything is the visibility and tangibility of your Individuality. And your Individuality is the Presence of God.

Come on . . . this week please . . . please be willing to embrace your holiness. Please stop denying it. Please stop resisting it. Please stop covering it up.

Now, being holy is not a behavior. So you don't cover it up by a different . . . you don't be holy by adopting a new behavior. You be holy by neglecting to use and reinforce the orphan mentality. You stop covering it up by engaging in the two-step. You stop covering it up by letting yourself be in your right Mind. And you let yourself be in your right Mind by what? By desiring to Know from It. That's how. You will find yourself knowing from It, if you will neglect to do so much thinking and so much talking and so much asserting.

Now you may not be too happy with what I've shared. It may sound like work. It may sound like work that is not very satisfying. But I'm going to ask you: How satisfying is sin, disease and death? How satisfying is it, even if you're very young, to be able to think, "Oh, I've got sixty years to go before I'll die. I have plenty of time to live." How do you like that? You shouldn't even have that thought in your mindset, because the holy Son of God is the direct manifestation of God and is therefore as eternal as God.

Please, again, value being Awake. Value it enough to pay attention so that you stop doing what keeps you from Waking up, so that you neglect to do what keeps you from Waking up.

And I don't usually ask this, but I'm going to suggest and ask that you read what we've covered tonight at least once a day to remind you where your attention needs to be, so that you don't get lost and so that you don't have unnecessary misery, and so that maybe you're lifted out of the whole frame of reference in which misery goes on, because you've let God's perspective be yours, which it always has been even though you've been ignoring it.

I love you very much. And I will be with every single one of you this week in support of your making the shift. And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

March 20th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're reading from a section called, "The Reward of Teaching." What do you think the reward of teaching is?

The reward of teaching is joy. And you might say, "Joy for whom?" Joy for the teacher. And why does the teacher experience joy? Because the student has learned. The teacher teaches, the student learns. Light-bulbs go on. Acknowledgment occurs. Acknowledgment of what was being taught. And that light of recognition where there had been darkness before—ignorance before, you could say—makes it worth everything that the teacher had to do to cause the illumination to happen.

The student gives the teacher joy by confirming the teacher's function—that the teacher's function was successful.

Now, how is it that the student learned? The only way the student learned was by virtue of his or her abandoning resistance to the Knowing. Abandoning resistance to what's being illuminated—letting it in. The student learns by listening. Simple. The two-step: One hesitates, one enquires, "What is the truth here?" . . . and one listens.

And if one listens without resistance, without reluctance, revealing occurs. The light-bulb goes on and the student has learned. And what happens? He experiences awe, he experiences joy and that is what he teaches—that is what he is teaching. I'm going to put it this way: That is what he finds himself teaching.

It's not a plan. The student didn't say, "I'm going to consider very carefully here what my teacher is saying, so that I might grasp it's full meaning and have an 'ah-ha' experience so that I might light up with the biggest smile that has ever crossed my face so that my teacher may know that he or she has succeeded."

No. That's not teaching. No, when the learning actually occurs and the joy is felt, the experience of joy and the act of joy that happens spontaneously becomes the teaching.

If the teacher is having a bad day that day, he or she may not notice it and may not experience the joy. But the point is, that the teaching has occurred. And the biggest point is that the teaching wasn't planned. The teaching wasn't calculated. The teaching wasn't something that the student was trying to do.

What am I trying to say here? I'm trying to say that because everyone is emerging from the orphan mentality where life is a matter of doing things that cause credibility to be associated with the orphan, then there is going to be an automatic assumption that when I said, "Listen, learn and do," that the doing will be something planned, the doing will be something calculated and methodical toward a certain end, not an uncertain end. And yet, the doing—the only doing that means anything and is the meaning embodied in that statement, "Listen, learn and do,"—is the spontaneous lighting up of your Being, the uncalculated expression of awe. That's the doing.

Well that isn't quite so satisfying to the orphan mentality. That isn't quite so satisfying to the ego. Because of course, if the meaningful teaching is going to occur spontaneously without any plan, without any form of control being exercised, there's not going to be anyone present to take credit for it and to be justified as a credible, valuable individuality, which is of course, as we've been discussing, the whole point of life for the ego.

Now, if I say, "You don't know who you Are . . . you don't Know who you Are," you're likely to say, "Well, who the hell does he think he is telling me I don't know who I am? Of course I know who I am. I can show you my credentials, my pedigree, as it were."

But now let me say it a different way: "You don't Know who you Are . . . you holy Son of God . . . you holy Daughter of God."

". . . Oh, that's what you're talking about . . . um-m . . . well, that's nice talk and well, . . . what if I am the holy Son of God, really. You know, maybe I am, but I'm not going to explore the possibility, I'm not going to try to find out that it's really true and actually let myself be changed so that my actions embody my holiness and make it obvious." You see?

The very fact that you would be reluctant to embrace It demonstrates the fact that you do not know who you Are. And yet, I must tell you that you are not the orphan you think you are. You are not the independent agent you think you are. And you are not just a happenstance—a fluke a nature—something that just popped up out of nowhere because of a sperm and an egg, that will live for a time and wither and die, never to be seen again.

Someone has to tell you that you are a holy Son of God or a holy Daughter of God, and do it so persistently and so matter of factly that you will finally decide to let go of your resistance—like the student, to learn . . . to learn something new . . . to be changed by the learning. I must do it.

You are . . . you are, right now, the Presence of God. You are right now what God is Being . . . I'm going to say, right where you are. Even more appropriately, you are right now that Mind, that conscious awareness which is inseparable from God—not different from God—including all that God knows, and therefore, all that God is, you Are. You and your Father are One. And God is that One. Your Father is that One.

Now, the biggest learning that is occurring right now, the main lesson that's being taught right now is, that it is your function to be a teacher—a teacher who fulfills his capacity as a teacher—by being the student, by listening humbly and with uninhibited curiosity. Why? So that you might be filled with what God is filling . . . being with, that is called Creation. So that you might stand in awe of It and so that your joy at the experience of It lights up your Being and teaches everyone else while everyone else finds themselves also teaching involuntarily the conscious experience of what God is Being that they are having . . . that they're having. Why? Because they have neglected to hold themselves apart, trying to be independent, trying to have their own ideas, trying to have their own agendas.

Your function as a co-creator with God is to be that presence of Mind which is undefended—not side-tracked by agendas of its own—which stands ready to see what God is going to do next, so that whatever the expression of awe is that comes out at that moment because of the experience of Creation that is being had, will become the teaching that everyone learns from, while at the same time being the joy that one could say is heard as the music of the spheres—universal harmony, the full expression of joy and love.

Now, I realize I'm speaking in very grand, large terms. But all of this is encapsulated in the idea of the two-step.

So you want to be a teacher . . . so you want to be a do-er? Then become receptive. Become not masculine and assertive, but feminine and undefended and receptive and inviting of life.

Be willing to be a humiliated orphan. And in the absence of any capacity to take credit for anything worthwhile, be the womb in which Creation occurs. You're not being the place that causes Creation, but you are being the place where you allow Creation. And by virtue of the allowing, experience it in its totality with the fullness of Meaning that God is Being in it.

What you find yourself experiencing and acknowledging is you, for lack of better words, creating your recognition of God there . . . there . . . there, is your creation. It is your part in Creation.

God unrecognized is non-existent.

Now, what happens if you decide to do something all by yourself? If you decide to play, "Let's pretend I am going to be an authority. I'm going to pretend that I can create things on my own. I'm going to stop fulfilling my function of recognizing God there. I'm going to do things so that I can say I recognize myself there . . . and I recognize myself there."

Well, do you think that what you truly Are stops being what it is while you play "Let's pretend?" You think that while you're playing Let's pretend, your pretensions become actual, and what you really Are [chuckle] sort of evaporates? Absolutely not!

And so that's why it seems like there are two selves. The moment you decided to dally with the ego and an ego-sense of things, all that you truly were—and I've said this many times before—became held in trust by the Father until you decided not to play "Let's pretend" any longer. And this Self, held in trust, has been called the Holy Spirit . . . the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit.

Now there's really only the Father Being the Son—the Movement of Creation. But the moment the Son decided to play "Let's pretend" and ignore what he really Was . . . ah-h . . . at that point the Father made a Gift. That's the simplest way of putting it. The Gift was that your divinity—your holiness—was held in trust, untouched by your imagination, and it was called the Holy Spirit. And so, there's the holy trinity.

The moment you remember who you Are, the moment you stop resisting the conscious experience of who you Are, the moment you become a true teacher by being a forever student, it will no longer be the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. It will be the Father, Who's Son is that which acknowledges and recognizes his Source: The Father, in all of Creation. And although this is not accurate, it's the Son's place to put his seal of approval on the Father's Act of Creation. And that's what makes Creation Real. Everything you put your seal of approval on is your creation—your confirmation of what it truly is. And your recognition of the Father in each and every thing is essential to Heaven, essential to Reality.

Now, how many of you since we last gathered two weeks ago, did spend time doing the two-step more frequently than you had before?

And I'm going to ask two things: How many of you, if you're being honest, found that you didn't really like the idea? How many of you found you still resisted it? You did it but you did it with your teeth set on edge. You did it but you'd rather not have done it.

Now, it's good to know that. Because most everybody thinks they would love to be enlightened, that they would love to be Awake—that Salvation would come for them. But the fact is, there's much resistance to it. And the reason there's resistance to it is this need for a fix of self-importance.

So what's the learning in this? That you found that you were willing to do it but you surprisingly enough, weren't happy about it.

The learning in it is, that you're going to have to be determined. You're going to have to persist in the face of a conditioned reluctance. And you're going to have to persist because the conditioned reluctance which you think is going to save your credibility for you, is actually going to deny your experience of your holiness—of who you truly Are as the holy Son of God and not an orphan and not a fluke of nature.

You're going to have to persist.

I encourage you not to waste energy fussing about it—grousing about it! It will just take your energy away. And all you have to say is, "I'm not going to do that. I don't have to react here. I don't have to be upset about this. All I need to do is keep moving forward in the face of the suggestion that I'm going to lose something essential to my being, because that suggestion, that I'm going to lose something essential to my being, is a lie.

This takes practice. This takes self-discipline.

Now, how many of you in the last two weeks listened for Guidance and were willing to ask yourselves the question: "How much am I willing to risk? How much am I willing to chance that there's a God? How much am I willing to risk letting go of, to see if in fact, the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand . . . to see if in fact, a sudden shift of perception occurs that's called, 'a Miracle?'"

How much of a risk are you willing to take to see if something incredibly beyond your present sense of things is available for you to experience?

Now, let's say, that within reason, you said you were willing to do that. And so, you joined in the two-step process and listened. Paul did that starting the day after the last meeting. And we talked more than we had in quite awhile—at least more frequently. And I guided him. When he asked, what was appropriate here? I shared it with him. Not only did I share with him what was appropriate, I shared with him the feeling, the motivation, the energy around carrying out what was appropriate.

This caused him to experience himself as being a little bit more aggressive than he usually is. In some ways, a little bit more pushy in certain circumstances, where it was appropriate to encourage someone else to move across their threshold, to act when they didn't feel like acting.

Paul tends not to put himself in those kinds of positions. It's a position best described as involvement.

There were things that it was important for someone to do. And Paul knew it and Paul felt the importance of it although he did not know why it was important. It was just appropriate for him to be the place where the feeling and the ideas were expressed of the appropriateness of taking an action that the other one lacked confidence to follow through on.

Now, one might say, "Did Paul have a problem with that?" Or "Why would Paul have a problem with that?" Well, first of all, that is not his manner. Like I said, he tends to be involved in very uninvolved ways, where coercion very seldom comes into play where he, being a force for movement of some sort, doesn't happen.

So that caused some uneasiness. But he had said and felt the willingness and the commitment to risking for the sake of his good, for the sake of everything that I'm teaching, and everything that's coming out of his mouth with all of you. And so he did it. But here's (and many of you will recognize this) here's the clincher, the old habit, the engrained habit: He said, (and here was his reluctance, here was his conditioned resistance) "This isn't what I'm supposed to be doing . . . this isn't my holy work."

The smile on his face is as much his as it is mine. He feels the humor of it as fully as I do now. The involvement that he participated in had nothing to do with spirituality. It had to do with a very practical mundane sort of meeting of the need.

“Well, he wasn’t getting the transcript up on the website! Well, he wasn’t contemplating what had been discussed in the last meeting. Well, he wasn’t reading the section of the lesson from the last meeting that I suggested everyone read once a day.”

“Well, he wasn’t supposed to be doing this!”

Now, it’s important to know this. Paul’s not the only one who’s had this experience. Many of you have too. And if you’re not careful, you could find yourself abandoning the two-step entirely so that you can dutifully take care of things you have been conditioned to believe are your actual holy work, even though your holiness is something you’d like to keep quiet.

Now the point is this: The Guidance that you get when you listen, whether it’s from your Guide or from me, is identically the same Guidance you would get from the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—because we all have the same function, because you all have the same need.

And the need is for you to be reintroduced to and become reacquainted with your Self—the One that Knows the truth, the One that’s held in trust while you dally with the ego.

If you are not willing to do the two-step and enquire, “What is the truth here?” and be, what I would call, “Full open consciousness, totally non-resistive consciousness,” ready to let in truth in its totality, you are not going to be bringing with you any filter or any groove, so to speak, or plan for the truth that you’re going to be receiving to fit into.

If you want to Wake up—which you do—you’re simply going to need to be willing to listen for what you’re not expecting and to listen for that which, for lack of better words, doesn’t add up to the criteria of your orphan-mindset.

Paul went through the week after the last meeting caught up, you might say, in a Movement—the breeze we were talking about, that we have talked about, the Movement of Love, the Movement of Creation. And in allowing himself to be in the flow of It without exercising control based upon previously learned criteria, he behaved in an entirely new way that didn’t make sense to his previous standards. It was utterly original, utterly spontaneous and yet totally genuine.

And this is the kind of experience you will have. It will be unexpected, uncalculated. You will say, "Why am I doing this?" But you will also have the accompanying push, the accompanying support for being perfectly consistent with the Movement so that your behavior is utterly appropriate according to some standard of appropriateness that you haven't embraced before.

And as a result of Paul doing this, each day right up to the end of the week (last Saturday) when I told Paul we would not hold the meeting, "Oh, I'm not supposed to be doing this I'm supposed to be having A Course In Miracles Study Group, where I let Raj speak."

Oh...really! Your guide would say to your comments of that sort, "Oh...really! Oh...really? You got God locked into Saturday night doing exactly what you expect to happen? Maybe God will be being you in a different way as part of the Movement of Creation, and maybe in the process of your letting it, your allowing it, you will learn something."

What did Paul learn? He learned how dedicated he was to his concepts of what is right and what isn't right, of what fits and what doesn't fit. And yet had he successfully bound himself to his preconceptions, the numerous miracles that happened during that week would not have happened.

And I'll tell you something else: When you do the two-step, when you yield and when you let yourself be guided by the Holy Spirit or by me or by your Guide . . .

Paul: Just a moment.

. . . you will come to an inner realization of just how futile and foolish and unproductive it is to listen with a bias, to listen with an agenda, or to think that you know how things ought to be.

"Thy will not mine be done."¹

Now let's go into the book. And I'm going to back up to the middle of the first sentence of the paragraph.

. . . the Holy Spirit is part of YOU. Created by God, He . . .²

. . . the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . left neither God nor . . .

. . . God's . . .

... creation.

[Repeats] ...left neither God nor His creation. He

... the Holy Spirit ...

... is both God AND you, as you are God and Him ...

... the Holy Spirit ...

... together. For God's answer to the separation added more to you than you tried to take away.

What was God's answer to the separation? The Holy Spirit ... and it became the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. God held in trust all of you while you chose just a little bit of what you are in your Totality and said, "This is me! This is me! This little piece here is me. And everything I believe about this little bit is to do about the way things are."

So ...

... God's answer to the separation added more to you than you tried to take away. He protected both your creations and you together, ...

... mind you, up to that point you were being the Presence that recognizes God in the Movement of Creation. And your recognition of the Movement was your creation—your part of the Creation. It's that simple.

He ...

... God ...

... protected both your creations and you together, keeping one with you what you would exclude.

You see? "Oh no, I'm not the holy Son of God. I'm a human being. I'm a powerful human being." Or, "I'm a human being and I am going to become a powerful human being."

He protected both your creations and you together, keeping one with you what you would exclude. And they will take the place of what you took in ...

... the tiny little stuff ... the tiny little self-definition ...

. . . they will take the place of what you took in to replace them.
They are quite real, . .

. . . your creations—all of Creation, in which you had uninhibitedly recognized God IN, before you decided to be an orphan.

They are quite real, as part of the Self you do not know.

Do you see how important this is? There is a Self you do not know. And it is Real and it is actual at this moment while you pretend it isn't and can define yourself as a physical organism, the result of millions of years of evolution—a physical presence and that's all.

The Self that consciously participated in the Movement of Creation, fulfilling Its place, is still present . . . has gone nowhere . . . is not unconscious of any of Creation. You might say that you're experiencing a split-mind, in which there is this little self that you made up that you're giving total credence to, and the Self that you Are that hasn't changed and is present and functioning fully in Its God-given capacity at this moment.

Do you catch what I'm saying? What I'm saying is, that you seem very sure of who you are. But there is a You that you are not conscious of that is actual and is Real and is united with the Father consciously at this moment and everything about It is insinuating Itself into this tiny self-identification that you're holding on so tightly to.

We've talked before about the fact that you're accompanied by mighty companions—you're accompanied by the mighty companion that is your Self right now. It isn't something you have to grow into. You see? It's fully present. It's fully developed. It is Whole right now. And It is loving you. It has been constantly loving you and being an invitation to you to come back into your right Mind. It's a mighty companion because it's the Presence of God, you holy Son of God, you holy Daughter of God.

Now, because your orphan mindset is such a habit, you are going to have to develop some discipline and some determination. Because you will find that you won't necessarily, or life will not necessarily give you time to sit down and meditate your way into the Kingdom of Heaven. You're going to have to start making the choice to want to know what the truth is here . . . and here . . . and here, . . . right in the middle of the stresses and activities of daily life. You're not going to be able to manage to get a little vacation from life to consider the really important spiritual things. And you're going to have to not grouse about it and react to it.

It would be nice to be able to sit down and meditate and get into your peace, and a lot of the time you can. But let's abandon the idea that it's essential. It is going to become increasingly essential for you to be in the middle of the dramas of life, "listening" so that you might hear the appropriate things to do that identify the miraculous, so that the miraculous can happen. Why? Because you "listened"—you were a student and you learned and you're being lit up with the recognition of It. And you did, you taught, you were that presence that caused another who is being a student, listening, to learn and become lit up with the truth and rejoice in something that never would have occurred in your daily life if both of you had tried to be dutiful teachers of the truth—the truth that everyone has already known, the truth that's written down in this book or that book, the positive thinking that everyone has said would make a difference. You see?

Rehearsing the old does not involve learning at all. Rehearsing the old means there's no student present. There's someone trying to be a teacher, trying to be a damn good teacher, an effective teacher, so that they might get promoted to be principle of the school.

No learning . . . no learning and none of the genuine behavior that comes from the humility involved in being a student and the learning that causes the ability to teach without credentials—to teach with the Spirit of God.

Your creations . . .

They are quite real, as part of the Self you do not know. And they communicate to you through the Holy Spirit, and their power and gratitude to you for their creation they offer gladly to your teaching of yourself, who is their home.

See, that's part of the meaning of being accompanied by mighty companions. You're accompanied by your creations, which are intent upon re-igniting your awareness of the Presence of God in them that you saw before, which is what caused them to be your creations and which caused you to know Who you Are.

You know, when you're willing to look at a thing, whether it's a flower or a clod of dirt or a hang-nail, when you're willing to look at it in an undefended, innocent manner, you are inviting an experience of illumination, you're inviting an experience in which whatever it is you're looking at is seen anew by you, where you're able to recognize that it's not just a physical thing but that it's, for lack of better words, energy. And it's the energy of Light and the energy of Love and it is divine energy . . . you holy Son of God . . . you holy orchid of God . . . you holy glass tabletop.

And when you experience it as Love, you have the inescapable experience of being loved by It and everything else around it, everything else around you takes on this meaning or you let it in more fully and it expands and you discover that everything that you thought was just matter, is the Presence of God wholly and loving you. You realize how embraced you are by that which is Love, because that's what Love does, It loves you, It loves everything.

So, this mighty companion, your Self that is always with you, is loving you right now. The integrity of your ultimate Being is present and active right now in this moment. And fortunately, that's the only other choice you have available to you to experience. Of course you have the choice of the orphan mentality that you are constantly reinforcing. But you only have this one other choice. So it's not complicated.

You have the choice to shift your consciousness, to shift your attention. You have that capacity. That's all that's required. And all you're doing is shifting your attention from a deluded way of perceiving to the true clear-minded awareness that it's your Birthright to be experiencing . . . you holy Son or Daughter of God.

You who are host to God are also host to them.

Your creations.

For nothing real has ever left the mind of its creator. And what is not real was never THERE.

Again, it will seem more and more clear to you at an experiential level that there seem to be two selves in this same place where you are. And you are going to have to make a choice for one or the other . . . you are making a choice for one or the other right now.

You are not two selves in conflict.

It's going to seem like that. And that's why you're going to have to become determined and disciplined to choose for the Holy Spirit in you, rather than your current mindset. And you're going to have to constantly ask, "What's appropriate here? What's appropriate now?" . . . regardless of what you think is appropriate.

You're going to have to care to inquire of Something that Knows beyond your present-limited-perception of things. And what is that going to mean? It's going to mean that you're going to have to trust, more than you have ever been willing to trust in your whole life—as you think of your whole life. Because the simple fact is, that in your orphan mentality your distorted perception says that nothing is actually trustworthy. And that is why you must exercise maximal control.

You're going to have to arrive at a point where you see that that is just a style of being that you have adopted—it isn't true—so that you might with determination choose to listen for the Voice for God, the Voice for Truth in you now . . . now.

It might mean that you're going to have a week that never would have happened in your life before and two weeks and a month and a year and an eternity, where you never go back to thinking you know anything and that you are capable of acting on your own.

You are not two selves in conflict.

And I'm going to add: Even though it will seem that you are.

What is beyond God? If you who hold Him . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . and whom He holds ARE . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . the universe, . . .

. . . all of Creation. That's what that means, all of Creation.

If you who hold Him and whom He holds ARE the universe, all else must be OUTSIDE, where NOTHING is.

Now this might not seem understandable if we hadn't talked about the things we've talked about tonight.

You have taught this, . . .

[Repeats] You have taught this, . . .

"Oh, wait a minute, you just said that I am an orphan." No, you think you are, but right along side this imagination that you're an independent agent, the Self that you Are has continued to be Itself fully. You're just blocking it out. So you have taught this. The Self that you Are has taught this uninterruptedly.

. . . and from far off in the universe, yet not beyond yourself, the witnesses to your teaching have gathered to help you learn.

What does that mean? It means that all of your creations, which are as far flung as the universe . . .

. . . have gathered to help you learn.

Do you see the integrity of Being, and you see how you couldn't possibly arrive at any other point than Awakening, simply because God is All and nothing else can prevail?

You know what? Nothing else really is prevailing. You just have an imagination that something else is prevailing. And imagination is flimsy, insubstantial.

So your Waking up is not difficult. It's a matter of where you're bringing your attention and how consistently you're keeping your attention there.

Their gratitude . . .

. . . the gratitude of your creations . . .

has joined with yours and God's to strengthen your faith in what you taught.

To strengthen your, we'll say, presently limited faith in what the Self that you Are, taught.

For what you taught is true.

Is it beginning to sink in that there is a Real You, a Self that you Are right now that you have been unconscious of, that is being the full Presence of God, that constitutes a mighty Companion—a Companion far greater than any puny little fears you experience—that is standing on behalf of your abandoning these flimsy imaginations that seem to bind you so completely? What Love, again.

Alone, you stand outside your teaching . . .

. . . outside the teaching of your Self . . .

. . . and APART from it. But WITH them you must learn that you but taught YOURSELF, . . .

Well, you know what? You're not going to learn that you're teaching yourself until you become a student, until you're willing to let Something outside of your piss-ant, personal, authoritative control of everything.

[He did not read] . . . and learned from the conviction you shared with them.

This year you will begin to learn, . .

. . . that means that you will find the humility that it takes to truly listen and abandon the biases you have previously brought to your listening, to see to it that your learning does not violate the truths that you have decided are the truth.

This year you will begin to learn, and make learning commensurate with teaching.

Now you understand how learning and teaching actually work.

[He did not read] You have chosen this by your own willingness to teach.

Though you seemed to suffer for it, the joy of teaching will yet be yours.

You see, that joy, that "A-ha!" that your student experiences will bring you the joy that's inherent in teaching. And your being the student, as I said, and letting the learning occur, so that you light up with the joy of Being and teach others through that joy, that will be yours.

Now the interesting thing that we cannot finish without pointing out is, that although that week where Paul was doing all the things that were not what he was supposed to be doing, ended up illuminating the holiness of the Movements that occurred during that week for those with whom Paul was involved, even though holiness and spirituality was not the subject matter.

No matter how mundane the activity you're engaged in, if you are engaged in it because you have been inspired into the involuntary and uncontrolled engagement in it, everyone involved will be more aware of God than you can imagine. And that is the miracle.

Though you seemed to suffer for it, the joy of teaching will yet be yours. For the joy of teaching is in the LEARNER, who offers it to the teacher in gratitude, and shares it with him. As you learn, your gratitude to your Self, Who teaches you what He is, will grow and help you honor Him. And you will learn His power and strength and purity, and love Him as His Father does.

. . . your Self.

His Kingdom has no limits and no end, and there is nothing in Him that is not perfect and eternal. All this is . . .

. . . who? . . .

All this is YOU, and nothing outside of this IS you.

And you'll have that experience when you let go of this thing outside of you that you've been imagining and holding onto, called the ego-frame of reference, the orphan mentality.

To your most holy Self . . .

. . . you holy Son of God and Daughter of God . . .

. . . all praise is due for what you are, . . .

I know, you still don't think that's Who you Are. But if you'll listen to what I'm saying and if you will engage in learning, you will have the experience of it. And that's the point.

To your most holy Self all praise is due for what you are, and for what He is Who created you as you are. Sooner or later must everyone bridge the gap which he imagines exists between his selves. Each one

. . . each one of you . . .

. . . builds this bridge, which carries him ACROSS the gap as soon as he is willing to expend some little effort on behalf of bridging it.

You see? That's the meat and potatoes of it. The meat and potatoes of it isn't hard work, it's a matter of deciding where you're going to give your attention and then giving it with commitment. That simple. That's it.

Each one builds this bridge, . . .

Nobody else. Oh, don't wait for Maitreya. Don't wait for anyone else.

Each one builds this bridge, . . .

. . . out of his own commitment, out of his own desire to be the holy Son of God or Daughter of God.

Each one builds this bridge, which carries him ACROSS the gap as soon as he is willing to expend some little effort on behalf of bridging it.

But listen:

His little efforts are powerfully supplemented by the strength of Heaven, and by the united will of all who make Heaven what it is, being joined within it.

All the holy Sons and Daughters of God.

And so the one who would cross over is literally transported there.

That's a promise. But you've got to build the bridge. The bridge between this self and this Self that you think are somewhere between your ears, with commitment.

Your bridge is builded stronger than you think, and your foot is planted firmly on it.

You holy Son of God, you holy Daughter of God. Your foot has to be on it, because you're the Father of the Prodigal Son or Daughter Who's gone out to have this fantastic fantasy of being a mortal and imagining all of it up. But the Self that you Are is what you Are, not the other.

Your bridge is builded stronger than you think, and your foot is planted firmly on it. Have no fear that the attraction of those who stand on the other side and wait for you will not draw you safely across.

That means those Who are already Awake, but it also means all of your creations.

Have no fear that the attraction of those who stand on the other side and wait for you will not draw you safely across. For you WILL come where you would be, . .

. . . and because the Self that you Are is the only Self there is that is where you would be in spite of the fight you put up against letting it in, against letting go of what's causing you to feel limited and suffering.

For you WILL come where you would be, and where your Self awaits you.

Don't get too conceptual now. Where your Self awaits you is at the other end of your attention. That's all. Your Self awaits you at the other end of your attention. The question is: Where are you going to give your attention?

Good news. Let this be a fantastic week.

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Good evening you holy Sons and Daughters of God. It is the acknowledgement of your holiness, your willingness to embrace it that actively reconnects you with your Father and sets the scene for returning to your right Mind or, might I say, letting your right Mind be returned to you by virtue of your not holding yourself apart from It any longer.

We've talked about the fact that you travel with mighty companions, not the least of which is your Self—the Holy Spirit. Not only that, you are companioned with by all of your creations and they all wait for you on the other side of the bridge, as it were, that goes across the little gap between illusion and Reality. In fact, they are mighty enough that they constitute an attraction that will help bring you across the bridge once you have decided to bring the necessary amount of self-discipline and determination to cross it and follow through with commitment.

Now there's a reason you're not on the other side of the bridge right now. And in order to cross the bridge, you're going to have to look squarely at it so that you may release it, because it is the energizing—the reinforcement of it—that has kept you ignorant of your Father and of your Self.

This something is called "The special hate relationship."

I know we've been talking about the beautifulness of you as the holy Son or Daughter of God. And there's a reason for it. Not only is it true of you, not only is it the truth about you, the knowledge of it is what gives you the impetus, as it were, to reach for it, to be willing to re-embrace it.

Now, there's only one . . . there is only one special hate relationship. And you're likely to be surprised at who it's with. It's with God. Strong words . . . special hate relationship with your Father? It's not too strong a word.

When you decided you would rather see things your way, when you decided you would rather define what things are and you got a divorce from your Father, you stood in flat denial of His Place in your existence—the fact that He actually is the Source of your Being. You also separated yourself from your Birthright, which caused you, as we have discussed many times, to immediately experience fear and guilt.

Now, you took on the challenge that fear and guilt represented. You didn't take it as your sanity telling you, you were in unreal territory, that you were doing something impossible to do . . . and to stop. And so fear and guilt became forever present with you as a part of existence.

Now, fear of what? What would the fear be about? There's only one thing at this point that the fear could be about and that would be that you would be found out that you had denied your Father. That in fact, you were in a hate relationship with Him because you said, "I have nothing to do with Him. I want nothing to do with Him. I want nothing to do with whatever it is I might deserve in terms of inheritance from Him because I want to experience my independence."

When you're in denial of your Source, and subsequently in denial of who you Are because you lose the direct experience of who you Are and your divine Birthright, that is an act of hate. Self-denial is the most intense form of delusion and it has negative effects.

So, let's go into the book. New section:

ILLUSION AND REALITY OF LOVE¹

Be not afraid to look upon the special hate relationship, . .

Now this might seem to be an abrupt shift, after talking for awhile about the holy Son of God that you Are and the mighty companions and your creations and so on and so forth, and the availability you have of the holy instant to access your holiness, to access the direct experience of the Father and to come back into your right Mind. But this step is the next step once you decide to engage in the holy instant, once you decide to engage in reclaiming your divinity—this must be looked at.

Be not afraid to look upon the special hate relationship for freedom lies in looking at it.

If you don't look at it, you won't realize it's there. You don't go around thinking, "I hate God . . . I hate God!" But the fact that you won't let God direct your paths on an ongoing daily basis in every instance, is a demonstration of the fact that you're in an oppositional relationship. It's that simple.

So, you're unaware of it. You can't possibly come Home as long as you're unaware of it. Which is why we've been talking . . . and talking and talking about coming Home, and how to come Home, and the steps. And now we've come to this place where the step is to acknowledge that you Are a holy Son of God.

Well, this experience of dissonance caused by fear and guilt, cause you to not like yourself. So a secondary aspect of this special hate relationship, which is the only one there is with God, is that you end up hating yourself.

Once again you think, "Well, as a general rule, I don't go around hating myself. As a general rule, the majority of my life I've liked myself. It's only when I've been depressed that I haven't liked myself."

But let me ask you this: "Do you like yourself, you holy Son of God? Do you like yourself, you holy Daughter of God?"

"Oh-h, there ya go again, bringing that up! Well, I don't mind embracing in my head the idea that I'm a holy Son of God, but no, I don't want it to be public! I don't want to claim it and live it and Be it!"

". . . Oh, so you don't like yourself, huh?"

That's what that means. Don't be afraid to look at it. If you don't want to know of your holiness, then be aware of it. Because in being aware of it, instead of unconscious of it, you have a choice available to you. And so you are further ahead of the game.

It's essential for you to know that you have a choice in order to cross the bridge, in order to Wake up, in order to come back into your right Mind.

Be not afraid to look upon the special hate relationship for freedom lies in looking at it. It would be impossible not to know the meaning of love, except for this. For the special love relationship, in which the meaning of love is LOST, is undertaken solely to offset the hate, but NOT to let it go.

You see?

“ . . . Oh No, I’m not gonna let it go if it means I have to acknowledge that I’m holy—I’m a holy Son of God . . . I don’t want to let it go. No, I’m enjoying the intensity and the high I get from attempting to overcome the impossible and in some ways, fool myself into believing that I’m accomplishing it. No-no!”

But . . .

Your salvation will rise clearly before your open eyes as you look on this. You cannot LIMIT hate. The special love relationship will not offset it, . .

. . . it can’t be changed, it can’t be limited, it can’t be minimized . . .

. . . but will merely drive it underground and out of sight. It is essential to bring it INTO sight, and to make no attempt to hide it. For it is the attempt to balance hate with love that MAKES love meaningless to you. The extent of the split that lies in this you do not realize. And UNTIL you do, the split will remain unrecognized, and therefore unhealed.

So, as you move across the bridge, this is the last thing to be healed—it’s the last thing to be healed because it’s the first unhealed act you engaged in. Your dissociation from the Father and from your conscious experience of your own holiness was your first act in stepping away from the conscious experience of Reality. The undoing of it therefore, is going to be the last thing you do as you return Home.

And so, although it might not seem a pleasant thing to do, especially when we’ve had such wonderful talks about your holiness, it nevertheless must be looked at clearly.

Now, what’s “a special love relationship?” Well, I’m going to put it this way: A special love relationship is a relationship that covers up a special hate relationship.

And what’s a special hate relationship . . . humanly speaking? It’s any relationship you have with a Brother or Sister where you haven’t engaged in the two-step, moved into the holy instant and desired to Know the holy truth about your Brother or Sister. And then having been infilled with it, relating to your Brother or Sister from the new vantage point revealed to you—a vantage point that is yours because you decided to join with the Father.

Now, as long as you are pretending to be an orphan, in an orphanage, having an orphan mindset, all of your relationships will be unconscious relationships. And what I mean by that is, that you will be having a relationship with someone Real, but you will be unconscious of who they really Are. Why? Because in the orphan mindset, your Brother or Sister is a means to an end, not a Brother or Sister. Not Family. Not someone sharing the same Birthright—the same holy Birthright as you.

Being a means to an end, all relationships are there to be used—to be used to your benefit. And I'm going to say, to be used to help you forget the hate you're feeling for yourself.

Therefore, you will do anything . . . you will use your Brother or Sister in any way necessary to cover up the fact that you don't like yourself.

Every act you engage in is an attempt to overcome the fact—temporary though it might be—the fact that you don't like yourself, the fact that you don't feel good about yourself. You will use your Brothers and Sisters to build yourself up into something worthwhile . . . you hope. That is your goal.

Now, what does that mean? It means that you're seeing your Brother or Sister as an object, as I said, "a means to an end." So you're denying their holiness as well. And you know what? You miss connection with them, just as they miss connection with you because they're seeing you as "a means to an end."

And so, existence becomes a dance between people who are not connected with each other, who do the best they can to fool each other into believing that they're confirming each other's worth and integrity and value. And all the time that this is going on, not one of you have stopped to do the two-step so that you might ask of the Father, "What is the truth here about my Brother? Show me my Brother's holiness."

It is amazing that you all get along as well as you do because of the usury nature of relationships as you are practicing them.

If you don't see . . . if you don't dare to look at the fact that the way you are relating to each other as orphans, from an orphan mindset, is cruel and harsh and mean-spirited and destructive, you are not likely to have the impetus necessary to step on across the bridge . . . to reach for the mighty companions Who are with you, as well as all of your creations and the Father Who wish for you to come back into your sanity—your right Mind—where all relationships are holy relationships.

The symbols of hate against the symbols of love play out a conflict which does not exist.

Well, what does it mean “the symbols of hate and the symbols of love?”

Well, as orphans relating to each other as objects, you act in loving ways and you act in unloving ways.

Behaving lovingly is not being the Presence of Love.

And so all of your behavior constitutes symbols of love, mutually-agreed definitions about what love is and mutually-agreed definitions about what hate is—both of which are false because love is not love and love can be interpreted as hate.

In other words, if you have mutually-agreed-upon definitions of hate and someone comes along and confronts you with the truth—the real truth about yourself—and says, “You’re the holy Son of God, come join me in the conscious experience of your holiness.” . . . Oh-boy, that is an unkind thing.

The one who Knows the truth, standing with the Father, says, “You’re indulging in hate relationships, even your special love relationship is a cover-up for your special hate relationship.”

You say, “This can’t possibly be the truth. This is a lie. You are misleading me. You are hating me . . . because if I were to believe you, I would think I was insane!” And the one Who Knows the truth, gently says, “But you are insane, but you are not seeing things clearly and there is a clear way to see it and I will show you the clear way to see it.

But, no, this doesn’t add up with the mutually-agreed-upon definitions. And so it’s misinterpreted.

The symbols of hate against the symbols of love play out a conflict which does not exist.

It’s not happening in Reality. It’s only happening in minds misunderstanding.

The symbols of hate against the symbols of love play out a conflict which does not exist. For symbols stand for something ELSE, and the symbol of love is without meaning if love is everything. You will go through this last undoing . . .

. . . this undoing of looking at the special hate relationship and the special love relationship, to see that they’re both hateful so that it’s clear to you that there’s no value in holding onto them at all.

You will go through this last undoing quite unharmed, and will at last emerge as . . .

. . . what?

. . . yourself.

You will come back into your right Mind. Your right Mind will come back into you, you might say. And there you, the real You will be.

Be not unwilling now, you are too near, and you will cross the bridge in perfect safety, translated quietly from war to peace. For the illusion of love will NEVER satisfy, but its reality, which awaits you on the other side, will give you everything.

Remember, I said the other side of the bridge is on the other end of your attention. So we're not once again talking about going on an internal witch-hunt to find out all the awful things about yourself. But we are talking about taking an honest look so that you can clearly see that as long as you're practicing special relationships, as long as you are engaging in them, nurturing them and reinforcing them, you are keeping yourself ignorant of who you Are. You are keeping yourself unconscious of the Kingdom of Heaven that you're in the middle of, and you are bound to the trinity of sin, sickness and death.

If you're looking at this squarely, you'll see that it doesn't make sense and that it is at least worthwhile for you to make a determination to cross the bridge.

Now, crossing the bridge is not a matter of growth. It's not a process of becoming anything. Remember, you are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and must understand yourself therefrom. That's a journey without distance. But it's a giving of your attention where it's essential for it to be in order for you to be sane.

So as we read, don't imagine that this is going to be a terrible amount of work, it's going to take a long time. [snaps fingers] The holy instant . . . that's it! Hesitate . . . stop dead in your tracks . . . abandon your conditioned responses. Be still and say, "Father, what is the truth here? Holy Spirit, what is the truth here? My Guide, what is the truth here?" And then listen for it . . . genuinely, sincerely be the presence of mind that has no other agenda than to have the truth register.

So we're still talking about something simple. The reason you're not on the other side of the bridge is because you still like being an orphan and you don't see how awful it is, you don't see how hateful it is, you don't see how destructive it is. The destructiveness just seems to be a challenge for you to take on, with an assurance that comes from somewhere telling you that you can take it on and succeed—when it isn't true.

Be not unwilling now, you are too near, . .

. . . you really are too near . . .

. . . and you will cross the bridge in perfect safety, translated quietly from war to peace.

You could say also, translated quietly from "getting" to "giving."

For the illusion of love will NEVER satisfy, but its reality, which awaits you on the other side, will give you everything.

. . . on the other side, at the other end of your attention. That's all. Don't think so much in terms of space, "Well, is it a short bridge or is it a long bridge? How far is it to the other side?" No, it's just to the other end of your attention.

The special love relationship is an attempt to limit the destructive effects of hate by finding a haven in the storm of guilt.

Um-m . . . dramatic words, but they're just describing the state of being as an orphan, where guilt and fear go hand-in-hand, are ever-present and seem to be the impetus for expressions of will that have the securing of safety and success as their goal. Seems rather reasonable to you, doesn't it? Sure, but it's not. It's a process that keeps you unconscious, because it never gets you outside the orphanage. It never even suggests that you look to the horizon.

The special love relationship is an attempt to limit the destructive effects of hate by finding a haven in the storm of guilt.

A soft, caressing, nurturing place, where both of you have found ways to provide each other with some form of encouragement that allows you to let down and not energize your fears so much. You're together to get, and you demand of each other to give, "Give me more, give me more! I'm nervous, I'm upset . . . give me more! I'm afraid . . . comfort me!"

And then because the other provides some attention that you define as comforting, you set down some of your fear and experience more peace. And you fool yourself into believing that your lover has comforted you. And you fool your lover into believing that he or she has comforted you. And both of you are still in the mist of delusion and nothing has been accomplished except a temporary lull—a mutual process of fooling each other.

The special love relationship is an attempt to limit the destructive effects of hate by finding a haven in the storm of guilt.

And I'm going to add: Without making any attempts to leave it . . .

. . . the storm of guilt. It makes no attempt to rise ABOVE the storm, into the sunlight.

I would say: It makes no attempt to walk out of the orphanage and onto the horizon and beyond the horizon.

On the contrary, it emphasizes guilt OUTSIDE the haven by attempting to build barricades against it, and keep within them.

"Um-m, you're my salvation, you're the one who gives me peace. You make me feel secure. I'm not going to look outside of you for my good and I'm not going to let you look outside of me for your good. We will imprison each other in the security of the caring that we're willing to extend to each other in order to make us feel some measure of peace . . ."

Wow, . . . get, get, get! No love, . . . no love!

The special love relationship is not perceived as a value in itself, but as a place of safety from which hatred is split off, and kept apart.

Well, you know what? There may be a certain degree or level of comfort that two lovers can achieve, but if the trinity of sin, sickness and death prevails then no security, no safety has been achieved and the victory of love is a hollow victory.

And I'm telling you and have been telling you that your Birthright is more than that. I could say you deserve more than that, but it's a matter of your Birthright, it's a matter of Who you Are and the fact that as the holy Son of God or the holy Daughter of God you already are eternal. And it's your Birthright to be experiencing that without the so-called threat—the imagined threat—of sin, sickness and death. That is no part of the conscious experience of your Birthright and it's time for you to be finished with it.

The special love partner is acceptable only as long as he serves this purpose. Hatred can enter, and indeed is welcome in SOME aspects of the relationship, but it is still held together by the illusion of love.

Illusions holding each other together, or one illusion holding another illusion at bay, it's still insanity. It's still not your Birthright. It's still not you in your whole Mind. It's not the holy Son of God that you Are at this moment, even though you're not experiencing it in its Totality. But you will not shift from the partial experience of it into its Totality if nobody points out to you where illusion is happening, where a special hate relationship is happening, where a special love relationship is happening that doesn't constitute sanity at all.

If no one points it out to you, you won't look elsewhere, you'll just work within the already established parameters.

Hatred can enter, and indeed is welcome in SOME aspects of the relationship, . .

After all, a little bit of it invigorates the relationship, brings some life to it, gets you closer and after all, making up is so wonderful.

Hatred can enter, and indeed is welcome in SOME aspects of the relationship, but it is still held together by the illusion of love. If the illusion goes, the relationship is broken or becomes unsatisfying on the grounds of disillusionment.

Disillusionment simply means: That the illusions you were under have been shown for what they are—illusions.

Love is NOT an illusion. It is a fact. Where disillusionment is possible, there was not love but hate. For hate IS an illusion, and what can change was NEVER love. It is certain that those who select certain ones as partners in any aspect of living, and use them for any purpose which they would not share with others, are trying to LIVE with guilt rather than DIE of it.

You see? You use your special relationships to find ways to live comfortably in the uncomfortable state of guilt by providing a distraction from it. Um-m, we'll say, a sweet distraction from it. But the sweet distraction is an illusion also. So you try . . .

. . . to LIVE with guilt rather than DIE of it.

Well, here's the thing: If you didn't have the sweet illusion to make you comfortable in the experience of guilt, you would be just simply faced with guilt. Guilt is unyielding. Guilt doesn't give the benefit of the doubt. Guilt is harsh. Guilt is cruel. Guilt is mean. To live with it would be to die. But if you are willing to face it, you will realize, without the cover-up of the sweet special love relationship, you will see it for what it is and you will make a choice. You won't die of it, because in the honest appraisal of what it truly is you will make a choice. [chucks] You will get across that bridge. You will find it justifiable to hesitate, become still, ask the Father or the Holy Spirit, "What is the truth here?," and become undefended enough and uncontrolling enough to let yourself be filled from some place other than your best judgments.

This is the choice they see.

You know, . . .

. . . to LIVE with guilt rather than DIE of it.

And love, to them, is only an escape from death. They seek it desperately, but not in the peace in which it would gladly come quietly TO them.

[Repeats] They seek it desperately, but not in the peace in which it would gladly come quietly TO them.

You see? It's the difference between getting and letting. It's the difference between controlling and allowing.

And when they find the fear of death is still upon them, the love relationship LOSES the illusion that it is what it is not. For then the barricades against it are broken, fear rushes in and hatred triumphs.

"Oh, please . . . give me the sweetness of a special relationship to undo hatred's triumph." You see? And so you scramble again, instead of looking at it squarely and saying, "There has to be another way to look at this." To have enough humility to shut up and ask for help from Something outside yourself. That's the way you undo the divorce. That's the way you start across the bridge . . . to where? . . . the other end of your attention.

There are no triumphs of love. Only hate is concerned with the "triumph of love" at all. The illusion of love CAN triumph over the illusion of hate, but always at the price of making BOTH illusions.

Meaning that you're still trapped, you're still stuck. The trinity: sin, sickness and death still governs.

As long as the illusion of hatred lasts, so long will love be an illusion to you.

So . . .

. . . long as the illusion of hatred lasts, . .

. . . well, remember now, your Brothers and Sisters didn't cause the hatred you feel. No circumstances out there caused it. And not even a flaw in your character caused it. The illusion of hatred is being experienced for a simple reason. You've said, "Father, I want a divorce. Father, I'm going to ignore you. Father, I am disinheriting myself, not only of all the abundance that's mine, but I'm disinheriting myself from my awareness of Who I really Am." As long as that is in place, hatred lasts—the illusion of hatred lasts.

As long as the illusion of hatred lasts, so long will love be an illusion to you. And then the only choice which remains possible is which illusion you prefer.

Well, today you'll prefer a little bit of hate, tomorrow you'll prefer a little bit of love, and you play both sides of the fence depending upon what it will get for you in terms of securing a so-called safety and security from sin, sickness and death. That's a security and safety you can't ever actually have until you abandon the orphanage. Until you reclaim your holiness by saying, "Hey, you know what? Might not be so bad to be holy, especially if I already am. I am going to clearly look at the awfulness of hate and the awfulness of special love relationships and I'm going to be willing to look at the destructiveness of them and to see that there are no circumstances under which they can be construed as constructive and therefore my intelligence tells me that there's no profit whatsoever in pursuing them or engaging with them or nurturing them any further. I will, with commitment and determination, cross the bridge.

There IS no conflict in the choice between truth and illusion.

And that's a very important point. Don't imagine that this is going to be a horrendous process.

There IS no conflict in the choice between truth and illusion. Seen in THESE terms, no one would hesitate. But conflict enters the instant the choice seems to be one between ILLUSIONS, for this choice does not matter.

Why doesn't it matter? Because the choice has no effect—a choice of one illusion over another illusion is still illusion. Nothing is accomplished. No healing is accomplished. No return of sanity occurs. And it's the futility of choosing between illusions, and the fact that you have been choosing between illusions that needs to become very clear in order for it to be utterly logical to you to see the wisdom of deciding for crossing the bridge.

Where one choice is as dangerous as the other, the decision MUST be one of despair.

[Repeats] Where one choice is as dangerous as the other, the decision MUST be one of despair.

Despair you're already familiar with, because you're already making choices between one that's as dangerous as another. And you're ready for more than that . . . you holy Son of God . . . you holy Daughter of God. You are ready for more than that.

This week, pay attention to how you're behaving. Pay attention to whether you're leveraging your Brother for this, that or the other thing. Maybe you're just leveraging that one to feel better or happier because you really care as well as because you want to be important to that one—you want to get something out of it. Watch what kind of trips you lay on them, whether they're guilt trips or trips of honor—bestowing honor on him or her, again, so that you can get something.

You know what? Stop looking for a messiah so that you might give your allegiance and follow him or her. After all, you don't want to sidetrack someone from his or her divinity by trying to prove to them that they are a messiah that they're not, so that you might do a couple of things: Maybe rub shoulders with that one and be seen as important or maybe get that one to do something for you, to lift you out of your problems without your having to build the bridge yourself. You see?

There are many ways to be unkind to your Brother. There are many ways to express hate. And even love is one of them. Not real Love, but special love.

Crossing the bridge is the point. Remember that. I love you all.

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, for almost everyone on the globe it's Easter Sunday, even though where Paul is sitting it is still Saturday evening. And so, I guess we could say this is my "Easter Message," but then, every time we talk it's an Easter message, isn't it? Every time we talk we talk about emerging from the tomb, except that we've been calling it "emerging from the orphanage," emerging from an overwhelming state of ignorance of who you Are and what you Are—an ignorance which blinds you. And one could say, whereas, before you were dead and after you emerge, you are alive.

It could be better put that: before you were unconscious of the truth, but now you are conscious of the truth.

This crossing the bridge from death to life, from ignorance to enlightenment is our total subject, isn't it? And it has been.

Now, at the present time we've been talking about the special hate relationship. And you know what? It just happens to relate to Easter.

Something we haven't talked much about is, that when you decided to get a divorce from your Father and become an independent agent—an independent causative, authoritative mover and cause of things—it has by now become clear to you that you lost not only the experience of your Source, and therefore, the experience of who you Were, you, as we've discussed, immediately became aware of fear and guilt.

But the thing we haven't talked much about is that when that happened, a shift occurred. You shifted from what I'm going to call, "Mind-identification" to "body-identification." Before this happened—before the divorce—you experienced yourself as that infinite Mind in which all experience of Creation and Being and Life was going on. You did not find yourself in any form. And yet, all forms of Creation were inseparable from you and were part of the infinitude of your Being. Again, though, you were not captured by or held within any of them. Your infiniteness was inseparable from the meaning of wholeness—completeness.

But when you got this divorce and insisted on it, you found that you lost the infinite view and you became identified with what you call your body. And you immediately perceived everything around you as bodies—a body of a tree, a body of a cat, a body of a brother, of a sister, a body of a planet. You saw everything as bodies. And because your experience of yourself as a body was inseparable from fear and guilt, fear and guilt were associated with all other forms.

And so, you immediately, as we have discussed, became defensive—self-protective. But mind you, the thing we haven't discussed at any length was the fact that this that needed to be protected—called self-protection—was a body.

Everything you did, all of the conclusions you came to, all of the reasonings, all of the agreements, mutually developed agreements that all of you came up with, were colored by the fearfulness—the undependability of form. Your fear was all-pervasive.

So, what happened? You used your body for two purposes: self-defense, self-preservation. And you also used your body against other people's bodies. And so, your body became your salvation and your downfall. After all, if you could use your body well enough to protect yourself, it was your salvation. But if another used his or her body well enough to injure you or undermine your physical well being, then your body became your downfall, not your salvation.

Now the reason you need to understand this is because part of crossing the bridge that we're talking about, part of coming back Home involves shifting from body-identification to Mind-identification. It means abandoning self-protection by guarding your body with your body and leaning into the holy instant, which is an entirely mental act in an entirely mental environment.

When you engage in the two-step and move into the holy instant, you are in Mind and identifying as Mind no matter how briefly it might be. And here is where God's laws prevail. Here is where transformation occurs. Here is where healing occurs.

Now, when we talked last week, and we talked about the awfulness of the special hate relationship and the fact that everyone employs it who isn't Awake yet, you could have construed what I was saying to apply only to what you thought, to what you are perceiving in your mind or what you are misperceiving. But it's all mental.

What you need to be aware of is how emphatically and committedly you use the body as identity in your behavior towards others and the behavior you demand from others. This is detrimental. This is destructive. It is destructive in the sense that it absolutely distracts you from the willingness to move into the holy instant, to move into your Mind, you might say, where the integrity and wholeness of your Being can be revealed to you as what? A mental experience . . . but a mental experience that is so all-embracing that it causes you to be able to completely relax and let go of physical defensiveness. And in the absence of physical defense and the feeling of the need for it, physical healing can occur and your behavior toward your Brothers and Sisters can change. And so you would say, social change occurs.

Now, when I was apparently born, it was very important for my presence to be perceived as the emergence of a body—a physical organism—because it was necessary for my presence to be able to be linked to the House of David in the Old Testament, so that the prophecy of my coming could be validated by those who saw themselves literally as nothing more than bodies themselves.

But you know what? It has been said, that when John baptized me, I came into the full awareness of Who I was and Who my Source was. But I will tell you, that it was never absent from my Mind. And I was always taking guidance from the Father, for the purpose of fulfilling purpose. And therefore, at no point in my lifetime, then, did I think I was a body. At no point was I unconscious of myself as the fullness of Mind.

This is important. It's important to understand because today history and teachings regarding my life and regarding Christianity have carried forward the idea that I was a body—God became man . . . God became a mortal . . . God became someone physical, organismic, just like you.

Well, it's time to abandon that idea. It's time to know that that isn't true and that therefore, in all the time I've been speaking with you and we've been going through the Course, I have been helping you to learn that you were never a physical organism anymore than I was. And that you, all the time you have been believing you are a physical organism, a body, you have been the full representation of Mind—the Father's Mind, the Father's Will, the embodiment of God—just like me and that you have been Mind, consciousness, and not a body.

You see, initially to get everyone's attention it needed to seem as though the divine became utterly, awfully human. But because it was divine, the awfulness of humanity wasn't fully expressed or even minimally expressed by me. And so, inspiration was possible.

Now, for 2,000 years many of you have had . . . have given attention, still believing that you're a body and that I was a body and that it was important for me to have been a body—for God to have become man.

No. It's time to shift: rather than everyone believing that God became man, it's time for man to become aware of and embrace his holiness—your holiness. It's time because it's only in this way that you're going to abandon the body-identification and the ongoing belief that your Salvation is physical salvation, and that perhaps your physical salvation will come at the expense of someone else's physical well being.

Got to get past this. We have to get past this. Getting past it is part of abandoning the special hate relationship. The only reason that the body is being misused as an object and as that which you think you are, is because you are insisting on denying your holiness, denying your present divinity. And that's part of the special hate relationship.

You see, in the beginning it was like God came to man. Well, it's not the beginning anymore. And you are all mature enough to accept the idea that it's time for man to become God-like, for man to be lifted up, not out of an organismic reality, but out of the belief that you are organisms. You see?

What is it as you go through your weeks, that distracts you most from the holy instant? Taking care of your body. Take care of its aches and pains. Making it feel better. Taking care of it well. Defending yourself if necessary against a predator, whether it's a human or an animal.

And so, you engage in using your body to protect your body instead of realizing that what is called for is the two-step: the hesitation, the asking, "What is the truth here?" And then listening and making room for the infilling of truth that will bring you into the holy instant, where God's laws prevail and clarity or healing or resolution can occur without once employing the body for or against anything.

This is very important. It is the message of Easter.

So, in the minds of some I was a rabble-rouser. In the minds of some I was a threat to the political system. In the minds of some, I was a threat to the established religious order. In the minds of some I was a Savior. You see? A Savior who could save them from the vicissitude of human existence, relieve them [snaps fingers] like magic from doing what we're talking about doing right now, which is finding the willingness to see yourself new and to make commitment to that new vantage point, that new self-perception, and then changing—allowing yourself to be changed by the new perspective.

And so, what happened? Self-protection came into play. And bodies acted against bodies and in some cases some bodies acted on my behalf against the bodies of those who would have harmed me. And those who were afraid took action against my body to harm me and remove the distraction from established order.

So, there we have it: the special hate relationship trickled down, you might say, into each individual's self-perception in which guilt and fear are inseparably and forever present as long as you're claiming to be an orphan. And the belief that the only solution to the threat is to impact the body of the one causing the distress to the point where either that one will stop being distressing—change his behavior—or die and no longer be a threat.

So, you know what? I could ask, figuratively speaking, "How many people did you crucify this last week? How many people did you see as a body and did you respond to as a body, so as to coerce them into better behavior, or maybe even punch them in the shoulder or the face, or knock them down and have a fist fight or a wrestling match to get them under control? How many of you dealt with your Brothers and Sisters as though they were bodies rather than the Presence of Mind, which is the Mind of God, the Holy Spirit?"

If you did that, you may know that you were not seeing yourself as the holy Son of God, and your behavior hasn't changed yet. And the call for change is still present. The call of Easter is still viable and active today in your lives. And that's what choosing for the holy instant means.

Now, there are those around you who think they're bodies and who think you're a body and who think they need to get control of you. Or they think that you're the body of a Savior and they need you to save them, or they need to convince you that you are a Savior, when that's not where you're at. And you have to find a way to deal with those actions and beliefs without dying in the process . . . without being . . . without accepting the invitation to identify yourself as a body and react as a body defensively, and instead practice the two-step.

Do you see why this is so important? I keep saying, as you go through your daily life, ask, "What does this mean? What does that mean? What does the other thing mean? What needs to be known here? What is my appropriate action? And why is the action that you tell me, appropriate, when my conditioning as a body says something entirely different?" You see?

It's important because your constant inquiry, your constant curiosity to know what the truth is here, is what disengages you from your habit of body-identification and behavior directed from your body to the bodies of others for purposes of control. It all goes hand-in-hand.

Now, I said that I knew all along that I was Mind. I knew all along my conscious experience of Being was not altered in any way from the Father's conscious experience of Being as the infinite Mind that is what causes all of Creation.

So, in spite of the many movies about the crucifixion and resurrection, I did not suffer because I was never at any moment held in the belief that I was in a body and that the body that everyone called, Jesus, was more special than the wood the cross was made of or the rocks on the ground or the trees on the horizon or the sky or the clouds or any of Creation. That body, recognizable as me, is not more special in identifying the wholeness of my Being than any other manifestation of life.

So I was not bound in it. And as I've said before, during what looked like a crucifixion I simply removed myself and observed from a hillside nearby.

Would you call that an out-of-body experience? Well, you would if we're talking about somebody who thinks they're a body and then temporarily they remove themselves from the body. No, I just shifted my attention to another equally important location and allowed the unfolding of events, which would play a critical role in the mind of mankind, to unfold.

When it was over and this body that everybody believed they had crucified was moved into the tomb, I didn't go in there. I continued, we'll say, to relax and not think too much because there was nothing to think about. There was only the Movement of Spirit, there was only the Movement of Divinity occurring, having its impact on human consciousness globally, not just locally. Because, mind you, all of this involves the breaking down of the orphan mindset, the breaking down of the belief that there is an orphanage and the breaking down of the belief that man is what he thinks he is . . . not more.

And so, you might say, I was patient. In this day-and-age you would say: You would think that if you were in those circumstances there would be much to think about, there would be much planning to do. You see? What would you say when you came out of the tomb? Blah, blah, blah, you know . . . be prepared . . . have your script ready . . . don't mislead anyone. You see? Busy, busy, busy . . . thinking, thinking, thinking, and very little peace in which one could feel the Breeze, the Breeze of the Movement of Creation having its gentle but profound effect in the consciousness of mankind.

And so, in my ongoing, undisturbed conscious experience of Being as Mind, I waited until the third day and then I simply shifted my attention back to what was the appropriate place for me to be from and came forth from the tomb.

Now, that was called "the resurrection." That was called "coming back to life." That was what you might call, the reinstatement of the truth that seemed to have been disturbed and effected by bodies acting against bodies. But it was really the uninterrupted Movement of this Process whereby the truth dawns in human consciousness. That's all. It looked that way. But the way it looked is not what was happening. Love was being expressed and embodied in a manner that had indelible impact . . . indelible impact . . . indelible healing benefit.

So now, why am I saying all of this? I'm saying it because you must know that when you are still living in a world where it's easy for you to believe you are a body and where those around you believe they are bodies and that their best and only means of dealing with you involves manipulating you as a body, there is a way for you not to be affected, debilitated or destroyed. And the way is to abandon the orphanage. It's that simple.

You have to abandon the mindset of independence in which fear and guilt and self-hate abide without interruption. That's how you get out of it. You don't become a better body, able to control other bodies better. You don't become a more loving body in order to affect bodies beneficially. You don't function in the illusion of love or the illusion of hate.

The only thing that has brought the orphanage into existence—seeming existence—is the step you took to divorce your Father. I didn't divorce my Father, therefore, I suffered no crucifixion. I experienced no resurrection. But the death of a mindset of mankind occurred and the resurrection of the truth to some degree occurred. Why? Because I didn't get a divorce, and so God's laws prevailed for me.

As each one of you moves into the holy instant, as each one of you dares to assume that everything you know is probably false or severely biased, you will sincerely ask what the truth is more frequently, you will reach outside of your current mindsets, you will join with that which is beyond your body, which you think is your Self. And the orphanage will begin to crumble, the walls will begin to collapse, you'll begin to be able to see through the boundaries. Your resurrection will occur. And you'll make commitment to going across the bridge, which would be the equivalent of resurrection.

Was the ascension a movement to another dimension where human life was risen above, where body existence ended? Is that what you have to look forward to? No, that isn't what it meant at all.

The ascension did involve the movement of what everybody perceived as my body rising into the sky. But you know what? It was the same action that occurred when I removed myself from a crowd up and into a mountain or when I went from one side of the sea to the other instantaneously. It was just a shift of the attention.

Crossing the bridge is your shift of attention. It's that simple. That's the equivalent of the ascension.

You will still have all that identifies you right now, except you will not feel like you're inside it. And you will not identify any part of Creation as being exclusively you. In fact, you won't be the focus of your attention because every aspect of Creation will be an experience of the Presence of God in the fullness and glory of what God Is. And I'm using those words on purpose, so that you might understand that it's a much fuller experience of holiness and Spirit and truth and Love and divinity than anything you're currently or presently experiencing.

The other side of the bridge is on the other end of your attention. As someone said earlier today: "Wherever you give your attention, your faith goes there with you."

Let's make sure, as you face the bridge with an intent to move across, that you don't become distracted by the calls from bodies asking for you to respond as a body, because if your attention goes there, your faith will go there. And where your faith goes, your belief becomes embodied.

And so, if you want one who is not a holy Son of God to deal with, to confront you, to make demands of you and for you to have to protect yourself from, then let your attention go to that definition and your faith will accompany it—and, as I said last week, the holy Son of God there will escape you completely and you will be behaving in a way that completely misses Who that Individuality really Is. Your lack of connection will constitute an absolute lack of communication. And the illusion of a battle between Salvation and its opposite will seem to occupy you. And none of it will be Real.

You know what? On your own you don't know what to have faith in. So be careful where you automatically give your attention.

Your Salvation lies in your practice of the two-step: Hesitating, not responding out of habit, mentally or physically . . . hesitating, stepping back and inquiring, “What’s the truth here?” That’s your Salvation. Because then a body demanding something of a body is not what is confronting you. What’s confronting you is the answer you are intent upon hearing, the answer to the question you’re asking—not the demand the other is making of you. That’s the key.

We’ve talked before about bad behavior being a call for love. Well, it should be becoming clear to you that it’s not a call for you as a body to love, because that’s just a special love that’s used to cover up a special hate. It’s one illusion attempting to do something to another illusion, the result being: No Salvation. Because where the attention went is where the faith went and where the faith went is where the manifestation came forth. That will even more severely convince you that you must be a better body.

Let’s go into the book. I’m going to backup slightly:

There IS no conflict in the choice between truth and illusion.¹

No conflict. When a call for love occurs and you turn to the Father instead of turning to the one making the call for love, you’re making a choice for truth and . . .

There IS no conflict in the choice between truth and illusion.
Seen in THESE terms, no one would hesitate.

But you see, everyone tends to see in the terms of body identification and on those terms you would hesitate.

But conflict enters the instant the choice seems to be one between ILLUSIONS, for this choice does not matter.

As I said last week, it doesn’t matter because whichever one you make, the choice has been made for illusion, and therefore, you are still deluded—nothing has happened. So it makes no difference which one you choose. Neither one of them gets you out of the orphanage.

Where one choice is as dangerous as the other, the decision MUST be one of despair.

Your task is not to seek for love, but merely to seek and find ALL of the barriers within yourself which you have built AGAINST it.

Be careful here. This sentence is very important. But as I’ve said before, it doesn’t mean, “go on an internal witch-hunt.” It is not to become your task to find out what’s wrong with you. It is your task to find out where beliefs are governing you instead of understanding. And you have no way to determine which things are beliefs and which are not.

And so . . .

Your task is not to seek for love, but merely to seek and find ALL of the barriers within yourself which you have built AGAINST it.

I've been telling you over and over how to do that. How do you find all the barriers? By assuming that everything you know, everything you think constitutes a barrier. And therefore, you have nothing better in this whole world to do daily than to say, "Father, what is the truth here?" Just like a curious child, "Daddy, what's that, what's that, what's that?" "What's the truth here?" Bring that curiosity into play, because the answer you will get when you are not insisting on authorizing the answers will uncover illusion and truth. And the truth will be so wonderful and so obvious that you will immediately let go of, abandon, the illusion. It's that simple.

It is not necessary to seek for what is true, but it IS necessary to seek for what is false. Every illusion is one of fear, whatever form it takes. And the attempt to escape from one illusion into another MUST fail. If you seek love outside yourself, you can be certain that you perceive hatred within and are AFRAID of it. Yet peace will never come from the illusion of love, but ONLY from its reality.

Again, it can be misleading.

It is not necessary to seek for what is true, but it IS necessary to seek for what is false.

The idea of seeking for what is true—if you play with the idea, if you consider it—will, generally speaking, not include your shutting up and asking the Father what the truth is. Seeking the truth will be something you engage in through the active use of thinking and logic and reasoning and research and on and on and on.

Instead of engaging in any activity—either trying to discover what the truth is, or trying to discover what the illusion is—your task is to turn your attention away from your thinking mind. It's like you must do the opposite of what you're inclined to do. You must become still, like meditating, in which you have no other agenda going on. Not meditating so you can hear the truth, but meditating so that in the peace you experience, understanding can unfold because that's what it does, not because it's what you're doing.

This is important.

Recognize this, for it is true, and truth MUST be recognized if it is to be distinguished from illusion: The special love relationship is an attempt to bring love into fear, and make it REAL in fear.

What does that mean? It means to bring it into a fearful circumstance and let it be Real in the middle of that fearful circumstance and become transformational in that circumstance, without ever lifting either one of you out of it into the place where God's laws govern absolutely—and the illusion of conflict between love and hate isn't going on.

To make love Real in fear is to make it be an actual dynamic that can have an actual effect on fear and cause fear to change. When, if you'll remember, fear is an illusion brought into play by only one thing: your decision to get a divorce from your Father, your decision to attempt to be an independent agent. And therefore, the only means of annihilating the experience of fear is to abandon the independence that you have prized so highly.

Again, the Easter message. This is what it means.

In fundamental violation of love's condition, the special love relationship would accomplish the impossible.

If it could.

How but in illusion COULD this be done?

[Repeats] How but in illusion COULD this be done?

It can't. The Easter message is the message of stepping out of the illusion of oppositional forces—God and the devil, Spirit and matter at war with each other. Who will win? I'm telling you that the concept of God and devil could only come into play when one abandons his right Mind, when one gets a divorce from his Father. And the only correction of this illusion—of the conflict of super powers—can occur when you say, "Father, help me! Father, show me Your truth."

That's what you do in the tomb. That's what you do in the tomb. And that's the way you come out of the tomb. And that's the meaning of Easter . . . every moment.

Happy Easter! Meaningful Easter. Sober Easter. Sober, meaning, with the Real peace of Being as the backdrop for every single experience of this day.

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

April 10th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, how many of you had an interesting week this week paying attention to or discovering, surprisingly or involuntarily, how much you use your body as your salvation? How much you use it as a distraction from the holy instant? How much it or other peoples' bodies preoccupy your attention?

For instance, how many of you noticed that if you are challenged by someone or by a circumstance and in some way your credibility is called into question, you get excited about it, you get emotional about it and actually, you get physical about it? I mean by that, that you use your body to demonstrate your distress. You use it to try to coerce the one confronting you, or the situation into being different by a display of force of personal power—that imaginary fleeting thing that you think you have.

And all the time you're doing that, it's impossible for you to hesitate because you'd have to stop the display. You'd have to interrupt the act, which you're employing, to cause someone or something to change its behavior.

When that's happening, you're behaving in a completely unjoined, independent, isolated, autonomous way. Exactly the opposite of what you really want to do if Waking up is your desire, if practicing and coming to the conclusion, we'll say, of the Course—of your Awakening.

How many of you found that time was not your friend? And you had a deadline and you scurried around with intensity to get it done by the deadline and used your body as the means of getting it done quickly, completely missing the point that it would be entirely possible to accomplish what needed to be done in your peace, without being strenuous, without straining your body, completely overlooking the opportunity to watch fulfillment of purpose occur with your participation in it, without depleting yourself in any way, without using your body as a means of forcing a conclusion by a certain deadline?

How many of you might have come to the conclusion that you are addicted to your body and the use you can put it to, and have realized that to the degree that you're doing that, you're delaying healing, you're delaying divine realization, you're delaying the experience of your holiness—of your non-materiality—of the fact that you are not a body even though there is the visibility and tangibility of Creation?

You are not the visibility and tangibility. You Are that Mind in which the experience of visibility and tangibility is occurring.

Now, I'm going to back up to the last sentence of the previous paragraph where it says (and I'm leaving off the first word which is the word, “Yet”):

. . . peace will never come from the illusion of love, but ONLY from its reality.¹

And what's the illusion of love? The special relationship, which is more correctly called, "the special hate relationship."

So . . .

. . . peace will never come from the illusion of love, but ONLY from its reality.

. . . the reality of love.

Recognize this, for it is true, and truth MUST be recognized if it is to be distinguished from illusion: The special love relationship is an attempt to bring love into fear, and make it REAL in fear . . .

. . . make it real there, where fear is. Why? So that you might alter fear, so that you might assuage fear, so that you might minimize fear, so that you might numb yourself to fear with the wonderful feelings of love but without ever getting rid of fear.

In fundamental violation of love's condition, the special love relationship would accomplish the impossible.

. . . If it could.

How but in illusion COULD this be done? It is essential that we look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do to solve the dilemma which seems very real to you, but which does not exist.

[repeats] It is essential that we look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do to solve the dilemma

Well, if somebody were to ask you at any given moment in the middle of any given dilemma, "What do you think you can do?" You probably could tell them five different things that you could do—at least five different things—all of which would likely be helpful.

The question, "What can you do?" requires you to be very alert.

"What do you think you can do?" That's the question. What you think you can do is . . . do something! Your problem is not the doing of it, it's not the solving of it doesn't come from the five different things you can do, but from the annihilation of the primary idea or belief that you can do something, that you can do anything to solve the problem.

Think about that for a moment.

It is essential that we look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do to solve the dilemma which seems very real to you, but which does not exist.

You see? It would be simpler if the question was or the statement was, "It is essential that we look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do, period."

But, when you say what you can do to solve the dilemma which seems very real to you but which does not exist, you can get into a discussion about how to make that which doesn't exist be seen clearly as unreal so that it becomes justifiable for you to abandon it . . . and on and on. You see? These are things you can do.

But whether the dilemma seems to be real when it's not is irrelevant to the fact that there is nothing you can do, one way or the other. And it's the realization that you, on your own, as an autonomous, independent agent for change, can never do anything because you don't exist that way.

It's very disconcerting and it can be very discouraging to come to a point of accepting the idea that you of yourself can do nothing and therefore, you of yourself had best stop trying. And step into the Void—step into the emptiness of not personally attempting to accomplish anything. And in that quiet, vacant space, ask, “Father, what is the truth here? What’s really going on here? I refuse to attempt to accomplish anything or do anything here by myself. I’m asking You to join me. I am willing to let You in so that in the joining, I might become clear about what’s Real and what is illusion—and let what is Real inspire me to behave consistently with it. That’s the key.

Listen again:

It is essential that we look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do to solve the dilemma which seems very real to you, but which does not exist. You have come very close to truth, and only this stands between you and the bridge that leads you into it.

What is it that stands between you and the bridge that leads you into it?

The fundamental belief that you are capable of doing something unjoined—all by yourself, a-cappella.

Simple . . . profound. Simple but if practiced, life-changing. Life-changing in the sense that engaged in with commitment, it opens the floodgates of inspiration and Revelation so that not only your holiness but the Kingdom of Heaven registers with you right here where the mortal is that you thought you were and the material world is that is actually the Kingdom of Heaven.

You have come very close to truth, and only this stands between you and the bridge that leads you into it.

That’s why the simplest but most impactful statement is: “Shut up, become still.” “Be Still and Know that I am God,”² God says—Being says—the way things work says.

Heaven waits silently, and your creations are holding out their hands to help you cross, . .

. . . the bridge . . .

. . . and welcome them. For it is THEY you SEEK.

You’ve been busy seeking other things. But they are substitutes for your coming into, again, your experience of what you Are in your wholeness, in your sanity, where you see everything as It is and yourself for what you Are.

You seek but for your own completion, . .

I know, everyone has a feeling of being a “stranger in a strange land.” They have a feeling of not fitting. You have a feeling of falling short or not quite achieving something that it’s your Birthright to be experiencing and having and being.

So you do seek for something. But when you find you’re not quite making it, you, you know, scoop it under the rug—you put it out of site. And you get about the business of doing things. Because doing things gives you a sense of purpose. And what is one of the main reasons they give you a sense of purpose? It involves your body and you feel the force and you feel the power, and at the end of the day, you’re tired—physically tired. And it makes you feel good because you know you have accomplished “important things,” things which, if they bear the fruit you expect them to bear, will benefit you greatly and prove your credibility and your importance and your success.

And you do these things as a substitute for facing into the experience of not being equal to something—but you don’t know what it is—falling short of something, feeling that there’s more meaning to your Being than you’re experiencing.

So it is your completion you’re looking for. But the use you put your body to is not the means of accomplishing it.

It is essential that we look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do . . .

And what it is you think you can do . . . is do something. That’s the dilemma!—that you think you can do something . . . and, that you can do it with your body because your body is your identity.

Not your mind. Your mind just sits up here in the top of your head—at the top of this b-o-d-y—and it’s just there to help your body respond to stimuli so as to be able to survive and be successful and make something of you.

And you see? That’s the problem.

We [must] look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do to solve the dilemma . . .

. . . you think you can do something and that you can do it with the body.

So, is it really your body that you’re addicted to or is it something else? You see?

You hide love by creating a special relationship. You create a special relationship—a special loving relationship—to cover up a special hate relationship that you are engaged in by virtue of your denial of your Source, your denial of your Father and therefore, of your Birthright, therefore of your holiness and so on. And in this denial of your Self, we'll say, That which constitutes your Being, you're in a state of incompleteness, you're in a state of unconsciousness of your holiness.

Well, what does that mean, you unholy Son of God, you unholy Son of Man, let's say, You unholy off-spring of evolution?

It means you're nothing! And if there is a God that you're denying, you're in an awful state of hate. And this that is nothing, yet is guilty of something, you don't feel right in your own skin. It's only because you're denying what you Are.

But you feel uncomfortable in your own skin. Wrong . . . that's what you feel: Wrong. But you can't stand being wrong. It's perfectly understandable that you can't stand being wrong, because at the bottom line it's your deep, real sanity telling you that you are attempting to do something that's impossible, that you are engaged in an activity that can't bear fruit.

Well, it will be fruitless, therefore, useless, therefore, you're continuing to engage in the activity constitutes wrongness. There's no other way to describe it. And now, instead of taking the hint that your deep sanity is providing, you decide to overcome being wrong. And your goal—the thing you are actually addicted to—is to be right!

You are addicted to righteousness. There's a reason for it. Righteousness practiced diligently, forcefully, with a strong body, will bring you into a state of validity. It will bring you into a place of being right. It will bring you into a place where it will be obvious not only to you but to everyone that you're not w-r-o-n-g.

You're addicted to not being wrong and you are addicted to that which counteracts being wrong, in other words, being right.

So you see, it's not really being a body that you're addicted to, it's not like you incarnated over and over again so that you could just have sex, or so that you could just be a great dancer or a great gymnast or someone who could climb Mt. Everest and overcome the elements with their body. No. Why would you do all those things? Why does one do all those things if they're not joined, if they're not inspired by God to do it . . . or to be it?

They do it in order to demonstrate and prove rightness—righteousness, being right . . . not being wrong. So that the ache inside that comes from a feeling of not fitting, of being wrong, will fade into the background, hopefully will fade into the background because you've actually succeeded in demonstrating that you are truly valid, truly right . . . in your own right.

Interesting phrase, right? "In your own right!"

So, you're caught in the tension between right and wrong. And the dealing with the tension between right and wrong is what you call, "That which gives life purpose and meaning." And as long as you are insisting on operating at the level of polarities—opposites—right and wrong and overcoming them so that you can prove your worth and your validity, you're stuck.

In a movie called War Games, the key sentence was, "The only way to win the game is not to play the game at all."

The only way to Wake up is not to play the game of being an orphan at all. The only way to get out of the strenuousness, what you would call the stimulating, life-giving strenuousness of the tension between right and wrong, is to abandon the struggle . . . by what? Looking very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do to solve the dilemma, which seems very real to you but which does not exist. And exactly what it is you think you can do is, do something!

You see how simple it is? But it's easy to become sidetracked into complexity that distracts you completely from the fact that the solution comes from shutting up! It literally comes from stopping your thinking. From becoming still in your mind and not dramatizing your life or the situation you're in by virtue of interpretations you apply to it that either create a sense of peace in you or create even greater tension and fear.

And either way, what you do with your mind, whether it is to pacify yourself or to create further distress, you're still thinking. You still haven't become quiet. You haven't shut up and said, "Father, . . ." or "The Powers that Be, . . ." or "That which is responsible for my existing, That which is responsible for existence Itself, period, Help! I wish to see things through Your Eyes. I wish, . . ." and here's the bottom line, "I wish to not be alone for a moment longer. I wish not to be autonomous or independent in my imagination or in any other way any longer. Help!" That is the way you take the first step across the bridge. That's the way you take your first step back Home. That's literally the way you begin to undo the divorce from your Father.

The special love relationship, which you engage in with your body and with the bodies of others, because you're not seeing your holiness or their holiness at all—you're not looking for yours and you're not looking for theirs, so everything about your relationship is fantasy. It's your concept of yourself relating to your concept of the other and the other operating from his or her concept of him or herself relating to his or her concept of you. And then you go through the steps of being right, or you go through the steps of bringing right into play, which means you're taking steps to get agreement with and to demonstrate that you are not wrong. And there's no love in that, is there?

It's very selfish. It's only selfish. Think about it! You've been taught to be polite and kind and thoughtful and you've been taught how to do those things. This behavior is good and right, that behavior's wrong because it won't influence another well. It's not good manners.

Of course, don't ever become out of control and do things spontaneously, you've got to do right and you've got to do well. You've got to do the mutually-agreed-upon kindnesses and manners and so on . . . so as to what? Actually connect with each other? No! But to bring about a certain modicum of pleasantness—lack of strain, and maybe even some pleasure—but without ever connecting with what is Real about you or Real about your Brother or Sister because all of you are doing all of this from a state of independence and autonomy. And so you are all independently acting as though there are relationships—and acting lovingly so it looks like there is love.

Now here's the key: When you're doing these acts of love, you know, not just sexual, but socially . . . behaving with manners, with thoughtfulness and so on, is there ever the result called healing, instantaneous healing, regeneration of limbs, raising of the dead, a cold disappearing, an inflamed kidney becoming uninflamed—I mean in three minutes or even two days or a week—as a result of behaving lovingly, acting out behaviors of love? No. And so I'm telling you that you have false confidence when you hope for things to be better when all you're doing is acting out loving behavior that isn't arising out of the influx, the inspiration of love itself.

Now, it would be very unfair of me to tell you that everything you're doing from an autonomous, independent standpoint is insane or is not practical, is not loving, but is actually a manifestation of a special hate relationship, without telling you how to get out of it. That would just be depressing news.

But I'm telling you this and telling you that the answer is, to stop the independent act, to stop the independent authoritative behavior. And using the same mind you think called you to behave the way you are behaving, pay attention not to your own thoughts, not to your history, not to your memories, but pay attention in a place where you've not gone before, meaning the silence, and risk the chance that there is really a God or there really is the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind held in trust while you're having this experience of independence and a special hate relationship—and stay in that stillness, in that quietness and listen with the expectation of an answer. Because where there is emptiness there is a natural gravitation of Reality to fill it up.

And that's the way moving across the bridge occurs. Not because you with your body trudged across step-by-step to the other side of the bridge with the force of your own energy. No. In the silence and the renewal that comes as revelation occurs, as the remembering of the truth of you infills you again, draws you spontaneously into your whole Mind, you get help. You get help when all this bravado is let go of and humility can replace it.

As I've said before, to the ego the coming of humility feels like humiliation. And you have to be willing to let the humiliation be, because all it's saying is that all of the strength you thought you personally had and all that you thought you were accomplishing in the name of good couldn't bring you to good because you were in a state of denying your good by denying who you Were—who you Are.

As you let the truth of that dawn, it feels humiliating to that which was addicted to what? Righteousness: A you that is a fantasy but one that you believe implicitly and are so addicted to, you will do anything to accomplish its goals.

Humility is when there is enough balance in your mind for you to be able to say, "I will dare . . . I will dare to abandon the use of force. I will dare to stop being a mover and a shaker and making things happen, so that in the absence of that stress and strain and in the presence of the peace that will be there, I become an emptiness, you might say, which will naturally be filled by the inpouring of truth of my Father's Love." That's humility. And humility feels whole, utterly unlike what you've been experiencing. And it's not addictive. But once you feel it, the likelihood that you will abandon it is slim.

You've got to keep this in mind, because it's the way things work.

The special love relationship is but a shabby substitute for what makes you whole in truth, NOT in illusion. Your relationship with them . . .

. . . your creations . . .

. . . is without guilt, . . .

. . . it's a holy relationship with them . . .

. . . and this enables you to look on all your brothers with gratitude, because your creations were created in union WITH them.

You see? You've got to understand that God is the Movement of Creation. And all of Creation stands with God watching the Movement of Creation. And all of Creation including you and everyone of your Brothers and every lizard and every spider and every bird stands, flies, crawls, paying attention to this Movement of Creation and acknowledge it together as God Moving. And all of Creation acknowledging the Movement of Creation that God is Being, completes God, if you want to put it that way. And it also completes you.

So, . . .

Your relationship with [them] . . .

. . . your creations . . .

. . . is without guilt, and this enables you to look . . .

. . . once again . . .

. . . on all your brothers with gratitude, because your creations were created in union WITH them. Acceptance of your creations is the acceptance of the oneness of creation, without which you could never BE complete.

What is it that you would not be complete without? The oneness of It. Do you see? The integrity of Creation lies in the oneness of It. And you cannot feel the integrity of Creation when you're claiming an autonomous selfhood and attempting to be autonomous and forceful and accomplish things. You see? You can't feel the oneness of Creation, therefore you cannot feel Its integrity.

Acceptance of your creations is the acceptance of the oneness of creation, without which you could never BE complete. No specialness can offer you what God has given, . .

. . . which is everything . . .

. . . and what you are joined with Him in giving.

You see? When you're in your right Mind, when you've given up being autonomous, you are joined with God in the act of Creation, by being that which observes what God is Being new, and recognizing God in It and therefore recognizing your Self in It and confirming the integrity and unity of all Creation.

Now what you need to understand is, that the integrity of all Creation is a conscious experience that you will have. It won't be you as it seems to be right now, off in a corner of Creation with most of Creation at a great distance from you, observing It and knowing that somehow It's all part of you and you're part of It.

No. When you're in your right Mind, you are as conscious of all of Creation, infinitely, as God is. There is a saying, "There is no spot where God is not." We could say, "There is no spot where God is not conscious of that spot." Which means you can never get outside of God and you can never be outside of His conscious awareness of You. That idea you like. But I want you to understand that because of the oneness of Creation, it's your Birthright to be experiencing the fact that there is no spot where your Mind is not. And there is no spot where you are not conscious of that spot in all of the universe.

And you know what? It won't be a stress or a strain to be infinitely conscious. And it won't wear you out to be infinitely conscious. And you will not ask to be able to sleep or get a rest from all of it because it's unified and you are unified with it. It is unified with you.

Now, in this place God's laws prevail. Sin, sickness and death are absent. And you get to that by shutting up and being willing to be silent and reaching out, and I'm going to say, yearning for your Father to speak to you, yearning for the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—to reveal Itself to you as You, so that you might be joined with It, so that you might be One and no longer labor under the horrible illusion of autonomy and all of the suffering it seems to bring that seems to be so real that it entices you into coping with it, instead of realizing that you must . . .

. . . look very closely at exactly what it is you think you can do to solve the dilemma . . .

. . . and remember: that what you think you can do, is do something, so that you abandon the knee-jerk response to do, and you remember to be still.

Across the bridge is your completion, for you will be wholly in God, willing for nothing special, but only to be wholly like unto Him, completing Him by YOUR completion.

You see? When you say, "I'm not an orphan anymore, I have a Father," you complete yourself because you allow for the return of your Birthright because you know who you Are and you bring completion to the Father because He's not waiting for his Son or Daughter to remember that they're not orphans.

You see? Completion all way around, harmony that is eternal, joy that at the moment is unfathomable, but it's your Birthright to be experiencing.

You know what? A lot of this can only be words for you at the moment. But I will tell you something: they will become an experience when you are willing to acknowledge that you cannot do anything to solve the problems. And that the biggest problem you have is the belief that you can do something. And it's a problem because it distracts you from shutting up, which is the way out of the dilemma, the way out of the tension between wrong and right and the addiction to righteousness, and the misuse of the body to carry out a special love relationship that's meant to cover up the special hate relationship that amounts to the simple fact that you said, "Father, I'd rather see things my way. Father, I'd rather do things my way." You see? And abandoning the relationship, if only in the imagination.

Last week we spoke about Easter. We spoke about all of this being part of your Easter story, if I may put it that way. When you realize that you no longer have to take the bait and think that you can do something and then get on with doing it, you've set the stage for Ascension.

I love you . . . and you . . . and everyone who has joined us. And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 1st 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Tonight will be a departure from the usual and I won't be reading from the Course. There are some things I need to share and so before we do that, let's still take some time to be together, quietly.

Okay . . . good evening again. It's really a rather simple lesson that we're all in the middle of and that we've been discussing. We've called it different things: The two-step, hesitation, going into the stillness, going into the void, abandoning thinking.

One of the things that Paul has become aware of more clearly than ever before in the last three weeks since we were together is, that when he is thinking, he's not speaking with me. He's not consciously, let's say, connected with the Holy Spirit, either. And he's not reaching out to the Father.

He is self-sufficiently attending to figuring things out . . . attending to saving his ass, protecting himself—insuring himself that he won't be vulnerable.

Now, here's the simplicity of it: When one is thinking and is unjoined, in other words, not engaged in active companionship with the Holy Spirit or with me or with the Father, one is no different from a toaster that's not plugged into the socket. It sits there, it looks like a toaster, if you put the toast in and push it down, it looks like it must be toasting the bread, but nothing is happening and nothing can actually happen.

There have been things requiring Paul's attention just as there are things that require your attention, and have, let's say, during the past three weeks. And in many instances, Paul immediately began to engage in figuring out how to cope with those issues—those things. And he could come up with different scenarios and different solutions and be concerned about whether they would really work and which one was the right one and so on.

And he suddenly realized, “My God, I’m thinking! I’m not joined, I’m not listening. Therefore, all that’s going on in my mind is meaningless.”

He came up with a little phrase which he would use whenever he realized he was beginning to think or had been thinking. He would say, “But I still don’t have the answer” . . . “But I don’t have the answer.” A fear would come up. He’d be attracted to it. He would think about it and maybe spend a half an hour seriously considering it. And then remember and say, “But I don’t have the answer.”

Now, not only did he realize he didn’t have the answer, he realized that he couldn’t possibly have the answer as a result of thinking. And that it was futile for him to do this thinking process that his whole life had taught him how to do rather well, intelligently, reasonably. And therefore, the only solution was to take whatever the question was—whatever the need was—to me or to the Holy Spirit and ask for the answer.

You know what? You all love the mystery. You all love the not-knowing. You all love the process of discovery. You all love the anticipation of the answer that will come to you. And the fact is, you feel that it would be utterly dull to immediately [snaps fingers] have the answer and immediately [snaps fingers] know exactly what to do or exactly what the truth about the situation is. Where would the fun of this discovery be? Where would the mysteriousness be? Where would the wondering be? And of course, then use a play on words: The wonder of the answer, the w-o-n-d-e-r, the awesomeness of it.

Well, wondering and wonder are two different words with two different meanings. Wondering is not knowing. Wondering is being ignorant. And to enjoy wondering because of the mystery of it is to make ignorance valuable and worth embracing and engaging in. And all the time, you still don’t have the answer. And you still don’t have the answer because you haven’t gone to the place where the answer is available, which is not in the midst of your thinking processes. It’s in the silence. When you abandon all of your best reasoning and judgment and you ask, “What’s the truth here?” of That which knows the truth: The Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—the Father or the Christ, That which knows the answer which has been from the Beginning and which has involved no variableness whatsoever, and the knowledge of which brings you peace and not the mystery of not-knowing and the supposed pleasure of discovery, all of which goes on in the orphan-mindset which is the unplugged toaster.

So you see, the simplicity of the lesson here is, if you're thinking, nothing is happening. If you're reasoning, if you're going through logical deductions, nothing is happening. You still don't have the answer. And I promise you something: If [snaps fingers] suddenly, apparently in the midst of all of your mystery and wondering, the answer comes to you, it will be because you were momentarily undefended against the answer, you were momentarily not invested in your coming up with the answer. You were momentarily innocent of trying to be something you cannot be and the Holy Spirit entered and you had the answer. And the answer was peace embodied. And the answer was wholeness experienced. And the answer was the capacity to be utterly appropriate in whatever the circumstance was that you were in at that moment.

Now you want to be plugged in. You want to Wake up. The simple fact is that as long as you are thinking and not joined, you are unconscious!

You say, "Well, how could I be unconscious? I'm driving the car. I'm interacting with people. I'm conscious."

Are you conscious of the truth though? Are you conscious of Reality in which sickness is non-existent and which, because you're in the middle of it, constituted a healing for you—an instantaneous healing in which illness disappeared? If that hasn't happened, you are not yet conscious of the truth. You are unconscious and nothing meaningful is happening except you enjoying this fantastic experience of the "mystery of life." "Ah-h Sweet Mystery Of Life". . . a beautiful song. You enshrine the "mystery of life" in the concept of beauty.

Stop it! Stop enshrining and embodying unconsciousness, ignorance, meaninglessness. If you don't have the answer and you're doing a lot of thinking, remind yourself: "But I still don't have the answer!" And in the reminding of yourself of that fact, abandon your independence and say, "Father, what is the truth here?" Ask, "Holy Spirit, what is the truth here?" Say, "Jesus, show me the truth, show me the way, share with me the experience of truth, not the idea of it. I want to experience what you're experiencing when you, Jesus, are not holding yourself separate from your Father and thus you, in your full capacity of the Christ, are able to be co-creators with the Father. Help me have that experience so that I, in the fullness of the Christ that I am, can co-create with my Father and be in that place where the Laws of God prevail and where the sense of mystery is no more."

The boredom of not having answers to discover doesn't constitute a loss of any kind because it puts you in direct communion with unseparated Oneness with

God. And you therefore stand with God in the Movement of Creation that God is Being so that you discover and experience what God is Being brand-new in every moment and are free to acknowledge It as what It is and not be confused about It and not need to go through a process of mystery in order to arrive at an experience of what It is.

And so, it's far from boring. But of course, it doesn't involve any ego processes of becoming, which actually constitute an absence of meaning: Toast not getting toasted, actually . . . and you being unconscious when what you want is to be conscious.

So, you know you have situations in your life and you think, "Oh, well a miracle is a sudden shift of perception!" And you think, "Oh, it'll be a shift of perception from this kind of experience to this kind of experience in the world—from a lesser situation to a better situation."

No. The shift is from being unconscious to being conscious. The shift is from thinking to listening. The shift is from isolation to unity—joining, togetherness. The shift is from emptiness to fullness or wholeness.

The simplicity escapes everyone because there is great faith in the power of thought. You have great faith in your capacity to think. You know what? None of the great discoveries in history were the result of thought. They were always the result or presence of insight, nothing else!

Insight is what you need to be valuing, not thought processes. An innocent mind, unconditioned, needs to be valued more than an educated mind that has been taught how to be very specifically orderly in very specific ways—bound, not free, not available for Revelation. Because I promise you, Revelation goes beyond concepts. The Movement of God goes beyond thoughts, it goes beyond orderlinesses—intellectual orderlinesses. It's utterly original. It doesn't fit in anywhere. You see?

The lesson is simple. The place where we are in the process, you might say, of Awakening, is a place of great simplicity now. It's like being at the last step. There's only one more thing to do. Now, we can read through the rest of the Course and we probably will . . . or we might not. But the point is, that you're at the step of being able to recognize what the issue is—the simplicity of it—and doing it.

When you learn how to do meditation, you have something to give your attention to: A mantra, the flame of a candle, a mandala, your breath. And when you find yourself beginning to what? . . . think . . . you remind yourself to come back to the breath or the flame, or the mandala, or the mantra.

Well, you're at a point in life where life itself is this choice—this same meditational choice, I might say—where you have to notice when you've started thinking so that you might say, "No! I still don't have the answer and never will have it this way. I'm going to go back to what? . . . thinking more? . . . better?" No. The silence and attentiveness called, "listening" and actually allowing for engagement in communion—communication—dialogue with the Holy Spirit or me or the Father.

It's not just a matter of being still. It's not just a matter of not-thinking. It's a matter of stopping the thinking which preoccupies you from being attentive to Something outside yourself, beyond your thinking and thereby positioning you so that you might experience the loss of independence and the experience of Brotherhood and communion with That which can share the truth with you, so that you no longer indulge in the "mystery of life."

Everyone loves a mystery. Well stop loving a mystery. Be willing to be grounded and stable enough to want to know the answer that ends the mystery, ends the wondering and which might therefore seem boring to you or uninteresting.

You've all got to get past the desire for stimulation . . . even the stimulation of fear, which is part and parcel of the mystery. You want to discover it but what if you don't discover it, what if you don't discover it in time? Oh-h, you need the mystery to end. It's fantastic to have the mystery, but you know, how are you going to pay the bill on the 22nd and it's the 18th today? Oh, boy the mystery's getting really interesting . . .

Hey, why not listen for the answer on the 1st? No mystery, but ease and peace and a capacity to be joyful because you're not engaged in the details of the mystery.

Remember, if you're thinking . . . you're unconscious. You're unconscious because you're not joined with That which holds the answer. And ultimately, that means you're not joined with the Holy Spirit which has the answer—which is nothing more than your right Mind. And so you are disjointed from your right Mind—you're unjoined with your right Mind. You are therefore, experiencing some form of insanity.

This is the simplicity of where we are in the learning. This is the point where we are in the discovery of real Meaning that means something significantly enough to warrant risking the chance that if you stop thinking you might come back into your right Mind and for it to seem practically realistic enough to do it . . . to do it!

There is a point you will all come to where it will no longer be fun to be engaged in the mystery. Where the mystery will feel exhausting, where the ignorance will be so depressing that you're going to finally say, "U-n-c-l-e!" . . . and listen.

Don't wait for that! There's no need. But you are going to have to dare to get up in the morning and go through your day as you have for many, many, days, year-in-and-year-out, let's say—and all of your friends have been doing everyday, day-in-and-day-out for years—and be in the flow from a new vantage point. Not doing it the old way. Not doing it the way everyone else is, because today, now . . . now . . . now . . . now you are choosing to listen, you are choosing to be joined and in dialog with your Guide, in dialog with the Holy Spirit, Who's whole intent is to cause you to remember your Self in your wholeness as the holy Son or Daughter of God that you Are.

The Holy Spirit is nothing more than your right Mind. And your right Mind has one intent and that is to bring you consciously into It, so that you're not trying to operate from a fragmented tiny part that you are managing, imaginatively, to hold separate from the totality of your right Mind. Your right Mind is intent upon breaking down the boundary around this fragmented little part that you're trying to hold in place because of the "mystery of life" and how involving and exciting and interesting and be-au-ti-ful it is. You see?

You need to be able to get up everyday and as you're driving to work and you see everything you say, "But I still don't have the answer." You see? Meaning, "But I'm still not seeing this movement . . . traffic . . . people, etc., as the Movement of Creation. I'm not seeing it the way God is seeing it. Therefore, I don't have the answer, therefore, I'm not conscious right now, even though I'm quite capable of maneuvering in and out of this traffic safely without injuring myself or anyone else. And I can manage to get to work and punch in on time . . . not be late . . . take care of business." And on and on.

When you punch in, are you doing it by yourself or did you and the Holy Spirit do it together with maybe a certain grace and beauty, because all movement is the Movement of Life, which is the Movement of Love, which is Art in Action.

When you walked down the stairs, is it methodical and mechanical, is it strict and careful or is there grace to it like a ballet? Because it is a Movement of Life, it is a Movement of Being, it is a Movement of Art if you are connected, if you are joined. And if you're not having that experience you're unconscious of the truth, you're unconscious of the Kingdom of Heaven right there in the stairwell, right there on the freeway.

So, let there be this constant impulse to listen, in the middle of a business conference, in the middle of a telephone conversation whether it's a business conversation or a personal conversation with a friend. Don't just assume that you know who you are and you know who your friend is and therefore, you don't have to be conscious because the two of you can just rattle off together and do the most marvelous processes of friendship without ever being conscious of the holy Son or Daughter of God that you're talking to and that you Are, where there's no consciousness of glory in it. If there isn't, you're unconscious of what is there to be experienced.

"But I don't have the answer yet. I don't have the fullness of the experience yet. And I want it. So I will not settle for being unconscious. I will not settle for continuing to think this thing through. And I will shut up and become curiously attentive and I will ask for clarity to be provided." And That of you which has the answer will provide it and bring you therefore into the wholeness of your Being by re-Minding you of what you already Know, but which you forgot in the great attraction to the "mystery of life" and the wondering and the pleasure of figuring out the answers for yourself

So this week, watch it! If you find yourself beginning to get flowery in your spiritual concepts and your language with your friends when it comes to talking about the truth or even resolving problems and you're relying upon past memories and ways of presenting ideas which you have come to the conclusion are excellent ways of stimulating spiritual discovery, [snaps fingers] catch yourself, because you're unconscious, you're not joined, you're not listening, you're not letting what you're saying come from some place other than your conditioning and your memory. You're not letting it come from the freshness of the communication of God or the freshness of the communication of the Holy Spirit, which is revealing to you what God is Being in that moment so that what you say is really inspired, because you're plugged in and the current is there, the current of Reality, the current of Creation.

Now, as you come close to this realization of the simplicity and that it's simply a matter of stopping this and starting that, becoming still—you know, stopping thinking and starting listening—you will seem to find that there are more occasions to be concerned, there will be more issues.

Now it isn't because there truly are more issues, but it will be because in the process of, for lack of better words, turning things over to the Holy Spirit, in other words, turning to the Holy Spirit, asking of the Holy Spirit with the intent of being consciously present listening in order to hear the Holy Spirit, you put yourself in the position of having many more answers than you ever dreamed of. You will take more needs, more issues to the Holy Spirit for answers. And pretty soon you'll run out of . . . I mean really quick . . . you will run out of little things to want to know the truth about and you will want to know the big things, the things that you are positive there are not answers to, or answers that will be impossible for you.

And so, you will find yourself reluctant to ask all the questions. And you will begin to worry about the bigger things that you hadn't looked at before because you kept busy with the little tiny ones that it was easy to deal with. And rather than asking and listening as though the impossible were possible, you will confirm to yourself that it is impossible. But since you now see that it's on your plate, you will feel confronted with serious problems—even danger. And it will seem totally justifiable to you to worry, to become thoroughly engrossed in fear, because you know, "here is something," but it's going to be impossible to deal with. And when that happens, you're in the ugly part of "mystery" and you are completely distracted from listening. And you have emotional justification for staying as far away from listening as possible because you are called upon to what? Solve the problem yourself!

And yet we've just been talking about the fact that the solution comes in the awareness that you can't solve anything. And it's not your responsibility to solve anything.

As I've said before, the closer you get to the gates to the Kingdom of Heaven the ego throws up gargoyles around the gate, you see, to distract you and scare you off. The gargoyles aren't real. They don't represent anything valid. But they would if they could distract you from simply moving forward through the gates or across the bridge, moving forward by virtue of the simple step of stopping thinking and listening instead. Listening with the demand, I'm going to say, for an answer. Listening with a firm unyielding receptivity to and expectation of dialog, communication.

"Oh I know," you say, "Paul's in touch with his Guide. I'm not in touch with my Guide. I listen and I listen and I don't hear anything." Well, I'll tell you something, the time will come when the situation is serious enough and you don't feel like you have any alternative and you will listen and you will hear because you will give permission. Why? Because when there's no alternative, it means that you've given up faith in your own capacity to think your way through it successfully and experience the wonder of the "mystery."

Now, again, you don't have to wait until you seem to have no choice. You can make that commitment when there isn't a dire circumstance, when you're not at the end of your rope.

If you're not hearing your Guide, you're simply not committed to hearing your Guide. You still feel that you have some capacity to cope with life on the basis of your own best judgments and your own thinking. And you're going to opt for that, "thank you very much." And you'll listen for your Guide at another time. The only thing is, that the other time that you will do it is one in which it will be very uncomfortable because circumstances will be equal to your stubbornness.

You see, one way or another, correction is going to occur. One way or another, the holy Son or Daughter of God that you Are is going to come forth, is going to pop into view. Salvation will occur because this illusion cannot endure. It's a fantasy and Reality will undo it.

But it's no fun to be coerced because it always involves a struggle with your stubbornness. A struggle between your stubbornness and the Movement of God that would have you discover that you do not have a will of your own, truly, that can stand up against God successfully. That is bound to be discovered by you. And my task is to encourage you to let that discovery happen voluntarily, now, with curiosity—bring to the listening and the desire to be joined in everything you do—let that be as interesting to you as the “mystery of life,” and the attempt to solve it on your own.

This week I encourage you to read from where we left off last time¹ to the end of this section. The things I've shared tonight have been very consistent with what's there. But what I shared tonight didn't come out of abiding by a string of words in a certain order, but out of the very nature of life itself and the experience each of you has and the experiences each of you will encounter and the way to deal with them in a sober way rather than attempting to do it in a way that constitutes unconscious behavior, which accomplishes nothing, while at the same time believing that you are accomplishing something. That illusion has to be abandoned willingly, gratefully, happily.

You know, not a one of you has to read another sentence out of the Course. I mean, you can decide to stop thinking and be joined and stay that way now. If you don't do it now, you'd better read the rest of the pages. But it's not required. Your Salvation is not at the end of a process in time. It lies in shifting from thinking to listening. And that will always happen in the instant you're in when it happens. It's always going to be now when it happens—simplicity itself.

I love you. And I look forward to being with you next time. And value the recognition that you don't have the answer yet when you're thinking, so that you can immediately stop the thinking and get back to listening and reach out in joining with the intent to be in communion, comradeship.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 15th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I've shared with everyone many times the statement, "You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at that point and must understand yourself therefrom."

It's a simple statement. It gives you the starting point and the ending point, if you will, which are one in the same. And it makes clear what is fruitless activity like, becoming . . . like, getting better and better . . . or being worse.

But something that I haven't brought out before is the fact that this state of being neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it, is a state of perfect intimacy. And this is very important to understand. Because you might think—if you're inclined to think—that all you have to do is be conscious of the fact that you are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it and that you're at that point. A nice little private thought. A nice little private awareness. And obviously, a private awareness does not involve intimacy.

Now, what we're going to be reading tonight is all about intimacy. And it's basically very simple. But you know what? If you're not inclined toward an intimate attitude when you're reading this, you won't understand a word it says. And perhaps you've read it before and didn't understand it. And now you know why.

If you are actively engaged in the practice of authority, of accomplishment, of independence, there's no room for anything else. The concept of intimacy doesn't fit in autonomy. And so everything you do will stand at odds with your Awakening, will stand at odds with your discovering that you are the holy Son or Daughter of God in actuality.

You know what? The intimacy that is meant to be embodied in that statement, “You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at the point and must understand yourself therefrom,” is captured in the image or the sight of an infant or a very young child who’s held in his mother’s or his father’s arms and who has fallen asleep in pure safety and security—bliss—an intimacy that comes about because he has abandoned, if indeed he had any to abandon, he has abandoned self-protection. He is not experiencing fear and he does not hold himself apart at all. He simply sinks into his mother’s or father’s arms—yields to the intimacy.

Now, the intimacy that you are being invited to engage in doesn’t involve going to sleep, and is more like a child who’s being held who isn’t sleepy but is contented and who lies there in his mother’s or father’s arms, eyes wide open, looking up into his mother’s or father’s eyes in utter peace, utter contentment, and utter union—more a fuller union than just relaxing into his parents’ arms—a contentment and intimacy through eye contact where he knows you know he knows and you know he knows you know.

Let’s read the sentence we ended up with the last time we were together and listen to it now in light of what I just said.

Across the bridge is your completion, for you will be wholly in God, . .

. . . um . . . just as that child is wholly in his father’s or mother’s presence and grasp and environment . . .

. . . for you will be wholly in God, willing for nothing special, but only to be wholly like unto Him, completing Him by YOUR completion.

Any of you who have ever held a child, who in utter simplicity and peace lies in your arms and looks up into your eyes with pure contentment and love, understands these words and it brings the words alive because the subject is intimacy, the subject is union, the subject is coming Home.

Fear not to cross to the abode of peace and perfect holiness.

Well you know, that little children are very able to do that, but you’re not. You need to be. And that’s what this is about.

And as I said, if when you read this you’re in a state of self-defense and self-protection and autonomy, this isn’t going to make sense or it’s going to make you very disturbed. Because it’s going to call for you to abandon something you feel is absolutely important to you. Nevertheless, the truth is here to be seen. And now that I'm pointing it out, you know that if at a future time you read this, or anything like it, and it makes you angry or it disturbs you, that it means that you are engaging in, with vigor, in the act of self-protection and authority. And now you know that the call is for you to abandon it—to stop valuing it and to use whatever self-discipline is necessary to accomplish that task—even though you don't feel like doing it, even though you feel like indulging in your anger or your seemingly justifiable distress. But . . .

Fear not to cross to the abode of peace and perfect holiness. Only there is the completion of God and of His Son. . .

. . . you . . .

. . . established forever.

It's established there forever. There's been no variableness to it ever, even though you have indulged in self-assertion independent from and separate from your Father's arms, your Father's love, and your Father's embrace.

Seek not for this . . .

. . . the completion of God and His Son . . .

. . . in the bleak world of illusion, where nothing is certain, and where everything fails to satisfy.

Well, what's the bleak world of illusion? You can read that and say, "Oh yeah, I understand, I'm not gonna seek for it in the bleak world of illusion in this world . . . you know . . . all of this is illusion, I'm not gonna seek for it there."

But it isn't about this world that you're in. The bleak world of illusion is a concept you have, a mental context that you have that says you're capable of thinking and that your thinking is valuable. And so, there's the error. There's where the correction needs to occur. And that's why we have the two-step.

Now, as I said, you could say, "Oh, yeah, of course, I'm not gonna look for it in the bleak world of illusion . . ." talking about this world, and you've already done it! Because the statement that came out of your mouth [snaps fingers] so spontaneously and so confidently, was thinking! You were indulging in the bleak world of illusion. The world of the illusion that your thinking is dependable, accurate, constructive and can succeed in making you safe, healthy, wealthy and wise. You see?

You've already succumbed to the bleak world of illusion: The idea—the false idea—that your thinking is valuable, that it's the beginning and the ending.

When you understand that the bleak world of illusion is the mindset that says your thinking is valuable, then you have a way to not seek for the completion of God and His Son—you—in thinking. You know not to do it. And that the way to have the experience of your Oneness with your Father become illuminated to you, is to shut up! And thereby not indulge in the bleak world of illusion. You see?

Seek not for this . . .

. . . the completion of God and of His Son which is established forever . . .

. . . in the bleak world of illusion, where nothing is certain, and where everything fails to satisfy.

See? So now it's clear to you that you don't want to engage in this independent act of thinking that doesn't involve intimacy at all. And therefore does not expose you to the forever experience of your safety and wholeness that has never changed and it's your Birthright to be experiencing.

Continuing . . .

In the Name of God, . .

. . . in the arms of God as God's loved offspring who loves his Father, Mother . . .

. . . be wholly willing to abandon ALL illusions.

What? Thinking, reasoning, judgments, pet theories and the belief that their use can be creative and cause things to actually, really happen.

In any relationship in which you are wholly willing to accept completion, and ONLY this, . .

. . . nothing else, and ONLY this, just like the child that accepts it and ONLY that, . .

. . . there is God completed, and His Son with Him.

Again, every mother or father or aunt or uncle or brother or sister who has held an infant, who has yielded into the one who is holding him completely, understands what these words mean in their divine aspect relative to the holy Son of God that you Are and the means by which you can arrive at the conscious experience of it.

The bridge that leads to union in yourself MUST lead to knowledge, for it . . .

. . . what? The bridge . . .

. . . for it was built with God beside you, and will lead you straight to Him, where your completion rests, wholly compatible with His.

Now, you know that I don't generally use the word, "knowledge" as much as I use the word, "knowing" because in a way, knowledge can be conceived to be bits of information, collections of bits of information, organized bits of information that you might be able to rattle off but never really understand, never really know.

And so, when it says . . .

The bridge that leads to union in yourself must lead to knowledge, . .

. . . it really means that it must lead to Knowing, the sort of knowing that you experience when you're holding that child who's gazing innocently and intimately into your eyes. You know something, you may not even be able to put it into words, but you know something and it's not a bit of knowledge.

So . . .

The bridge that leads to union in yourself must lead to . . .

. . . knowing. Something significant.

for it . . .

. . . the bridge that leads you to it . . .

. . . was built with God beside you, and will lead you straight to Him, where your completion rests, . .

. . . not as a thought, "Oh, I'm neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. I'm at that point and did you know what? I understand myself therefrom." Bullshit! The words mean something but they are to lead you to an experience . . . an experience . . . an experience of what? Intimacy, undefended intimacy where you have succumbed to your Father's love, where you have yielded to it and experienced it so that you find Awakened in you an infinite love that you have for your Father. And in that experience, which is Knowing, and which this sentence calls "knowledge," you and God are made whole. It's beautiful.

You know what? To study the Course, to study the truth, to want to know the truth, to want to know the truth instead of error, to want to have instantaneous healings, these things are all valid wants—valid desires—and they will be yours when you abandon the last shred of the desire to be able to act in your own right independently. Because until you've abandoned it, you're seeking for the completion of God and of His Son in the bleak world of illusion, of whatever effort you're putting into the practice of your own thinking and your own supposed authority and your own attempts to make things happen all by yourself. And you don't want to be looking for completion in the bleak world of illusion.

And now you know. And I'm going to reiterate it. The bleak world of illusion is not the world and universe, it's the mindset in which thinking independently, being conscious independently, is seen to be valuable and real and an actual birthright that somehow the Father gave you for you to exercise as your birthright.

Every illusion which you accept into your mind by judging it to be attainable removes your own sense of completion, and thus denies the Wholeness of your Father.

Why? Because it's like the child pulling his eyes away from the intimacy with his parent and beginning to squirm and beginning to want to do what he wants to do. You see? And so, the wholeness is disturbed and the activity becomes a seeking for satisfaction outside of the bond of intimacy where it's not present.

Every illusion which you accept into your mind by judging it to be attainable . . .

. . . what does that mean? It means every idea, every thought, every collection of thoughts which you accept into your mind by judging it to be attainable, meaning by judging those collections of thoughts to have a capacity—to have an effect—and therefore cause something to be attainable, . .

. . . removes your own sense of completion, . .

. . . it puts you in the orphan mindset. Orphans aren't complete. They lack. They lack a source. They lack a father, they lack a mother.

Every illusion which you accept into your mind by judging it to be attainable removes your own sense of completion, and thus denies the Wholeness of your Father.

And just as with the child, that wholeness will not be present until what? The child settles down and happens to look up . . . perhaps, "Oh . . . oh . . . Father, Mother . . . I see you. Oh-h, sorry I got distracted. This is much better than being distracted . . . I love you and you love me and I know it. And we know that each other knows it."

That's Knowing. That's not a thought, that's not an idea.

Every fantasy, . .

. . . meaning, every spurious wild thought or even every minimal ignorant thought.

Every fantasy, be it of love or hate, deprives you of knowledge, . .

. . . of the experience of Knowing that is intimate . . .

. . . for fantasies . . .

. . . all these thoughts and ideas that you think can accomplish something . . .

. . . are the veil behind which truth is hidden.

So there you go. When the veil is lifted, it means that the screen, the sieve, the disturbance of thoughts will dissolve because you've stopped energizing them. And that which obscured the truth is gone and truth becomes clear—Knowing occurs. And mind you again, Knowing is an intimate experience.

To lift the veil which seems so dark and heavy, it is only needful to value truth beyond ALL fantasy, and to be entirely unwilling to settle for illusion IN PLACE of truth.

Well, here's where the work comes into play. Because you like the work of practicing illusions and of dealing with delusions and asserting what you think is a prerogative you have to be able to think and make things happen by virtue of your thoughts.

You've got to arrive where you're unwilling to settle for illusion. You've got to be unwilling to settle for that activity and the promise of success that you believe is involved. And persist in choosing for your silence and your peace where the veil of thinking is no longer being energized.

But you love to think. And so you constantly energize the veil. And you're familiar with that. And you're familiar with the consequences and you can cope fairly well with it. And the main reason it's worth it to you is because it makes you feel like you're still in charge, when you're not.

We started out:

Fear not to cross to the abode of peace and perfect holiness.

But you are afraid to do it because you're afraid to let go of the control you think you have, and the responsibility to exercise it that you think you have.

You know, when you start to listen for guidance, your Guide or the Holy Spirit will give you things to do that are new. You will be guided to do things like, "shut up . . . to be still," right when you are confident that you must assert yourself in some way. And you must be willing to take the guidance, because after all, in the process of Waking up what's going to happen? You're going to be helped to abandon the very things that have kept you ignorant, kept you asleep, kept you in a state of suffering, even when you didn't know that's what was happening.

And so all of the things you have confidences about are things which the Holy Spirit or your Guide will be helping you to abandon. And that goes against your feeling of security because all of the exercises of power that you have engaged in you believe have made you safe or will make you safe, and your abandonment of them will make you vulnerable.

You've got to remind yourself of the child in its father's arms or mother's arms and see yourself there so that you might know that if you do abandon the authority you think you have to express, you will find an experience of safety that is really an experience of invulnerability, which means unthreatenable.

So, we're talking about a change from autonomous independence to sheer simple undefended intimacy. From a place where fear is the only experience available to you to a place where utter love is the center and circumference of Being, your Being, your conscious experience and the Father's, because you've let them be joined and therefore, you have discovered that they are inseparable and never were separated.

Would you not go THROUGH fear to love?

You see, there is a point to all of this. The point is not to cope with fear and get a handle on it, but to move through it like through a veil, like through a fog into the light. And if you want to have that experience, you've got to abandon what's creating the experience. And what's creating the experience of fear is every attempt you engage in to be and do and accomplish something autonomously—on your own.

You see, the answer is simple, but it's exactly the opposite of what you are geared to do.

Would you not go THROUGH fear to love? . .

. . . and come out on the other side of it where you're not dealing with it? And where you arrive on the other side of it because you didn't deal with it but you persisted in wanting to see your Father's Love in your Father's eyes and you didn't want anything else.

For such the journey seems to be.

. . . going through Love to fear . . .

Love calls, but hate would have you stay. Hear not the call of hate, and see no fantasies. See in the call of hate, and in every fantasy that rises to delay you, but the call for help which rises ceaselessly from you to your Creator.

You know what? No matter how much the baby frets right while he's in your arms, there comes a point where he notices you again and gives his attention back to you and settles back down and feels his security. The call for help was there in his fretfulness. But he forgot where the help was and so he looked away and chose to act on his own and tried to satisfy his needs independently. You see?

See in the call of hate, . .

. . . see in the distress . . .

. . . and in every fantasy that rises to delay you, but the call for help which rises ceaselessly from you to your Creator. Would He not answer you whose completion is His?

You see, He's not stupid. [chuckles] He's not suffering from ignorance. He's not becoming distracted from you, just like the father and mother holding the babe is not distracted from the child.

He loves you, wholly without illusion, . .

. . . what does that mean? . . . wholly without having thoughts about you, good ones or bad ones, grand ones or small ones. He doesn't have any thoughts about you. He's involved in the experience. He's involved in the Knowing. And so He's there for you the moment you notice Him again, you see, and make yourself available to the experience of Knowing that completes both of you.

He loves you, wholly without illusion, as you must love. For love IS wholly without illusion, and therefore wholly without fear.

You know what? If you have become distracted and you're having your own thoughts and you're valuing your own authority and you're experiencing fear as a result, you've got to notice it. You've got to notice it clearly enough that you can make a decision to abandon what's creating the fear. And right in the face of the urge to do something to get control, to provide yourself with a feeling of safety, you have to shut up and look into your Father's eyes—you have to sift your attention.

Remember, your attention is God's treasure. Well, God's attention is your treasure.

Whom God remembers MUST be whole. And God has never forgotten what makes HIM whole.

You and every part of Creation.

In your completion . . .

. . . meaning, the experience of Knowing that constitutes intimacy.

In your completion lies the memory of His Wholeness, and His gratitude to you for His completion.

. . . the full circle, the Oneness as the wholeness that's utterly indivisible and always has been.

In His link with you lie both His inability to forget, and your ability to remember [period]. In Him are joined your willingness to love, and all the Love of God, Who forgot you not.

"Oh, I know. Yeah, this is all beautiful stuff . . . um-m . . . beautiful. But you know what? I have real problems. And I don't have time for this intimacy shit! I have things to take care of. I gotta protect my ass!"

Well, okay, seek for it in the bleak world of illusion until you get tired of it or remember what we've talked about and make the choice to abandon the bleak world of illusion and value the "intimacy shit" so that it ceases to be shit and becomes your most valuable asset. And learn to apply yourself, I'm going to say, to that goal diligently enough that no matter how strong the urge is that comes to you to take charge and begin thinking and coming to conclusions, you don't do it. And you sit there or stand there and say, "Father, what is the truth here," until you hear. Stick with it until you hear—yield, relax in the Father's Love until you feel it because you will. There's no alternative.

Your Father can no more forget the truth in you . . .

. . . although you have . . .

. . . than you can fail to remember it.

You may have forgotten it, but you can't fail to remember it.

The Holy Spirit is the bridge to Him, . .

. . . the one you'll cross over—that of you which is nothing more than your right Mind, waiting for this tiny-separated little sense of yourself that you're indulging in to let down the boundaries so that you can let It in, when It is the remembrance of God in you. You see?

The Holy Spirit is the bridge to Him, made from your willingness .

. . . to what? . .

. . . to unite with Him, . .

... to stop squirming in your Father's or Mother's arms and relax and yield into the embrace.

The Holy Spirit is the bridge to Him, made from your willingness to unite with Him, and created by His joy in union with you. The journey that seemed to be endless is almost complete, . .

... you know what that means? It's almost complete right now. I know, we haven't finished the book. But you know what? The completion is as close as your willingness to abandon your insistence upon thinking and asserting yourself as an orphan, as an independent entity—which you aren't. You have almost recognized it, that...

. . . what IS endless is very near. You have almost recognized it. Turn with me firmly away from all illusions NOW, and let nothing stand in the way of truth.

Join with me or join with your Guide or join with the Holy Spirit. And . . .

Turn with me . . .

... or them . . .

. . . firmly away from all illusions NOW, . .

... turn away from all the thinking, let there be peace in you . . .

. . . and let nothing stand in the way of truth. We . . .

... whether it's you and me or you and the Holy Spirit or you and your Guide.

We will take the last foolish journey AWAY from truth together, and then together we go straight to God, in joyous answer to His call for His completion.

Now what does this mean, "We will take the last foolish journey AWAY from truth together?"

Well, because you are presently experiencing delusion, you need help out of it. And so you ask me or you turn to the Holy Spirit and the only thing that we are capable of doing in the final analysis is to help you turn away from illusion. But because in Reality there is no such thing as illusion, we're helping you to do the last foolish journey—that of abandoning illusion. You see?

We're helping you do something you can't do. And we're helping you undo something that you never did—but we are having to engage in the undoing of it. And that is why it says: “We will take the last foolish journey AWAY from truth together.”

To the degree that you and I decide to abandon illusions we are still engaging in a journey away from truth. But I know how to help you not get caught in lengthening the last foolish journey so that when we work together it gets undone.

Another shared experience of intimacy in which you abandon your self-assertion and yield to help, yield to the love I extend to you, yield to the love the Holy Spirit extends to you.

The undoing of illusion is the reestablishment of the intimacy of Being.

Now we have one more paragraph in this section, but we're going to end there. I want you to stay with that. I want you to let it abide with you and I want you to be willing to abide with it.

And I know that during the coming week, you will still engage in self-assertion, self-protection and feel good about it. But you have a means to notice when you're doing it and to recognize that, what? . . . you're seeking for the completion of God and of His Son, which is established forever in the bleak world of illusion. And because you know that now, you can remind yourself and abandon the activity. And that's a step in the right direction, and it's healthy and it's healing.

I love you. And I look forward to being with you all through the week and next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

May 29th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Last week . . . the last time we met we talked about intimacy. And many of you appreciated the illustration of the child—the infant being held in his Father's or Mother's arms and looking into their eyes and for lack of better words, connecting: An experience of intimacy.

And we talked about the fact that doing the two-step is an act of returning to intimacy after you've glanced away and become preoccupied with what? Your thoughts: things you might want to do, things that are irrelevant to your being held, your being in an intimate place of union—unity with That which identifies You to you, That which is your Source, That which when you look into His eyes, reminds you of who you truly Are because you recognize Who your Father truly is.

This is very important. You see, because you're all very used to being on your own and capable, it doesn't feel natural to you to be intimate at the expense of your autonomy. And yet that is, as we've been discussing, the simple act which embodies coming Home—coming back into your right Mind.

Now, many of you have engaged in the two-step and have heard the Father or your Guide or me or the Holy Spirit illumine you with Knowing. And the idea of experiencing Knowing seems very desirable—something to look forward to—and of course, it is. But since the experience of Knowing is a result of a union, which has occurred because you have abandoned autonomy—independence—it's something that is in direct opposition to everything you've been engaged in prior to doing the two-step, entering into intimacy.

And so, this experience may not set well with you and you need to understand that, in many cases, because it's going to require you to abandon a false state of independence. It is going to seem to be something that you need to bring mighty resistance to. And even if it doesn't seem to you that you need to, your knee-jerk responses will.

The truth revealed is going to move you out of the crab-barrel. It's going to move you out of the orphanage. It's going to move you out of the arena of mortality. It's going to move you out of the context of sin, disease and death. It's going to cause your lives to be noticeably different, noticeably improved, noticeably desirable.

But if it's going to be at the cost of your independence, you're not likely to embrace it wholeheartedly, immediately. You need to know this so that you won't think something has gone wrong and so that you might know that you need to persist.

Now I'm going to give you a very practical example: About five weeks ago, Paul and Susan found out that as a result of a road-widening project on the street where they live—where the Foundation is—there is going to be considerable loss of planting. A tree is going to have to be moved. A fence is going to have to be put up when they're through. New planting is going to have to be done. And none of this will be inexpensive—and this right on the heels of a request that was sent out to everyone inviting help in paying for the property taxes.

They did the two-step. No, first they reacted. First they engaged in righteous thinking. And then, because it is their habit, they very quickly engaged in the two-step. And they were surprised as a result of the intimacy that they let themselves into, they were surprised to hear me say that it was time for them to move. It is time for the Foundation to relocate.

This was a Knowing that I was sharing. Exactly what I've been telling everyone they can expect to happen when they do the two-step, when they desire to know "What is the truth here?" In that act of intimacy, the truth will be revealed.

Well you can count on it, Paul began thinking immediately, "My God, we had to ask for help with the property taxes. Now, we're going to have humungous expense just to repair the effects of the road-widening. And now you're saying that it's time to move?" I shared with them, "Yes, that it was time to move, that the location was no longer fulfilling its purpose. The needs were no longer able to be met by the location. And it was time."

Well, more thinking occurred: "This is the most impractical time to ask for help—to need help—the economy is terrible, everyone is worried . . ."

And I said, "Yes, but fulfillment isn't dependent upon current circumstances. Fulfillment is dependent upon doing the two-step, listening, joining in the intimacy and hearing what the next appropriate step is."

Why? Because when you're joined, you are inhabiting the place where God's laws prevail. And what I am sharing and have been sharing with Paul and Susan applies to everyone else in this so-called depressed economy. Because your well-being—fulfillment of purpose—is not dependent upon the economy that is reflecting everyone's fear and unwillingness to spend. And as a result of not spending, it increases the problem and the fear.

Now, that doesn't mean that the answer is just to go out and spend and do the opposite. The requirement is to do the two-step so that you might enter again into intimacy. You see, you must enter into the intimacy because it's only there that you remember who you Are . . . only there that you remember who you Are—that you are the holy Son or Daughter of God and that all that God is has not been withheld from you in His expression of you. And therefore, there are things for you to do. There are places for you to spend your money. There are places for you not to spend your money, and so on and so forth.

There are things to do that identify fulfillment of purpose in that place where God's laws reign.

All of you need to be challenging the belief that you are at a disadvantage because of the world economy. No. If you are at a disadvantage, it is because you are in your Father's Arms, not looking in His eyes, looking everywhere else and being fretful. That's why. And all the time you're doing it, the circumstances that negate the fear are present. The Arms are there. You're in those Arms. All you have to do is the two-step and move into the intimacy again, remember who you Are, which will immediately bring your peace to you and help you to be able to hear the next thing to do or the explanation as to why the distressing thing you've already been told is a blessing, why you can dare to yield back into your Father/Mother's Arms and trust yourselves to them.

For five weeks Paul and Susan have attended to looking for places to live at my direction. They love their home. They love where the work is being done. They don't want to move. In many ways, despite the drawbacks, it seems to be perhaps, better than any of the places they've looked at. Their heart holds onto what they're familiar with and what they hadn't considered there might be a possibility they would have to leave.

Why am I bringing this up? A couple of good reasons. But one of them is, none of you will ever be free of this call for intimacy that might cause you to hear something you don't want to hear because fulfillment that's greater than you're familiar with and that you're totally in love with, is ready for you and it's time for you to embrace it. It's time for you not to labor under the idea that you must sacrifice or do with what doesn't work quite properly anymore because of growth that has occurred.

And when this happens, you must—after reacting—engage in the two-step again. Come back to the Father—come back to the Holy Spirit—and say in so many words, “Well, if You say this is going to happen, if You say this needs to happen, You must see how it's going to happen. I'm going to stop saying it can't happen. I'm going to abandon the feeling that I don't want it to happen and that I'm not going to cooperate with it and I really want to hear how this is going to work. What do we do?”

Now, when Paul asked me, I said we will write a letter to everyone on the mailing list, to everyone who accesses the website and share the need. Do you think Paul just sat there and said, “Oh-h, Okay . . . when can we start?” [chuckle] No. This is going to involve a lot of money, he thought, you know, he says, “I don't like to even indicate when there's a need for help with the property taxes because contributions are not overwhelmingly abundant.”

You know, there was a feeling of inequality that he felt such a letter would bring up in everyone. “Why should we help Paul? We have needs of our own. Why can't they do with less?” Thinking . . . he was thinking, obviously . . . right?

And of course, what I'm bringing up this evening is going to make all of you think too . . . and so just be alert for it. And I would ask, what level of poverty would you rather establish than the level of abundance that you could express by sharing—by sharing more than you might think you have?

I've asked that question of Paul and Susan before when they bought a new car instead of a used car. And that felt overwhelmingly abundant and perhaps luxurious just to have a new car. And it wasn't a Rolls Royce, it was just a car. And I asked them, “What level of poverty would you rather have established?”

And then a couple days later when Paul looked across the street and noticed something he hadn't seen before. The people across the street, in an average house, in an average neighborhood where they lived, had the same kind of car that had just been purchased and right beside it in the driveway was a boat.

And there was nothing outlandish about it. It was just more abundance than he was inclined to conceive as simply normal for him.

When you move into the realm where God's laws prevail, wholeness is embodied . . . for everyone who is willing to move into that place where God's laws prevail. And where is that place? In the intimacy: in the intimacy that is the result of the two-step.

Now, going into the Book:

If special relationships of any kind [any kind] would hinder God's completion, CAN they have value to you?¹

Well, you know what? Special relationships are agreements, agreements with others to function independent of God. Special relationships are relationships which are a denial of God's Presence. But how do you engage in those relationships? By means of thought and ideas which you put together in specific ways for specific effects to make something happen, in other words.

So, special relationships distilled down to their essence are constituted of thinking. If thinking of any kind would hinder God's completion, can it have value to you?

Of course, God's completion is your completion. It's what happens in that moment of intimacy where you Know that He Knows that you Know and He Knows that you Know that He knows. Anything other than that can have no value for you and doesn't and never has had.

Paul and Susan are having to make that decision to abide with the Knowing that occurs in the intimacy of the two-step rather than highly value their best judgments and their best conditionings that they have put into place as they have lived life and come to conclusions about how things work best when they're not experiencing intimacy. You see?

So, right now, I'm dictating the letter that I told Paul we would be sharing with everyone. And when it is transcribed it will be mailed out to everyone.

You know, you just can't say, "You shouldn't have a need," or "If you had done something else, you wouldn't have this need." If there was no need, there would be no Course In Miracles. If there was no need, you would already be Awake.

And as I've said before, the miracle is going to relate to exactly where you are and exactly the things you are encountering in your daily life. Because what you are encountering in your daily life is the Kingdom of Heaven not seen clearly at the moment—when clarity of Vision is your Birthright and calls for correction of your current poor vision.

Love is most needed, and you might say, most available where there seems to be lack of one sort or another—whether it ought to be there or not according to somebody's judgment.

Needs are needs, and that they be met is inevitable. For them to be met, you could say, is what their purpose is. They're not to be ignored. They're not to be risen above. They are the place where clarity of vision, insight—the insight that is the result of intimacy with the Father—occurs and comes to bear upon the situation and shows wholeness instead of need.

So you must dare to face into them—the needs. And not deny them and not criticize yourself for having them, . . . you know.

At one point my disciples asked, regarding a young man, "Who sinned, him or his father?" And I shared with them, it had nothing to do with sin or who sinned or who was responsible but it was for the glory of God. In other words, it was an opportunity for the experience of intimacy in which the need—the lack—would dissolve, disappear, because God is God and God is all there is to the Sons and Daughters of God.

And so everything is a miracle waiting to happen, is the truth waiting to be seen and for wholeness to be experienced because it fulfills purpose. Not because it was earned, not because it was deserved, but because God is All.

Continuing:

What would interfere with God MUST interfere with you.

Well, if your thinking distracts you from looking into your Father's eyes, it causes you to forget who you Are. It causes you to experience this illusion, this artificial sense of separateness, which isn't true at all because you're still secure in the arms of your Father, in His embrace, . . . in His attention.

So what does that mean? It means when you engage in the two-step and when intimacy occurs and truth is shared, and it's not what you expected, and it goes against everything that you have believed, you must persist in looking at your Father's eyes and not turning your head away, not frowning and squinching up your eyes so that you forget to see your Father and become preoccupied with the stress of being upset.

Only in time does interference in God's completion seem to be possible.

Well, time could be the process of thinking—this thought leads to that thought, leads to another thought, leads to a conclusion—and none of it has been inspired by a moment of intimacy or Knowing and therefore, it's all false, it is all unhelpful, it all distracts you from the very thing that would bring you your peace, although it will be a peace at a new level, a peace that is experienced because you're willing to place yourself where God's laws prevail. Where is that? In the intimacy.

The bridge that He would carry you across lifts you from time into eternity. Waken from time, and answer fearlessly the call of Him . . .

. . . the Father . . .

. . . Who gave eternity to you in your creation.

You know, . . . wonderful, perhaps flowery words. Now, I'm going to engage you in the practicality of those words. I'm inviting everyone, because there is an actual need, to be willing to consider contributing to this move, which will be quite expensive because it will involve the purchasing of a new residence before the old residence is sold. So we're talking about hundreds of thousands of dollars instead of thousands of dollars or hundreds of dollars.

Thinking occurring? Anybody suffering from thinking at this moment? . . . oh, personal responsibility, inequity?

But wait a minute, . . . Paul is standing, . . . Susan is standing at the edge of the impossible and they're asking me, "What next?" And I'm saying, that what's next is exactly what's happening at this moment. Paul is giving voice to what I'm sharing. Because what I'm sharing is the practicality of these beautiful words:

Only in time does interference in God's completion seem to be possible. The bridge that He would carry you across lifts you from time into eternity.

What does that mean? From lack into that place where God's laws prevail, which is where, in the intimacy that occurs when you dare to abandon your independence and yield into and partner with the Father without your having the edge in the partnership.

So what I'm saying and what you're hearing is not calling for you to think, but it's calling for you to do exactly what Paul and Susan are doing and what I have described.

Those with hundreds of thousands of dollars can contribute hundreds of thousands of dollars. Those with hundreds of dollars can contribute hundreds of dollars and those with dollars can contribute dollars . . . not because I just said that those with hundreds of thousands of dollars can and therefore should. The point is when you get into the intimacy of the two-step and you listen, what you will hear will fit you.

Now it may call upon you to do what you call stretching, but that's only because you have a tendency to stay small, you have a tendency to hold onto the status-quo, just as Susan and Paul do. And there's need for expansion. There's need for you to come not only to an intellectual realization, but a realization as a result of actual intimacy that where God's laws prevail, you are whole. And now your Birthright involves your having—not your lack—and involves your having what meets your simplest most basic needs so that you're not existing in a state of tension because you're managing to do without because of your great faith that everything will be alright even though you lack.

It's not appropriate for you to be stuck in that. And it's not appropriate for you to read the paper or listen to the news and come to the conclusion that because everyone in the world is believing that the economy is bad that God's laws don't prevail anywhere and aren't available to you as a result of the two-step and as a result of the intimacy in which even for a brief moment you realize who you Are and what your Birthright is and it doesn't seem so unimaginable to you and you're a little bit more at ease with it. And you're a little less likely to insist upon more poverty than what the Father would give you.

The need to move to a new location is actual. It has nothing to do with wants. If Susan and Paul could have what they want they would stay right here. Oh, does that mean that the Father may force your good upon you? I hope so! I'm in support of that.

It's your Birthright not to be experiencing lack. And it's your Birthright to be experiencing your wholeness even though everyone else believes it's impossible because it's just a material world and it's just human beings and it's just egos trying to survive in a dualistic polarized environment. It's not true! Paul at this moment, is joining me in letting that fact be voiced in the world, where the news is voicing other things. And he's not voicing something that's going to give him an advantage while everyone else is at a disadvantage. No! Because the point is that there is a place where God's laws reign. And it's in the place that all of you have available to you. It's in the place of intimacy, when you abandon your independence and desire to know something other than your best judgments or someone else's best judgments, . . . "What is the truth here? What do I need to know? What do I need to do?" And if you have to ask it, "How can I engage in it without being afraid that I'm going to be sacrificing?"

Again:

Waken from time, . .

. . . the realm of thinking and thought processes . . .

. . . and answer fearlessly the call of Him Who gave eternity to you . . .

. . . Who gave wholeness to you, allness to you . . .

. . . in your creation. On this side of the bridge to timelessness you understand nothing.

The problem is you think you do. And you're confident about what you think. You're confident about what you believe. But . . .

On this side of the bridge to timelessness you understand nothing.

Why? Because any understanding you have hasn't come from the experience of intimacy where you've looked into your Father's eyes and He Knows that you know that He knows and you know that He knows that you know, where a Knowing has occurred that reveals and confirms to you Who the two of you Are and what the two of you aren't.

But as you step lightly across it, . .

. . . the bridge . . .

. . . upheld BY timelessness, . .

. . . the nature of the intimacy . . .

. . . you are directed straight to the Heart of God.

. . . Home, clarity, sanity and needs met. Don't be ashamed of your needs. Your real needs, when they are met, convey to you in a way nothing else can that there is a God. When your wants are met it conveys nothing except you got what you wanted. And at the bottom line, you know the difference between your wants and your needs.

. . . BY timelessness . . . as you step lightly across it, upheld BY timelessness, you are directed straight to the Heart of God. At Its center, and ONLY there, you are safe forever, . .

. . . why? Because that's where God's laws prevail, that's the Kingdom of Heaven.

At Its center, and ONLY there, you are safe forever, because you are COMPLETE forever.

You see, where God's laws prevail all that God is, is all that is there—completeness forever, wholeness forever, the Movement of Creation forever.

There is no veil the Love of God in us together cannot lift.

What's the veil? The curtain of thoughts, the curtain of beliefs that you hold—that you hold up between you and everything you see.

There is no veil . . .

. . . no curtain of thoughts . . .

. . . the Love of God in us together cannot lift.

See, . . joining, intimacy, revelation and the willingness to persist in staying there no matter how radically you are lifted out of the crab barrel in the process.

The way to truth is open. Follow it with me.

Follow it with the Holy Spirit. Follow it with the Father's Guidance. See, . . with . . . with . . . with . . . follow it with me in the intimacy of joining, in the intimacy that occurs when you're not holding yourself apart in any way and not wanting to.

Now, again I indicate that there is a substantial opportunity to contribute to the meeting of a need, the purpose of which is to make it easy for Paul and Susan to do exactly what's happening tonight, to extend my words, to give voice to the truth that heals and transforms.

And I'm going to say that I require no one to do it because I'm Jesus. Do you understand? Do it as a result of joining with the Holy Spirit or the Father or me in the intimacy of your Being, so that it is a gift and not an obedience. I cannot be too clear about that. And you do not want the confusion that will follow making a gift that's not a gift because it was an obedience.

The need is immediate. It is time. It is time for the movement to begin. The need is now.

Enjoy finding out how your love will look. I love you all and I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 5th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're not going to go into the book tonight because there's something I need to discuss. But before we discuss it, let's take a few moments to be quiet together.

[quiet time]

Okay. What we need to talk about tonight are miracles. We're reading from a book called, A Course In Miracles. And you know what? A lot of the students of the Course say, "A Course in Miracles is not about miracles, per se. They're not about healing the sick, . . . raising the dead, . . . walking on water, . . . moving from one place to another instantaneously. But that it's a sudden shift of consciousness, you might say, a sudden change of mind that might not be accompanied by any physical changes, any, let's say, change in your life. It's just that the problem will not bother you as much anymore, because you've found your peace."

But you know what?

We read last week that . . .

. . . as you step lightly across [the bridge to timelessness], upheld BY timelessness, you are directed straight to the Heart of God. At Its center, and ONLY there, you are safe forever, because you are COMPLETE forever.

No. Let's pay attention to what the words say. The words say when you are there . . .

. . . you are COMPLETE forever.

Do you think you have never been at the center of the Heart of God? Do you think that you were never ever the holy Son or Daughter of God without any ignorance of your divinity, of your wholeness, of your completeness?

Do you think that God created you imperfect, with a capacity to become perfect?

Then the simple fact is, that you could never step lightly across the bridge upheld BY timelessness and find yourself directed straight to the Heart of God and at Its center and ONLY there, find yourself COMPLETE forever.

Forever means forever. It means before, now, after, without any of it being divided up into before, now, after. It's FOREVER. It's always. It's immutably, unchangeably the fact of Being. And if you can at some point, step into the conscious experience of your completeness forever, then you're stepping into what could only have been a pre-existing state, an ever-present state, even though you were thinking you were incomplete—partial, alone, separated. You see?

So if you're going to find yourself complete in the Heart of God at any point in your existence, it's not going to be a new state of Being for you. It's going to be your natural state of Being that you've always been in, but which you have been unconscious of, and more than that, it's something you have been consciously ignoring.

And how do you consciously ignore it? By consciously denying your completeness. By consciously denying the miraculous. By consciously denying the evidence of your completeness. And when you deny the evidence of your completeness, when you deny it as the eternal state of your being, you, as we've discussed before, created dissonance within yourselves which distracts you from the conscious experience of your eternal state of Being.

Now, no one who studies the Course will tell me or tell anyone else that the Course is about denying your completeness . . . it will not tell you that it is about denying the blessing of God's Love. They will not tell you it's about denying your relationship with God. They will not tell you that it's about denying your holiness.

But you see, the strange thing is, that they will, and many of you do find ways to claim that you're not the Son of God—the holy Son of God—and that there is not justification for you to have perfect vision or perfectly functioning kidneys or a capacity to run the four-minute mile or the three-minute mile, perhaps, or the capacity to give evidence to the miraculous.

Now, if it isn't about denying those things, then why learn about completeness? Why learn about your holiness? Why learn about your holiness if you aren't to take hold of it, if you aren't to grasp it and embrace it and embody it, incorporate it so that it changes you?

Because I'll tell you, one who is complete forever in the Heart of God is blemish-free . . . is imperfection-free. No zits of any kind, anywhere. And only the loveliness of love everywhere.

But you argue against the miracle. You DO argue against the miracle.

At the bottom line, you are all afraid of miracles—maybe not the little ones but the big ones, you're afraid of. In fact, the big ones you will often use as a means of applying guilt to yourselves and making yourself miserable. If you are in a plane crash and you are one of three people who survive, it would be called a miracle. And yet, very often, your survival constitutes a justification for grief: "Why me? Why did I not die and everyone else did?"

If you go through a hurricane and your dwelling is least damaged, you feel uncomfortable around everyone else because you're not as bad off as they are.

How much is too much good? Well, too much good is the amount of good that estranges you from your Brothers and Sisters. Not because they hold it against you, but because you feel unequal and you feel an unfairness.

Now you know what? Attitudes have to change about miracles. Miracles have got to start being embraced. Let's bring it down to earth a little bit. Completeness has to be embraced as something to take hold of and love, and expect to find embodied by you in your daily life, in your actions, in your body, in your relationships. And you had better begin to expect to see the evidence of completeness there. Because if you don't, it's only because you are expecting not to see it—you are disallowing the miraculous partly because you don't want to feel guilty.

So let me ask you, at the end of this day or any other day ask yourself, "Have I given evidence to the miraculous today? Have I witnessed the miraculous?" In other words, "Did I not miss it through lack of attention?" Because I'll tell you, the miraculous happens in front of you every day.

Why do I say that? Because God is appearing in front of you every day. God is the only Thing manifesting in front of you at any given moment. Did you give evidence to the miraculous by witnessing it? . . . or were you too preoccupied with your problems and your grievances and your jealousies and your fears, et cetera?

So, did you witness the miraculous? . . . or did you facilitate the miraculous during your day? . . . or did you allow the miraculous to happen to you during the day?

You should be able to say “Yes” to all three of them. And you should be able to say “Yes” to all three of them multiple times every day.

You know, there are those who devote their lives to the practice of healing, healing as the result of doing the two-step, healing as the result of joining with the Father, wanting to know the Father’s perspective about one who needs to be healed so that this healer may join with the Father in acknowledgement of the truth, in acknowledgement of the experience of the truth of this one needing healing—and there is an expectation that healing will occur. And the one asking for healing is in expectation of healing occurring.

And when the expectation is in alignment, and when it is not interfered with by doubt or arguments against the healing, there’s not just a shift of perception, there’s a shift of experience—and the blind can see and the kidneys work . . . and the body functions.

Now, one could say, let’s say the one needing healing could say, “Why should I deserve healing when there are thousands of people in and out of hospitals around the world dying from this very same illness, or suffering from this very same illness? Why should I experience healing? Why should I get special attention?”

Well, fortunately for those practicing healing, that question doesn’t make sense and is corrected immediately in the recognition that every time a belief in lack is overcome—is negated—and is replaced by wholeness, it lessens the density of the belief of lack in the world.

And so one deserves to experience healing because first of all, it honors the Father by giving evidence of the Father’s perfection right where you are, right where “a human being is.” And if you have the evidence of the Presence of God right where you are—right where a human being is—that evidence of the miraculous in the human experience lifts the human experience, you might say, lowers the density of the confidence everyone has in the impossibility of the miraculous. And this is needed. And it needs to be taken hold of and embraced consciously with no reservation, no doubts, no guilt.

You experiencing the miraculous demonstrate the Reality of the miraculous, give evidence to wholeness, which at the least is inspiring to all who are not experiencing their wholeness.

And if they misunderstand what's happening and they do become jealous of you . . . "Well, who are you to deserve to not have cancer anymore without going through chemo therapy and all the rugged shit? Who the hell are you to have this experience and not me?"

"Well, I'm just like you. And because I'm just like you, what's happened to me is your Birthright as well. And I'll be glad to stand with you in honor of your Birthright. I'm willing to stand with you as evidence of the truth about you so that you might not feel at a disadvantage because of my supposed advantage over you. Let us stand together in the name of the miracle. So that then you and I healed, have lessened further the density of the belief in the uncorrectability of this illness or disease." You see?

Somebody has to be willing to step out of the crab barrel. Why? So that you can have an advantage over everyone else in the crab barrel? No. But so that once out of the crab barrel, you can say, "Look, come on! I will stand here until you've made it out. And I will encourage you to come. You can see I'm out—and you know I was in there before."

Somebody has to bear witness to the miraculous. Someone has to give evidence to the miraculous because everyone deserves to see that the miraculous is actually absolutely normal and is everyone's Birthright and that no one any longer needs to stand in ignorance of his Birthright—accept it and suffer it, or suffer its absence.

How much is too much good? How much is too much good to wish for your Brother? "Well, God, please heal him enough so that he won't draw attention, or his healing won't draw attention to him. Heal him enough for him to feel really good even if he's not perfect yet. Heal him enough so that his being whole can't be used by him as justification for guilt or for further suffering. You see?

No! Stand with your Brother and you be an agent for change by finding no miracle too grand or too excessive. But don't try to imagine what that will be.

Take what I'm saying within. Do the two-step. Ask the Father, "What is the truth here? Share with me the experience of the truth here so that I'm out of my head and into my heart where I feel the truth. Help me be in the holy instant, in that place where I'm introducing nothing extraneous to or different from the Movement of God. And help me experience what that is, so that in my experience of it I find myself Knowing—not as a bit of information but as an experience—the truth about my Brother. The truth about my Brother that may go far beyond the most miraculous thing I could think of, where the Meaning of completeness forever registers with me and causes me to have a shift of perception in which I see my Brother embraced in the Meaning and the experience of completeness forever.” You see? You don’t know what that will be.

The holy instant is perhaps the most powerful idea expressed in the Course. It’s also the simplest because every single one of you has the capacity to step into the holy instant. Each one of you has the capacity to shut yourselves up, to silence your mind so that you can listen. And in that silence, desire of the Father—of the Source of your Being—to Know the truth. Why? So that you can facilitate the miraculous. And so that you can let the miraculous in to you. And so that you can recognize the miraculous in your day.

Now, needs are always specific. They are not usually specifically what you think the needs are. But needs themselves, regardless of how you interpret them, are specific. And this means that the answer to a need, the truth that negates the lack is also very specific. And because it’s specific, you have no choice about what the answer will be.

Now the ego doesn’t like that.

But the fact is, that your need is the evidence of your being out of alignment with God in one way or another, or in denial of God in one way or another. And therefore, the answer is that which specifically, point-for-point, you might say, negates the belief that is creating the need—negates the denial that’s creating the experience of need.

You say, “I’m having problems, and it’s because of this and that and the other thing. Father, help me get this, that and the other thing so that the problem can be solved.”

Now, it isn’t this, that or the other thing that’s needed, of course. What’s needed is really very simple . . . always. It’s your peace. It’s you. [Big sigh] Letting out a sigh that releases all the tension you’ve been carrying and magnifying and even valuing at times because of the benefits it gets you.

And so the answer isn’t complicated. The answer is you being utterly simple, letting the simplicity of your need, of your lack, register with you.

And what that almost always means is, you saying, “I give up. [chuckling] I give up my resistance against the Father . . . I give up my resistance against fitting in . . . I give up my resistance to cooperating, and in the absence of denying everything around me, [sigh] being that full open consciousness in which what's true can be seen, staring you in the face where it had been all along."

It's again like the child fretting, who held in the Father's arms, looks up at his Father's face and sees his Father's eyes and remembers, "Oh-h, yes, I'm safe. I don't need to be fretting. I can relax. I can be the Son I am instead of the independent one that I'm not, suffering from my so-called state of independence. This is when the miraculous happens.

The miraculous is not the result of control exercised by you, skillfully.

The miraculous is the result of humility—that which happens when you do the two-step. And the miracle is what you experience there in the intimacy you experience with God, in that place where God's laws prevail, nothing else does. And you, in the peace and the pleasure and the soul-satisfaction of being at one with your Father and nothing else, and therefore, being at one with all of Creation, are able to participate fully and wholly in the acknowledgement of the awesomeness of Creation in which you are acknowledging . . . what? The miraculous in everything you see. And in which you let the miraculous in. And in which, by virtue of your participating in acknowledging the miraculous, you facilitate the miraculous.

Mind you, I've laid it out pretty clearly here. None of this is some sort of private spiritual journey. It's you in your daily life recognizing the miraculous, facilitating the miraculous and letting the miraculous in by virtue of involvement with your Brothers and Sisters, involvement which does not let the justifications of the absence of miracles to go unobjected to. Where you do not allow the inspiration that promotes miracles to remain covered over because you are speaking up, moved by your clarity that has been the result of your doing the two-step, on the spot, in your day.

It's about involvement, where you don't let the status quo remain the status quo. It's about you stepping out of the crab barrel and turning around and facilitating others leaving the crab barrel, so that you don't need to feel guilty for your miracles. And no one else has to feel jealous of your miracles because your miracles are their miracles and you won't be quiet about it until they know it!

Witness for your Brothers and Sisters all day long because that is your function as a holy Son of God or a holy Daughter of God.

Do it, so that at the end of the day you can say, "Yes, I was witness to miracles! Yes, I let miracles in. And yes, I was the facilitator of miracles."

Every time Paul sits down and lets me speak, he gives evidence to the miraculous. Why do I say that? Because he lets that which illuminates the miraculous, that which illuminates the truth come forth and be manifest “in the world.” He lets it become manifest in his relationships with all of you and lets me be manifest in the relationships with all of you. You see? He let’s the miraculous in and he facilitates the miraculous by letting the miraculous that he let in, flow in perfect appropriateness.

And the world “needs this.” And everyone you know who is not experiencing completeness needs active witnesses on their behalf—witnesses to what is true about them.

Nothing is too good for you. Nothing is too good for your Brother. And there’s nothing too good that you could wish for your Brother and take time to join with the Father to experience the truth of as an experience, so that you might be with your Brother in a brand new way, at a brand new level that inspires him to have the experience of completeness that identifies completeness, wholeness, healing.

Take this to heart. God takes you to heart. And in His heart completeness forever is yours. Take this to heart. Share it with your Brother so that he might find completeness forever in the completeness forever that you’re finding, because you let yourself into the Heart of God.

It’s beautiful. It’s simple. But it requires you not to minimize and justify the minimalization of the miraculous.

I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

June 12th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Again, this week I'm going to start off a sentence or three before where we ended when we last read from the Text:

On this side of the bridge to timelessness you understand nothing. But as you step lightly across it, upheld BY timelessness, you are directed straight to the Heart of God. At Its center, and ONLY there, you are safe forever, because you are COMPLETE forever. There is no veil the Love of God in us together cannot lift. The way to truth is open. Follow it with me.¹

So we've just talked about the holy instant. We've just talked about the two-step. As you step lightly across the bridge to timelessness, you are directed straight to the Heart of God.

That's another way of saying that when you choose to become still, to abandon the great value you place on your capacity to think and reason and come to excellent conclusions and you are willing to abide in the stillness, the Presence of God in your mind as your Mind, can begin to register with you. That is what the words mean that say:

... you are directed straight to the Heart of God.

In the silence there is nothing left for you to experience but the Heart of God. There is nothing left for you to experience but your right Mind. There is nothing else for you to experience but the Father's Perspective.

And I'll take this moment here to suggest to you that when you ask, "God, "What is the truth here?" or "Father, what is the truth here?" and then you be still and listen, I'm going to suggest that you also, from time to time, to say, "Mother, what is your Perspective here?" —Father/Mother/God—because you have a bias.

If you say, "Father, what is the truth here? What is the truth about my fellowman? What is the truth about what is needed here?" you have certain expectations as to what the answer will be that are different from the expectations you would have if you said, "Mother (with a capital 'M,' meaning God) what is Your Perspective? What is the truth here? What do I need to know about my fellowman?"

It will be a good thing to engage in this practice because God is God, neither Mother nor Father, but embracing all, including all, embodying all that the words, "Father" and "Mother" mean. Your Father is tender. Your Father is gentle. Your Mother is firm. Your Mother is unyielding when it comes to sticking with the truth. Your Father is principled. Your Father is direct. Your Mother is sweet. Your Father is sweet. So when you ask of God, "What is the truth here?" be sure that you are letting all that God Is, "Father and Mother" enrich your answers because you're not holding the answers to a masculine or a feminine only character.

This will broaden your experience of what God Is and it will broaden your experience of what you Are.

Now . . .

At Its center, . . .

. . . the Heart of God . . .

. . . and ONLY there, you are safe forever, because you are COMPLETE forever.

And we talked at some length last week about completeness relative to wholeness, relative to healing. And the fact that wholeness—meaning total functionality, total perfection—embodied is your Birthright. And not to be experiencing It is, for lack of better words, a matter of laziness on your part because you're not objecting and you're not taking hold of the truth about

You, you're not taking hold of completeness and expecting to see It, because completeness is the fact.

But what gets in the way of the experience of completeness? That's what's covered in this next section. If you are going to choose for completion, you are going to stop choosing for what? . . . the special relationship. And what is the special relationship?

Okay. The special relationship is: Any relationship you have with anything when God is not part of the perspective you are experiencing that relationship with. Most everyone tends to think that a special relationship is something you have with a Brother or a Sister. But it's not true.

A special relationship, again, is: Any relationship you have with anything without the Father's Perspective being any part of your awareness of that relationship, which means, whether it's a table or a flower or a fingernail or a chair. If you're not seeing it with the Father's Perspective, you're seeing it with a private perspective that you have developed, that you have grown or that others have developed and grown and taught you about. And it's a relationship with a definition you have, rather than a relationship with something that you are experiencing through your Father's Eyes, which is another way of saying, experiencing it through the Holy Spirit—which is nothing more than your right Mind, but is the Father's Perspective, your true Birthright held in trust while you dally with being independent.

Therefore, again, a special relationship is a relationship with anything that you're engaging in with total independence all by yourself on your own. And which therefore, constitutes an unreal or distorted experience because you're not looking at it and experiencing it through your sanity, through the Presence of your Father's Mind which is your Mind by virtue of your being your Father's Son, your Father's Daughter.

So . . . (Raj did not read the Chapter Heading: SPECIALNESS AND GUILT)

In looking at the special relationship, it is necessary first to realize that it involves a great amount of pain.

Well, you don't want to do that. You'd rather gloss it over and make the best of all of your relationships that you're having without God being in the picture and without God's Perspective being yours in any way. I mean, you can manage to have a fairly decent relationship, you can manage to have a fairly decent social interaction—social life. Why look at the fact that it involves a great amount of pain even though it's not really that happy an experience?

Nevertheless, in looking at the special relationship, which you have to do in order to make a choice, you have to look at what you're making a choice between.

. . . it is necessary first to realize that it involves a great amount of pain. Anxiety, despair, guilt and attack all enter into it, broken into by periods in which they SEEM to be gone.

Now, . . .

Anxiety, despair, guilt and attack . . .

We've already talked at length about the fact that when you got your divorce from the Father and you said, "I'd rather see things my way," you suddenly discovered that your infinite perspective was gone and you were tiny—not infinite anymore because you had, in effect, denied that which is infinite about you . . . "I'd rather do it my way . . . my way . . . my way . . . my way! And your way is little. It is not infinite.

And immediately when you did that, when you made that decision and you tried to embody it—implement it—two things came into play: The experience of fear and the experience of guilt. They're inseparable, they go hand in hand and they go hand in hand with a decision anyone makes to look at things their own way—to deny the Father's Perspective, which is their Perspective. Because in spite of their attempt to be independent, in spite of their attempt to be an orphan, they are not orphans. They're still the direct expression—the full expression—of God.

Nevertheless:

Anxiety, despair, guilt and attack [all] enter into it, broken into by periods in which they SEEM to be gone.

You get a little bit of peace. And there's a reason you get a little bit of peace. We'll talk about it in a minute.

All these must be understood for what they are.

Anxiety, despair, guilt and attack. What are they? They're the spontaneous and unavoidable effects of claiming to be an independent agent and insisting upon giving your full attention only to what you are choosing to think and reason about and come to conclusions about.

They are the effect of total selfishness.

Whatever form they take, they are always an attack on the self to make the OTHER guilty.

Mind you, anxiety is uncomfortable, despair is uncomfortable, guilt is uncomfortable and being the recipient of attack is uncomfortable and engaging in attack is uncomfortable—uncomfortable for you!

That which makes you uncomfortable can easily and correctly be identified as attack. So . . .

Whatever form they take, they are always an attack on . . .

. . . who? . . . the one that's uncomfortable. Who's uncomfortable? You're uncomfortable! Why are you uncomfortable? Because you said, "Father, I'd rather pretend I don't have a Father. Father, I would rather commit my Mind to a biased and partial awareness in which You are not present and I am all that is."

Since the discomfort is a result of that act on your part of independence and you really don't want to take credit for it, you use it to make others guilty. You say, "I live in a conflicted world. I live in a world that isn't safe. I live in a world where everything is polarized and expresses good and bad, positive and negative and the conflict between these positives and negatives are making me miserable." "The devil made me do it!" "I'm uncomfortable because my Brother mistreated me." "I'm uncomfortable because I'm the victim of an unfair situation or circumstance."

So, the despair, guilt, attack and anxiety that one experiences by virtue of an inner decision to act as though one is an orphan when he isn't, becomes the justification for blaming another for one's discomfort. That is not intelligent. That is insane.

We have spoken of this before, but there are some aspects of what is really being attempted that we have not touched upon.

Very simply, the attempt to make guilty is ALWAYS directed against . . .

. . . what do you think? Your Brother? The circumstances? The polarized world? You? for having made a decision to pretend you're an independent, self-authorized agent? No . . .

. . . God. For the ego would have you see Him, and Him ALONE, as guilty, leaving the Sonship open to attack, and unprotected from it.

So now, the anxiety, the despair, the guilt and the attack are God's fault. You're experiencing them because God has left you unprotected. God is guilty of not loving you, of not being Love, of not being trustworthy, of not being something you can dare to lean into and yield into with confidence.

Now . . .

The special love relationship is the ego's chief weapon . . .

. . . or we could say, the special love relationship is the orphan's chief weapon . . .

. . . for keeping you from Heaven. It does not APPEAR to be a weapon, . .

. . . the special love relationship . . .

. . . but it you consider HOW you value it and WHY, you will realize what it must be.

Well, we've just described it. It is a means of substituting an unreal relationship for your relationship with your Father, which keeps you stuck in a state of orphanhood that is not true about you and causes you to distrust God, Who you no longer recognize as your Father, but simply a "Supreme Being," superior over everything, Who may or may not be kind, Who may or may not save you. And this keeps you from entrusting yourself to your Father.

The special love relationship is the ego's chief weapon for keeping you from Heaven. . .

. . . for keeping you away from your Father, from keeping you away from your unchallenged and unchallengeable awareness of your holiness right here and right now that would allow you to lay down your defenses and let your completeness in and let it register with you, and let it be what gets shared with everyone and everything, thus changing special relationships to holy relationships.

The special love relationship is the ego's most boasted gift, and one which has the most appeal to those unwilling to relinquish guilt.

You're ready to relinquish guilt—guilt trips that others are laying on you—but you're not really willing to relinquish laying guilt trips on others. You value guilt because guilt is a wonderful tool for control.

And so, everyone to one degree or another, learns how to use guilt effectively to accomplish things that serve him whether it's to another's disadvantage or not.

The "dynamics" of the ego are clearest here, for counting on the attraction of this offering, the fantasies which center around it are often quite open.

In other words, they're blatant. They're clearly loveless. But it's okay.

Here they are usually judged to be acceptable, and even natural.

So when you get a group of orphans together, all of whom love to use guilt as tool for control, it seems quite normal for it to be going on. It can be hidden in jovial bantering or it can be forthright in an argument. But, hey, ya know, you might say, "This is what guys do." You could also say, "This is what women do." So it's considered normal. It's not called into question. And no choice is made for completion. You see?

No one considers it bizarre to love and hate together, and even those who believe that hate is sin merely feel guilty, and do not correct it.

You see, guilt is really a rather effective way to pay for doing something unintelligent and insane without having to stop, without having to change, without having to make a choice, in other words.

Love and hate are both aspects of the special love relationship.

Yes, it could be called a special hate relationship. But that is not what the ego boasts of. It boasts of the special love relationship. And like in a hidden clause—in the concept of special love relationship—it includes a special hate relationship, which allows the two to be used together with greater power and greater effect than just the use of guilt. Guilt can be used to coerce anyone into almost anything. But if love that isn't truly love, love that is not what one feels about one's Brother or about some part of Creation because one is enjoying the Father's Perspective on His own Creation that's real Love, but when love is a pattern of behavior that is planned for certain effect and it is constituted of what one knows others will like and it is used in conjunction with guilt, now you have a two-pronged tool, you might say, for control. "You stroke my back, I'll stroke yours. You don't stroke my back and boy, all hell will break loose on you."

Now you don't lay it out that honestly to your Brother and Sister. But you behave in a "loving way" doing all the right things to create pleasure in your Brother or Sister. And your Brother or Sister enjoys the attention, what you might call the affection, and feels safe with you and willing to trust you. But then if they do something you don't like, you attack them. And you attack them by making them feel guilty.

Now when you make them feel guilty, they don't get any of your love—something that is important to them. They feel that whatever kind attention they receive is significant, because, since they are an orphan and do not have the experience of their Father/Mother's love, any kind attention is significant, meaningful, especially since it makes them feel safe in this world that they perceive as polarized because they have decided to relate to it without employing the Father's Perspective themselves.

So, love and hate are two parts of the special love relationship. The special love relationship again, being: Any relationship you have with anything that doesn't involve the Father's Perspective.

No one considers it bizarre to love and hate together, and even those who believe that hate is sin merely feel guilty, and do not correct it.

This IS the "natural" condition of the separation, . .

. . . of the human condition—meaning the state of being that is unjoined with the Father—where it's possible for you to think you're just the effect of the joining of a couple of blobs of matter called a sperm and an egg . . . pure chance . . . no God . . . no order . . . no . . . as they put it, "Intelligent design."

This IS the "natural" condition of the separation, and those who learn that it is not natural at all seem to be the UNNATURAL ones.

Don't you all at times feel that you're considered unnatural because of your point of view?

For this world IS the opposite of Heaven, being MADE to be its opposite, and everything here takes a direction exactly opposite of what is true.

Mind you, this statement is not a statement of truth where it says, "For this world IS the opposite of Heaven." This world is the visibility and tangibility of, for lack of better words, the Mind of God. It is the Kingdom of Heaven and nothing else. But . . .

. . . this world IS the opposite of Heaven, being MADE to be its opposite, . .

. . . what does that mean? It means that when you abandoned your relationship with your Father, when you said, "Father, I'd rather see things my way," you saw the world in a way foreign to the Father's Perspective. You made the world into something else. And it couldn't possibly be like Heaven because if it was like Heaven, you would experience it as Heaven and you would find you hadn't succeeded in getting your divorce from your Father—you hadn't managed to become independent.

And so in order for you to actually feel that you're different—that you are independent—you must have changed the meanings of the world into something different from Heaven. So . . .

. . . this world IS the opposite of Heaven, being MADE to be its opposite, and everything here takes a direction exactly opposite of what is true.

You behave in the world in a way inconsistent with it being the Kingdom of Heaven. And you use it for purposes that are completely opposite to what it is as the Kingdom of Heaven. And that is why anxiety, despair, guilt and attack accompany you. And this is why you have something to choose between when you're choosing for completion, for wholeness, for healing, for the visible, tangible embodiment of the perfection of the Father's Mind and of every exquisite idea in your Father's Mind, which includes the exquisite idea that you Are.

In Heaven, . . .

In Heaven, where the meaning of love is known, love is the same as UNION.

You see? Special relationships are the opposite of union. Special relationships are relationships between disconnected entities, disconnected from each other and disconnected from a Source beyond the confines of the independent agent—the orphan. And so union is impossible. Approximations of union—a hug, intercourse, a kiss, a caress—make one feel as though union is present, but it's just an approximation of union.

It's like kids: they make a cut on their finger and they press their fingers together and they think, co-mingle their blood and become blood brothers. You see? Not real brothers but blood brothers.

Well, egos attempt to be family, but it can't be consummated, it can't be actually embodied. But family is what everything already Is. Family is what everyone already is because there are no orphans and there are no Creations of God, no holy Sons and Daughters of God who are different or separate from their Father—period, ever!

Here, . . .

. . . meaning in this world that's the opposite of Heaven.

Here, where the illusion of love is accepted in love's place, love is perceived as separation and EXCLUSION.

It is in the special relationship, born of the hidden wish for special love from God, that the ego's hatred triumphs. For the special relationship is the RENUNCIATION of the love of God, and the attempt to secure for the self the specialness which He . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . denied.

You see? The holy Son of God says, "Father, I'd rather see things my way. I don't accept anymore the way You see things." And immediately, he finds himself feeling fear and guilt. What's the rest of it? . . . anxiety, despair, guilt and attack . . . miserable. And then, totally ignoring that the experience is caused by a decision the holy Son of God made, the holy Son of God now experiencing himself as an orphan says, "God hates me."

Now, there probably isn't any one of you right now, at least if you're in a fairly good frame of mind, who would consider thinking that God hates you . . . "I don't think God hates me, no."

But let me ask you this: Do you think you could dare to expect total healing from a terminal illness or an injury for no good reason [snaps fingers] right now? . . . just because . . . just because it's your Birthright and there is—because of your Birthright—absolutely no justification for you to be experiencing the injury or the illness any longer? If you don't think that that's your Birthright to be experiencing [snaps fingers] at this moment, then you have renounced the love of God. You are denying the Father's Love.

It is essential to the preservation of the ego . . .

. . . I'm going to back up.

For the special relationship is the RENUNCIATION of the love of God, and the attempt to secure for the self the specialness which He . . .

. . . God . . .

. . . denied.

Again, you wouldn't say He denied you your good, but you will say you have no justification for expecting unequivocally that you can be healed at this moment because God is your Source, the center and circumference, the primitive and the ultimate of You.

It is essential to the preservation of the ego that you believe this specialness is not hell, but Heaven.

Hey, if you think that you can find a way to behave with your Brothers and Sisters so that great harmony is brought forth without your experiencing the Father's Perspective, in other words, without your being sane, then what you're experiencing is hell . . . it is insanity . . . very simply.

Here's where logic can help you. Because the moment it becomes obvious to you that to not be able to expect to be healed instantaneously, and then not to be healed instantaneously, is the result of your insanity, and your insanity is constituted of your belief that you can be an independent agent with a perspective and view point all your own, you won't be in a position to say [snaps fingers] "I want nothing to do with that perspective anymore! It is insane and I'm going to abandon it. And I'm going to abandon it by doing something very specific: I'm going to do the two-step. I'm going to practice the holy instant. I'm going to become still and I'm going to abandon my independence and say, 'Father/Mother, what is the truth here?' And I will not abandon that quest—that question. I will not abandon it until I've heard the answer, because that is when I will be experiencing my sanity."

And I will tell you that when you're experiencing your sanity you will also experience your healing.

Again:

It is essential to the preservation of the ego . . .

. . . to the ongoingness of the orphan state . . .

. . . that you believe this specialness is not hell, but Heaven. For the ego would never have you see that separation can ONLY be loss, being the one condition in which Heaven CANNOT be.

Heaven cannot be in the condition of loss. That's why we're talking about the choice for completion. That's why we talked about the choice of completion last week and the week before. And it's why we're talking about specialness and guilt. Because a choice has to be made, a conscious choice has to be made, a choice wherein you come to the same conclusion that the practice of awareness, I'm going to say, that doesn't bring into it God's Perspective is a self-inflicted insanity that isn't actual but might as well be, until you change your mind.

Only then will you be in a position to change your mind, to make the choice and begin to constantly bring the Father into your experience by saying, "Father, what is the truth here? What is the truth about what's in front of me that I've seen everyday for thirty years and that I thought I knew the meaning of? What's the Real meaning of it? Because I know that to me it doesn't represent the Kingdom of Heaven. And yet I'm told and I believe that it is the Kingdom of Heaven and I want to experience It truly. Help me. I want to have the experience . . . the experience of Your Perspective. I will let You in. I am inviting You in. And I will leave the invitation actively open until I have the experience."

You always do what you value. And if you're not listening for the Father's Perspective, it's because you're valuing something else. And what you're valuing is your perspective. Start valuing and employing and magnifying your desire to know the truth—the Father's truth . . . the Father's Perspective.

You may not think that I've given you anything practical to do, or shared anything that you can use. But I will tell you, that I have knocked down some false idols in every single one of your perceptions. And you have been changed by what I have said. And the changes that have occurred will cause you to perceive everything in new ways, without your having to try to make those new ways happen.

And so I encourage you to enjoy this coming week with the changed perceptions that you're going to be experiencing.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with your next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES STUDY GROUP WITH RAJ

June 19th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're going to go right into the Book tonight.

To everyone Heaven is completion. There can be no disagreement on this, because both the ego and the Holy Spirit accept it. They are, however, in COMPLETE disagreement on what completion IS, and HOW it is accomplished.¹

We have two key points now:

The Holy Spirit knows that completion lies first in union, . .

. . . the first part of the two-step, right?

. . . and then in the extension of union.

Which is the second part of the two-step.

To the ego, . .

. . . this is the second point . . .

. . . completion lies in triumph, and in the extension of the "victory" even to the final triumph over God. In this it sees the ultimate freedom of the self, for nothing would remain to interfere with IT. This IS its idea of Heaven.

We're going to talk a little bit tonight about listening: About how important it is, and about how it's experienced and about how one must live with it.

It's not insignificant. It is the most significant thing any of you can engage in. Because it's the means by which you come Home. It's the means by which you come back into your right Mind. And I know you've heard me say this over and over and over again. Hm-m . . . and some think, "Raj, why can't you say something new?"

When it's time to say something new, I will say something new. In the meantime, I will say what's needed because what's needed is what will help get all of us to something new.

Arriving at completion is accomplished by silencing human will, silencing your personal private intent and reaching outside of it, reaching out to God or reaching out to the Voice for truth, which is the Voice for God, which is the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than your right Mind—your sanity.

Now, I've talked in the last few weeks about the fact that when you listen and you hear, you may not be happy with what you hear. And the simple fact is, that others may not be happy with what you hear either. And so, listening will either be something you abandon because it's "too much work" or it's something you will become even more intent upon—I did not say, "intense," more intent upon—more disciplined around. And in spite of the distress you might be feeling or the distress others might be feeling, you will step aside from the emotional reactions, and in the quietness of your Being—in the quietness of your Mind—you will persist even further in listening.

I'm going to talk for a few minutes about three individuals who listened. And you know, if you ever wonder how hard you should listen, how intently you should listen, think of these three individuals.

You see, the question is, "How hard do you listen to God?" How hard do you listen?

Let's take Abraham: Abraham, a God-fearing man. A man whose life was devoted to God. And he listened to God and God told him to sacrifice his son. Well, here's a situation where most would [chuckle] abandon the act of listening. They would say, "This is too hard! This is absolutely unreasonable!"

But if one doesn't have that response, what does one do instead?

Well, one listens like one has never listened before. After all, you love your son. The last thing you would consider would be to sacrifice him, even for God. And yet, if your commitment is to God, you're going to listen further and you're going to have to come to a point where you make a decision as to what is going to be the basis for your being in the world.

Is it going to be the Holy Spirit's Viewpoint or is it going to be the ego's viewpoint. Is it going to be listening to God or is it going to be thinking for your self.

When it comes to sacrificing your son or daughter or a loved one, you had best listen like you've never listened before.

Now I don't mean that as a threat. What I mean by that is, you will need to let the Guidance you've received lead you to a level of honest listening, wherein you are providing no distractions to become the whole of your willingness—not willfulness—the whole of your conscious awareness, the whole of your commitment to the moment that is in front of you and the situation that is in front of you.

Well, you say, "That was Abraham and, you know, we don't have circumstances like that these days. I would never be called upon to have to be that committed." And I'm going to ask you why wouldn't you want to be that committed? Why wouldn't you want to be engaged wholly, without reservation in that Place—in the silence—and in your desire to know of the Father where the laws of God prevail, and where in that union your completion lies, why would you not care to be there doing that if it meant Waking up, if it meant uncovering to you the conscious experience of your completion, of your wholeness, of your perfection, in which that perfection can no longer seem to be violated because herein is where the laws of God prevail?

Your mindset has to change about what it's going to take and how you're going to interpret what it's going to take. You can interpret it as a humongous burden that you are incapable of bearing, but the opposite of that isn't that it's a humongous burden which you are capable of carrying. The opposite of that is that there is a frame of mind in which you are not allowing doubt to disintegrate the unity of your mind and which, therefore, constitutes a place where wholeness is easy to experience, where wholeness is what is natural and inviolable."

You have to arrive at the point where it's worth it to you to engage like that because the experience that results is miraculous—truly miraculous!

". . . Oh-h, ya know, I tried listening . . . ya know, I've done it a number of times ever since I first started listening to Raj and he talked about it . . . you know, I've tried listening and you know, sometimes I felt like I was connecting with something . . . uh . . . but uh . . . most of the time nothing happened and I didn't really feel like putting more effort into it . . . more commitment into it . . . more resolve into it." You see?

Okay. Let's take a look at someone else. And before I do, let's remember that with Abraham, all of this was going on in the privacy of his mind. He didn't share with anyone what his Guidance was, and he didn't prepare to carry out his Guidance in public view.

But what about Noah? Noah listened to Guidance and he heard something outrageous. And his outrageous Guidance couldn't be kept a secret. When you start to build an ark in a village that isn't a seaside village, it draws attention and it draws comments. And it draws ridicule and it draws laughter and it draws disagreement not only from the villagers, but perhaps, from his family. I mean, can you imagine that his wife didn't say something to him about what a fool he was making of himself and of her and of the rest of the household and family?

What do you do when that happens?

Well, maybe you stop building the ark . . . and you drown. Maybe you say, "I really don't want to upset my wife, I love her too much, she's been faithful to me all these years, she doesn't deserve this kind of hell, especially when I can't justify it . . . I love her too much. And God really wouldn't ask me to do something that would cause her to feel disgraced and harmed and disrespected and unloved, therefore, it's perfectly reasonable for me to stop this bullshit and fit in."

But that isn't what he did. He listened further. He listened further, made commitment to what he heard, found nothing more important in the world to do than engage in the two-step, go into the silence, ask of the Father or the Holy Spirit, what was appropriate, what to do next, and when he heard, he either questioned it further and listened further, or having arrived at point of understanding, made resolve to act upon and do it. Which he did!

Can you imagine, under the circumstances of what he was given to do and where he had to do it, what kind of listening it took, what kind of resolve it took? And again, is this more resolve than you're willing to do—to engage in? Is it a burden too heavy to carry?

Or is it perhaps, an opportunity to make a switch in yourself and consider the possibility that engaging in the resolve is to engage yourself in a state of mind and a way of being in your mind that it's truly your Birthright to be involved in, and that because it's your Birthright, it's the easiest thing in the world even though it doesn't seem natural to you at the moment. And that if you will engage in it with that kind of resolve, [snaps fingers] the sudden shift of perception, that is what a miracle is, will occur—or I'll say, can occur.

Let there be willingness to find out if it can occur . . . if it will occur. Because after all, that's what the Course is about—this book that you love, this teaching that you've studied for years. It's about Waking up. Following through when you're really hearing, because under the stress of the circumstances you persisted honestly and diligently.

That's the fruit of it. The fruits of it is what it's all about. The miracle is what it's all about.

Again, you have to arrive at a point where it's worth it to you to risk the chance that there is a God—listen for Him with all your might, with all of your capacity and with all of your persistence.

Now, the third individual we're going to look at is Moses. Moses listened. You think I'm going to talk about the Ten Commandments. Well, I wasn't. But he did listen and he did receive the Ten Commandments—the laws of God that were needed at that point and he brought them back down from the mountain.

Oh-h, . . . this time it's not family and friends but it's all the people who have been following him. And they're too busy with ungodly things, we'll say, to give any valued attention to what he had had the commitment to listen to, or to listen for. And it burned him up and he broke the tablets . . . and what? He had to do it all over again, because that's the only thing you can do when you have a commitment to God.

But that's not what I was going to talk about. What I was going to talk about was the experience of coming up to the Red Sea with thousands of Israelites behind him running from Pharaoh and Pharaoh's army. And he comes up, obviously from Guidance, because they followed a pillar of Light during the day, right?—devotion to the evidence of the Father's Will was there. And now here they are in front of the Red Sea, Pharaoh's army behind them, no place to go. Man, do you think he really listened at that point? You better believe it!

Do you think you shouldn't, in this day and age, have to listen like that?

Well, if he hadn't listened, he would have sat down in a heap and said, "I give up." And Pharaoh's army would have over-taken them. You see? . . . and no miracle!

"God, what are you doing? You brought me here, you brought all of us here to this dead-end and there's no way out from it. I know there's no way out from it. Are You a loving God or not? Or am I just now finding out what you're truly like . . . sneaky, dishonest, mean-spirited. You just love to taunt us with the possibility of good and then you lead us up to a dead-end."

That's not listening, that's doing a hell of a lot of willful talking and willful self-assertion.

But you know what? It's when you're at that point where everything in you says that what is ahead of you is impossible, that listening allows for the demonstration of God with us—the Father's Perspective, your sanity coming through the Voice for truth to you.

"What God? You want me to hold my rod up, sort of at the Red Sea? They're going to think I'm a fool (everyone around). You can't be serious!"

"Hold it up Moses!" And the impossible happened! The miraculous happened! And the Israelites went across on dry ground.

This is the way the two-step works. This is the way the holy instant works. And if in the process you find yourself a little bit or a lot inconvenienced and put in a position that goes beyond any capacity you think you have, stick with it, because that's where the pearl lies, that's where the answer is. And what's the answer? It's that which undoes the impossibility.

The Holy Spirit knows that completion lies first in union, and then in the extension of union.

The extension of the union: Holding his rod up! In other words, extending, embodying the Father's will, embodying the Guidance, being true to that union within that's causing what's needed to become obvious so that you can embody it.

But now . . .

To the ego, completion lies in triumph, . .

. . . triumph . . . that's where the orphan does things on its own, not in union, not engaging in the two-step. It does things on its own and thinks it succeeds.

. . . and in the extension of the "victory" even to the final triumph over God.

In other words . . .

To the ego, completion lies in triumph, and in the extension of the "victory" even to the final triumph over God.

“You see, God, I did make something of myself. I didn’t need You after all.”

Hey, Moses did that too! He was frustrated as you and everyone else, including Paul, become frustrated. His people needed water and there was no water. And so independently, without listening, he asserted what he thought was a divine capacity of his own. And so at his hand, not at the behest of God, he struck a rock and water began to pour forth. He succeeded. And you know what? He did it without God.

In this it sees the ultimate freedom of the self, for nothing would remain to interfere with IT.

You know, when you get—I was going to say, between a rock and a hard place—between the rock that you would smite for water and the hard place where you do the two-step and abandon any authority you think you have so that you can ask of the Father what the truth is that causes the sudden shift of perception, that allows for a miracle, . . . when you’re in between the rock and the hard place, choose for the hard place, choose for the place where you must bring further commitment to your listening, so that in the further abandonment of your inclination to act on your own, you become truer to the Will of the Father in you that is You.

And in becoming truer to the Will of God in you that is You, you feel the cohesiveness, you feel the unity and you feel the completion, and the miracle, the blessing occurs. The ark carries everyone to safety. The Red Sea parts and you pass over safely, or your devotion to God brings you to a point of inner clarity that you had never experienced before—that harm could never be the result of obedience to God, just as Abraham found, so that his commitment from then on far exceeded anything that he had ever brought to it before.

I’m sharing this because that’s where we all are in our learning. And that’s what’s here to be learned. And I’m also sharing it because it’s where Paul is. And wherever Paul is, is a place that all of you are, in one way or another.

And so, what I’m talking about tonight is not airy-fairy theory. It’s a very practical truth for Paul and every one of you today, tonight, this morning, wherever you happen to be on the globe, whenever you might be hearing this.

Listening and hearing Guidance is where you learn the meaning of trust. And if you do not bring trust into play, you will never learn what is really trustworthy, you will never find That which doesn’t crumble in the face of your trust. Without trust you won’t really yield. Abraham yielded. Noah yielded. Moses yielded, not as a lark but from a very deep inner place that was arrived at because of the utter devotion to listening that was brought into play.

Now, don't make too much work out of this: "the utter devotion to listening." You know what? If you utterly abandon the distractions to listening, listening is deep, listening is full, listening is ultimate, not because you're doing something with great intensity but because you're neglecting to do anything that covers up the miracle.

So like I said, don't make work out of this. That isn't required. But do realize that it is going to take some discipline.

What I have told Paul and Susan . . . and you know, all of you villagers standing around while Paul and Susan get to the business of building their ark in plain sight, where everybody can have thoughts and opinions about it, and do, and voice them, good and bad, what it calls for is for greater devotion to listening on Paul's part and on Susan's part so as to be able to hear the fuller, deeper meaning that allows for the impossible to be recognizably possible and for its possibility to be facilitated and for everyone to rejoice.

And Paul must do this daring to believe that that degree of listening will not make a fool out of him and will indeed uncover the experience of God's laws being fulfilled, of God's laws prevailing, so that when I say to Paul, "Here is where the breeze is moving," he will become as flexible as the breeze, as easy as the breeze. You know, it's not a hurricane, it's a breeze, it seems to have no force to it, yet I have likened the breeze to the Movement of Creation.

The Move of the Foundation—the Northwest Foundation For A Course In Miracles—seems to involve impossibilities, seems to involve controversy, seems to involve dissonance, disagreement, bad feelings and good feelings. But you know what will resolve them? Not dealing with them, but listening with even greater commitment, listening with even greater willingness, meaning listening with less willfulness, listening with less of the inclination to find a rock to smite and make something happen, all by yourself, that will relieve the tension, even though relieving the tension won't constitute uncovering the sudden shift of perception that is a miracle.

The dynamics around the Foundation's present location with the street and the shrubbery being torn up and the noise and the dust and everything else, has been disturbing. And Paul found himself becoming significantly reactive. It even surprised him that he was bothered that much. And in fact, this afternoon he seriously wondered whether he would be able to carry out the study group this evening.

Nevertheless, his resolve and his commitment prevailed. And as a result he has learned and is in a different place. And because he's like you and you and you and you and all of you, you're in a different place and you have learned.

Most of all, this paragraph—this one single paragraph—that we read tonight is more vibrant and relevant than you might have thought it could be. And that's important.

I love you all.

It's your Birthright and your natural ability to be Abraham, Noah and Moses. To embody the two-step as they did. And to persist when you're between the rock and the hard place, in choosing for the hard place, choosing for yielding to the Father's Will instead of yielding to the temptation to take things into your own hands. And to yield to the Father's Will as though your sons or daughters' life depended on it.

You see, what you need to discover is that that's not asking too much. That's just asking what's bottom line natural to you all. Something you're all capable of.

I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 3rd 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Tonight we're not going to be reading from the Course. Tonight is a night for gratitude. And for a change, I'm not going to say anything for a few minutes because Paul wants to say something and it's something only Paul can say and it's something Paul needs to say.

PAUL: Okay. This is me, Paul. As many of you know, just a little bit over a month ago, Raj announced that he had told us that it was necessary for the Foundation to move to a new location. He said it during the Study Group and invited everyone's support.

Since that time, up until this morning, a total of a hundred and three thousand dollars has been contributed—an amazing amount, an awesome amount.

And then today, someone offered five hundred thousand dollars towards the purchase of the new house. That's six hundred and three thousand dollars in just a little over thirty days.

Now, that does something to someone. It certainly gives me pause . . . it certainly causes me to . . . well . . . feel very humble. That's a lot of appreciation expressed . . . that's a lot of love extended . . . I mean, an almost incomprehensible amount.

Now, you may have all thought that, uh . . . um . . . "Paul's been listening to Raj for twenty some years." But you know what? I've never listened in those twenty some years as diligently as I have in the last month.

When so much love is expressed, and when, as the saying goes, "everyone has put their money where their mouth is," it causes me to make absolutely sure that I'm listening and hearing correctly because I don't want to mis-use or disrespect the Gift that everyone is giving. And so in many ways, the last month has been hard work—diligent work.

But you know what? It has brought me to a clearer point in my relationship to Raj and relative to what he's been teaching about the holy instant, about the fact that when we go into that place and abandon our privacy and ask for help and yield to the Father, that although this seems to be a strange activity or a not-so-normal activity, it's really a matter of coming back into an absolutely normal activity.

For me to be listening as diligently as I have had to listen for the last month, has, as I'm beginning to grasp in a deeper way, been me coming back into a more natural way of being. It's certainly a way of being more consciously than I was used to—more conscientiously conscious than I used to.

I can't say that it feels natural yet. But I appreciate more than you can imagine the meaning that your Gifts have had for me. I still need to yield more. I still need to listen more attentively, you know, because although it seems like work, I am beginning to grasp feelingly, that I really don't want to be living in any way unconscious. To be listening in all respects is to put one's self in the position of hearing in all respects—Knowing in all respects.

When I've been thinking for myself, I've been being lazy and I've also been inattentive—inattentive to the Meaning of Reality because I've been preoccupied with the fun of my own thinking.

Now at this point, I am in awe of the love that everyone has expressed and extended. And I'm also in awe of the emerging practical awareness of what it's meant when Raj has said that when you go into the holy instant, when you practice the holy instant, you go into a place where God's laws prevail.

You know, no one can drum up six hundred and three thousand dollars. No one can drum up or generate contributions, at least not with the few words that have been said with respect to the need for contributions.

And so the miraculous has happened—that which I know I'm not responsible for has happened. And all of those who have contributed have been reflecting God's laws prevailing, allowing for the unreasonable to manifest.

You know, to have five hundred thousand dollars show up, to have a hundred and three thousand dollars show up, would ordinarily have caused me to be greatly excited. And mind you, I am amazed, but you may not hear joy in my voice tonight, at least not giddy excitement. You're hearing sober appreciation—deep love extended back to all of those who have extended love.

And so, I have to say thank you. I have to express my gratitude back.

Sure, Raj could have conveyed to you what I meant to say, or what I was really feeling, but the gratitude had to be my expression.

Thank you.

RAJ: Good evening once again.

So, brass tacks: Six hundred and three thousand out of seven hundred, nineteen thousand which is the cost of the new property. Yes, I'm quite capable of talking numbers and of not speaking in utterly spiritual terms. But you know what? If you don't know what the need is, you don't know what to listen for.

I've talked a lot over the years about the fact that "need given attention" is the way you deal with need. You don't ignore it, you don't rise above it, you don't put it out of sight and out of mind. You pay attention to need because need is where fulfillment is emerging.

Most of everything you experience is not being experienced by you as the Kingdom of Heaven, so there is more there to be experienced. But you know what? Where you're having a difficulty, or where you're having a need, is that part of the Kingdom of Heaven where the fulfillment is emerging, where the Kingdom of Heaven that it actually is, is becoming visible.

And so, instead of saying, "Oh-h, I have a need, I'm in lack . . . poor me . . . I'm going to worry about it. I'm going to fret about it. Boy it sure makes me look like a schmuck to have the need . . ." and blah...blah...blah...blah...blah.

You can do that, or you can say, "I'm going to look squarely at the need. I'm going to acknowledge it. There seems to be a lack here," . . . and I'm pointing out to you that there's lack everywhere where you're not seeing the Kingdom of Heaven, . . . "but there's lack here," . . . and because it is uncomfortable it's worthy of your attention because that's where your limits are being stretched to the breaking point so that there's no more bondage and so that the fullness that your limits were imposing on the Kingdom of Heaven can register with you as the Kingdom of Heaven—as fulfillment.

So, shall we all give attention to the need so as to watch for the miracle. And in the watching for the miracle become aware of what part we might or might not play. Because in paying attention to the need, it involves engaging in the two-step, so that you're saying, "Father" . . . you're stepping back from the need, from the uncomfortableness and you're saying, "Father, what is the truth here? Father, show me what needs to be known." And perhaps you listen to it. Perhaps you listen for the answer with more diligence than you have in the past, just as Paul has been listening for the Guidance more diligently than in the past. And in that more diligent practice of listening you find yourself coming into a newer appreciation of your capacity to be conscious as the holy Son of God instead of the poor little orphan, you know, with all the lack and all the problems.

So we still have what? . . . a hundred and sixteen thousand, which on the one hand can seem to be a great deal of money, but by comparison with the six hundred and three thousand that's already present, we're almost there. It's a pittance. It's a small portion. And you can just as easily look at it from that perspective and not overwhelm yourself with the sense of impossibility. You see?

Now, why do you do that? So that you can envision a lot of money as though it's not a lot of money? So that you can try to embrace it because it's not quite so much to embrace as you thought it was? No. You listen so that you might come into clearer communion with the Holy Spirit or your Guide or the Father—the Father's perspective. You do it not to overcome anything, but to be so in harmony with everything, as everything divinely is, that its divinity shows up, registers with you and looks like abundance or looks like dollars or looks like needs met . . . or looks like injury vanishing, illness disappearing. You see?

So, I'm inviting everyone to bring their attention to the need, not with any personal sense of responsibility, but with a desire to see God's perspective manifesting, and wondering if there's any tangible way you can play a part in it.

Now, you know what? This could be interpreted as my trying to generate an attitude in you of wanting to give. That's not what I'm talking about.

What I'm talking about is you—everyone—daring to become less impartial, daring to become less of an observer of things without being effected by them, without being (and here's the word) involved in them, because involvement is another word for unity. It's the opposite of independence. And involvement with your Brother, with the desire to see the evidence of Love and to be the evidence of Love, constitutes a breaking of the isolation, which brings you on your way Home. And that's the point!

And you know what? The other one hundred and sixteen thousand dollars plus the expenses of moving and so on, that will come into play, are excellent focuses for your abandoning your isolation and so that you might feel your wholeness, your togetherness—so that you might feel Family.

Wholeness doesn't just mean that all of you is present, like the bowl became big enough to hold all of you. No, wholeness is you being big enough to hold everyone and everything in conscious involvement, where no one of your Brothers or Sisters is lost to your attention, has not disappeared out of your range of vision because you're not paying as much attention as you could be.

Wholeness is you in total involvement with all of the Brotherhood and all of Creation.

You know what? Every single one who has made contributions, has expressed Love and has felt his or her Love in the act of giving, whether it was two dollars, whether it was fifty cents or whether it was two thousand five hundred dollars.

You know what we're teaching? We're teaching how to stop being strangers to each other. We're learning how to look into each other's eyes, instead of elsewhere, and remembering God. Thank you.

You do not realize how extensive is your gift of attention and Love. The Brotherhood—universally speaking, those who are Awake—feel the Love that you are expressing. Not because you gave it to the Northwest Foundation, not because you gave it because you value Paul, not that you gave it because Jesus said to do it, but because in the lowered defensiveness, in the greater defenselessness of you in the act of giving, the divine one that you Are is uncovered, . . . more uncovered and therefore felt more greatly, no matter where you give, no matter how much. The Love that identifies union to some degree or other illuminates Creation—re-illuminates It—by your Light, which you have kept hidden. And we all rejoice.

I will be instructing Paul to make another offer on this house to secure it. And I know he will listen perhaps too intensely to make sure that he is hearing me correctly and so that he is in no way abusing or disrespecting the Love and the gift that everyone has made and is making.

And I am grateful that this situation is putting him in that position because I get to enjoy his company so much more than before. And he is beginning to feel the enjoyment of it himself. And the more he does, the more willingly he will join further. And that's the point.

I love you all, every one of you. Thank you . . . thank you . . . thank you.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 10th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. This evening we are not going to proceed in the Book from where we left off. We will have a short, very short quiet time and then there are some things I want to share.

Okay, let's be quiet together . . . [quiet time]

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well, I know most everyone is curious and interested in what is going on with the move of the Foundation to a new location, and so I will not delay.

As of yesterday, I sent out a letter—an email—and posted it also on our website. And in it I explained that of the seven hundred and nineteen thousand dollars that the new property costs, we now have all of it except a hundred and sixty-two thousand, four hundred forty-three dollars. That was as of yesterday.

Since yesterday, the phone has rung off the hook and notifications have come through online of contributions amounting to thirty-two thousand three hundred and sixty three dollars, which means that now there's only a balance of one hundred and thirty thousand dollars needed in order to secure the property.

Last night at approximately two in the morning, Paul's cell phone "dinged" indicating there was an email. So he opened it up and it said that someone had just made a credit card contribution of twenty thousand dollars.

Now, as Paul told someone today, he's not used to this kind of thing. Neither he nor Susan are used to the kind of expressions of support for an activity that they are involved in. It's difficult for them to know how to be with it.

Now, they're not special. And that's what I want to talk about tonight. They're like you. And they, like you, are learning—or need to learn—how to let God's Love in, how to be willing to stand in receipt of it.

You know, we've been reading from this Book for a long time. And we've been reading about the holy instant. We've talked about practicing the holy instant. Well now, Paul and Susan and all of you are having the opportunity to have a better grasp of what the holy instant is and what the practice of it amounts to and what its, if I may put it this way, benefit is likely to be.

When you practice the holy instant, you, in the face of whatever's going on in your life, whether it's good or bad, it's you hesitating a moment—backing off from your spontaneous assessment of the meaning of whatever is in your face—becoming silent and saying, "Father, what is the truth here?" or "Holy Spirit, what is Your Perspective about this, because I've been told that You're nothing more than my right Mind. And so if You will share with me what Your Perspective is about this, I know that I'm going to be getting an insight into what my true perspective is about this and that's going to change me, that's going to change my experience."

I've pointed out that when you become still, when you silence human will, when you shut up your aggressive thinking and move into the silence with inquisitiveness, inquiry into that which you may have thought you knew about but that you want to know more about or differently about—if the truth about it is different from your preconception—and when you move into that silence with attentiveness, I've said you move into that place where God's laws prevail. Where God's laws prevail, things work differently—different from what you're familiar with.

Now, I've said this before: "You are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing toward it. You are at this point and must understand yourself therefrom." Okay. When you stop thinking of yourself as being behind the point of perfection but may be moving toward it, and you silence all of the thoughts and attitudes around that perspective, you find yourself in a place where God's laws prevail.

Now, usually when you finally decide to practice the two-step and you shut up and you inquire of the Father or the Holy Spirit or your Guide, "What is the truth here?" it's because you have a problem. You seldom do it when you're having a good time and you would like to have the Holy Spirit or the Father embellish it with even more of what it truly is so that you could have the experience of the “frosting on the cake” and not just have the cake.

So you do it when you have a problem. You do it because you need an answer. And what I want you to begin to contemplate is that it's no longer viable for you to ask for an answer because you're behind the point of perfection and needing help. That's not the way to get an answer. You will get an answer, but it's because you are at the point of perfection.

You see, you think you ask for an answer because there's a problem and that that's the way you'll get the answer—the solution. But the fact is that you ask for an answer because there is no problem. And the fact that, we could say ultimately speaking or divinely speaking, there is no problem, you will get clarification as to the truth of that fact.

You ask for an answer because there is no problem. Because the truth is, that there is no problem.

Why is there no problem? Because problems only seem to exist when you have adopted an attitude of being behind the point of perfection, struggling to advance toward it. You see?

This is important. You cannot arrive at an answer to a problem with the basic assumption that the problem is real and that the problem exists to be dealt with. That is never the way healing or correction of misperception has occurred. That is never the way it has occurred. When correction has occurred it's because you slipped up—you momentarily stopped maintaining the sense of being an orphan, the sense of being behind the point of perfection and advancing toward it—and in an innocent unbiased, momentary frame of mind which was the equivalent of being where God's laws prevail, the answer came . . . the healing occurred . . . the transformation or correction took place. It took place not because something managed to overcome a negative energy, a negative power or negative event. It happened because when one is not practicing insanity, sanity floods your mind. The truth floods your mind and you're no longer deluded and you're no longer seeing delusions.

Now, as I've said, Paul and Susan aren't really used to this kind of experience. It's true that for twenty some years they have lived on gifts—spontaneous contributions that people have made—but nothing of the magnitude of the gifts that have been coming in.

Now, how does this relate to you [looks around the room] . . . and you . . . and you?

The way it relates is, that if you're going to dare to consider that you're not behind the point of perfection, that you're at the point of perfection and have to understand yourself therefrom, and you're going to practice the holy instant, then you're going to have the experience of God's laws prevailing.

And what do those wonderful words—those spiritual words mean?

Well, in practical terms it is inevitable that you're going to find yourself gifted with something you didn't ask for, some good that you didn't ask for, something that you didn't have in mind. And you're very likely to find that in spite of what you had in mind this gift is for you and [chuckles] it's going to be yours whether you're happy about it or not—whether you wanted it yet or not. God's laws will prevail. God's Love will prevail.

It has been said that love inspires, illumines, designates and leads the way.

Well, love obviously isn't passive and wimpy. It inspires. Isn't that wonderful? And it illumines. And that's wonderful, . . . uh-oh, now something's going to happen to your free will. It's going to designate the way.

Oh-h . . . if somebody had told you that the two-step was going to put you in a position of losing your authority because God's Love would inspire you and illumine the way and then designate it, so that you didn't have a choice, you wouldn't have been so gung-ho to opt for the first step—inspiration. Everyone loves inspiration, but "God, don't let it mean anything. Don't let it change me. Don't make me have to stretch and be different . . . but Oh God, inspire me . . . it is so delicious to feel inspired . . . I could almost fly . . ."

I know, but you can't. You could almost fly but you can't. I want you to fly. I want you to be able to and not just almost have the feeling of being lifted up. But in order for you to fly, something in you is going to have to change.

So you're going to have to let the next step occur—illumination. The way to do it is going to have to be illumined. Well, that's not half bad either. I mean, to have the way illuminated doesn't mean you have to go that way, does it? So it's safe to let the way be illuminated.

But then there's that damned next step: Designation—the Father's Love, the Father's Wisdom. The sane perspective of your right Mind is going to designate something. It's going to say, "this way...not that way...not that way, no, not that way...this way...this way...and only this way!"

And then to add insult to injury, the next step is that not only have you been shown the way to go, but Something or Someone is going to take your hand and lead the way. You are going to have no means of feeling that you're in charge of anything at all. It will be your function to let yourself be led. Wow!

So, have ya been enjoying A Course In Miracles?

Because this is a course in miracles! It's not just a bunch of beautiful, wonderful words that inspire you and illuminate things to you. It also designates the way. It tells you where to go for your inspiration, for your illumination and for direction, which it will be up to you to follow if what the Course is teaching is going to make any difference in your life and if you're going to Wake up!

For at least four months since I have guided Susan and Paul to do this apparently irrelevant thing called, "house-hunting," because for some irrelevant reason they need to move (irrelevant as far as they can see), they have not had the most comfortable time.

Yeah, they listened. There was a problem. Things were transforming on the street where they live. It caused them to become still and ask, "What's the truth here?" And the truth was not something that might have satisfied them. It probably would have satisfied them to say, "Wait a darn minute here, we purchased this house because this house served a certain purpose—a good purpose, an excellent purpose, a divine purpose—and it has been doing that and it ought to be able to continue doing that. And so I expect my Guidance to say, 'Go down to the City Planning Commission and register your complaint, and perhaps if you listen to Guidance, Raj will tell you what words to say that will cause them to change their plans.' "

You know, "stand up for your rights!" That's a typical ego stance, isn't it. And hey, stand up for your rights with Jesus, or the Holy Spirit or the Father, whatever divine Presence will stand with you that you can give voice to.

But, no. The word was, "It's time for the Foundation to move." "Um-m . . . but we're so comfortable here. Yeah, there are limitations, there are problems but we've learned to live with them and we've become quite comfortable with them." It's sort of like having a pair of shoes that's not new anymore. But, you know, they have a year or two more wear out of them that you can get. And when you're told it's time to get a new pair of shoes, you say, "Naw, that doesn't feel like good guidance to me. My wisdom and my conservative good judgment says 'work with what you have until it won't work with you anymore.' "

So they had these kind of thoughts and they brought them up to me. And every day they would get up and say, "Are you really saying we need to move? Are you really saying that nothing is workable here anymore?" And I would confirm to them, "Yes." Not only that, every time I said yes, I said, "And the answer won't change!"

So much for talking with Jesus. I mean, I actually wouldn't want them to be blindly obedient, anyway. And none of you should be blindly obedient to your Guidance. But they continued to doubt and they continued to express their doubt. Oh-h, so they did the two-step. They moved into the place where God's laws prevailed and they were inclined to say, "Um-m . . . this doesn't sound like God's laws prevailing. I must've made a mistake. I must not be listening well. Today I'm going to sit down and meditate two hours before I ask instead of one hour. I'm going to do the listening better." Silly.

So they asked and they got an answer that they didn't expect. And then they would say, "Raj, tell us why. If you would tell us why it's appropriate for us to move, then we would understand and we could easily get behind the program and flow with it with enthusiasm and give our full energy and willingness to it."

Well, I won't answer that question for them because the answer to that question isn't important. The answer to that question would be an element or a factor, which would allow them to bring their will into play and say, "Ah-h, I can get behind that! I'm going to do it! I'm going to do it for my reasons!" You see?

Love inspires, illumines, designates and leads the way and doesn't necessarily give you an explanation.

Why? Because if you have an explanation, you can't participate in the activity of "follow the leader." You can walk side by side with the leader. The leader's going somewhere and you're going somewhere with him. You see? But that's not follow the leader, that's, I'm going to say, that's companionship and I'm using the word loosely because I normally use the word, "companionship" as an evidence of unity. But here you're deciding to walk with your Guide because you understand where you're going and you've brought your willingness—your willingness which is truly willfulness—into play. And so you are two independent entities, so to speak, walking along. That's not companionship, that's not communion, that's not unity. You see?

You are the Sons and Daughters of God. You are not independent entities. You are therefore, the Presence of That which reflects its Source.

Now, this may be a turning point for all of you who are studying the Course. It may be a point where you give it up. Because truly, to proceed further in the actual practice of what it's teaching, requires you to become a follower . . . I mean truly, a humble follower who has not one ounce of willfulness—no little ace up its sleeve holding out energy to use in order to determine something, or in order to authorize something. You see?

But understand this: When you let there be a total absence of willfulness in you and you are bringing your full willingness to listening to the Father so that you might feel and do His Will, His laws begin to prevail for you. They've been prevailing all along, but they're going to begin to prevail for you and miracles will happen that you didn't cause but which you allowed, miracles that you didn't ask for but which will constitute fulfillment for you—Unless you insist on the idea that fulfillment for you means you having your way.

God's laws prevail. Well, dammit! You would love wouldn't you, to have that cancer disappear or you would love for that bone that got broken that grew back deformed that has caused you to limp or to carry yourself off-center, you would love for that to be [snaps fingers] gone and have perfection evidenced there, wouldn't you? You really would like God's laws to prevail.

When you're tired, it's much easier to say to God, "Thy Will be done." When you're fresh and full of vim and vigor, man . . . give you a project and let you, yourself, all by yourself, tackle it and accomplish it and have the satisfaction of having accomplished it well. Or, after having done it poorly, experiencing the distress and the guilt for not having done it well and having affected others adversely but still have an experience, even though it's of guilt and suffering. It's an experience that certainly demonstrates your independence, doesn't it? You didn't defile your love of being on your own and having the freedom to act on your own for good or for ill and hopefully learn how to do it more for good, and more for benefit until you can look at yourself and others can look at you with pride and respect.

That has to be abandoned. And the abandoning of it is the function of the two-step. It is the purpose of the holy instant.

I know people have asked the same question Paul and Sue have asked at times during the last four months, "Why do they need a big house, they don't even hold Gatherings anymore? Why do they need to have a room large enough to hold sixty people? Why do they need all the square footage when they don't even have to put out a newsletter anymore and there's no copiers and there's no folding tables and there's no need for any of that anymore?"

Well, those are questions asked by those who have forgotten to play, "follow the leader." Those are the ones who question so that they might have understanding—so that they might bring their will into play—to say, "I support that because I see it, I see the meaning and therefore, I have decided to bring my agreement to the situation and I am willing to put my shoulder to the grindstone and get it done." You see?

Now, those who ask those questions about this issue are going to ask those questions about their own issues.

"I know, I know, . . . my closet is full of clothes that are ten years old. But you know what? I take good care of my clothes and they look as good today as they did when I first got them. I know they aren't in style any more but you know what? I'm not going to let the fashion leaders determine what I wear. That's just a human opinion. Next year, you know, the wide lapels might come back and then everybody will say I'm in style—I'm wearing the right kind of clothes." You see? It's all bullshit.

If you're told that it's time to get new clothes, don't justify less, don't justify the status-quo. Let the Father—Whose guidance through the Holy Spirit is one of Love—inspire in you a new perspective and illumine the way to get it or fulfill it and designate, . . . you know, go into this store and go over to the rack in the back and look for a shirt, there's a shirt there for you. You're gonna love it. It's there for you. It's the Father's Gift. You see? Fulfillment is in order, although it might look like that shirt is on that rack out of pure happenstance or out of very conscientious order applied by the manager of the store and the manufactures of the shirts and the delivery people who happened to bring that shirt to this store on that day.

None of it's happening for any of those reasons. Why? Because the only place in which anything is happening is where God's laws prevail. Anywhere else nothing is happening—anywhere else you can imagine that things are happening that aren't happening, like: it's just happenstance that that shirt is there. But that doesn't mean that's why the shirt was there. The shirt's there because there's a God. Anything is where it is because there's a God. And you're learning to do the two-step, you're learning to practice the holy instant so that you can what? Come into that place where God's laws prevail and you have the experience of not being in charge, but standing with the Gifts of God in you—God's Perspective . . . the grasp of the Father's Will, which you will have when you no longer have an 'Ace up your sleeve,' where you want to learn what the Father's Will is so you can practice it by yourself. And when you no longer want to take it away from the Father and have it for your own purposes, you will find yourself understanding.

Let's be very clear: If you're going to practice the two-step, if you're going to practice the holy instant, you're going to be faced with good that you didn't ask for. You're going to experience beneficence that you didn't request. And it's going to turn your head, it's going to cause your attention to move in directions that it wasn't your habit to give your attention in . . . thank God.

Here's where you find out what the meaning of the words, "stubborn will" is. You won't like it because it's going to be about your stubborn will. But until you see where you are being stubbornly willful and holding onto less than what the Father would have you have, you are not going to be in a position to change your mind and let the inspiration illumine your mind, designate the way, and turn you into a follower where you're willing to be led into the full unobstructed experience of your good.

And you know what? Like Paul and Susan, when you engage in this—which I want you to do this week, I don't want you to hold off any longer—I want you to engage in the practice of the two-step of the holy instant with this added perspective that I've been talking about. I want you to do it starting tonight.

When you do it, you're going to seem to have unreasonable, unjustifiable good come into your experience, which will for you, identify functionality and fulfillment and truly nothing irrelevant to what meets your need. And to others around you it may seem outrageous, just as to many of you, what is happening here with Paul, Susan and the Foundation can seem outrageous.

And here's a place where you might say, "Oh-h, oh, I've got to let go of Your hand, Whoever you are That's guiding me—Father, Holy Spirit, Jesus. You see, my holding Your hand is making me look too weird to everybody else. So I'm going to take back a little control. Everybody recognizes me when I'm practicing control because they can see themselves in me. You see? But it's hard for them to see themselves in me when I'm yielding to the Holy Spirit or the Father or the Christ, because I'm not 'behaving normally' and unexplainable things are happening that make them uneasy, even jealous."

Well, you know what? Don't let go of That hand that's leading you, even though all of this is happening. Everyone needs examples to follow. And you know, if you're going to crawl out of the crab barrel, crawl out of the crab barrel and Be . . . without behaving in the context of the crab barrel anymore. So that those inside can peek over the top and say, "Wow! wow! nobody's crawling on top of him. Wow! nobody's pinching him, because he can't see what he's pinching. Wow! he's in the clear . . . there's space. Can you imagine? Come look! He's got space!"

You see? [chuckle] I know why do you need space? Why do you need more space? Why do you need an elevator? And Paul and Susan have joked about this home, this building being their two hundred and seventy-two thousand dollar stair-master. You know, that's the way they accommodate the idea of climbing stairs when they carry groceries up.

"Well," you say, "is having to carry groceries up two-flights of stairs written in concrete somewhere? Is it the law of God?"

Does having an elevator have to be reasonable, explainable, justifiable, cost-effective? Can't it just meet the need? Can't it be a simple expression of care and love?

You know what it boils down to? If everyone was a millionaire, they'd say, "I don't care if you have an elevator, have three elevators, and have a moving walkway to get you from one side of the house to the other." I mean, if you had lots of money you would have no objection and you'd put in the walkways and elevators too. And you wouldn't feel a bit guilty. You see?

Small-mindedness, mean-spiritedness, lack that constitutes some sort of developer of worth in everyone is valued. Everyone wants worth: "Suffer a little bit and that will demonstrate your worth. Hold on to lack and do well in spite of the lack and that will prove your worth." You see?

Well, that's like saying, "Hey, you know, it's great, this is our two hundred and seventy-two thousand dollar stair-master." It's like, "Hey, why should I experience comfort and ease when that doesn't prove my worth, when that doesn't cause me to behave in a way that is recognizably worthy of another's respect?" You see? But what that means is, "Why be in a way that doesn't require me to be or do things in a laborious way that everyone else will recognize as the activity and behavior of a respectable individual? Why should I consider being happy with ease, comfort, the absence of fear—in other words, peace? You know, why should I experience perfect health? Why should I experience immutability when it won't get me anything?"

"If I let myself be my Father's Son or my Father's Daughter, I'll be nothing more than a kept man or a kept woman, undeserving of any respect what so ever." But this insane line of thinking simply keeps everyone from consciously experiencing being in that place where God's laws prevail.

You know, it says, "Be ye therefore perfect . . ." Perfect . . . not behind the point of perfection and moving toward it, but, be ye perfect. Be ye at the point of perfection and understand yourself from there. "Be ye therefore perfect . . . what? . . . even as your Father, Who is in Heaven, is perfect!" You see?

For God's sake, let your perfection be borrowed from your Father Who is the one Who is giving it to you. And stop being at odds with what you divinely Are! Why? So that if good comes to you that is an expression of the Father's Will, that it never occurred to you to ask for, and that you never felt like you needed, let it come and receive it just because the Father is giving it to you.

And your place in the scheme of things is to be in receivership. As the Father's Son or Daughter, it is your function to be the bearer of your Birthright. It's so simple. You see? And the only thing that hangs everybody up is this crazy idea that somehow you yourself are supposed to have authority that you learn to exercise well, independently, in order to prove your worth. And what you get is struggle, sin, disease, death, fear . . . not actually, because you haven't stopped being what you divinely Are. But as long as you're pretending that you're not That, you will have what comes along with the pretension of being an independent agent, an orphan. Okay.

We've been talking tonight basically about how you cope with beneficence and fulfillment, the experience of completion that you didn't ask for—fulfillment, completion, etc., that you will get because of what you divinely Are, fulfillment and completion that you will get because you never lost it. And all that it requires is a simple mental adjustment where you abandon the concept of being behind the point of perfection and advancing toward it—you abandon that in favor of—that you're at that point and must be and think and understand and be conscious from that place.

Now, just before we began I had Paul turn to this page. And so he doesn't have the page numbers here for everyone. But it's in Chapter 31 no matter which version you're reading from. Chapter 31, the two paragraphs just before the Section entitled The Savior's Vision. It sort of wraps things up in a nut-shell here.

You who believe that you can choose to see the Son of God as you would have him be, . . .²

. . . in other words, you who think you can have a concept of your Brother or Sister, a definition of him . . . that it is your determination as a true perception of him . . . like, well, "He's a selfish person. But he is that way because of his upbringing. I understand why he's that way. But he is a selfish person."

Well, . . .

You who believe that you can choose to see the Son of God as you would have him be, forget not that no concept of yourself will stand against the truth of what you are.

A little funny twist to that. If no concept you have about yourself, like, "I'm a pretty nice guy, you know. I have a few faults, but I'm a pretty nice guy." No concept of yourself like that will stand against the truth of what you Are. If no concept you have of yourself will stand against the truth that you Are, no concept you have of your Brother will stand against what your Brother Is. So your assessment isn't the almighty, end-all truth about your Brother.

Undoing truth would be impossible. But concepts . . .

. . . no matter how devoted you are to them.

But concepts are not difficult to change. ONE vision, clearly seen, that does not fit the picture as it was perceived before will change the world for eyes that learn to see, because the concept of the SELF has changed.

For example:

Are YOU invulnerable? Then the world is harmless in your sight. Do YOU forgive? Then is the world forgiving, for you have forgiven it its trespasses, . .

. . . in other words, the trespasses you conceived that it had in which you laid upon it and which you held it to.

Do YOU forgive? Then is the world forgiving, for you have forgiven it its trespasses, and so it looks on you with eyes that see as yours. Are YOU a body? So is all the world perceived as treacherous, and out to kill.

You see? How are you looking? Are you looking from behind the point of perfection, advancing toward it, perhaps having to step on your Brother's shoulders to climb up to get an advantage to get further ahead as you're advancing toward your perfection and getting there more quickly?

Are you a Spirit, . .

. . . and I would say now: "Are you Spirit? . ."

. . . deathless, and without the promise of corruption and the stain of sin upon you?

In other words, are you seeing yourself at the point of perfection and understanding yourself therefrom?

Are you a Spirit, deathless, and without the promise of corruption and the stain of sin upon you? So the world is seen as stable, fully worthy of your trust; a happy place to rest in for a while, where nothing need be feared, but only loved. Who is unwelcome to the kind in heart? And what could hurt the truly innocent?

You see?

Your will be done, you holy Child of God.

Not, your will be done, you little orphan bastard you!

Your will be done, you holy Child of God.

Because from the point of perfection and you understanding yourself from there, you know you are the holy Son of God, which means you are the Place where God is being all there Is. And you're happy to let God be all there Is, because when you do, who you Are is utterly and completely and irrevocably clear to you. And God's laws prevail and perfection is yours.

Your will be done, you holy Child of God. It does not matter if you think you are in earth or Heaven. What your Father wills for you can never change.

You see? Whether you think you're behind the point of perfection or advancing toward it does not matter. It does not matter if you think you are behind the point of perfection or advancing toward it.

What your Father wills for you can never change.

So, the simple answer then is to abandon this crazy idea that you're behind this point of perfection and advancing toward it and simply shift into the acknowledgement that you are at that point. And then . . . what? Ask the Holy Spirit. Do the two-step. Practice the holy instant. Ask that which is nothing more than your right Mind, "How do things look to me as that one who is at the point of perfection and understands himself from there? Reveal it to me." And then shut up and listen and don't hold out the right to take the information and then run with it and use it independently on your own—yield into your Birthright.

The truth in you remains as radiant as a star, . .

. . . [Chuckles] . . . "Well, why in the world does he think he needs to be as radiant as a star? Why should I think I should be as radiant as a star? I'm very happy with my subtle glow. It doesn't disturb anybody and it's very soft and soothing. And lots of people love to be around me because my presence is so pacifying and reassuring to them, you know. Stop! Quit trying to push off radiance to me." You see? "Well, explain to me why I should let myself be radiant?" Well, you know what? There's no good reason, except that it's just the way you Are. I can't explain it. There's no justification for it. You're a bright light in the cosmos already and you can't do anything about it. So stop fighting it! That's all! Don't ask for an explanation. Just stop resisting being the light!

The truth in you remains as radiant as a star, as pure as light, . .

"Aw, . . . you know what? Purity is over-rated! I'm not pure. I'm a little purer than George down the street. But you know what? We even get along in spite of our variances of purity, you know. I mean, don't make such a big deal out of purity. Okay?. Everything's all right without it being purely pure, you know! Even Ivory soap is ninety-nine and ninety-nine one hundreds percent pure. It doesn't try to be a hundred percent pure. It doesn't have to be and neither do I. And God stop trying to make me be pure.

The truth in you remains as radiant as a star, as pure as light, as innocent as Love Itself. And you ARE worthy that your Will be done!

Wow! Everyone is worthy of the Father's Will being done in and through Paul and Sue, in and through each of you and everyone who's hearing my voice. Let in . . . let in . . . let in. Lower your defenses. Let good that you don't even yet recognize as being good, let it in.

Do the flowers in the morning say, "Ah, what do I need the Sun for?" No. They let it in. They bask in it. They yield to what it is. Do they say, "Uh, what do I need the rain for?" No, they let it in. You see?

Don't make God explain Himself before you will believe in God. Don't make God explain Himself before you yield to Him.

Now, I don't know if everyone could hear the car just drive by, but there are those who could say, "Well, that's the reason . . . that's the reason they need to move, the noise is disturbing to the recording, it's disturbing to the meetings, the gatherings, the communion."

Is it? Is that the reason? Maybe it isn't a solution to anything. Maybe they're moving because it's what the Movement of Fulfillment is looking like. Maybe they are moving because they are learning along with all of you what practicing the two-step or the holy instant really means and are having the opportunity to experience the blessing, not of moving, but of abandoning human will, abandoning their willfulness, abandoning their strong desire to be in charge, in control, and to be able to prove themselves to others, and meet the criteria of others.

But you see, it may be, and you can bet your bottom dollar, the reason is because they and everyone else need to learn to say, "Thy Will, be done," and then shut up so that the Will of the Father can inspire, illumine, designate and lead the way.

I love you all—even you, Chris. And I look forward to being with everyone next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 17th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good Evening. We're not going to be reading from the Book tonight, so let's have a few moments of quiet time together before we begin.

[quiet time]

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, it used to be that on Saturday morning, the day of a meeting—a study group—Paul would get up and he would, for lack of better words, keep the day holy. He would wake up with the intent to keep his mind stayed on the truth, to not let his mind be distracted by, we'll say, the normal calls of daily activity. In a way, he would go into a cave and be contemplative and quiet in honor, you might say, of the truth that would come forth during the meeting.

And then over the last year or so, Saturdays have become busier. Things needed to be done, things which to him were not relevant to keeping the day holy—relevant to what might be transpiring in the evening in the study group. And he had a somewhat difficult time adjusting to that—he objected in his mind—he was not happy with the situation.

And yet, as the months went by, Saturdays became busier and busier not to mention the other days of the week. More and more “distractions” occurred. Until Saturdays became so full that he barely got back home in time for the meeting and barely had time to become quiet. Having to, we'll say, be with me on the run—be with me in the middle of being active. And this was an education for him. It was a learning for him, not a learning he liked.

He wanted everyone else to respect the holiness of the day and the call for a holy frame of mind on that day just as he wished to provide that attitude for that day. And everything was conspiring against his intent.

But you see, the call for him and indeed the call for all of you is to find the holiness of the day in the activity of the day—in the activities of each day.

You know, we've talked about the fact that when you do the two-step, you go into that place where God's laws prevail.

Well, what everyone is needing to learn is, that the place where God's laws prevail is in the minutiae of daily activities. You know, God's law prevailing is going to look like something. God's laws prevailing are going to be manifest. Where? Well, I've said it over and over again: The only thing that's ever confronting you is the Kingdom of Heaven. You call it, "the world and universe." But that's a misperception—a misunderstanding. It is the Kingdom of Heaven.

Where are God's laws going to prevail? Obviously in the Kingdom of Heaven. And where is the Kingdom of Heaven? Right here! It's the only thing in your face.

Now, Paul and Susan—but I'm addressing all of this relative to Paul at the moment—Paul has been very busy, very occupied for the past number of months with finding a new place for the Foundation to move, for the activity to move, for Paul and Susan to be and do what they do.

"Oh-h, another distraction!"

But you see . . . where is the fulfillment of God's Purpose going to show up? Where is God's Will going to prevail? It's going to prevail in houses, on streets, in communities. It's going to prevail in the driving from here to there, to look at this, to look at that. You see?

And another very interesting and practical thing to learn and discover is, that when you listen for the Voice for truth, when you listen to the Holy Spirit, when you listen to That which is nothing more than your right Mind, the Guidance, the divine Guidance you are going to get is going to have to do with streets . . . and going here . . . and looking at that . . . and being in the place at the time where fulfillment of Purpose is manifest in, in other words, the minutiae of daily activities.

So, you know, we have been reading from this book, A Course In Miracles, for a number of years and we have been talking about wonderful spiritual ideas. Right now I'm taking the opportunity to bring home the fact that these wonderful spiritual ideas are absolutely relevant to . . . what? The Kingdom of Heaven that you're in the middle of—the minutiae of daily activities that seem not to be spiritually oriented at all.

But that's just your belief. That's just what you've been taught. And you see what you expect to see based on what you've been taught, you know.

So you go and look at a house, or you look the house you live in, or you look at the building you work in and you say, "Well, it's just a (if it's a building you work in) structure of steel and concrete and glass—a physical object." And you're quite sure of it.

But maybe . . . maybe it is a fluid movement of fulfillment of Purpose of a pristine idea in the Mind of God that is forever being made new by the Movement of the Mind of God that is envisioning it always in the moment of conscious awareness. Maybe it's that. Maybe it's purely the evidence . . . the current evidence of a current living God. And it isn't just maybe, that is the fact!

But that's not what you see because you don't believe that's what it is. And you see what you believe.

And so, because you believe that the world and universe is a material world and universe, not the Kingdom of Heaven, then you think that the laws of God prevail not here, but somewhere else where the Kingdom of Heaven is. And ultimately, if you are going to become a holy man or a holy woman, or you are going to devote yourself to holiness, you certainly will not expect your connection with God to have relevance to this material world and universe. And yet, if you're going to Wake up, you're going to have to discover and realize that there is no other reality going on but the one in which God's laws prevail because God is All. There is no alternative to the Allness of God.

So, in your approach to your holiness as the holy Son or Daughter of God, you are going to have to begin to expect to see the evidence of holiness right where you are in the minutiae of daily activities.

Again, you think you know what things are: Material world and universe. Well, let me say this: Susan and Paul, Chris and Judy, anyone associated with the work that they are doing and the activities of the Northwest Foundation For A Course In Miracles, are engaged in finding a new location. A new location has been found. Steps have been taken to secure it. An offer has been made and the offer was accepted. And we're at a point where a week from today, the total amount needed for its purchase must be in hand.

Now, it appears as though all of this is dependent on things. It's dependent upon Paul and Susan being willing to give their attention and energy and willingness and decisiveness to what the Movement of God is leading them to do . . . to the Guidance they are getting from me regarding the minutiae of daily affairs.

It appears that another aspect of this Movement—this unfoldment—is individuals making contributions, supporting the activity in tangible ways. So it could look as though it's just human beings in this material world and universe like little ants scurrying around doing their habitual processes of living and surviving and so on and so forth . . . it's just part of the material universe. Or, it can be the Movement of God—the laws of God—prevailing in the minutiae of daily activities which are really activities of the Kingdom of Heaven.

You know, it could look as though it's dependent on individuals making contributions and everyone can forget that there's a God and that maybe God has something to do with it all.

And I want to share this story which most of you know. It's a story about a flood and in the flood the waters rise and this man crawls up onto the roof of his house. And he prays to God to save him. He wants to have a miracle. He wants to have the evidence of God.

And so while he's sitting on the roof, a rowboat comes by. And they say, "Jump-in! Jump-in! We'll take you to safety!" He says, "No, I'm waiting for God to save me." And time passes and another form of help appears. And again he says, "No! No! I'm waiting for God to save me." And then just as the waters get to the peak of the house of the roof, a helicopter comes by and lowers a ladder—a rope ladder—to him to haul him to safety. And he says, "No! I'm waiting for God . . . God will save me!" The helicopter flies on and the waters rise. He's swept off the roof and he drowns and he goes to Heaven. And when he gets there, he says, "God, why didn't you save me?" And God says, "What do you mean, why didn't I save you? I sent the rowboat and I sent another form of help and I sent a helicopter!" you see?

Now there's, you might say, the laws of God prevailing in the minutiae of daily activities.

Now, I want you to think for a moment about the fellows in the rowboat or the fellow in the helicopter—the pilot. The helicopter pilot gets a call on the radio that says, "Down there at the fork of the river there's a man on the roof, go down and get him!" And the pilot in the helicopter says, "Hell, I'm not going to go down there and get him, you know, he was stupid for not having left when the announcement went out to go to higher ground and he was stupid enough not to accept the help when the rowboat came. Ya know, I'm not going to go down there and help him!" You see what I'm saying? [chuckle]

The laws of God prevailing didn't prevail only with the fellow in distress on the top of the roof who had asked for help, the laws of God prevailing put a responsibility upon the fellow on the roof to recognize the help and accept it, to see the laws of God prevailing in the minutiae of daily activities—the simplicity of a rowboat with some men in a rowboat and likewise with the helicopter. But also, the fellow in the helicopter had to be willing to cooperate with the laws of God prevailing by being willing to be the place where God's laws manifest. You see?

If the fellow on the roof had accepted the help of the pilot in the helicopter, he would've been saved. And one could've said, "Well thank God for helicopters and thank God for a man who knows how to fly the helicopters and so that this transpiring of events in the human condition in a material world and universe could occur."

And one could say, "God never had anything to do with it."

But God's laws prevailing looks like something. And it looks like those who are helping and it looks like those who are receiving help. And in other situations it looks like a need existing that has an excellent purpose that requires support and others support it.

And so it looks like all the little human beings in the little anthill are circling around and bringing a little bit of money here from that place to this place and all this little, you know, material activity is going on, all manifesting the fight for survival of life. You see? . . . material world and universe. When that's not the only way to look at it.

In fact, the necessity is to be able to recognize God Moving in and as everything. You see?

Paul, Susan, Judy, Chris, everyone who in anyway participates in bringing forth these activities that the Foundation is engaged in, making them available to everyone, because someone is listening to Guidance, is a manifestation of God's laws prevailing—where God's laws prevail in the minutiae of daily activities. And everyone who stands in receipt and gratitude for what is extended is being part of God's laws prevailing, because the Gift of Love recognized and received is the wholeness of the Movement of God in the minutiae of daily activities.

And those who provide support for those activities when they are needed are also not being little mortals, you know, bringing their crumbs of money to the center of the nest. They are the Will of God prevailing and manifesting the Fulfillment of God's purpose. Absolutely everyone and everything is the Presence of the Movement of Fulfillment of God, of God's Purpose. Everything fits together . . . everything fits together. It's why I use the word, "Family," because the Movement of God into expression, which is the Self-expression of God, manifests as the Sons and Daughters of God—every single one of you, as well as every single thing in Creation. And it is a bonded, infinite manifestation that is not in bondage to anything, but is because it is the evidence of God's laws prevailing, the infinite expression or manifestation of fulfillment of Purpose that does not originate in a puny, pea-pickin' little mind, called an ego of a bunch of little bodies running around that has a brain in its head that somehow is able to express life and intelligence.

Now the simple fact is, that if you're confronted by nothing other than the Kingdom of Heaven, if nothing other than the Kingdom of Heaven is available to you to experience—even though you can call it anything you want and you can imagine it to be anything you want it to be—then you're going to have to arrive at a point where the minutiae of daily activities, the infinite activities of this Kingdom of Heaven will have to stop being perceived by you as a distraction from holiness, as a distraction from your giving your attention to listening for the Father's Will and expecting to hear that It is something "other-worldly" that doesn't relate to where you are.

Because if you don't discover and embrace the fact that the Will of God prevailing, I'm going to say, the laws of Love prevailing, involves your embracing everything as the Kingdom of Heaven and therefore, worthy of your love and worthy of your curiosity to see the Father in every aspect of it, you will be living in a false sense of spirituality that will absolutely inhibit you from Waking up. It will absolutely inhibit you from having the experience of Revelation, because you will be blocking it absolutely by your expectation that Revelation is not going to relate to where you are.

Now, it is amazing what has transpired since the last couple of days of May relative to the move of the Foundation and relative to the Love that has been expressed and the contributions that have been received . . . absolutely amazing . . . absolutely wonderful. And everyone seems to be faced with, if you care about what's happening regarding this move, everyone seems to be faced with a deadline—a week from today—a deadline that calls for action.

Well, you know what? If you see yourself as a little piss-ant in the anthill that must bring home the food, the goodies, the nourishment to the center of the nest and get a contribution in, you'll be missing the point. Because, you know, it wasn't a helicopter pilot that would have saved the fellow, and it wasn't the men in a rowboat that would have saved the fellow on the roof, it would have been God and God's laws prevailing in the minutiae of daily activities that would have saved him. You see?

So, let's drop the idea that you, as some piss-ant mortal, have some sort of a responsibility to fulfill. And instead, do the two-step . . . ask God, "What is the truth here? What is going on? How will Your laws prevailing look? What will they appear to be?" Because when you do the two-step and you shut up your thinking and you abandon privacy and you say "Father, what is the truth here? What do I need to know?" You move into the place where God's laws not only prevail but God's laws manifest to you as the awareness of what is appropriate for you. And if you insist on not reverting to being a piss-ant mortal and instead insist on behaving like a holy Son or Daughter of God, you will listen and you will act. And what you will hear and what you will do, will be recognizably valuable in the midst of the minutiae of daily activities.

Now I'm not telling you what that's going to be. It could be you being filled with an awareness of how God works and how God is specifically working relative to this movement. For example, you might find yourself realizing that God doesn't do things part way—that God's Movement is a fulfillment of Purpose, not an almost fulfillment of Purpose.

Someone Paul knows has on her voice mail message: "You have almost reached me." Well, fulfillment is not something that is almost reached. The word "fulfillment" means completion, means wholeness. And so you may be filled with the undeniable experience of the fact that relative to this movement from one location to the other and relative to the movement of the means to pay for it to arrive where it's needed is not something that will be almost met, but one that must be fully wholized, fully realized and something that, for example, next Saturday everyone can fully rejoice in the completion of.

Someone else may indeed find themselves led to make a contribution. But you know what? If you think you're a piss-ant mortal, you might, like Paul does occasionally, and did this afternoon, begin to feel like, "Oh, you must do something. You must do something to take hold of the situation. You must take some concrete action that will make a difference," and do it without ever doing the two-step and without ever going to the place where God's laws prevail, so that you might experience the Meaning of the fact that God's laws prevail and thus act in harmony with it.

You know, something that I am teaching everyone and have been for the last few weeks is, that Guidance relates to the minutiae of daily activities.

When I was working with Helen Schucman and dictating the Course to her, I told her to go into a store and there was a coat there for her. And indeed, she went in and the coat was there and she bought it. That event has been minimized saying, “Well, that was a special accommodation to Helen, but doesn’t really reflect the true nature of spiritual Guidance or Atonement.

Well, I’m telling you and I’m demonstrating to you and I’ve been demonstrating most clearly to Paul and Susan that I am able to talk about dollars and cents, I am able to talk about when and if to secure a loan, when to make an offer, when not to make an offer. I am able to give Guidance that is relevant to the minutiae of daily activities. And I’m doing it, and Paul feels like he’s doing it in front of everyone, but I’m doing it in your presence so that you might learn to listen for Guidance in a new way, so that you aren’t off on some “cloud-nine-airy-fairy” irrelevant spiritual path. You see?

Now, I am going to be very clear as spiritual Guidance is, I was going to say, is inclined to be, but as spiritual Guidance actually is, when you reach out for the Holy Spirit or your Guide—and I’m going to point out that there is a need—the need is that the full balance needs to be in hand by next Saturday, we’ll say by next Friday, so that the property does not go back on the open real estate market.

That is the need. Why do I bring it up? Because you need to know where to bring your attention to. You need to know what it is that you need to be asking the Holy Spirit about. You need to know specifically how the prevailing of God’s Will looks relative to the need. And this is the case, whether it’s a physical need you have, whether it’s a relationship need you have—wherever needs are. You see? This is just practice, so that you approach the minutiae of daily activities in a new way which leads irrevocably to healing or the resolution of the need. Because it causes you to experience completion, wholeness, and the joy that comes from your not being at odds with the Father in any way any longer.

These are the nuts and bolts of what the Course is teaching. These are the nuts and bolts of Waking up. These are the practicalities of spirituality, which perhaps you didn’t think there were, perhaps you didn’t think that spirituality had practicalities, but lifted you above practicalities.

You want to see the evidence of God where it counts, which is in your experience. And no one has been able to escape their experience. And that’s because even though they’ve called their experience “the human condition” in a material world and universe, it’s the divine Life in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And their resistance to the awareness of that fact, has kept them from experiencing it. We’re learning how to abandon what keeps us from having the experience.

Maybe it stretches you. Paul certainly feels stretched. Susan certainly feels stretched. But the stretch is worth it, because it pulls you out of the rut of your revered ignorance, which you're reluctant to let go of.

I love you all and I look forward to being with you next Saturday so that we might rejoice together.

Okay.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

July 24th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I won't make everyone sit on pins and needles through a quiet time, but I'll ask you: How many of you remember the word, "glad"? I say that because it's a word not in common use these days. There's a lot of talk about being happy and so on, but glad doesn't come up. Tonight's a night to be glad.

It's truly a night to be glad.

It's a night to be glad because all of the funds necessary to purchase the new home are in hand and the escrow office—the title company—has been asked to set a closing date for as "soon as possible," which could be as soon as next Friday but it's likely to be the first part of the following week.

The smile on Paul's face is his joy.

It is a time for everyone to let themselves be happy. Everyone has played a part—so many have played a part in this. Contributions have come in from all over: Taipei, Japan, Australia, Greece, England, Ireland, Canada . . . oh, and yes, United States—people Paul and Susan have never seen the names before, a wonderful confirmation of the out-reach of the work.

Everyone has poured their love into this project—if I may call it a project—this movement. And even those who have not made contributions of a financial nature but who have made a contribution of their spiritual support and prayers, every single one of all of us, have allowed the manifestation of something wonderful. And indeed, in doing so, have created a sense of community—broad community—amongst everyone, even though everyone hasn't met each other and may not even know each others' names. Everyone knows they have been a part of a movement—a mutual movement—a joined movement.

It feels good, doesn't it? The experience of family feels good . . . not because it satisfies the ego, but because it's important. Family is a very fundamental Meaning that says there's no one that's isolated. There's no one that can do anything by himself or herself. There is nothing that is accomplished that everyone doesn't play some part in. And those of you who have actively played a part here are feeling that union.

This is a feeling that everyone should be having all the time. This is a feeling that is normal to Being . . . natural to Being. It's just that it's escaping everyone's attention because everyone is attempting to accomplish their own ends that they have created out of their own imagination and never are they joining with the Father to find out what they can do, shall I say, in tandem with the Father—in companionship with the Father—and thereby being that which confirms the Movement of God by the fact that it's recognized by those who have joined with the Father. It's not only recognized as happening, it's recognized as having its source in the Father. It's recognized as the direct and immediate experience or manifestation of Creation.

Now, I thank everyone. I thank everyone for letting their light shine. I thank everyone for their participating in an activity or a Movement that they are attributing to God—that they are attributing to a Cause outside of some human being's goal—because that constitutes the abandonment of isolation. It constitutes an act of joining. It constitutes a movement of family. And you might say the Light, the effulgence of Brotherhood grows brighter in such events.

All of what has happened here in the last six weeks or so has to do with, not just Paul and Susan, but everyone's willingness to ask to know the truth from the Father's point of view—or we could say, from the standpoint of the Holy Spirit, which is nothing more than each one's right Mind—and standing with the Vision that comes forth when one does that, even though it flies right in the face of what is considered to be possible or even reasonable. You see?

Miracles are what you call "events" that God causes to happen, which you are able to observe as the Movement of God when you abandon your isolation and say, "Father, what is the truth here?" "Father, what do I need to know?" "Father, what is Your Perspective?" And in that joining and in the Revelation that occurs, one moves into that place where God's laws prevail—no others.

And so that which doesn't seem to be reasonable can happen. That which goes beyond what people can "wrap their minds around" happens.

The call is for all of you to look at your world every day, all day long, with a curiosity to see beyond your present definitions. And I've talked about this endlessly. But here we have a first-hand example that all of you have been a part of, and you can see that what has happened is unexpected—is not what one would expect—is not what one would think could happen. Not reasonably anyway, and certainly not without a lot more effort being made to coerce people to make such large contributions.

So, at the bottom line, at the least, everyone should feel encouraged not to look at their world the way they've been looking at it, with the assurances they feel about what the world is and how it works and what you can expect and what you can't expect. And if, when you ask, "Father, what do I need to know?" or "What do I need to do?" and it is revealed to you what to do, instead of doubting what you're hearing and denying it offhandedly, pursue it further if you don't feel comfortable acting upon it. Pursue it further. Don't put it down, because your Guide or the Holy Spirit or the Father is more than happy (now that They have your attention) to elaborate and make clear to you what you need to know. It might not be as much as you think you need to know, but you will be told what you need to know so that you might act with conviction and commitment.

If everything you see is the Kingdom of Heaven seen truly or through a glass darkly—seeing it for what it is as the Kingdom of Heaven or as a material world and universe as you think it is—then it behooves you, now that you know there's a choice . . . it behooves you to dare to look at what you think is a material world and universe with a curiosity to see evidences of the Kingdom of Heaven begin to appear to you.

It's all the Kingdom of Heaven, no matter what! And therefore, it is not hiding Itself from you. And It is therefore, even insistent upon registering with you as what It is.

Now, you are able to see, as you've participated in the last month or so, that this "material world and universe," hasn't behaved in a normal fashion—hasn't behaved in the expected way. And that should inspire you to continue in your own daily lives, looking with the same kind of curiosity and perhaps the same level of expectation that you have been able to bring to this movement.

You've been willing to bring a greater level of expectation because you think Paul and Susan and those carrying on the activities of the Northwest Foundation have some greater capacity than you do. They don't. They just persist a little bit longer than you do. They insist on persisting longer in listening than you do. And so, you have an example here that should inspire you as you cope with the minutiae of daily affairs in your life, which is where, I pointed out last week, the laws of God prevail. You see?

This is wonderful! And your gladness tonight you can allow to transfer over to your minutiae of daily affairs, and inspire you to ask God what do you need to know. You see? And then Listen. And then when you hear, dare to believe. And if you can't believe fully, then ask further questions. Insist and persist further, because no matter what you believe and no matter how long I continue to express the truth, the truth is true and the truth will prevail. And the fact that it's all the Kingdom of Heaven will sooner or later be your conscious experience of Being.

It is so inevitable. Because it is the absolute fact already, that any degree of faith you bring to looking with innocent eyes—in other words, without preconceptions—is bound to cause you to notice, even inadvertently, that something didn't behave the way you expected; something behaved in a way that . . . well, if you really looked at it . . . could imply that there were laws that were prevailing that you weren't familiar with, and that might even mean that there's a God, for a fact! And that might be justification for you to look at everything with a little bit more interest than you have been. You see?

That's what all of this is about: Learning how to see . . . learning how to look.

If you want to have more glad experiences, engage in this. I am telling you things that bring gladness, and gladness is something that should fill your minds a lot more than it does.

Now, I thank you again. And without attempting to make Paul or Susan self-conscious or uncomfortable, I expressed my gratitude to them as well. Especially because of the fact that they're willing to act it out. They're willing to lay their lives on the line, so to speak, and function in what looks like a material world and universe as though it were the Kingdom of Heaven.

Their behavior these last few months has been behavior—when it comes to their vision and their insistence upon knowing what the truth is here—it has been an endeavor to behave in the material world and universe as though it is the Kingdom of Heaven. And they didn't do it secretly. They did it in front of everyone. They did it publicly.

Now, this is something every single one of you needs to begin to do in more earnest than you have been. Because the more you do it with commitment, the more you're going to see the evidence, and the more gladness you will feel, and the more joy you will feel, and the more your gladness and joy will ripple out contagiously and inspire others. But do understand that this process of Waking up is going to involve your behaving differently in the world.

Now, if you just went out and told people, “Wow, you know what? I need to and you need to behave differently in the world,” that could be interpreted as, you know, just doing any damned thing you please, no matter how strange or far-out it might be. But it isn’t that. It’s the fact that you need to behave in the world as though it’s the Kingdom of Heaven. And the only way you can do that is to have someone helping you see the nature and the behavior of the Kingdom of Heaven so that you can harmonize with It. And that’s what the Holy Spirit is for—that’s what, “that which is nothing more than your right Mind” is for—to cause you to begin once again, to behave as though you’re the holy Son of God in the Kingdom of Heaven.

And you’re going to do it right here before you die, because the place to do it isn’t some place after you die.

Now, Paul and Susan can tell you that when a miracle seems to take four months, it’s like a miracle in slow motion. When the Father’s plans unfold and seem to take time, the slow motion miracle can seem to be tedious. It can seem to be anxiety-producing. But that’s only when the ego wants its answers right now and gets impatient with God and then says, “If God can’t work a miracle and make it happen now, then probably what’s happening isn’t God and isn’t a miracle. So, hey you, . . . Paul, Sue, . . . (or whatever your name is), give up!” You know? “Go back to controlling things into your life, yourself.”

So again, it’s a night for gratitude, for gladness. Dare to feel it. Dare to join in with everyone else who’s feeling it. And then remember this: God said to Moses, “Hold up your rod,” and the waters parted. And the children of Israel went across on dry land and got to the other side. Wow, it was accomplished. They had gotten away from Pharaoh’s soldiers, the threat, the potential death. They were free!

“Oh-h, but what now?” You know? “I mean okay, we’re free and we’re on the other side of the sea, uh-h . . . Where’s the completion? Where’s the wholeness?”

“Oh-h, you mean there’s more? You mean we have to let ourselves into the unknown again? Why? So we can have another miracle and end up standing there needing to listen and allow for another miracle? Are you saying we’re just going to have endless series of miracles? Oh, come on! Give me the dependable un-miraculous, please! At least that doesn’t keep me on the edge of my seat, wondering.”

Yeah, of course. Wonder's not a good thing, is it? W-o-n-d-e-r-ful . . . g-l-o-r-i-o-u-s.

"No Wonder. No. Forget about wonder. Don't leave me wondering. Please don't ask me to stand in a constant state of wondering with the potential experience of a constant state of wonder at the miraculous. Please!"

You know . . . Noah built the ark.

"Okay, God here it is. Man, oh man.

"What God? What? You want me to go get two of each kind of animal and manage to bring 'em here and put 'em in the ark? All you said was, 'build an ark,' you know? You told me how big, you know? You told me exactly how to build it. I did it!

"Um-m, okay."

And he got the animals and brought them on.

"There you are God! "Yes. [deep sigh] "I'm done.

"What God? You want me to take away the gangplank and close the hatch? Wait a minute, what's happening? What?

"Well you didn't tell me I was going to have to deal with that. Okay."

So he closes it up and it starts raining and the water rises and the ark begins to float. And then Noah's perplexed and, you know, cautiously inquires, "What do I need to know now?

"I need to what? I need to go clean up what?" And that's where the term "poop-deck" came into existence.

He had to take care of the animals. Oh-h. Oh yeah. That really was the minutiae of daily affairs wasn't it? [chuckles] And he was called upon, you know, to do this that he hadn't expected, and even to see that this aspect of the "cruise" and the "cruise" itself was part of God's handiwork, was included in that Place where God's laws prevail, so that he could begin to see the Hand of God in everything. You see what I'm saying?

And the Israelites came into the experience of, and the conscious awareness of God's Hand in everything. So the meaning of the word "God" became really relevant in the minutiae of daily affairs.

Now, here we are faced with the same call they were. Everyone is, whether they're studying A Course In Miracles or taking dope. They are at a point of having the opportunity to see God in their experience instead of what they believe their experience is all about.

Every single one of you is confronted with the call to find a way to behave in the "material world and universe" as though it were the Kingdom of Heaven, so that the Vision of It, as what It truly Is, can begin to glimmer and flash and catch your attention—so that you see It, right here, not after you die.

Keep . . . keep the awareness that the Kingdom of Heaven is flashing and sparking and doing things to catch your attention, to uncover the places where nothing is behaving according to the "laws of matter," we'll say—things are not behaving the way you're expecting—so that you continually stand at the edge of the unknown having the unknown reveal itself to you so that that becomes the new norm.

Now, simple grounded perspective: The movement has begun. It has uncovered the means to purchase the house in as little as perhaps ten days from now. Then what? Then the move really begins and things will need to be done and support will be needed.

What does that mean? It means that it's the opportunity for you to become still and go within and ask the Father how to see what appears to be a material world and universe founded on scarcity, finiteness and limitation, as the Kingdom of Heaven. "Father, how do I see this as the Kingdom of Heaven? How do I see this so that I can see Your Hand in everything?"

And watch how much thinking it seems to create. How many thoughts . . . [chuckles] . . . how many thoughts can come up before you let the Father answer? How many thoughts do you want to deal with before the Father answers because you think having those thoughts will protect you from an answer from God that you won't want to hear because you think that the answer from God is going to ask of you something you can't do . . . when the answer from God is going to reveal wholeness and completeness now—not after you die—in a way that causes gladness.

And you know what? You have watched. Like the breeze blowing through the trees, you've seen the leaves rustling and you know the breeze was there. You've watched, perhaps, online as updates were given and you've seen numbers change, which means that something has been blowing through them to cause them to change. And so, you've seen that there is a thing called family that you're a part of that you're one with.

Now, this is an experience that is more highly illuminated to you right now than it was a month ago. You feel it more than you did a month ago. Don't abandon it, don't lose it. I want you, in your awareness of it, for lack of better words, to include all those that you're feeling the presence of in your prayers. Not that you have a goal for them, . . . but include them in your caring.

Include them when you're asking, "Father, what do I need to know here?" It's like, "Father, what do I need to know in the context of this family that I hadn't been experiencing as fully and as meaningfully as I am right now." And you might also ask, "Father, help me not to lose this feeling, this awareness that I'm not alone." You see?

And then, because this is the main idea I am meaning to convey tonight, remember to approach your world as though it's the Kingdom of Heaven. Dare to behave in what appears to be a material world and universe as though it were the Kingdom of Heaven. And as I said, do it by asking the Father or the Holy Spirit, "What is the truth here? Help me to see this material world and universe get translated into the Kingdom of Heaven, right here, right now."

It is a night of gratitude. Let it serve to expand and illuminate the Kingdom of Heaven more clearly than ever before, so that you begin to live tonight and tomorrow and the next day in a new way.

I love you all and I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 7th 2010

Okay. We will not be reading from the Book tonight, so we will take a few moments to be quiet together before we continue.

[Quiet time]

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I've asked Chris to give the subject on the screen tonight as "The Movement Continues."

We're going to take some time talking about, we'll say, the practical aspects of what I've been teaching for a number of years, which is inseparable from A Course In Miracles.

I've mentioned that as you engage in the two-step, as you shut-up your thinking and become still and ask, "Father, what is the truth here?" or you ask of the Holy Spirit, "What do I need to know?" what you are going to learn as a result of what you hear, is going to change you. You're going to learn how to reflect God. You're going to learn how to express Knowing that comes as a result of listening to the Father or listening to the Holy Spirit, Who will relay to you what the Father is Meaning or Saying.

And you're going to learn, as Paul is slowly learning, that the new way of Being, I mean by that, reflecting the Father's Will—reflecting God—is not going to feel familiar initially. And it's going to require practice, if I may put it that way, at speaking the Knowing that is supplied to you so that you can get the feel for who you divinely Are. And having that new self-experience revealed to you, you will begin to recognize it, begin to feel at home with it and you will be willing with less and less reluctance to express it.

Now in a way, tonight is an exercise for Paul. He has a general idea what we're going to be talking about because I started this afternoon to dictate what we've been calling an "update letter." And in it, there are things that, when he's listening to his Knowing, he would say. But at this moment, he's not comfortable with it. He's fine with my expressing it. He's fine in relaying what is actually his Knowing as well. He's comfortable with my relaying that and [his] not having to own it yet. But in the process, which he engages in every Saturday night when he lets me speak, in the process he becomes more and more comfortable and has a better idea of what it means to reflect God, what it means to let the Holy Spirit speak, to govern one's self according to the directions of the Holy Spirit, which is really nothing more than your sane Mind—your right Mind, your whole Mind, which you've dissociated yourself from.

And so I'm going to begin by reading what I dictated this afternoon and we'll use it as the starting point:

Good news: On August 16th, closing on the new property has been scheduled to take place and the move will begin.

An incredible expression of love and unity from everyone in many forms has made it possible. But at this point, it is my task to keep attention on completion of the movement so that the full meaning of fulfillment is not lost in premature abandonment of the miracle and so that the joy of unity may continue.

There has been a lot of joy. There's been a lot of 'felt' camaraderie amongst everyone who's been involved, as I said before, even though you haven't met each other, that's a joyful experience. And as I've said before, it's one everyone needs to have more consistently.

It's important for the joy to continue.

Now what does this mean, premature abandonment of the miracle?

Well, I continued and said:

For example, it could seem quite reasonable to believe that the purchase of a seven hundred, ten thousand dollar property in ten weeks, without any initial means of doing so, is enough of a miracle to last anyone a lifetime even though it doesn't represent the complete Vision. It might be easy to say, "Wow, who needs more than this? Everybody can relax. It's not necessary to be attentive anymore. It's not necessary to be in the position of experiencing a sudden shift of perception called, 'a miracle.' The miracle that has happened is sufficient."

Well . . . I continued:

Indeed, most everyone in one way or another, diminishes his experience of wholeness by claiming that good already received is such an example of God's Love, that more is unnecessary.

The prayer of a bed-ridden person, one not yet having received his good, might even be, "You know, if I could simply sit up and get around in a wheel-chair, I would never ask for another thing."

You know, when you get in that place called, "the holy instant," where God's laws prevail, this just won't work anymore. You will find your Guidance. You will find the Holy Spirit counseling you to insist on going the distance the Father would take you, in other words, all the way to holiness—wholeness.

Now this is very pertinent, because many of you have healings, have life-changing revelations and they cause incredible improvements to occur, but not improvements that take you all the way to perfection. In other words, perhaps, if you were bed-ridden, you're no longer bed-ridden and you are able to enjoy getting around in a wheel-chair.

But you know what? You're not able to walk, you're not able to drive, you're not able to swim, you're not able to dance. So wholeness hasn't been arrived at yet. And it is not necessary for you to settle for half a healing even though half a healing put you way ahead of where you were before and causes great joy to fill you perpetually.

Now, what I'm saying tonight is a way I'm using to teach Paul something. And it has transfer value for everyone else, because all of you in one way or another do exactly what I've just described.

You know, Paul looks at what has happened and it's mind-boggling. It is amazing. It causes him to feel greatly loved, greatly supported, but there's an element of unreasonability to it. It just isn't reasonable for this to have occurred although it evokes great gratitude, and it is going to mean more grace in carrying on the activities of the work for both him and Susan, and Chris and Judy, but he knows that what has happened—the obtaining of the property—is not all of it. It wasn't all that I described in the beginning.

You know, there's a hymn that Paul grew up with that began, "What is thy Birthright man, Child of the perfect One? What is thy Father's plan for His beloved Son?"¹ Of course, that's the key: What is thy Father's plan? Not what is my plan, what is your plan? But what is your Father's plan?

That's what you learn when you practice the two-step and you say, "Father, what is the truth here? Father what do I need to know here?"

The only stumbling block any of you have in the process of Awakening or in the process of experiencing healing and the evidence of your good is, that you find it impossible to yield to your Father's plan when that is your only function—when that only function you have, practiced or engaged in, will cause you to Awaken, will cause you to [snaps fingers] snap back into your right Mind.

Many from a metaphysical background have learned to visualize as a means of bringing about some good or effecting a healing. But the key here is where I said, "You will find your Guidance, you will find the Holy Spirit counseling you to insist on going the distance the Father would take you." Not the distance your plans will take you. Not the distance your best ideas will take you. Not the distance your great skill at manipulating others can take you.

No. Insist on going the distance the Father would take you. How do you find out where the Father would take you and how far?

By silencing human will. By silencing your great investment of faith in your thinking and saying, "Father, what is the truth here? What do I need to know? What is Your Will for me? Where does my fulfillment lie? Help me to share and have Your Perspective."

Well, when that happens, you're going to behave in a new way. Not a new way that can be written down and practiced by rote in the future, but a way that is revealed to you in the moment that you're asking to know what the truth is here? And so, going the distance that God would take you is a matter of forever saying, "Father, what is Your Perspective?" And eventually, even ceasing to ask the question because you, yourself, are bringing your attention to the Father because you have no desire to know anything other than what He is revealing.

So you know what? You can't watch what Paul is doing, or listen to what Paul is saying and write it down and then practice it, as though in a copy-cat form, you can arrive at knowing the truth, experiencing the Father's Perspective, having the Father's plan for His beloved Son revealed to you so that you might flow in expression of it without inhibition—without resistance.

Now, because Paul feels that so much has been given and because he feels, (and I will tell you he's assuming) because he feels that many who gave have given perhaps more than they had to give, he feels that there was an inequity perhaps, something he would wish not to have happened.

But you see, he has himself as a piss-ant little mortal—an orphan in the orphanage—looking at the effects he thinks maybe he's having on the other orphans. Deplete them, or put them at a disadvantage and he's missing the Vision he would see if he would do the two-step now and say, "Father what is the truth here?" And of course, right now, he is doing the two-step and he is asking, "Father, what is the truth here?" and the truth is coming out of his mouth right now. And the truth is that in all of the love that was expressed, whether it was a few dollars or a lot of them, whether it was given out of a little that was had or whether it was given out of a lot—out of great wealth—it was all God, it was all Love. And there weren't any piss-ant little mortal orphans doing it. You see?

What he's hearing as I say this is, that we're elevating everyone in the human condition into their divine stature and expressing and seeing the truth about them—honoring them. Not a single one who has given deserves anything less than honoring—the greatest honoring: The acknowledgement and recognition that the Sons and Daughters of God expressed their love.

Now, when Paul gets into this frame of mind, in fact, when any of you get into this piss-ant, poverty-stricken frame of mind, you find it difficult to consider wholeness as being your Birthright. You find it difficult to embrace it. You find justifications for not embracing it: You're not worthy of it. Oh, you're worthy of some, but not too much. And if you get too much, then you've had enough . . . you've had enough.

But you see, [chuckling] if you're listening to the Father, if you are asking to know the truth, the Father or the Holy Spirit or your Guide will reveal to you the necessity of following through to wholeness, following through to the complete experience of what your Father's plan is for you. And that may stretch you and may make you uncomfortable. But that's just the piss-ant little mortal orphan who's uncomfortable. And that's just a set of habits, mental and emotional habits that practicing the holy instant will break you of. It's a habit that will be broken by the persistence, the loving persistence of your Guidance, or of the Holy Spirit, or of me, or of the Father.

Now, we're at this marvelous point in this movement where the new property will be, I'm going to say, owned—will be completely available to occupy and be active in . . . that's the point.

Now, there are new things: There's moving expenses. There are . . . well, there are two fundamental things which are going to be needed, and they should be handled before moving in because they involve some construction that will make it difficult to live in the middle of.

Now these two things are: An elevator. The house is already structured for the elevator but the carriage needs to be installed. The carriage costs approximately twenty thousand dollars. In addition, the other thing that needs to be installed is a backup generator, which will allow for uninterrupted electrical service in an area where there are frequent outages in the winter.

Now, piss-ant little Paul's mind says, "Nobody's going to hear that and honor it or feel that it's justified. Hell," (that's what he would say) "Hell, other people live in apartment buildings with no elevators on the third floor and go up and down, carry their groceries.

But you know what? That's piss-ant little Paul's mind thinking. That's not Paul saying, "Father, what is the truth here? What is your plan in this instance?" But tonight he's asked and he's hearing and you're hearing that the Father's plan is for this building to have an elevator in it, that not only Paul and Susan can use, but also people attending gatherings who may find it difficult to negotiate three flights of stairs.

It is the plan for this building. It is the plan for the activity that will be going on there—the activities. And whether Paul thinks it's justifiable and whether Paul thinks other people will find it justifiable is irrelevant because anyone who finds it unjustifiable is engaging in their own piss-ant, poverty-stricken thinking, instead of saying, "Father what is the truth here?" and listening for the answer, and hearing that it is appropriate, and relaxing about it, and being able to stand in support of it and thereby reflect God.

Does that mean that if you do that you're going to send in a contribution? No, this has nothing to do with control. This has to do with understanding the movement. And also, understanding the movements that you find yourself engaged in as part of your fulfillments that the Father is revealing to you as His plans for you, and which require you to perhaps be bold and persevere for wholeness—not just half a healing, not just half a fulfillment—whether it meets your expectations or your limitations or others.

And so, I'm here to keep things clear and to keep things on target, because this is a fulfillment of the Father's plan, if I may put it that way. This new location, the elevator, the generator, the changes that need to be made in the building—shelving, and the things for the work that needs to be done, the arrangements for the broadcasting and so on and so forth, whenever you move into a new place there are things to be done.

You know what? Divine Love meets the human need. Divine Love reveals God's plan. And where is His plan going to show up, if it isn't right in the middle of where you are, which is right in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven.

And so, you can rest assured that as you listen to know what the truth is here and here and here, it is going to be relevant, it's going to be relevant to needs met. It's going to be relevant to elevators or shelves or generators or sprinkler heads, or whatever.

What is thy Father's plan for His beloved Son? Well, His plan for His beloved Son is for His beloved Son to see the Kingdom of Heaven where he's misperceiving the Kingdom of Heaven and calling it a material world and universe.

Now, we are, you might say, at the beginning of stage two. Is there a stage three and four? No. But we're at the beginning of stage two: The completion of the move and the fulfillment of all of the aspects of the move. And now is the time when expenses will begin, not the large overall expense that it took for the house, for the property, but moving expenses, equipment expenses, hiring people to help and so on . . . all practical aspects of and evidence of love meeting the need.

These expenses are beginning now. And I am inviting your support. Why am I inviting your support? Because you're listening to me, because you're asking to know the truth and you're listening to me as I share it and you're finding it of value—many of you finding it of extreme value. And what you find of extreme value it behooves you to share with others, it behooves you to do what makes it possible for it to be shared with others.

When you hear good news, you don't want to keep it secret, you want to share it, you want to feel the camaraderie of others with you knowing the truth and experiencing movement to wholeness, if I may put it that way, or the instantaneous experience of it.

And so, I'm asking for support from those who find it of value and who are willing to do what it takes to extend it, to make it more available to others. It's that simple.

You see, knowing the truth is extremely practical. But even more than your knowing that divine love meets the human need, you need to know the fundamental point that I'm sharing tonight, which is, that you need to follow through to wholeness. Don't accept half a miracle. Don't accept half a healing. Be grateful for it. But just because it's an awesome change in your experience doesn't justify postponing the rest of it. It justifies your continuing to press for the experience of the complete healing.

Sometimes that means that you have to press against your own resistance to it. "Oh, I couldn't take it. It would be too much for me to bear!"

Bull-shit! That's just an excuse! That's just an excuse for not yielding up the last bit of willfulness that it takes to resist God's plan for you, to resist the sudden shift of perception called, "a miracle," in which your right Mind registers with you as your clarity and constitutes the means of Awakening.

You know what? Not only do you need to want the ultimate for yourself, not only do you need to want the experience of wholeness for yourself, you need to want it for your fellowman. You can't have it privately. What you give you get to keep. We've said it over and over.

So, I invite everyone to do the one essential thing: The two-step. And ask, "Father, what's the truth here? What's the truth relative to me and what Raj is talking about tonight regarding the new property and what's needed there and regarding the needs I have in my life that he's telling me I need to press for the experience of the completion of."

And you know what? Don't abandon the questioning and the listening too quickly. The key is in persisting. Because the longer you're saying, "Father, what is Your Will? Father, what is Your plan for me?" the longer you're not saying, "I want it my way!" You see? And the longer you go without saying that, the more fluidly and easily you will shift—the more you will provide the environment in which the sudden shift of perception can occur.

I love you all. And this is great learning. Every connection you have with the Holy Spirit or with your Guide will strengthen the divine one that you Are and simply dissolve the piss-ant, poverty-stricken orphan that you've thought you were.

That's it in a nutshell. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

August 28th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Before we begin, let's take a few minutes to be quiet together.

[quiet time]

It has been rightly said that Mind is its own great cause and effect. I don't particularly like that choice of words, because of the meaning given to the word "effect." Effect is usually thought of as something separate and apart from the cause. And that does not express a unity.

We are going to be talking about unity tonight, because unity is simplicity. Being, being a unity, is simple. Duplicity is not.

And so, I prefer these words: "Mind is its own great cause and event."

In other words, Mind being cause, giving rise to Creation is an event itself. It is the event itself. Mind and its Movement are one and the same. Creation is not separate from the Mind of God. Creation is not separate from God. Mind is its own great cause and event.

Now, we've said before that you and your Father are One, and that One is your Father.

Listen again: You and your Father are One, and that One is your Father. We can also say: Your will and the Father's Will are One, and that One Will is the Father's.

You see, this is where the Singularity is, this is where the simplicity is. You cannot say: You and your Father are One, and you are that One. That idea is the definition of the orphan—the independent one, self-authorized, being an authorizer on its own.

No. You and your Father are One, and the Father is that One.

Now, I'm not playing with words here. We've been talking about the holy instant and the fact that the holy instant is the result of what? Of doing the two-step. And what is the two-step? The two-step is you, hesitating . . . you abandoning your independent, self-creative thinking. And in the silence that occurs—in the absence of your thinking—you reach out and say, "Father, what is the meaning here? Father, what is the truth here?" You see?

You abandon the creative one that you have thought you were in favor of connecting with your Source, which constitutes the whole of You.

The simplicity of this lies in the fact that when you do this, you yield to Something other than yourself, you yield to Something other than who and what you have thought you were.

Now, it is reported that in the Garden of Gethsemane I said—in a moment of weakness—"Father, if it be possible, let this cup pass from me. But nevertheless, not my will, but Thine be done."

This is a perfect example of the two-step. And for that reason I share it, even though it is not a phrase that ever was uttered from my lips.

All of you approach the Father with prayers, with requests for this, that or the other thing that you feel is exactly what you need, and which you are sure you need. But if you practice the two-step, you abandon that request and you say, "Nevertheless, Father, Thy Will not mine be done. Father, what is the truth here? Father, what do I need to know?" You see?

The reason this is so important is because cause does not lie in the realm of effects. Cause does not lie in the realm of what you call manifestations.

Let me give you an example of what I mean here. And I'm not sharing this as a definition of dreams, but rather to illustrate a meaning: You're asleep. It's early in the morning. One of the children has a need, gets up and knocks on your door.

You, lying in bed, are having a dream. And in the dream you're at work. And in the middle of your business, you hear a knock at the door. Well, the dream goes on. But the point is, that the cause of your hearing a knock on the door in your dream is not because it was happening there, but, we will say, at a different level of conscious awareness. It's occurring in the room where you're sleeping. You see? Cause does not lie at the level of effect. This is important.

Another example: As independent agents we've discussed your being an orphan, your behaving as though you are fatherless, motherless, and you are an independent entity in your own right.

Now, because Mind is Its own great cause and event, whatever you're experiencing as an orphan is not an experience arising out of the orphanage.

I said—and I said truly—"In my Father's house are many mansions. If it were not so, I would have told you."

Every one of these mansions, you could say, is a vantage point—an infinite vantage point—a vantage point from which all of Creation is experienced by you . . . and you . . . and you . . . and you. You see?

But those mansions, to the independent entity, the one caught up in a belief about himself as being fatherless, motherless, and having this wonderfully exciting and fearful experience of accomplishing things all by itself, experiences these mansions as dormitories in an orphanage.

Mind you, because Mind is Its own great cause and event, and there is not anything separate from it, what's experienced in the orphanage, as an orphanage has to be the Kingdom of Heaven and our Father's mansions, of which there are many—infinity of them. You see?

Whatever you're experiencing that is not a true experience, is not a separate experience. It's not an experience separate from Reality. It's just a biased experience of what is Real.

Now, if you are in bed asleep and your son has knocked on the door because there's a need, and you dreamed that somebody was knocking at your door in your office, you're not going to be able to respond appropriately if you go to your office door.

Somewhere a shift of attention has to occur from your misperception to the Reality. You see? So that you might wake up . . . get out of bed . . . go to the door and help your son.

Now, you all have what are at least two experiences of being conscious. One is what you would call your waking consciousness. Everyday when you get up, take care of your affairs, live your life, respond to things that need to be done which you are in charge of.

And the other is what you experience when you fall asleep at night and you're not aware that you're in charge of anything. And what you're experiencing is not a connection with Reality at all. You understand that things that happen in the reality of your bedroom or your chair where you have fallen asleep, will be translated into events in your dream, therefore, they are not occurring at the level of the dream. And they cannot be responded to at the level of your dream.

Now, when you do the two-step, what you are doing is shutting up the conscious thinking activity during your day when you say you are awake. You are abandoning authority you believe you have as an independent entity in a godless world. And you reach out for your Source, you reach out for That which Knows the truth, you reach out for that Mind which is Its own great cause and event—which is inseparable from your Mind.

You and your Father are one, and the Father is that One. Your mind and the Father's Mind are one, and that One is the Father's Mind.

You see, what you're doing when you do the two-step is, you are shifting from a dream that you call being awake, which amounts to distorted perceptions of Reality, so that you might join with the Source—the Movement of Creation—that is Its own great cause and event, so that you might experience and respond to everything from the place where God is Being It and from the place where it is not only your Birthright but your function to experience truly.

Now, not all of what I'm saying right now is new. And we're still talking about the two-step. We're still talking about the holy instant. But we're embellishing it and giving it broader and deeper meaning.

Now, we've talked before about the fact that when you do the two-step and employ the holy instant, you move into that place where God's laws prevail. Now what does that mean? It means you've moved into that place where the Will of God is done—where God's Will is done.

Now that might not even seem radical to you or exceptional, but if you stop and think about it, if you do the two-step and you move into the holy instant and you are where God's Will is done, you're going to have an experience that absolutely reflects God's Will not yours—not the one you thought you have had as an orphan.

And you're to what? You're going to start having a new experience—a transformed experience—one which you're not responsible for because you've abandoned your so-called authority to be a cause in your own right.

And so, when you move into this place where God's laws prevail and therefore, God's Will is done, you're going to begin to have a transformed experience of dormitories in an orphanage. And you're going to begin to experience what they truly are—the mansions, the mini-mansions. You see?

You're going to begin to experience everything that you had misperceptions of and whose purposes were something you had determined through your imagination as what God is Being them as (not good English). You will begin to experience them with the purpose God has placed in them as part of the Movement of Creation that is Its own great cause and event.

In effect, what I'm saying is, that it will feel like something other than you has taken over. And it will be God. And it will constitute a transformed experience in practical, living, daily terms in your life.

Now, Paul and Susan have been having this experience for the last four or five months as this movement regarding a new residence and a new place from which to engage in the work has unfolded. It is as though things were taken out of their hands—a movement began which they didn't ask for and which they have had to, I'm going to say, yield to, because they had different preferences: They wanted to stay cozy and simple and with that which was familiar, even though God's fulfillment of purpose was different from that.

And so, incredible things have happened—not at their hand—things that do not seem reasonable, they can't be justified in any human sense and it's not clear to them what the divine event is yet. And this is what everyone has in store for them as they begin to do the two-step and practice the holy instant.

I bring this out because it's a promise of fulfillment that lies within you in your decision to abandon your thinking and yield into the Father with a genuine curiosity to know what the truth is beyond your current definition of it.

You will find that as this movement that goes beyond your concepts of reasonability occur—as wonderful as they are—you will begin to feel uncomfortable because you're not in charge of them and your conditioning is, to believe that you are supposed to be and therefore you're being negligent and therefore the potential to be guilty of making a mistake arises in you. And what does that do? It spoils the Movement of God that is occurring in you, in your experience, because you have said you want to Wake up. You have said, "I want to do the two-step. I want to practice the holy instant. I want to be in that place where God's laws are prevailing," which means, "I want to be in that place where God's Will is done," not will be done, not was done, but is done . . . is done . . . is done . . . is done. You see? Moment-by-moment . . . moment-after-moment.

Now, when this uncomfortableness and threat of guilt begins to consume you, you revert to your old habit of thinking. You do what will bring things back into balance as far as you're concerned, as far as your belief is concerned. And the moment you begin thinking, you have abandoned your connection with Reality. You have withdrawn your attention from the bedroom where you are sleeping and your son has knocked on the door. And you have reverted to the office you are dreaming you are in, and you are answering the door with the intent to respond well, there. And you see, there, you are not coping with anything actual at all. And anything that occurs there does not accomplish anything relative to your son, in your real life, whose knocking at your door with a need at four in the morning. You see? And you want to be responding to the Reality and not to an imagination where nothing is actually happening at all.

Now, I am using the word "dream" carefully here because, in effect, what you call your waking daily life is dream-like at least, because it's full of misperceptions which you are believing whole-heartedly and according to which you are governing your actions. That is the equivalent of answering the door in your office and attending to whoever's out there and doing it well in your dream. Nothing is actually happening. But what you are confronted by and what you are having to deal with is the Kingdom of Heaven instead of a dormitory. It is one of the Father's many mansions. It is that which is happening at the level of God. It is that which is happening at the level of Mind being its own great cause and event. It's you shifting to the place where the Father's Will registers with you as yours and you're not at all confused because you know it's your Father's, you know that it has the depth and breath and scope of the power—the almighty power—of God.

And you are very comfortable abiding in that conscious experience, embracing that conscious experience as yours, because you are experiencing it and making commitment to it because you have no desire to engage in any other act of independence.

Now, my point is this (the one I want to convey) and it's actually a simple point: There's only one thing going on, it's the Kingdom of Heaven, as I've been saying for years, which you are either seeing clearly or through a glass darkly. When you're seeing it through a glass darkly, you are believing what isn't true and you're suffering from your ignorance of what truth is. And yet the truth is about the very things you are having misunderstandings: Reality, Creation, God's Presence.

And so, if you want to experience them, if you want to lose the confusion and the suffering from the confusion you're working under, you must be willing to bring your attention, I'm going to say, to the bedroom where your son is knocking at the door, to that place where God is Being All, where God's laws prevail, where God's Will is done. Because that's where the spark [snaps fingers] . . . that's where the light will go on, that's where the clarity will come that tells you what the events really Are, what Creation really Is, so that you might respond to it with the fullness of appreciation and awe for what It is.

Be renewed by the transforming of your Minds . . . be renewed by the transforming of your Minds. It's accomplished through the two-step and the holy instant. It's the effect of abiding in the holy instant and inviting God's Perception, inviting the experience of your mind and God's Mind being One and that One is God's.

It's time for transformation. It's time for a transformed experience of everything you're experiencing. But you're going to have to stop trying to deal with it from here. You're going to have to stop trying to deal from the level of your best definitions of it.

Everything that you're experiencing is going on in a different way from the way you're interpreting It. As a result, you bump into It, you're awkward with It, you behave in a way inconsistent with It because you're responding to your definitions of It. You deserve to have fulfillment registering with you in every aspect of your days. That's your Birthright and that's the point of everything we're talking about.

And so again, Mind is its own great cause and event. You and your Father are one and the Father is that One. Your will and the Father's Will are one and the Father's Will is that One.

Reality is going on in Reality, not in your misunderstandings of Reality. But you're having your misunderstandings of Reality in the middle of Reality and about all of the aspects of Reality—the Singularity is present. What you want is to experience the Singularity as Singular . . . simple . . . undeniably fulfilling.

As you go through your day, let your desire be to experience the fullness of what God is Being and Meaning in each and everything you're confronted with. Don't seek it in your perception of it at the moment. Ask . . . you might say, put a periscope up from where you are into the Kingdom of Heaven [chuckles] right here where you are, so that Someone with clarity can reveal to you what the truth is of this place where you are and your mind can be transformed so that you see everything as the fulfillment it is.

As you start having these fulfilling experiences your friends and acquaintances might begin to question what is happening with you. Thank God . . . because they're noticing something that needs to be noticed so that they begin to bring their curiosity into play relative to their experience. You see?

Now, the movement continues with Paul and Sue and the move. And the movement continues with everyone who has been participating and those who haven't. And the blessings of it will continue. The Meaning of the Movement will make Itself clear to everyone as everyone abides with it without attempting to bring their best definitions to it. Quit trying to figure it out . . . you hear? Quit trying to figure it out, and ask, "Father, where's the meaning here? What is the Meaning here?" and then shut up and listen so that the Movement of Fulfillment can register with you, and so that everything you do identifies Fulfillment and becomes like a chain-reaction—like dominoes falling—affecting those you know.

Again, when you ask of the Father, "What is the truth here?" and you genuinely become silent and you listen attentively you will be given the answer.

And what I mean to convey tonight is, that it won't come purely as an intellectual answer, it will come as a wave of Movement that is constituted of changes in your life that identify good beyond your capacity to create it on your own. It's that simple. And that's the thought I want to leave you with tonight so that you may abide with it. Let it be with you. Let it inspire your attention.

Remember, you think you're living in a material world and universe, but you know what? . . . It's really the Kingdom of Heaven. What's happening in the material world and universe is not originating in the material world and universe, it's originating in the Kingdom of Heaven, as the Kingdom of Heaven, no matter how you're misinterpreting It. And all you want to do is abandon the misinterpretation and the faith you have in your misinterpretations. That's going to constitute the transforming of your mind.

It's a Wholeness . . . It's a Oneness . . . It's a Singularity, as you let God be all there is to You.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 4th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Tonight we won't take a quiet time.

There's one thing I want everyone to consider—one important thing: We have, for some time, been talking about the two-step. The two-step, meaning, that instead of assuming that you know what everything means, instead of assuming that you know what the appropriate response is to a situation and just proceeding on the basis of your experience or your best judgments, you instead hesitate. That's the first step of the two-step: You hesitate. You stop your thoughts in midstream. You stop your automatic response in midstream.

And then you take the second step. You ask, "What is the truth here?" You ask the question of That which knows the answer, which is either God or the Holy Spirit.

In other words, you abandon your independence, your independent action, your assertion of a self that has a capacity to be an author in its own right. You abandon that. After all, the simple fact is, that whenever anyone gets into trouble it's because they've listened only to themselves . . . right? Or they've listened to someone else who's listening only to themselves.

And always, any form of ultimate solution to a problem arises out of, one way or another, doing the two-step, where you abandon self-assertive, authoritative expression of will, and you say, "Father, in spite of what I think, in spite of my best judgments, what is the truth here? What is really going on here, divinely speaking? What is the truth about my Brother, divinely speaking? What is the answer to this problem I have gotten myself into as a result of listening only to myself?"

Whenever one arrives at that point and genuinely listens, genuinely allows in something other than his or her own judgments, God speaks—the Holy Spirit speaks—and you hear. And the result is far different from any assertive actions you might engage in, or might have engaged in based upon your best judgments. And the result is always transformational. It changes you.

Now the question is, why? And the answer is the fundamental idea that I want to share tonight and that I want to leave with you so that you may contemplate it and let it deeply register with you: The reason God's answers are transformational is because God is never speaking to who you think you are. God is never speaking to who you think you are. God is always speaking to who He Knows you Are.

To God, you are His beloved Son in whom He is well pleased. You are His beloved Daughter in whom He is well pleased. The reason He knows this is because you are His Self-expression. You are His off-spring. You are the embodiment of all that He is: His nature, His character, His wisdom, His integrity, His incapacity to be confused. In other words, His capacity to be single-minded, therefore clear, therefore incapable of generating conflict.

This is what you Are. And this is Who He speaks to.

And so His Vision of you, which is the Truth about you, becomes conveyed in your very being, in your present experience of who you think you are. And as that registers with you, it imbues you with new energy, with new nature—new to you—different from that which was typical of who you thought you were.

And so you experience rejuvenation, you experience healing, you experience transformation, you experience a perspective that changes the way you confront your world. All of this because God is not speaking to who you think you are, but to who He Knows you Are.

So if that's true, why would you insist upon relying upon your own best judgments which are never transformational? Why would you hold onto and energize your pet theories when they've never transformed you? When they've never caused you to have an entirely new perspective about your world and about your fellowman that causes you to behave toward them differently in ways that what? . . . in ways that cause them, perhaps, to have the same sort of transformational insight about themselves that you have experienced about yourself.

You know, religions can give you a lot of rules to follow, a lot of obediences to practice. But the simple fact is, that what truly means something and what is truly transformational, is when you abandon your attempts at controlling your experience through obediences and through the practices of principles that are, in so many words, head-trips and become part of your self-definition and part of who you think you are because all of that is nothing more than the practice of memory. And memory is dead! Memory is not enlivened by the Spirit of Being—and I'm going to say Being with a capital "B"—the presence of God.

The thing is, that everyone gets caught up in a dutiful and insistent practice of memory of who one thinks he is, of the assertion of an independent self that one never ever really was.

And the simple solution to the problems that are the result of such practices is abandoning—as I've said over and over—the private independent self-authorizing being that you think you are, and saying, "Father . . . God . . . Holy Spirit, what's the truth here? How do You see me? How do you see my fellowman that I'm having difficulty with? How do you see this situation in the context of God? I want to know so that I no longer suffer from my ignorance or my misunderstandings. I want to be filled with the conscious experience of God's Perspective so that I might be transformed and my perceptions might be transformed and brought into harmony with Reality as God is Being It."

"Because you know what? I want to be transformed by a conscious experience of union with Something greater than I think I am. I want to have that experience of Spirit—the lively enlivening Presence of God—that enlivens my dowdy pessimistic limited perception of this, that or the other thing, and brightens it up in ways that bring out its eternity instead of its inevitable death. I want to be renewed. And I'm beginning to grasp that as long as I'm holding on to my best judgments, my best memories, my pet theories, I'm already in the realm of the memorized—the dead—the un-enlivened. And you know what? I don't want to hang out there because I know if I do it's going to rub off on me, and I'm going to become un-enlivened and dowdy and I'm going to inevitably die, even though Something in me tells me that that's not my Birthright."

The two-step: Well, we can't say enough about it. We can't emphasize it enough, because it's the way out of the realm and experience of sin, disease and death.

Instead of automatically believing that you think you know what a thing means or you think you know what a thing is, practice that moment of hesitation where you shut up! And in the silence you say, "Father,"—and what you mean is God, or you mean That which has the infinite perspective, the true perspective—"Father, Holy Spirit, what is the Truth here?" Truth with a capital "T," not the truth about your fellowman and what a bastard he is. That's not the Truth about him. And it's not going to help you to have a clear-cut explanation of why he is such a bastard and what the proofs are.

You want to know the Truth about him. You see? You need God to speak to You and be speaking to the one He knows you Are instead of the one you think you are. And your fellowman needs the same thing. Because when that Vision is being used, it lifts you and it lifts your fellowman out of the doldrums, out of the dowdiness, out of the pessimism, out of the on-your-way-to-the-grave experience. It inspires, because it illuminates the Spirit of You that God speaks to because God put It there and God Knows It's there. And you seem to be the only one left out of the loop because you think you are what you think you are . . . and it's a lot less.

Now, there's one other aspect of this that I want to share tonight and that is this: Very often you don't hear God speaking to you because He's not talking to you in the way you expect Him to talk to you. When He talks to you He doesn't talk to you as though you are the bastard you think you are, or you are not the poor soul that you think you are, or you are not the useless one you think you are, or the unkind one, or the one who can't understand things. You see? God Knows You and speaks to you as though you are all that He Is at this very moment enlivening you with, because He is Creating you in every moment out of Himself.

God always speaks to you in grander or larger terms than you think of yourself. Some of you actually put in earplugs, if you will, to avoid hearing God, because you are afraid God is going to speak to who you think you are and that is going to be an unpleasant experience—He's going to be chastising you, He's going to be judging you, He's going to be taking away your good because you no longer deserve it. And that's why what I'm saying tonight is so important. God is not speaking to who you think you are.

God is speaking to Who He Knows you Are and He Knows you Are His direct expression in this moment . . . in this moment . . . in this moment . . . in this moment. You see?

"Behold I make all things new." "Behold I make all things new . . . behold I make you new . . . I make you new . . . I make you new. And I make you out of what I Am and so I Know what you Are made of, and I Know what the Truth is about You and It's much more than you think you are. And I want you to experience what you Are. I want you to experience the more than what you think you are."

And so, at the bottom line, it means that when you practice the two-step and you hesitate and you don't act in the world on the basis of your memory and you ask, "Father, what's the Truth here?" so that you might have the Vision that allows you to behave in an in-Spirited way, in a divine way, you will be fulfilling your function and you will be having an experience that far exceeds anything you could have arrive at through your best judgments.

What you really want is, not to have to rely upon your best judgments based upon your best thinking, based upon your experience. You want your judgments—if we're going to call them that—you want your judgments to be living assessments of the Son of God or the Daughter of God that God is Being right there in what you call your sister or your brother or your fellowman or yourself. That's what you want. And I'm reminding you that that's something you can ask for every day, all day long. And you do not have to get caught in the habit of memory.

It's very important. It's the Truth. You deserve a lot more than you let yourself have. And the Father is extending a lot more to you than you're willing to embrace. And that is because you have forgotten that God is never speaking to who you think you are. He is speaking to who He Knows you Are because in this moment . . . He is Being You, new.

And so He Knows Who you Are and He Knows What you Are and you Are Him Expressed and nothing more—nothing aside from that. You are His Beloved Son, You are His Beloved Daughter in whom He is well pleased. And you deserve the experience of that pleasure.

And you know what? Your fellowman deserves the experience of that pleasure when he's with you. And you can provide that pleasure by asking of the Father, "What's the Truth here about my fellowman, instead of what I think the truth is about my fellowman?"

So, that's all I'm going to talk about tonight. It's a simple idea, but profound and transformational and if you want to put it in this context, it's the real meaning of religion.

I love you . . . and I love you . . . and I love you . . . and I love everyone who has joined us on the Internet.

Abide with what I've shared. Your practice of it, your letting it happen with you, will be like knocking down the first domino and others will follow. It's important. It is transformational.

And I look forward to being with your next week. Thank you.

¹Revelation 21:4-5 "Behold I Make All Things New"

4 And God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain: for the former things are passed away.

5 And he that sat upon the throne said, Behold, I make all things new.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 11th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, as a bottom line, the real meaning—not just the message—but the real meaning of religion is love. And no matter what the religion is called, if one comes into an experience of it, one finds that he has a function—a divine function. And that divine function is to be the Presence of Love.

At the bottom line, that's the center and circumference of true religion.

And as the Bible says, "Perfect Love casteth out fear." And as everyone knows, fear is rampant around your globe, boldly scaring people into behavior that is destructive—anti-social.

And the problem is that fear seems to command everyone's attention, whether it's a little bit of fear or a lot of fear, it is always engaging. It always gets you and it keeps you—it keeps your attention on it and it completely distracts you from your capacity to release yourself from it. In fact, it presents itself to you as a survival mode. It presents itself to you as something essential to your well-being. It will keep you safe. If you never became afraid, you would never protect yourself against harm.

That can seem reasonable but it completely overlooks and overrides the fact that there is basic intelligence built into you—built into every one of you no matter what your age, no matter what your experience. And that basic intelligence can provide you with the means of remaining safe if a call for safety presents itself.

One does not have to be in a state of fear in order to be, shall I say, in order to have integrity. It's not necessary at all. But the experience of fear distracts you from that fact.

Now, as you can see, the theme tonight is the Gifts of God. In another place in the Bible, it says, "For God hath not given us . . . (given, gifted us) God has not given us the spirit of fear; but of power and, of love and, of a sound mind."²

Well, what's a "sound mind?" A sound mind is a mind that is integrated. Better put than that, it is unified—it's a unity. It therefore has no fragmentation in it and it is therefore incapable of feeling anything other than the security of its unity. That's what a sound mind is. That's what God has given all of us. And that's what fear causes you to forget. And so you ignore that Gift.

Well, fear is always accompanied by, or always instills in you the feeling of guilt. Feeling guilty causes you to dread the penalty that is associated with guilt. And so fear binds you up in what seems like an inescapable attraction to destructive thinking. It causes you to become confused and to just roll around in fear, anxiety, imaginations that have no basis in fact.

This equally distracts you from the other Gift, that of power. Now, God has given you the spirit of power, love and of a sound mind. This power is not a private power. It is an expressing in you of God's Presence and power. It is an imbuing you with the Presence of God's power. It is the way you experience the unity of a sound mind.

It's not power over anything, but an awareness that no power is called for. Because in the safety of the unity of your Mind, and therefore of your conscious experience of Being, and because there is no fragmentation, there's no opposition, there's no conflict, there's nothing to protect yourself against.

Now I'm bringing this up, not because this is September 11th, not because it is a day in which a lot of fear was caused, not because it is a day which—because of events that occurred—caused a lot of misunderstandings to arise in the world community, where enemies were seen who were not enemies, and a call for defense against them aroused anxiety, anger, calls for retribution and so on. No, that's not why I'm talking about it tonight. I'm talking about it because, as I said when I began, as you come into an experience of the real meaning of religion and as you come into an experience of the real meaning taught by A Course In Miracles, you find that and you learn that you have a function—you have a purpose—one which you might not otherwise have been aware of. And that purpose is to be your Brother's savior.

You know, that's what fear calls for. It calls for you to remember your function, which is to be enjoying the Gifts of God: the spirit of power, the spirit of love and the spirit of a sound mind.

Why? Because when you abandon your gripping need to feel the agitation of fear, you become the Presence of peace. You become the Presence of That which can inspire the abandonment of fear in your Brother . . . your Sister.

Your task is to reflect God. That's all there is to it at the bottom line.

Oh, that doesn't mean to become Mr. and Mrs. Goody-two-shoes. No. It means to become a genuine valid presence from whom integrity—unfeigned integrity—real integrity shines and blesses everything you give your attention to. Your purpose is not to be a spokesman for God, but to be the presence of what you Are, which happens to be the evidence of God.

You're here to enjoy such an experience of peace and stability (a sound mind) and the power that accompanies it. Why? Because there is really nothing else worthwhile to do. And because if you dare to embrace and embody that, your Brothers and Sisters are blessed.

Now, if you have this capacity, if it's God's Gift to you, if God by being You in every moment, causes these Gifts to be your makeup, then your task and everyone else's task as long as fear is rampant, is to be that Presence which alleviates fear.

"Well, I'm not going to alleviate his fear. He's not alleviating anybody else's fear. He's being a real problem. He's being a real asshole. He's being a real irritation!"

Well, I'll tell you something: As you sit there declaring that, you're being a real irritation and you're fueling the fire of fear and you're not being a peace-maker.

"Well, nobody likes a peace-maker, ya know . . . hey, everybody likes a good tussle every now and then. That's what makes life interesting . . . the vigor of it!"

But, no. Your function is to reflect your Source—to allow That which is being You at this very moment . . . to show.

Now you may not think you have it in you to do it for your Brother. But, if that's the case, you don't think you have it in you to do it for yourself. And I mean by that, that you have not discovered your capacity to relieve yourself of or to abandon the practice of fear and your pre-occupation with it—your addiction to it—where you cannot take your attention off of it, and you cannot stop embellishing it and making it absolutely real and justifying it and on and on and on.

So I'm here in spite of your fear to convey to you that you have the means of setting it aside. Not only do you have the means: It's your function. You're not here as the expression of God to present a picture of something unlike God or to be something other than what God is Being right there where you are.

You're here to be fully enjoying the conscious experience of what you divinely Are and the fulfillment that accompanies it—the wholeness that is inseparable from it. And you know, the invulnerability which is part and parcel of it. You're here to enjoy the power, the love and the sound mind that are the Gifts of God.

Not, that here's this little you "out here," and God is going to pass to you a gift of power, love, and a sound mind. No. That which you would think of as separate from God "out here" that could receive a Gift from God, is actually God expressed—the Presence of God already. And therefore, love, power and a sound mind are already established in you as You. And that's what fear distracts you from the experience of. And that is what it is your Birthright to take back and to experience and therefore to be free of the domination of fear.

If you're feeling guilty, you're feeling fear. And if you're feeling fear, somewhere you're feeling guilt. And whenever you're feeling either one of them, you feel that they're justified and therefore, you don't challenge them. But, I'm telling you, that right in the middle of gripping fear—or ever so mild fear—you need to ask, "Did God give this to me? Well, that's not one of the Gifts of God. So obviously not."

If God didn't give it to you, then it's not real. It's a false belief. It's an imagination that you have clothed and given your honor and commitment to even though it's total foolishness. And you know, every one of you, that you have a means of becoming calm in the midst of fear.

You know, you have a child and the child wakes up with a nightmare, full of fear and you know that what's called for is for that child to be calm—to become calm. And so you do everything you can to nurture a calming attitude in her or him. And you know that there's no attention that needs to be given to what seems to have been really scary because there was nothing really scary.

Well, when you're engulfed with fear, somehow you need to remind yourself or allow yourself to be reminded that it's not really something scary because if it didn't come from God, it's an imagination.

Then once you've remembered that, even if you're still caught in the grip of it, you can do a simple thing: You can sit down, even though every fiber of your body says, "You've got to deal with this. You can't ignore this. It's too serious!" Bullshit. You need to sit down and if nothing else begin to breathe deeply and slowly and give your attention to your breath, or you need to breathe slowly and meditate.

If you do that, the fear and the gripping of it will leave and you will find yourself experiencing peace. And it will be very confusing when that first happens because it won't make any sense for you to be experiencing this real peace when something so frightening still hasn't been resolved. But the wonderful learning in it is, that when you let yourself have this experience of peace by choosing for it through meditating or giving your attention to your gentle "inhale and exhale," you realize that you're in a frame of mind in which you can see clearly and in which you can discern how to handle the problem, not because you're driven by fear, but because in the peace of your native intelligence, truth is clear, . . . answers are clear.

In that peace, the power, love and soundness of mind that God is placing in you by being You at every moment, reveals to you that never again do you have to succumb to overwhelming fear. And that if you are willing to abandon it as the motivational force of your being, you will find a motivational force already there that you didn't have to create, a motivational force of Love underpinned by a sound mind that has or is the presence of Mind that is Power because it has integrity, because it is a unity.

This is your Birthright to be experiencing. And as you insist upon becoming still in the midst of fear and having this experience, you will find yourself behaving differently. And you will also find yourself grasping what is going on in your Brother or Sister when he or she is bound by fear—caught in it, governed by it—and missing the experience of the natural intelligence of their Being, which in the midst of peace can provide the answer that the motivational force of fear seems to be pushing them toward.

You think that this great fear is a natural resource for you to gain safety and without it you won't be able to gain safety or intelligence. But intelligence is the natural avenue for arriving at intelligence—for arriving at an intelligent experience. And doing this and being it is your function and it's your function to be practicing relative to your Brothers and Sisters. It's your function to find a way to put your Brothers and Sisters at peace by uncovering the Gifts of God: The Gift of Power, of Love and of a sound mind.

So, it's not going to be a head-trip. It's not going to be nicey-nice thoughts to make you feel happy when things aren't good. It's going to be something which you assert. I can't put it any more clearly than that. When it comes to abandoning the fear that engulfs you, it's going to require you to assert yourself and choose for your peace, choose for stopping the rampant run of fear, and breathe. Just remember to breathe—something so simple—and give your attention to that. But it's going to take some vigorous intent to choose to do that when you're engulfed by fear. That's okay! Let there be vigorous intent. And do it so that you move into your peace. Because in your peace you will see the answer.

And you want to know something? When you're engulfed in fear, you're engulfed in fear because you believe at the bottom line there is no answer—at least not for you. And it's simply not true. But the answer won't register with you until you've chosen for your peace.

And then, when you've learned this, it's your obligation and task to help your Brother and Sister learn the same thing for themselves. And if they're afraid of you, you find a way to put them at peace. And you engage in whatever vigor it takes, whatever vigorous involvement it takes or whatever calm, gentle persistent reassurance it might take.

"Oh, well, they're not worth it. Why should I have to do that?"

Because it's your function! Because it's Who and what you really Are. And in order for you to give that to your fellowman you're going to have to be willing to give it to yourself—and what a wonderful thing. How practical it is. How simply intelligent it would be to give it to yourself. You see? How humane it would be. How forgiving it would be.

If the fear isn't real—and here's the clincher—the guilt isn't real. Remember, fear and guilt go together. And why do they seem to be present? Because you've unplugged yourself from your Source. And when you think you have unplugged yourself from your Source, you feel like you're vulnerable and you also know that you feel vulnerable because of not only an unwise choice but a fallacious choice—a choice to believe that you've accomplished something that you can't have accomplished.

So you feel guilty and you feel fearful, or you feel fearful and you feel guilty. If in the midst of fear you can meditate—become still—and find the fear that seems so real and justifiable disappearing, you can likewise find that the guilt accompanying it also disappeared, which is one of the reasons that you can say you're experiencing what a sound mind is. Because a sound mind is not fragmented by fear, it's not torn apart, disturbed, there's no chaos in it. And a sound mind is what the Father gave you. Fear is not. Guilt is not.

Now, I'm speaking gently. I'm not speaking boldly. I'm not cramming it down your throat. I'm not jacking you up to get you motivated. And the reason is, that I want you to grasp the fact that what's intelligent is just what you should spontaneously be engaging in. What is Loving is what you should just be embodying, just because it allows you to find the Gifts of God, which are really the Presence of God in you, to show up. And this is a perfectly intelligent and perfectly sane thing to do. Now, I said it's going to take vigorous intent on your part—persistence.

You know what? I could give you a real pep talk. And I could get you revved up so you'd be willing to do it. But it wouldn't last. I'm saying it to you softly, gently, encouragingly and matter-of-factly, so that it might be easier for you to just shift in your awareness—a genuine shift, a simple shift that it would be difficult to slip back from.

You need to know the truth about you and that the simple truth about you is so normal, so everyday, that it is accessible to you. Whether it's someone in your office, whether it's someone in a neighborhood of other nationalities, whether it's a people in a different country, if they are afraid of you, you have a job. And your job is to be the Presence of That which causes them to relax because you've shared with them a genuineness and a loving kindness and a soundness of mind and a presence of power which really means, a comfortable sense of invulnerability so that it's clear to them that there's nothing for them to fear. And then if they have really been afraid and it's not easy for them to let it go quickly, you be willing to persist until the relationship is healed.

There's need for healing in the world, in families, in communities. And it will come about by valuing the Gifts of God, by realizing that if God has not given you the spirit of fear or the spirit of guilt, but of Power and of Love and of a sound mind, that you can be a valuable agent for change that will, for lack of better words, transform the world.

And you know what? You don't have to be entirely altruistic. You don't have to just go out and do this for someone else. It is not your Birthright to be experiencing fear. It's not your Birthright to be experiencing guilt. And so you take the time to do what it takes to lift yourself out of it, to watch the seeming reality of fear and guilt evaporate—just dissolve—and leave you with a clear mind, a sound mind, one in which Love is easy.

You deserve that. And until you let it in for yourself you won't have it to give away. You won't have it to share and thereby keep.

It's important. It's important for fear to stop dominating the world scene. And it's time for its dominance to evaporate, not because there's force frightening people with more fear into not acting like they're afraid—not as an exertion of power—but as a genuine embrace of Love.

It is important.

I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

September 25th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

As you can see on the screen, it says, "The Movement Continues." This is with reference to the change of location that is occurring from the place where the Foundation has operated, where Paul and Susan live, where they conduct the activities, to a new place about two and a half miles away.

We've used this phrase, "The Movement Continues" since the beginning. Let me say right now that this is me, Paul, speaking . . . and not Raj. I want to be clear about that.

It says The Movement Continues, and yet the fact is that it is moving very, very slowly. It seems that at every step, that resistance is met. Not resistance in us, but this, that or the other thing that comes up that holds things up.

Now dealing with these things—employing the two-step to deal with them—what shall I say . . . has been very helpful. But because of the persistence of these resistances, it has become laborious, it has become difficult. The tendency for me is to want to become reactive, to become demanding, to take control. And yet, that's not the way the two-step works, because the two-step is the process of saying, "Thy Will be done" and then listening for what that is.

Now, the reason I'm talking tonight is because first of all, I'm very tired. The process the last few weeks has been very strenuous. Maybe some of you have found that practicing the two-step is not entirely rejuvenating [chuckle] if persistence is required—persistence that pushes you beyond what you think your capacity is.

And so, I have found that practicing the two-step isn't always fun. It's always worthwhile, but I haven't found it to be fun all the time.

I've asked Raj, why are we running into these resistances? Why are we running into personality issues—ego issues? And he said, "It's very simple. It's the "crab-barrel theory" demonstrated. Those who see unjustifiable good happening, those seeing movement occur that is more expansive than they can embrace for themselves, tend to put a damper on unreasonable good when it's happening to someone else."

Well, that's a nice answer (me, Paul speaking). It explains it, but it doesn't make it easier. It still boils down to my having to practice the two-step and do my best to get into the holy instant, where I understand God's laws prevail.

So, progress has been slow. As it happens, financial support has been equally slow. This has made it stressful for me. And this morning when I was sleeping restlessly—meaning not really sleeping and experiencing disturbance—I realized that I was anticipating tonight with some dread because I obviously wouldn't be able to come up on the evening and the Gathering here full of inspiration, even though I'm full of dedication and even though I'm full of persistence. And of course my being exhausted didn't help and hasn't helped either.

But you know what? I realized that if I didn't try to be something I'm not, I could relax. If I allowed myself to be here this evening and not try to be something I'm not, or not act from a place that I'm not, I could relax. And part of what I realized was that I can't do what I can't do. Susan, my wife and I, can't do what we can't do. And so I don't have to try to pretend that I can. And I can say, "Hey, I can't do what I can't do."

I don't have the means—the personal financial means—to follow through on this move that Raj has set into motion. Susan and I are not in a position to pack up the house, load it into trailers, move it to the new house, carry it up the stairs and unpack. Somebody else is going to have to do it. We're going to have to pay someone to do it with money that we don't have yet.

My ego can take that and run with it and create stress for me. And it has, because I was keeping it all to myself. I was carrying it inside, saying, "Well I can't share that I'm incapable of things." But I can and I am.

You know, most of you know that when it has come time to request financial help for whatever the activities are that we're engaged in, I have always been uncomfortable. But tonight I'm not. Tonight I can say, "We need help! Where there's no way we . . . Susan and I or Chris and Judy can pull this off, bring the move about, get all the work done in the house that needs to be done so that we can move in. We need help! We need help from people to do the labor, to do the construction, to prepare the place and we need help from people to pay them to do it. We simply can't do it ourselves."

But you know what? We can and do have the dedication. And we can and do have the persistence. And we can and will continue to do the two-step and to listen and to share what Raj has to say. That hasn't changed in twenty-eight years and it's not going to change now. But in order to do that easily, in light of the fact that we're moving house, we need help. And the help that's needed is substantial. I'm sorry that Raj set up—I'm not really sorry—but I'm sorry that Raj set up a task that seems to be expensive. But he did.

We have a fence that will be built in about three weeks and within a week or two after that the bill will come for eight thousand dollars. That's a sizeable amount of money. But the fence needs to be built. We have materials that we have bought in the last three weeks that amount to about eight thousand dollars and they will come due around the ninth of the month.

At the end of October we now have two properties to pay property tax on that will come to about six thousand dollars.

We will need to hire people to move us. I have no idea what that will cost. But it's an appropriate expense, because we need to move and we need to be settled so that the work that we're persistent in and dedicated to, can continue with ease for everyone's benefit including our own.

And so, I'm experiencing no shame whatsoever in saying, we need your help.

Now, whether your help is a dollar bill or a ten dollar bill or a hundred dollar bill or a thousand dollar bill, makes no difference. Every bit helps! And you know that when I receive notification of a contribution having been made, I am so grateful and I express gratitude to the one who made it. Every check that is received in the mail that is opened, gratitude is expressed. It's never simply put in a pouch and deposited without another thought. The meaning of the gift is acknowledged and not minimized in any way.

Now, there are two other things that Raj has said are part and parcel of the move into this new house (the purchase and the preparation of it). And that is: A generator that will automatically go on when the power goes off, and an elevator which the house is fitted for already.

You know, personally I have a hard time justifying that. I'm aware that there are people who are unemployed, people who have lost their jobs and are struggling and could well say, "You know, I need food on my table. What do they need an elevator for? That is so irrelevant. Let the people climb the stairs."

But you want to know something? If you're going to do the two-step, if you're going to listen for Guidance and you receive Guidance, I found it's not well to second-guess it or to deny it or to discount it. Raj has more than once made it clear that a functioning elevator in that house is part of the wholeness of it.

And so that means that there is some learning about the meaning of listening for Guidance. Not learning about the meaning of an elevator or why one has an elevator. But learning about the process of asking for Guidance, receiving it and then not undermining it, but embracing it whole-heartedly with commitment so that the full learning about it might be experienced—the full learning about listening.

And so I'm committed to what Raj has said. I have no idea how it will be paid for, because I have no capacity personally at this moment to pay for it. And somewhere in the scheme of things it must fit in, even though there are families who need food on their table, or a table to put their food on.

So, as I said, no matter how much or little the contributions are, they are meaningful. They truly are. And they make a difference.

Tonight before we began, I asked Raj if he wanted to say anything. And he said, "No, I want you to put into your own words what you're feeling." And so that is what I have done. And right now he's indicating that he doesn't wish to add anything to it.

Susan and I, and Chris and Judy are ready to move forward and continue the work in the new location with joy and without stress and without exhaustion. That is our pleasure. And I gladly invite everyone's support for our doing that.

I truly thank you for listening. Usually at the end Raj says, "I love you all." I love you all.

I was almost inclined to say, "I'm too tired to have a meeting tonight, I'm too exhausted, I'm too stressed, etc." But you know what? Some of you may not feel that you have a relationship with me because we've never met. Many of you whom I have never met, I have the pleasure of feeling that I have a relationship with you, because you've posted at The Gathering Place, or I have seen a check or a contribution come through from you and I recognize your name and you've become like an old friend, even though I have yet to meet you. And after not having a meeting last week—at Raj's direction—I felt that I had to honor you enough to speak to you, to connect with you tonight. And I'm glad I did.

And I do love every one of you. Next week I know we all look forward to listening to Raj.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 2nd 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Now, what's the fastest way to lose your joy . . . actually, what's the only way to lose your joy?

It's simple. Enter into a special relationship.

Now, we've been talking for quite a long time about special relationships. But to express a definition of it: Simply, it is a relationship in which the participants are unconscious of who they Are, participants who have forgotten that they are the Sons and Daughters of God, who have forgotten that their very Being and everything about them is divine. And they think they are who they've been taught they are: The body they appear to be, the organism in a scheme of things on a planet, the offspring of chance—those who endure chance as a state of being called life in which nothing is sure and everything is, at the bottom line, potentially threatening.

I'm going to go into the Book.

To everyone Heaven is completion. There can be no disagreement on this, because both the ego and the Holy Spirit accept it.

[repeats] . . . both the ego and the Holy Spirit accept it.

The Holy Spirit is your divinity—your real Self held in trust while you dally with the ego. So, when it says here . . .

. . . both the ego and the Holy Spirit accept it . . .

. . . in other words, that heaven is completion, it means both who you think you are and what you truly Are, accept it. The ego who you claim to be—you so proudly claim to be—and the Holy Spirit that you deny you are but who you really Are, both agree that Heaven is completion. So when you read these words, the ego and the Holy Spirit, don't think they're two separate things somehow unrelated to each other. They are two different identifiers of you. They identify you experiencing things from two different perspectives. That's all. That's the simplicity of it. Don't lose it.

They are, however, . .

. . . the ego and the Holy Spirit . . .

. . . in COMPLETE disagreement on what completion IS, and HOW it is accomplished. The Holy Spirit knows . . .

. . . that which is nothing more than your right Mind . . .

The Holy Spirit knows that completion lies first in union, and then in the extension of union.

And that's what we've been discussing relative to the two-step, where, before acting on your own, you hesitate—you catch your breath and hold it for a moment—you stop in your tracks. And instead of assuming that you know what a thing is or what is really happening, you say, "Father, what is the truth here?" or you say, "Holy Spirit, what is the truth here?"

That amounts to you, the ego you think you are, stopping dead in its tracks and that which is real of you within the context of the ego, reaching outside of its confines—outside of its limits—to your Father and saying, "What is the truth here?" or to your divine Being and saying, "What is the truth here?" and inviting, for lack of better words, the larger picture into the smaller picture that you've been entertaining and employing, and thereby allowing it to expand.

The Holy Spirit knows that completion lies first in union, and then in the extension of union.

The first part of the two-step is the invitation of union. Wanting to know what is the truth here? What is the truth about my fellowman or this situation or that thing? And then listening and letting yourself be infilled. And then, upon the infilling, upon the inspiration, finding yourself automatically embracing that thing or that one or that circumstance with the new perspective—extending the union. You see?

On the other hand . . .

To the ego, completion lies in triumph, and in the extension of the "victory" even to the final triumph over God.

Rather dramatic words there . . .

To the ego, completion lies in triumph, . .

. . . okay. We can get quite grandiose and complicated. But once again, all of this is really very simple.

. . . completion lies in triumph, . .

. . . to the ego. What is the triumph? Is it triumph over your fellowman? Is it triumph over the situation? Is it triumph over adverse circumstances?

No. The triumph here is the false sense of independence that arises after one says, "Father, I want to see things my own way. Father, I want to define things my own way. Father, I want a divorce from You, from Your Perspective."

That act is all the triumph that can possibly be mustered up by any intent whatsoever, embraced by anything whatsoever in all of God's Creation. And it can't actually be accomplished. But one of the Sons of God said, "I'd rather do it my way. I would like to experiment with being the authorizer with expressing the authority that makes things happen. After all, I am the Son of God, I have the capacity." And we've talked about this before—this is nothing new.

So . . .

To the ego, completion lies in triumph, . .

. . . in other words, in arriving at a point where that Son of God or Daughter of God who wants a divorce is able to convince himself or herself that such a divorce has occurred and that this Son or Daughter of God is now on his or her own. That's the triumph. And as we've said, immediately fear and guilt come into play, which is really the sanity of one's Being—one's divine Being—saying, "You are attempting to do the impossible . . . you are attempting to do the impossible . . . you are attempting to do the impossible . . . come back Home right now . . . come back Home right now . . . don't waste your time attempting to do the impossible . . . don't waste your time attempting to do the impossible!" And this monotonous message irritates and causes unease. And it's called guilt and it's called fear.

But what happens? That guilt and fear become the engine that drives this Son or Daughter of God, who's attempting to be on his or her own, to try even harder to establish the independence so that even the fear and the guilt disappear and peace is experienced and actual autonomy is achieved.

To the ego, completion lies in triumph, and in the extension of the "victory" even to the final triumph over God.

In other words, even to the point where the divorce is complete and peace has been established and that independent Son or Daughter of God is perfect—perfectly independent, happily independent—the fear and guilt misconstrued, misused, served to drive the insanity even deeper so that one tries even harder to get away from Home instead of accepting the message of guilt and fear that says, “Stop doing what you can't do, you're not going to be able to be comfortable while you're trying to do what you can't do. Come on Home, come back into your peace that's already yours. Be who you really Are so you can be real with each other.”

So again . . .

To the ego, completion lies in triumph, and in the extension of the "victory" even to the final triumph over God. In this it sees the ultimate freedom of the self, for nothing would remain to interfere with IT.

Stop and think about it. Dare to look at yourself. Dare to look at how much of your time is spent trying to achieve the freedom of the Self—your total freedom. Then, consider when you hear me say to do the two-step and be willing to abandon your autonomy and independence and rejoin with your Father so that you might remember who you Are, so that you might come back into your right Mind and your divinity won't be held in trust any longer and identified as the Holy Spirit. Notice whether or not you willingly and enthusiastically embrace that. You don't. Because it seems to be hollow, it seems to be empty of the vitality of existence that it's your Birthright to be experiencing . . . ultimate freedom of the self.

In this it sees the ultimate freedom of the self, for nothing would remain to interfere with IT. This IS its idea of Heaven.

This is the ego's idea of Heaven. To be absolutely, successfully independent, perfectly at peace, free of guilt and fear. That is its idea of Heaven.

As we've said before, when the Son or Daughter of God said, “I'd rather see it my way, I want a divorce,” he became fatherless and motherless. He became an orphan, in so many words, and experienced himself as such.

So, the Kingdom of Heaven in which, as I said before, my Father has many mansions . . . the mansions in the Kingdom of Heaven begin to look like dormitories in an orphanage. And I'm using that example on purpose because I want everyone to understand that the Kingdom of Heaven is not somewhere else other than where you are right now. The orphanage is in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven.

Years ago, I used to share that all of you are right smack dab in the middle of the Kingdom, you're on a grassy knoll in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven with your eyes all squinched up saying, "I cannot see the perfection!"

Okay. My point is, that those who have come to believe that they have total independent existence separate and apart from anything divine, and that they are just the manifestation of physical processes, they are experiencing this and believing this in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And they are experiencing it as the Son or Daughter of God who's unconscious of who he or she is.

So, those in the orphanage might say they're going to create a heavenly experience—one of harmony and peace and guiltlessness—through the assertion of their independence more and more effectively. And yet, it's just going to be another interpretation of the orphanage. It's not going to be a direct experience of Heaven.

So the ego creates its idea of Heaven. It's already experiencing misery because having separated itself from God, it's experiencing guilt and fear constantly and constantly driven to overcome the guilt and fear as its life-work.

So . . .

. . . the final triumph over God . . .

. . . is what the ego sees as . . .

. . . the ultimate freedom of the self, for nothing would remain to interfere with IT. This IS its idea of Heaven.

. . . right there in the orphanage.

From this it follows that union, . . .

. . . you know, actual reconciliation with one's Father in which one's conscious awareness of his Birthright returns to him.

. . . it follows that union, which is a condition in which the ego CANNOT interfere, MUST be hell.

You see? It gets turned around 180 degrees out of sync. And that's why there isn't a mad rush to do the two-step, to abandon one's independence and to yield into the Father's Will, with a desire to experience It, and an innocence that lets it in. And that's because the conditioning of your current frame of reference sees Heaven in its actuality to not be that desirable and ultimately hell.

You've all heard: "Who wants to sit on a cloud strumming on a harp for eternity?" Well, no one does . . . but you see the characterization that's applied to the idea of Heaven?

Nevertheless, it is essential to come to the realization that a special relationship is not only impractical, it is debilitating, it is destructive to your capacity to come back into your right Mind to experience what Love truly means. So that not only do you wish to see the evidence of Love, you wish to be the evidence of Love and you do nothing to block that manifestation in you.

The special relationship is a strange and unnatural ego device . .

. . . it was created right there in the orphanage, nowhere else, it's . . .

. . . a strange and unnatural ego device for joining hell and Heaven, . .

. . . it's taking Heaven, which everything actually is, and combining it with the hellish experience that is caused by the divorce gotten from one's Father and the guilt and fear that always accompany a false state of independence, and sort of melding them together and calling it life—life that's a little bit stressful, life that is never at peace, life that will ultimately result in death and on and on and on. You see?

The special relationship is a strange and unnatural ego device for joining hell and Heaven, and making them indistinguishable.

You see, that's the problem! That's the reason there is no strong urge to come back Home, no strong urge to explore the meaning of Heaven in its actuality.

Heaven and hell have been made indistinguishable. As a result, there isn't any spontaneous way to make distinctions between Heaven and the misperception of It. That's why I'm talking to you. That's why there is A Course In Miracles.

The special relationship is a strange and unnatural ego device for joining hell and Heaven, and making them indistinguishable.

And the attempt to find the imagined "best" of both worlds has merely led to fantasies of both, and to the inability to perceive either one as it is.

You see? Heaven is the conscious experience of everything that is experienced when you are not claiming a mind independent from the Father's. It's that simple.

Hell is what is experienced when you do make that claim and believe it . . . doesn't change the fact that it's all Heaven . . . but it's absolutely essential to be able to begin to make the distinction.

How do you do that? You can't do it all by yourself. The only way you can do it, is to do the two-step, is to stop your confident authoritative thought processes and say to yourself, "On the chance that maybe there's more to things than what I'm seeing and what I'm believing I'm going to reach outside of my rational thought processes and I'm going to ask Something beyond them in case there is Something beyond them, 'What is the truth here?' I guess you could say I'm going to say a prayer, because I'm going to reach outside of my current sense of my capacity and capabilities. And then I'm going to genuinely listen. I am really going to let there be the time and the conditions for an answer to register with me."

You can dare to do this because I am suggesting to you to do it. I am providing a way to make a distinction, because I know of the distinction and I experience the distinction. And as your elder Brother, I'm here to share it with you so that you might practice that which uncovers the distinction, so that you may make a choice and no longer experience Heaven as hell or as a state of existence in which Heaven and hell are so blended in a somewhat tolerable way that you're willing to live your life without reaching beyond it, or challenging it, or calling its bluff.

The special relationship is the triumph of this confusion.

You see? The special relationship is actually all of the relationships going on in the orphanage, which is another way of saying, it's all of the relationships going on in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven, where a group of the Sons and Daughters of God are believing a very highly stylized and partial definition of the Kingdom of Heaven and believing that their stylized definition is the totality of It . . . when it's not.

The special relationship is the triumph of this confusion. It is a kind of union from which union is EXCLUDED, and the basis for the ATTEMPT at union rests on exclusion.

Now this could be a little confusing here.

It is a kind of union . . .

. . . the special relationship is . . .

. . . from which union is EXCLUDED, . .

You see? If I'm not bringing to you myself, if I'm bringing to you a characterization of me that I have built out of a misunderstanding of my Being, and you are coming to me with a definition and meanings of yourself that you have developed as a result of not being conscious of who you really Are, neither of us is bringing to each other anything actual or Real. What's Real about us we've covered up from ourselves and therefore cannot communicate to each other. And so there can't actually be a joining of masks, if I may put it that way, there can't really be a joining of pretenses. You see what I'm saying?

So . . .

It is a kind of union from which union is EXCLUDED, . .

We try to come together bringing our falsehoods and presenting them, and union is excluded from that attempt. And it says, . .

. . . the basis for the ATTEMPT at union rests on exclusion.

What this means is, that it rests on the belief in a state of being an orphan. Which means it rests upon a determination each of you have made to be divorced from your Father, to have put yourself in a position of exclusivity—being exclusive—and having excluded the very Source and presence of your Being as what It is.

So on the basis of your lifestyle of exclusion from your Source, you attempt to create a relationship in which union can't occur, because there's nothing real being brought to it. Be with that.

What better example could there be of the ego's maxim, "Seek but do not find?"

Most curious of all is the concept of the self which the ego fosters in the special relationship. This "self" seeks the relationship to make itself complete.

You see? Not having any sense of its divinity, of its Birthright, it is a state of lack, it is a state of emptiness. Okay. And so it seeks relationships to make itself complete . . . "I'm looking for my other half. I'm looking for my soul mate. I'm looking for that one who completes me." It's a common thought, not really strange to anyone. It's all pervasive. But the hunger will disappear the moment one stops maintaining and reasserting his or her orphanhood and says, "Father, what's the truth about me? Father, tell me about Us, tell me about who we are together?" You see?

But no, . . .

Most curious of all is the concept of the self which the ego fosters in the special relationship. This "self" seeks the relationship to make itself complete. Yet when it FINDS the special relationship in which it thinks it can accomplish this, it gives itself AWAY, and tries to "trade" itself for the self of another.

What does this mean? It means that when one finds another who sees him or her in a better light . . . let's put it this way: If I meet someone who has a better sense of me than I have of myself, I will glom on to that, I will try to capitalize on that because it makes me better than I think I am. And so I will borrow or take that one's way of seeing me as me, and I will embody it. You see? And I will give up the one I thought I was, the one I developed so carefully because there's great potential in this for me—there's a great deal I can get. And I'm thinking here in terms of life partners and so on, or even employers.

But you see, the sense of self that you bring that's not as good as the sense of self that this other one is entertaining of you, does not reflect the divine one that you Are. And unless this other one with a better concept of you is looking at you through God's eyes, his or her concept is not any better than yours because it is still based upon the orphanhood mentality.

This is not union, for there is no increase and no extension.

It's just a way that egos capitalize on each others' perceptions for gain. And each takes from the other, let's say, the appreciation and the honoring and everything that builds you up and capitalizes on it and builds a relationship on it and there's no honesty in it because so far no one has said, "Uh-oh," stop in my tracks, "What is the truth here? Father, what's the truth about me? Father, what's the truth about my fellowman? What is the divine actuality of this one? What is the divine actuality of me?" Until that question is asked genuinely, and until the answer is un-resistently let in, no one is bringing anything Real to the relationship.

This is not union, [again] for there is no increase and no extension. Each partner tries to sacrifice the self he does not want for one he thinks he would prefer.

It's like being a chameleon, and you put on a different face with a different person, depending upon what you can capitalize on to get yourself ahead in that involvement, in that relationship. You see?

Each partner tries to sacrifice the self he does not want for one he thinks he would prefer. And he feels guilty for the "sin" of taking, and of giving nothing of value in return. For how much value CAN he place upon a self that he would give away to get a better one?

Now, let's bring this home. You've sat down before and talked with someone else, perhaps someone you don't really know very well yet, and in the course of the conversation you presented yourself . . . you see, you did a presentation of you. And you bounced off of this other one and you utilized the things that could be utilized to your benefit and you utilized the things that you knew he or she would experience as being of benefit to him or her.

And you did this dance. It's almost like a dance of preprogrammed moves, not one of which was genuine. And if you weren't careful and things got a little enthusiastic, you might find yourself going over the edge, so to speak, and actually making a fool out of yourself, when you thought you were being really cool. And what happened was that you went over the edge and exposed the fact that everything, even what happened before you went over the edge, was not honest—was a presentation, not really you.

Now, unless you're joined with the Father or the Holy Spirit, every single interaction you have with everyone else is that kind of in-genuine, un-Awakened relationship that constitutes a special relationship. Don't let that discourage you. That's not bad news. It's the practical thing to know so that you become aware that there's another choice you can make. And the benefit of it is to promote your making the choice.

Now, there's quite a bit more for us to go through here. And I'm not going to continue on tonight. We'll continue next week.

I am hoping that it's becoming clear that there is a way for you to be Real, and there is a You that is Real, and it's your Birthright to be experiencing it. And the best way for you to experience it is to wish, or to desire in your moment of hesitation, instead of plowing ahead with your confidences, to ask, to desire to know how to be in this situation or in this relationship from a level of Knowing, an internal, solid, deep experience of Knowing the divine truth about your Brother or about the situation, and about yourself.

But I will tell you something: If you desire to know the truth about your Brother with utter sincerity, the answer about Him will reveal the truth about You as well, in a way that you will not be able to deny, in a way that you will be able to incorporate and embody.

You're not here to participate in special relationships. You're not here, in other words, to relate to your Brothers and Sisters without you or your Brothers and Sisters knowing who you really Are. And the hell that that constitutes is not your Birthright to be experiencing, because it's all going on in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven. And it's all going on between Sons and Daughters of God that you're going to have to get up enough gumption to push for the experience of . . . by giving your attention to it relentlessly. Let it be worthwhile to you to relentlessly desire to have the experience of the Son of God or the Daughter of God in the woman or the man standing across from you. And I tell you that if you let that happen, you'll find yourself uncovered as well in your divinity. And that's what this is all about.

A Course In Miracles is not worth anything if it doesn't bring about this shift of perception.

Now I encourage you to go ahead and read to the end of this section between now and next week. Contemplate it. Contemplate it in light of what we've talked about tonight.

I love you. I will be with you. I will be encouraging you to contemplate these things. I will encourage you to be innocent enough to be defenseless enough to let the truth in—not ideas of truth, not strings of words that you can blab, but an actual experience that changes you and contributes to your Brother's healing.

I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 9th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Let's take a few moments to be quiet together before we begin.

[quiet time]

Tonight we will not continue in the Book. We will do that next week.

Tonight I need to talk about something that Paul needs to hear and be reminded of. And because it's something that will benefit everyone, I am going to do it in this setting.

What's the best way of breaking...undoing...nullifying the special relationship?

It's very simple, really. It's something Paul has done ever since the first night he sat down to try to get in touch with his Guide—if indeed he had one. And before every Gathering he reminds himself of it, of his intent, of the intent of the time that will follow (and I've shared it before).

He says, "I allow only . . ." and that word "only" is the key word: "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness, and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of being the Father's Will." In other words, "Thy Will, not mine be done. Let the reign of divine truth, life and love be established in me and rule out of me all self-will. And may Thy Word enrich the affections of all mankind and govern them."

And to Paul that last sentence means, ". . . and govern them as well." Because after all, the point is that in the process of saying, "Thy Will not mine be done," one put's oneself in a position of having his affections enriched. It's a wonderful thing. It's a wonderful thing to know will happen: You will be changed. Your affections, your loving relationships will be enriched. The way you behave toward your fellowman will be enriched and a blessing.

Now as it happens, this past week has been especially rugged for Paul, because—in fact, it's been more than just the last week—in the process of preparing the new residence for the activities of the Foundation, there have been many meetings with tradesmen, bids made, ideas expressed and more involvement, I'm going to say, than usual in ego dynamics. And Paul has found himself manipulated, let's say, encouraged to see another's perspective. When what was needed was for the other one to ask, "What do you need from us?" Because of course, the needs are unusual when it comes to the work that is being done.

In the process, Paul has found individuals withdrawing their willingness to participate if Paul was not willing to yield to what they thought.

Now, what did this do? It invited Paul into special relationships, where Paul began to feel it necessary to not be totally honest in order to finesse fulfillment of the needs from these others . . . from them. He began to cater and become very uncomfortable within himself. And it wasn't until just an hour or so before the meeting tonight that he was reminded of this statement: "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness . . ." You see? That would've been the answer, the simple answer at any point during the last few weeks when others were trying to be manipulative or controlling or withdraw their support if they didn't get cooperation for their perspective.

Now I, of course, have been talking at some length for many, many weeks now to everyone about the need to do the two-step, the need to hesitate before acting and ask: "Father, what is the truth here? Father, what needs to be known? That is very much the equivalent of saying, "Father, I allow only. . . only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness . . ."

Now what does that say? That is saying, I choose to be in alignment only with the Christ . . . only with the Christed Perspective—not the perspective of the tradesmen, not the perspective of those who would manipulate and control, but within: "Father, I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of being the Father's Will." You see? Not Paul's will, not a tradesman's will, not anyone else's will. The Father's Will.

Now, you know, when you're in a position of being able to do things, one can do things that address needs and one can also be tempted into doing things that fulfill wants.

“Wow! I have a chance to have it my way.”

And that’s another distraction from “I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of being the Father’s Will.

Now, think about it . . . and this is what Paul needs to think about, and this is the direction I’m pointing his nose in. Why wouldn’t you choose to do only that which expressed the Christ Consciousness and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of being the Father’s Will?

Obviously, if you’re doing anything else, you’re doing something other than the Father’s Will and you’re out of alignment—you’re out of relationship with your Father. And the whole orphan experience begins. The special relationship takes over. And no matter how skillfully the special relationship is practiced, the experience is hell. It simply isn’t the inevitable harmonious experience of the Father’s Will finding expression right where you are.

And then what happens? Well, with Paul, he gets frustrated and then gets upset and then he feels fully justified in being angry and expressing the anger. He becomes, believe it or not, mean-spirited.

It’s not his nature. It’s not anyone’s nature. But it is what one begins to embody when one is disconnected from his Source and feels the awkwardness and discomfort of experiencing something other than his Birthright, which, although he may have forgotten, he knows is there, intact and it awaits him. And not having it burns him up. [chuckles] Right?

That frame of mind compels one to consciously engage in not wanting to express only the Christ Consciousness and not wanting to express only that which is in harmony with the purpose of Being or the Father’s Will.

So you see, although our conversation last week about special relationships seemed complex and complicated, it’s really quite simple. And the simplicity of it is illuminated in my request of Paul and my request of each of you, that no matter what circumstance you’re in, no matter what is happening, you insist before responding on saying, “I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness and only that which is in harmony with the purpose of being the Father’s Will.”

If anything other than that is an experience of hell in one form or another, then it behooves you to do this one simple step—this one simple thing—turn your will over to the Father’s. Let your will be the Father’s Will finding expression, because, at the bottom line, that is what your will is. It’s not here for you to experience and express in an independent, autonomous, frivolous, free way. It's here for you to voluntarily align it with the Father's Will—which, at the bottom line, is what it already is—so that the dissonance of freewill vanishes from your experience.

And you know what? You can't afford to, any more than Paul can afford to, wait until "pie-in-the-sky," "after-you-die" to do it. You've got to do it today, here, now, in the political climate, in the financial climate, in the social climate, in the religious climate . . . whatever, in the business climate when you're working with tradesmen, [snaps fingers] stop, hesitate, "I allow only for that which expresses the Christ Consciousness because I want to experience the Heaven of being rather than the hell of being." You see?

Now, those words may not have as much meaning for you at the moment as they do and have had for Paul, because those words always have meant that he was setting aside whatever his current best judgments were for something he would prefer to have instead, something greater than what he was experiencing, something that would contribute to his Awakening rather than continuing to contribute to a hellish dream, an uncomfortable dream, an unfulfilling dream.

And so when he said, "I allow only for this or that," he knew he was disallowing anything unlike it, he was disallowing anything he already knew, because it hadn't Awakened him yet. And he gave preference and favor to whatever it was that he might hear.

And that's the attitude that you need to have when you're working with your fellowman who's also, let us say, coming from ego places, and where you want to be the presence and the evidence of Love. You want to be that place where fulfillment occurs rather than an ongoing tension that somehow the two of you manage to keep at a low enough level that you're not suffering too much.

I remind you, and I'm reminding Paul, that the call is to remember to do this all the time. Not just when you want to have a quiet private time with your Father or with the Holy Spirit or with me, but all day long in the middle of all activities. After all, why not have "the more of what Reality is," why not have the better answers in the middle of any transaction you're engaged in or any negotiation you're engaged in, any relationship you're engaged in. Why not? "Oh, it's too demanding. Oh, I shouldn't have to give that much attention to it. I need time for relief. I need time for rest. I need time off from that kind of devotion." No you don't! You need time off from the hell that comes of special relationships. You need time off from negotiations that turn sour. You see? You need time off from suffering. And this is the way.

And Paul is hearing what I'm saying—of course. And it is registering with him. There is still some tendency to justify, not outrage, but certainly distress in the sense of a desire to get even or bring things to equilibrium . . . you know, . . . an "eye for an eye" and a tooth for a tooth. But that's not healing. That's not allowing only for that which is expressing the Christ Consciousness.

And so, he's going to have to let go of that and everyone else is going to have to let go of it. It's not a viable means of promoting transformation that evidences healing, that evidences renewal of one's divine Birthright. Heck, it doesn't allow for the re-emergence of joy and peace.
So just how important is it?

One might say, "Oh, I shouldn't have to work that hard, that consistently to be the Son of God." Well, maybe you don't have to work that hard, that consistently, but you might have to let yourself be the Son of God that you Are uninterruptedly, just because that's where the full experience of being the Son or Daughter of God lies. You might just do it because that's where your good is. But like Paul, everyone has to be willing to soberly look at a situation and determine whether there's any justification for withholding the activity that corrects a problem, or heals the situation, or promotes the holy instant—in which one's affections are enriched and which promote the enrichment of the affections of all mankind.

That's the simplicity, profound though it is, of what I needed to share tonight with Paul and with everyone else. Be willing to be with it. Be willing to be changed by it. Be willing to let that word "only" apply to every moment of your daily experience.

I will leave it at that for tonight.

I love you all. And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

October 16th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

You know, you might say that we're running this discussion about the holy instant and the two-step and special relationships into the ground, unnecessarily overdoing it all. But I promise you we're not. It's extremely important to understand exactly what the special relationship is about because it's not all that constructive.

So, what's the purpose of a special relationship?

And for clarification, one might think that a special relationship is one that stands out from all others. And in all likelihood, the most special, special relationship is the one, one has with a wife or a husband or a partner—one in which trust and intimacy and love are allowed broader and deeper expression.

And so, in many cases, those who are in primary relationships glom onto the idea of a special relationship: "Oh, let's make the most of our special relationship—let's take our special relationship and turn it into a holy relationship," thinking that it might be easier because the idea is that the special relationship is one that is fundamentally trusting and loving. You see?

But no. A special relationship is a relationship one has with anyone or anything when he is unconscious of who he truly Is, or who she truly Is. That's what constitutes a special relationship.

And so it's a relationship with someone you're having an argument with. It's a relationship you're having with someone you don't like or someone who doesn't like you. It's a relationship you're having with someone in a match of some sort, a tennis match or a football game or some contest of some sort. All without having any conscious awareness of who you truly . . . and I'm going to say, divinely Are . . . for clarification—for context, for intent. You see?

So what is the purpose of a special relationship?

Well, in the misunderstanding of the value of a special relationship, one might think that it is to improve the relationship—that it's to become more and more skillful at having an excellent relationship. But no. And this is why it is so important to understand the truth about special relationships. A special relationship has always one purpose: And that purpose is to elevate the one practicing it to a position of greater excellence—of greater autonomous excellence.

The purpose of all special relationships, even though they are relationships and not something one engages in all by oneself in a cave out in the middle of nowhere, the purpose is to arrive at a point of such perfect independence, such perfect independence with great excellence, that one can demonstrate once and for all that he or she is a valuable valid presence—an eternal presence in it's own right. It isn't relevant to someone else—anyone else at all. It's entirely selfish. It's entirely self-serving.

And so the skill that one acquires and develops and brings into play in relationships with others, where others are working diligently also to improve the relationships while still not knowing who they divinely Are, are always for independent selfish reasons with absolute demonstrable autonomy being the ultimate goal.

So, selfishness from one side is brought to selfishness from the other side and selfishness interacts and selfishness hurts . . . but can manage to be expressed in ways, well, what is the saying, "I'll stroke your back if you stroke mine?" . . . mutual agreements of how to behave, still all for selfish reasons, but in ways that allow a little bit of pleasure to be gotten, which allows one to come to the conclusion that a pleasurable thing is happening—and indeed, this is a good relationship. And indeed, the better each partner gets at stroking the other's back, the happier everyone is. And it seems to be proof that special relationships really are special and really are valid and really are not selfish.

Now, I'm going to be very clear here: When each of you, when any of us got a divorce from the Father and said, "Father, I would rather see it my way," one put himself in a position of an experience of invalidity—pretending to be something he or she could not be. And out of that emptiness everything else developed.

And everybody, out of their emptiness, comes to each other and strokes each others' back for a little bit of pleasure, for the sole purpose of overcoming the emptiness without doing the only thing that will fill the emptiness once again, which is remembering who you Are and choosing to be that consciously and abandoning the charade—abandoning the act, abandoning the styles of relating—that all, in one way or another, seem to identify forward movement on the path of becoming absolutely, genuinely autonomous.

It's unwholesome because it's unholy. It's unwhole. Nothing constructive can emerge from emptiness, from lack of wholeness.

So, always, the purpose of a special relationship is to improve one's self. Improve one's self without interruption, even if it takes several lifetimes to arrive at this independence—this freedom to be who one is without knowing who one is.

And so, going into the Book:

The "better" self the ego seeks is always one that is MORE special.

What does that mean? MORE special means more different from what the Father is Being right there where he is or where she is. More different, less like God, less like all that is valuable, all that is Meaningful. And whoever seems to possess a special self is loved for what can be taken from him.

That might seem hard to understand. But you know what? Egos are like chameleons. And so when they come next to or near another ego, they will sense into that other ego, they will sense into whether there's betterness there, whether there's something more desirable there, including maybe that the other ego is somewhat attracted—whether sexually, whether personally, whether financially, whatever. And if there is a rapport, the one approaching will sense into it and begin to modify his or her behavior—modify who he or she is, if it looks like there might be gain from the other person's perception of him.

"If the other one likes me, then I will stop being me. I will stop being the me I was trying to be that I've been working on for so long. I will modify it here and there to wheedle out of this person a little bit more appreciation." You see? "And so I will steal this identity—that this other one sees in me—from that one, and I will play on it and I will monopolize it and I will make it work for me. And if I'm smart, I'll make it work for the other one too, so that that other one will continue to like me even more."

And so, one being a chameleon easily gives up the colors that were being displayed before.

And so you take from another their goodwill—their good intent, their good perception—whether it's true or not. And you take it from them and incorporate and use it with still, for what purpose? To become better, to somehow arrive at this place of excellence that will constitute true real autonomy and you'll have that one there to witness for you and to be there to prove and demonstrate the truth of your independence. You see?

Now, . . .

Where both partners see this special self in each other, the ego sees "a union made in Heaven."

[Repeats] . . . "a union made in Heaven."

Yes! Boy, true love—instantaneous, felt by both. Or even if it grew, if it's still perfect enough, it's worth more than anything.

For neither one will recognize that he has asked for hell, . .

. . . how has he asked for hell? He—both partners whoever they are—will have asked for hell by intending to engage in a relationship still without knowing who they truly Are. And that constitutes bringing emptiness to emptiness, bringing selfishness to selfishness, bringing nothing to nothing. You see?

For neither one will recognize that he has asked for hell, and so he will not interfere with the ego's illusion of Heaven, which it offered him to INTERFERE with Heaven.

You see, you think that special relationships are there for really good reasons—different kind of reasons: emotional reasons, mental reasons, physical reasons. But no, even though that seems to be true and it gives everyone something to tackle and work on, it has only one purpose and that is to interfere with Heaven. The purpose is to interfere with your remembering who you Are—your remembering that you didn't have to get that divorce from your Father, you didn't have to get that relationship annulled with your Father. You see? It interferes with that. It's simple.

Everyone thinks that there are many good reasons for special relationships, even if they're difficult ones, even if they're unpleasant because they "make you grow" and they strengthen you, and . . . blah . . . blah . . . bullshit!

And so it's easy to get caught up in working on all these many points when there's only one point totally unrelated to improving one's self. And that point is: That the purpose of the special relationship is to keep you unconscious of who you truly Are, which would resolve the problem, which would cause you to Wake up.

Yet if all illusions are of fear, and they CAN be of nothing else, the illusion of Heaven . . .

. . . "Oh, it's a relationship made in Heaven" . . .

. . . the illusion of Heaven is nothing more than an "attractive" form of fear, in which the guilt is buried deep, and rises in the form of "love."

"Hmm . . . what guilt?"

Well, the guilt that automatically came into play when you decided to do things on your own, the guilt and fear—the team—that came into play when you said, "Father, I'm going to look at it on my own. I'm not going to look at it with You anymore. I am not going to co-create with You by being that conscious awareness which is devoted to the clear experience of what You Are creating so that I might join you in acknowledgement of it as Your Creation. And as acknowledgment of my function which is to recognize Your handiwork, Father."

When you abandoned that, guilt and fear came into play. You don't like the guilt so you push it out of sight. But it rises in the form of love in a special relationship.

The appeal of hell . . .

I know these are strong words . . . and you probably think you can Wake up without taking a look at them in this strong form, but I promise you if you will take a look at them, it will become evermore clear to you how much you want to abandon it—it will make it evermore easy to abandon them.

The appeal of hell lies only in the terrible attraction of guilt, which the ego holds out to those who place their faith in littleness.

. . . "But Father, I'd rather abandon the infinite view for my view, for my way of looking at things." You see?

What's the terrible attraction of guilt?

You would say, "Guilt doesn't attract me!" But it does. It attracts everybody, because if one has forgotten who they Are, the experience of guilt is perceived to be appropriate, normal, essential motivation for self-improvement. You see? The guilt is there, the experience of guilt is your Sanity saying, "If you want to see things by yourself, you're attempting to do something you are incapable of doing. Stop doing it! You cannot be comfortable attempting to do something you cannot do. And your insistence at attempting to do the impossible will be felt as discomfort—as guilt.

But the ego takes that—this independent vantage point, so called—takes that and says, "I know I am something meaningful. I know I am something valuable. I know I do not exist for no reason, and therefore, I am going to use this discomfort for the purpose of uncovering my worth through my own independent acts, and uncovering my worth through the subtle manipulation of my world, and of my Brothers and Sisters, for my benefit. And of course, the best way I can earn the respect and support of others is to do enough to benefit them, that it's worth it to them (without their knowing who they Are) to help me, who doesn't know who I am." You see?

So there's an attraction of guilt because it has become the motivation for self-improvement. It is therefore, that, which if used properly, will allow you to arrive at a point of self-respect—to arrive at a point of excellence that will deserve the respect of others. And so you are hooked on guilt. It is attractive to you.

You see . . .

The appeal of hell . . .

. . . which means the appeal of the experience of not knowing who you Are because you've said, "Father, I'd rather do it my way . . ." The appeal of that experience . . .

. . . lies only in the terrible attraction of guilt which the ego holds out to those who place their faith in littleness.

You see?

The conviction of littleness lies in EVERY special relationship, for only the deprived could VALUE specialness.

What is specialness?

It's whatever you seem to create that makes you, what . . . ? Different from everyone else? Not really . . . different from the Father, so that you in your own right, without borrowing worth and value and meaning from something outside of yourself, can claim self-authorized, autonomous existence—being.

The demand for specialness, and the perception of the giving of specialness as an act of love, would make love HATEFUL.

You see? Why hateful? Because it's destructive. Why is it destructive? Because it keeps who you divinely Are utterly obscured from you.

The demand for specialness, and the perception of the giving of specialness as an act of love, would make love HATEFUL. And the real purpose of the special relationship, in strict accordance with the ego's goals, . .

You see? What are the ego's goals? To become better and better and better and better, to the point where you can become a puppet without strings and sing and dance at your own will, without being in any kind of connected relationship. Those are the ego's goals.

And if you're not doing the two-step, if you're not remembering to say, "Father, what is the truth here?" before you respond to the situation, you are keeping yourself in limbo—you are keeping yourself in ignorance.

. . . the real purpose of the special relationship, in strict accordance with the ego's goals, is to destroy reality and substitute illusion.

"Whew! . . . man, I didn't know I was doing that," you say. "I had no idea I could have been doing that. That sounds pretty awful. It sounds like there must be quite a penalty for that—an axe that's going to fall." No, the axe has already fallen. And the only axe that can fall is, that when you are choosing to ignore what you Are, you will experience being unconscious of what you Are. And the moment you stop choosing to be unconscious of what you Are, the axe that fell will no longer present itself as an actuality. And there won't be any suffering or penalty, because you'll see the truth—you'll know the truth—and you won't try to do the impossible or be what you cannot be.

For the ego is ITSELF an illusion, and only illusions CAN be the witnesses to its "reality."

[Repeats] For the ego is ITSELF an illusion, and only illusions CAN be the witnesses to its "reality."

I said last week, that the ego and the Holy Spirit are two different identifiers of one thing: You. The ego is you unconscious of who you Are. And the Holy Spirit is you conscious of who and what you Are—recognizing your inseparable relationship with God, and your willingness, your love for joining with your Father, with That which has given you life . . . is giving you life and will forever be the life of You, flawlessly.

Everyone in the orphanage, all of you who are unconscious of who you Are and who have developed the orphanage protocols, all of you are Sons and Daughters of God who are not orphans, who are in the middle of the Kingdom of Heaven believing that they're in an orphanage, who are joined with each other and with Their Father so infinitely and completely that the fantasy they are engaged in is having no real effect at all, because what Is can't be changed, what is true can't be undone. And so it hasn't been undone, but you're believing that it has and you are believing that your beliefs are ultimate truths.

Now, the worst is yet to come.

If you perceived the special relationship as a triumph over God, .

Um-m . . . that is worse isn't it?

. . . would you WANT it?

[Chuckles] See, it isn't just about triumphing over your Brother, or besting your Brother while convincing him that he's gotten some good out of it. It isn't just about countries getting along better with other countries, or groups with other groups. No! It's about triumphing over God! You see?

If you perceived the special relationship as a triumph over God, would you WANT it?

No, you hadn't thought about it that way. And it's sort of hard to believe that it is. And it's sort of hard to imagine how one could shift from the orphan mindset—the current mindset. And it's sort of hard to believe that it might actually be valuable. That's hard to believe.

If you perceived the special relationship as a triumph over God, would you WANT it? Let us not think of its fearful nature, nor of the guilt it must entail, nor of the sadness and the loneliness.

You see? Let's not think of all these little bits and pieces: Its fearful nature, the guilt it must entail, the sadness and the loneliness . . . you know. Oh-h-h, the ego just loves to get a hold of little details like that. Why? So that it can get rid of them, so it can improve the situation, so that you're not experiencing it anymore, and in the process of doing that, demonstrating your betterness. You see?

Let us not do what gets you entrapped in fixing up something that doesn't even exist and something that you can gain your freedom from: By abandoning the special relationship by engaging in the two-step—by engaging in the holy instant.

Again, this is important. Let us not think of all the little details:

Let us not think of its fearful nature, nor of the guilt it must entail, nor of the sadness and the loneliness. For these are only attributes of the whole religion of the separation, . .

You see? Those are little attributes of something not only larger but less complicated instead of a bunch of little things to take care of or improve.

There's one thing to be done. And that is, the holy instant. Stopping dead in your tracks (live in your tracks) and saying, "Father," . . . you see . . . breaking the isolation . . . "Father, what is the truth here? What do I need to know in order to experience Your perspective—the truth?" You see?

So, these things . . .

. . . are only attributes of the whole religion of the separation, and of the total context in which it is . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . thought to occur.

It's not even actually occurring. It's . . .

. . . the total context in which it is thought to occur. . .

. . . imagined to occur. So don't go down that road. It's just full of sticky fly-paper, here and there and all the little details—all the little details that the ego can get busy to fix up. And in getting busy to fix up, keeps keeping the truth about you obscured from you and keeping the truth about your Brother obscured from your Brother. You see?

Now, here's the ugly truth:

The central theme in its litany to sacrifice is that God must die so YOU can live.

You know, you can listen to those words and say . . . you can almost laugh . . . "What a ridiculous idea! I mean, anyone who believes there is a God knows that God, God can't die, maybe the Son of God can die, but God can't die." And so when it says:

The central theme in its litany to sacrifice is that God must die so YOU can live.

You blow it off with a little laughter. Not you [chuckling] not you. But here's the thing, it's simple: There's no penalty to it because you'll only suffer from ignorance until the ignorance is replaced with clarity of mind.

As long as you think you're just a mortal—something that came from a sperm and an egg, a little bit of matter, a little bit of protoplasm—as long as you think that and you live your life on that basis, you never have to imagine that there's a God, you never have to pay attention to a God and the more conscientiously you would engage in improving yourself in your own right, you're keeping God out of sight and out of mind . . . and dead.

You listen to me talk week after week. You watch Paul and you know that he struggles with letting me respond to everything—in other words, staying joined with me all the time. You hear me encourage you to connect with the Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than your right Mind—and listening or listening to your Guide and staying joined, joined in your Guide's perspective, which is really your true perspective, you hear me say do that, do that, do that . . . and you have reasons for not doing it, you have arguments against doing it all the time, just as Paul does.

So this isn't as comical or irrelevant as you might think, when it says:

The central theme in its litany to sacrifice is that God must die so YOU can live.

You know, God must be out of the picture so you can manage to not have to listen to God all the time. It's simple clarity. It's simple simplicity.

Now obviously, if you're going to try to kill God by becoming a dominant entity yourself, in your own right, you really are not going to be able to do it or attempt to do it with comfort. Not because there's retribution, not because God is a jealous or angry God, but because God isn't going to stop being what He Is, and you can't stop being what you Are. And so when you attempt to go against what is the truth, nothing is going to drop a penalty upon you. You're just going to experience the exhausting strain of attempting to do something you can't do. That's all.

But as I've said before, the strain, the distress, the pain, if you will, the fear and so on, will be as great as that which you're attempting to overcome that you can't overcome. The harder you push against the Rock of Gibraltar, the more your fist or your hands or your muscles are going to complain. Not because the Rock of Gibraltar decided to blast you with a penalty, but because you're using your self to attempt to do something you can't do. And you're doing it with all your might. And all the might you're bringing to it, you are experiencing as the discomfort of the impossibility of what you're trying to do. Okay?

The central theme in its litany to sacrifice is that God must die so YOU can live. And it is this theme which is acted out in the special relationship.

Every special relationship: Your relationship with your cat, your relationship with the bees, your relationship with your mate, your relationship with your car, your relationship with anything. All relationships are colored by whatever pigments you are introducing into the mindset through which you're looking at everything. Simple.

Through the death of YOUR self, you think you can attack another self, . .

. . . you're like the chameleon: Through the death of the blue and green chameleon, and the emergence of the blue, red and orange chameleon, you caused the death of the first chameleon.

Through the death of YOUR self, you think you can attack another self, and snatch it from the other to replace the self which you despise.

You see? You'll either go for the picture you have about what another thinks of you or you will go after what that other one actually does think about you and you will snatch it away and use it for your own selfish purposes.

Through the death of YOUR self, you think you can attack another self, and snatch it from the other to replace the self which you despise. And you despise it because you do not think it offers the specialness which you demand.

And of course, it doesn't. And that's why you are working, working, working to create your more and more special, specialness—your greater and greater difference from God. If you were at peace with yourself, you wouldn't be trying to improve yourself. And in fact, when you allow yourself into the holy instant where God's laws prevail, and you experience the perfect harmony of Being, you find no urge, no call for improving yourself, because you're in a position, the awesome position, of being able to observe all of Creation with the Father, which it's your Birthright to be doing. In which nothing needs improvement but in which all things are always made new.

. . . you despise it . . .

. . . the self you're currently experiencing . . .

. . . you despise it because you do not think it offers the specialness which you demand. And HATING it, you have made it little and unworthy because you are AFRAID of it.

You see? Now, mind you, you don't have two selves. You have two different ways of identifying, or let's say, of being identified. One is, as that which doesn't know who it is, or That which does.

You are the Son and Daughter of God. But if you don't know it, then this Son or Daughter of God that you Are becomes something you're unconscious of and there is the presence of fear and guilt which prompts you then, to get off your ass and fix yourself up, improve yourself, better yourself . . . you see? . . . because it's not good enough. And what is it that's not good enough? The Son of God, right now, the Christ that you Are: Christ Mary, Christ John. You see?

You know, sometimes you can go to a movie and the maker of the movie will throw a scene in which, because you were engrossed with everything else, you couldn't avoid seeing . . . like someone's head being blown off—something that it really wasn't necessary for you to have in your mind. And now it's there and it will always be there.

Well, we're talking about hard things here. And you might say, "I didn't need to know all of that. You threw it in when I was not expecting it and it was unfair." But what we're talking about here, what's being uncovered here is something that you do need to have in your mind, and it does need to be indelibly present, because then it gives you, perhaps, the courage, but certainly the impetus to try something new: To change the way you're being, to abandon the special relationship. Because you're now beginning to see just how far reaching and all encompassing, we'll say, the negative aspects are of this thing that you've been enjoying, because it's made life challenging and interesting—troublesome, yes. But you deserve more. It's your Birthright to be experiencing something different. And so we have to look at this.

And I thank you for bearing with me as it's uncovered. You might well have skipped these pages when you read the book.

And I love you all. And I thank you for hanging in here with me, as these things help uncover your capacity to be the Sons and Daughters of God now. And I look forward to being with your next week.

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

The world of illusion (we talk a lot about it) is really nothing more than a misperception—a false perception of Reality. Because of that, you will find that the so-called rules of Reality are reflected in the illusion, although a hundred and eighty degrees out of sync.

That will give you something interesting to contemplate.

I bring it up because the special relationship is the subject we've been discussing. And the special relationship is a relationship in which those participating are no longer conscious of who they truly Are, and are relating to each other on the basis of who they have defined themselves to be, as a result of their intent to be the authority of their existence. And they came to this place . . . this way of being as a result of saying, "Father, I'd rather do it my way! I'm getting a divorce!" . . . asserting themselves as independent agents.

Now, what you need to understand is, that just as in Reality, no one does anything alone. So in the illusion, so in the dream, no one ever does anything alone.

So this so-called divorce from the Father that we've been talking about isn't something that one sole individuality engaged in all by himself. That is not to say, that some—as sole individualities—didn't try it. It's just that there truly is not one bit of illusion that can be constructed out of an individual act of will opposed to the Father.

So in order for the first “divorce” to take place, two divorces had to happen simultaneously. Two individuals—two Sons or Daughters of God—had to come together and say, “What if we didn’t look at things the way we’re looking at them now? What if we didn’t embrace and embody Reality as our Father sees it? What if we chose to look at things differently and give definitions ourselves?”

Wow . . . this is something significantly different. Because I’ll tell you, that the moment the two individuals agreed to this attempt to see things independently, something happened that could never happen when one individuality—all by himself—did it, there was a mutual agreement that occurred.

Now, what that means is, that immediately there were two who were validating each other. And at that point, misunderstanding, confusion, conflict and illusion could seem to be, because two agreed to an untruth and said, “This is the truth”—two validated each other in this state of mind. You see?

This is very important.

It’s important because it constitutes the initiation of a special relationship. However, the special relationship didn’t get the attention. What got the attention was the divorce. What got the attention was the fact that in choosing to get validation from each other instead of from their Source—the Father—they abandoned the Father.

And of course, that’s when the orphan frame of mind came up. That’s when eternal heavenly existence became life in an orphanage and so on and so forth. And all relationships were special, meaning different from the union with God that constitutes the relationship that is Real, that is whole and that is therefore, unified. In other words, without conflict, without confusion—with perfect harmony, infinitely.

I’m bringing this up because I’m wondering how many of you this past week have been feeling grief or sadness or fear, or a sense of worthlessness, or a feeling of hopelessness? And when the feeling occurred you knew why—you identified some aspect of your life with it. And how many of you thought this was yours and yours alone? And how many of you, because you “owned” your suffering—owned your dilemma—found it almost impossible to get out of it, found it almost impossible to not go into it deeper and deeper . . . to the point where you were almost immobilized?

Now, there are not a lot of individuals who appreciate what I'm about to say. What I'm about to say can be misunderstood and misconstrued and misused. But the fact is that when these things happen, none of them are yours.

Well, some people say, "Well, I am doing things wrong and I should feel guilty about them. And the only way I can correct them is to own them."

But I need to point something out to you: You can't have these feelings by yourself. You cannot have any experience all by yourself. This is part and parcel of the special relationship.

Now the simple fact is, and the interesting fact is, that if you knew who the other individual was who you were joining with in this feeling of sorrow or worthlessness or hopelessness or depression, if you were able to be face-to-face with them and talk to them and have them share what has generated their feeling, you would be able to look at them and say, "Why that's silly. You don't need to feel this way. This should not be controlling you the way it is because it's not true. It's not true about you. And you're laboring under a false impression and you're caught by a false impression." You would say, "Man, if that was my problem, I wouldn't have any problem at all."

Well the fact is, that if the other person was able to be face-to-face with you, and have you tell them what was distressing you, they would look at you and say, "Why that's silly. That shouldn't be bothering you. There's nothing about that that has the capacity to truly cause you grief. And you need to know that, so that you can let go of it and not feel guilty for letting go of it." And you could each bring each other relief because you could see clearly how the others' problem was nothing more than an illusion.

Now I'm telling you this because you don't know who the other is that you're joining with silently—unconsciously, at least unconscious of who they are and what the circumstances are that are bothering them. You're not face-to-face with them, but you do need to begin to understand that these emotions, these mental states, are not mental states you can have all by yourself. And because you can't have them all by yourself, they are as a fact, not yours. And if you could stand in the presence of the fear or the anxiety or the grief or the sadness and have the "Ah-ha" in your mind that says, "Wait a minute, although I can seem to justify this feeling totally based on things in my experience, I can't be having this feeling all by myself. An invitation has been extended to me, by someone feeling the same thing, to join with them in confirmation of it. And if I had known that was happening I would have rejected it and I wouldn't be seeming to suffer from it as though it's mine and mine alone right now." You see?

The special relationship is a relationship in which you and the other one in the relationship gain validation—acknowledgement of worth, acknowledgement of presence, of existence. And because of the nature of a special relationship, an existence that is indeed, independent.

This is why special relationships are deleterious and dangerous to one's mental health, you might say. Because they validate an illusion and it's only in the presence of that on-going validation that the illusion can seem to persist and hurt. And the relationships are not always face-to-face.

Understanding that will help you to release yourself from moods and emotions that present themselves to you without a trigger, but which, after you find yourself feeling them, you can identify with circumstances, situations and mindsets in your experience. You see?

And so you say, "Oh-h yeah, yeah, I really don't have much reason to hope, nothing's going right for me . . . nothing's going right for me," even though three hours ago everything was going fine. But there are things there that weren't bothering you that suddenly now are bothering you because they're connected to this feeling of depression or worthlessness or hopelessness, or whatever.

You need to be free of being subject to mood-swings, mood-shifts and emotions that hook you like a drug—catch you and hold you, and cause you to confirm them and make them worse. It's not your Birthright. It's not a capacity God has given you to feel something all by yourself. And certainly, if you thought for a moment that the feelings you were having were imposed upon you by someone else feeling sorry for themselves and looking for confirmation or validation of their point of view, why you would feel that your space had been invaded inappropriately and you wouldn't agree.

Now, I'm telling you so that you can recognize after the fact that such a thing has happened and you can withdraw your agreement. And you can step out of that very negative aspect of special relationships and begin your release.

Now we ended up last week talking about the fact that no one likes themselves—proof being that everyone's trying to improve themselves. Not only that, they're trying to improve themselves at the expense of others, because there's no peace within one's self. You don't like yourself and that constitutes an attack on yourself, we'll put it that way.

And as we go into the Book, we hear the question:

How can you grant unlimited power to what you think you have attacked?

How can you grant unlimited power, I'm going to say, to what you think doesn't deserve unlimited power for whatever reason? You can't. And yet, here in your orphan state of mind, your whole life is devoted to gaining credibility, gaining worth, gaining power, gaining presence, gaining acknowledged presence and power and respect. Because of course, that's the purpose of the special relationship. It is supposed to be a substitute for the indivisible unity of the Father with the Son or the Son with the Father that constitutes by being (I mean that as a verb) by being a demonstration of validity so that existence itself is the experience of validation in which there is no question, no doubt.

So fearful has the truth become to you . . .

. . . What does that mean—the truth? “Oh-h . . . the truth has become fearful to me?” No, not the truth “out there” . . . the truth about you—the truth that you are the Son or Daughter of God right now and never were anything else. That truth has become fearful to you. Why? Because if you let it in, it's going to uncover the fact that you are not the self you made up. You're far more than that. And there's no further need for you to demonstrate and prove your validity. And your purpose for being is no longer needed, you see . . . in that perverted sense, because your worth is utterly clear to you, inviolably clear to you, purely clear to you. You see?

So fearful has the truth become to you that UNLESS it is weak and little, you would not dare to look upon it. You think it safer to endow the little self which you have made with power you [have] WRESTED from truth, . .

. . . taken away from, grabbed from truth. You took God's Power away from Him in His Fatherhood by getting a divorce and saying, “I'm an orphan!” You see? And you took the validity of you that you have and Are because you're the Father's Son, you took that and claimed it as your own as though you were the author of it, except you couldn't do that all by yourself. So you brought a buddy along . . . a buddy who would agree with you on that, as long as you agreed with him or her on that same point for them. You see?

So you wrested—you grabbed—the truth about you from the Father. And you claimed yourself as the author of it and you got your buddy to agree with you on it. And the illusion commenced—the delusion commenced.

You think it safer to endow the little self which you have made with power you WRESTED from truth, triumphing over it . . .

. . . triumphing over the Father—your Source . . .

... and leaving it helpless.

In other words, leaving the Father without a Son. Thus making the Father no longer a Father. You see? Making Him helpless, making Him pointless, making Him something without reason for being, as though it could happen.

Now . . .

See how EXACTLY is this ritual . . .

. . . of separation, this ritual of divorce, this ritual of making one's self valid at the expense of something else.

See how EXACTLY is this ritual enacted in the special relationship.

Now see, getting the divorce from the Father was not a ritual but it was an act, which becomes the mode of being as any orphan mindset. And so that act of divorce, that act of taking validity from something else becomes a ritual—an act done over and over again with all of the other orphans who have joined the crowd in agreement to be divorced—and confirm each others' ability to each other, and being satisfied with that as the evidence or proof of truth. You see?

An altar is erected in between two separate people on which each seeks to kill his self, . .

. . . sacrifice himself . . . sacrifice himself for his Brother. He sacrifices his awareness of who he Is as the Son of God so that he can join with his Brother and help his Brother get his divorce from the Father, and shift his allegiance from his real Source, which truly validates him, in order to join with the other Brother who he seeks validation from now. And so, each sacrifices his Reality for the sake of creating a dream—a misunderstanding, a delusion with a Brother. You see?

An altar is erected in between two separate people on which each seeks to kill his self, and on his body raise another self which takes its power from his death.

These aren't fun words, are they? Okay, so . . .

An altar is erected in between two separate people on which each seeks to kill his self, . .

. . . see? He doesn't seek to kill the other . . .

... each seeks to kill his self.

Now we have to step back for a moment . . .

When the divorce was gotten from the Father, when one Son or Daughter of God . . . or two . . . decided to see things their own way and to abandon the Father's Perspective and thereby the Father's Will, something happened: A shift occurred in which the experience of Being, infinitely speaking, including and involving all of Creation as an experience of Mind, as an infinite Mindful experience, was lost. And where, up until that moment, all of Creation and every single one of the Sons and Daughters of God and their thoughts and ideas and their experiences were intimately available to everyone simultaneously as an infinite conscious experience and no one was specifically identifying with any particular visibility and tangibility of the Movement of Creation, whether it looked like a tree or a spider or a cockroach or a butterfly or a leaf, suddenly the infinite "You" was lost. And everyone found themselves identified with that which specifically renders them visible and tangible, meaning the body.

Before this, all of Creation was the infinite body of the Sons and Daughters of God because it's the infinite Presence of the Father, whom it is the Sons' and Daughters' function to recognize and acknowledge and identify and be inseparable from. That was lost.

And suddenly everyone found themselves not only to be powerless and experiencing fear and guilt, but they were experiencing as though they were a body having experiences of fear and guilt.

So, . . .

An altar is erected in between two separate people on which each seeks to kill his self, . . .

. . . sacrifice himself . . .

. . . and on his body . . .

. . . which he now feels is him . . .

. . . raise another self which takes its power from his death.

In other words, the orphan gets its power from the death of the Son of God that he truly Is. Crazy!

Over and over and over this ritual is enacted.

In other words, over and over you sacrifice yourselves for each other. You sacrifice yourself for acknowledgment. You sacrifice yourself for confirmation of validity, because it's in this way that you feel you will become complete—an independent, autonomous, individuality in your own right.

Over and over and over this ritual is enacted. And it is NEVER completed, nor ever WILL be completed. For the ritual [repeats] the ritual of completion CANNOT complete, . .

. . . you see? Right now and forever you are the Sons and Daughters of God. You are complete. No act leading to completion can bring about a completion, because here's the secret: In order to engage in acts of completion you have to be complete already. In other words, there has to be a real Son or Daughter of God complete and whole and unaltered from what the Father is Being right there where he or she is. There has to be That in order for a misunderstanding or delusion to be present that makes it seem reasonable for that one to attempt to complete himself or herself. You see that?

Every act of completion or improvement that you engage in is a demonstration of the fact that you are, before anything you do, complete.

And therefore, if you will consider abandoning the acts of completion and become still: Do the two-step (shut up). First step, become still and second step, reach outside yourself, "Father, what is the truth here? Holy Spirit, what do I, in my ever-present completeness, already know?" And then be determined with utter peace not to abandon the desire to know that until the revealing has occurred.

That's how you get out of the special relationship and that's how you get out of the hell of the orphan mindset.

For the ritual of completion CANNOT complete, and life arises not from death, nor Heaven from hell.

Whenever any form of special relationship tempts you to seek for love in ritual, . .

. . . see? . .

. . . remember love is CONTENT, and not form of ANY kind.

Love is you being spontaneously utterly appropriate in any given moment, because you're not being distracted from what Love is and what fulfillment is constituted of. You're not distracted from that, with attempts to improve yourself or leverage your good, and so on. It's never a repetitive act—a ritual. You see?

But how many acts of love do you engage in, whether they're physical, mental, verbal, as you go through the day?

How often are you dishonestly sweet?

How often are you dishonestly kind?

And what I mean by that is, not lying per say, but using inflections of your voice that are patterns—voice patterns that you repeat often—like what's called a "telephone voice." You see?

How many people do you know who pick up the phone and talk in an entirely different way than they were talking with you a moment before they picked up the phone because they have a "telephone presence" and a way of behaving and speaking over the phone with a lilt in the voice and a sweetness . . . you see . . . or whatever it might be?

They're dishonestly sweet. You see? Because they're not in touch with the moment, they're not in touch with who they're communicating with. They're not feeling whatever the needs might be. And as the presence of Love they are failing, because they're engaged in this ritual of speech—ritual of behavior.

. . . remember love is CONTENT, and not form of ANY kind. The special relationship is a RITUAL of form, aimed at the raising of the form to take the place of God at the EXPENSE of content.

And so, here's the Son or Daughter of God who has lost the infinite view, who is no longer aware that they are Mind in which all experiences of Reality are occurring, and they think they are a small part in the middle of an infinite universe of different-ness—of that which is not them.

And all of the behavior is a stylized ritual of connecting that you can see has to be utterly meaningless because there is no content to it. It's just behavioral habits—physical habits combined with verbal habits combined with facial expressions—all brought together skillfully for a calculated effect, an effect which it is calculated, will improve one's presence so that the other can confirm the better aspect of credibility that you've managed to bring forth, thus confirming that you're one step closer to being a valid entity, as valid as you were before you got your divorce from the Father.

There IS no meaning in the form, and there will never be.

The visibility and tangibility of Mind of God, called Creation is not what's important. It's the Mind which gives rise to Creation that matters. You see?

But once one got the divorce, the form became important. The form became the governing factor.

There IS no meaning in the form, and there will never be . . .

. . . and there will never be.

The special relationship must be recognized for what it is; a senseless ritual, . .

. . . ritual, in which strength is extracted from the death of God, and invested in His . . .

. . . God's . . .

. . . killer as the sign that form has triumphed over content, and love has lost its meaning.

Now that's the simple fact. That's what's happened. And that's what needs to be reversed and that the reversal is what it's your Birthright to be experiencing. Which is why we're talking about it. And why we're talking about it at such length and in such depth.

Would you WANT this to be possible, even apart from its evident impossibility? For if it WERE possible, you would have made YOURSELF helpless.

And in fact, if it were possible, you would have become lost in meaninglessness—irrevocably insane. But it's not possible.

Now what's important is what comes next. After all, if this is what you've chosen to do, you could assume, and in fact everyone does to one degree or another, assumes that this will make God angry and that there is punishment awaiting you. And that's why there is this partnership between fear and guilt, which are inseparable from the artificial experience of isolation as an independent autonomous entity. You see? But, . . .

God is not angry.

[Repeats] God is not angry.

And I'm going to say, not only is He not angry . . .

He merely could not let this happen.

And I will add: And therefore, it has not happened, even though you are convinced it has. It has not happened!

You CANNOT change His Mind.

You might be able to change your mind, or believe that you have changed your mind. You might believe that you've succeeded, because of course, you have your partner, or maybe now many partners who are all working together with you as you work together with them to confirm each other's independent, autonomous existence in each one's own right. You see? You're all busily engaged in that activity.

But you know what? We could say that its time has passed, its become a rather compulsive arrangement you have with each other because the fear which you thought you had overcome has not gone away and this is cause for concern. And so you actually grab for acknowledgment from your Brother. You actually coerce him or her to witness on your behalf with more fervency, more vigor. And it's a little more harsh than it used to be. And it's all in an attempt to do something that was done in the beginning and your ignoring of that fact has not altered its actuality in any way. And you're suffering from stressful energy that you're exerting unnecessarily. And you're forgetting that your function is Love.

Your function is not to manipulate each other. It is to be so present with each other that you feel that which identifies fulfillment and thus behave in a way that is supportive of and identifies fulfillment and glorifies God right there—right there where an orphan thought he was.

No rituals . . .

. . . no acts of independence . . .

. . . that you have set up, in which the dance of death delights you, can bring death to the eternal.

It can't alter God. But more important, it can't alter You. It can't alter You, the Son of God, the Christ that you Are, the perfect One made inviolable by That which is inviolable and which therefore, cannot have been violated or altered and therefore never has.

Again, you are neither behind the point of perfection nor advancing towards it, you are at that point and you must understand yourself therefrom.

Continuing:

Nor can your chosen substitute for the Wholeness of God . . .

... what's your chosen substitute? It's two things: It's you becoming a totally independent successfully autonomous individuality in your own right. That's one of your chosen substitutes for the wholeness of God. And the other chosen substitute you have for It is, your indispensable Brother, who is going to confirm and thereby prove your autonomous successful independent state.

You want to know why your Brother is your savior? Do you want to know why you are your Brother's savior? It's not because you have the capability of confirming his independence—his actual independence—it's because you have the capacity to withdraw from the special relationship. You have the capacity to abandon the mutual agreement and by not strengthening it, weakening it. And by weakening it, contributing to the dissolving of the illusions that have been built upon it. It's that simple.

No rituals that you have set up, in which the dance of death delights you, can bring death to the eternal. Nor can your chosen substitute for the Wholeness of God have any influence at all upon It. See in the special relationship nothing more than a meaningless attempt to raise other gods before Him, . .

... meaning God ...

. . . and by worshipping them, to obscure THEIR tininess and His [God's] GREATNESS. In the name of your completion, you do not WANT this.

In the name of your wholeness, in the name of your sanity, . .

. . . you do not WANT this. For every idol which you raise to place before Him [God] stands before YOU, in place of what you ARE.

And that keeps you unconscious of what you Are. And it keeps your Brother unconscious of what he Is, to whatever degree you are interacting with him and confirming the illusion to him.

. . . you do not WANT this.

What's the answer? The two-step! Hesitate! Stop dead in your tracks! Shut your mind up and ask, "What's the truth here, Father?" ask, "Holy Spirit, what is my true perspective? As the Father's beloved Son, as the Father's beloved Daughter, what is my true perspective about everything that confronts me? And if in fact I am Mind in which the experience of body is occurring, rather than a body in which a brain that supposedly thinks is occurring, then reveal to me that experience. Help me shift back into my sanity." And let this be present all day long, everyday during the week so that you bring this, not willful or coercive, but gentle determination to see more than you're presently seeing, because you're truly curious.

I love you all. The truth is freeing. The truth shall set you free. The truth that you're afraid of will set you free rather than incarcerate you, because it will uncover to you your real Mind and the real conscious experience of Being. That's the promise.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 13th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Before we go into the Book tonight, I want to discuss something that isn't discussed as often as it ought to be. And it's the meaning of the word, "correction." It's a word found many times in the Course. Correction could, in some ways, be called the goal of the Course. It is to correct misperceptions.

And of course, the biggest and truly only misperception there is, is the idea—the imaginary idea—that each of you are independent, autonomous, self-starters who came from a sperm and an egg . . . a fluke of nature that happens to have become a dominant force of nature, you might say, at least on your planet.

Survival of the fittest, as we've discussed extensively is the underlying engine of being. And this is a misperception. This misperception must be corrected.

And that's what all of this is about.

All of this time we've spent talking, considering, reading the Course, and here we are talking about the two-step: The place where you hesitate, you shut up your mind, you abandon your confidences in what you believe and you reach outside of "the box" of your mentality—your self-constructed mentality and you say of God or the Holy Spirit or the "Powers that be,"—That which is the cause of everything—"What is the truth here?" And then you remain silent and you listen. And that silence, that space of time, if you will, is the holy instant.

Now, the holy instant is the place in which God's laws prevail. And I have said this many times over the past few months. And I've said it in the way that I know is reassuring to everyone. In other words, it is reassuring to know that if you practice the holy instant, if you practice the two-step and go into the Silence with genuine curiosity to know the truth beyond your present sense of the truth of everything, that you indeed move into a place where God's laws prevail and nothing else does. It's reassuring to know that.

But here's something that most everyone tends to overlook. If there is a place where God's laws prevail, in other words, govern absolutely, then there are laws, aren't there? There are principles, if I may put it that way. This means that there are structures according to which you must be.

There are not just guidelines . . . "Well, it would be helpful if you did this . . . and it would be a good thing if you did that, . . ." There are absolute laws: Thou cannot have sin, disease or death. You cannot be an orphan successfully. You cannot ignore the truth and be comfortable. You cannot make up your own definitions and replace the Real ones with them and feel secure.

Now, put more positively: The laws of God say obedience to truth—love of truth—heals, transforms, causes the laws of the God to become visible to you as an experience, not just an intellectual theory.

You must abide by the way things work if you would experience Heaven here and now.

So, although many love the phrase from the Course that says, "You need do nothing," the fact is that what that means is, you must stop doing what doesn't work. You must stop doing what amounts to nothing. You must stop doing what causes illusion—delusion—and binds you to a suffering sense of existence.

That's what the law of God says. Those are what the laws of God say. They require something of you.

Now there are many who say that the Course is not about miracles as demonstrations of the miraculous. Well maybe it's not. But it is about correction, isn't it. No one will deny that. Okay.

So you plant a seed and an Amaryllis begins to come up and the leaves are well-formed and the color is beautiful and the stalk gets longer. And as it gets longer, it suddenly seems to stop. Some of the other leaves grow further, but when the stalk comes out that has the flowers, it's bent to the left and doesn't reach the height that it ought to have and it's beauty is marred by its growth being stunted . . . we'll call it that.

Well, is everyone spiritually magnanimous and does everyone look at it and say, "It's still the loveliness of God and even though it's not ultimate, I will appreciate everything about it. And I know that although the flower might not be standing tall and proud and majestic, it's still going to be quite enjoyable and I'm going to bring my love and appreciation to it . . . as it is, of course, stunted."

And that can be considered miraculous thinking. That can be considered you fulfilling your function of acknowledging God in each and every thing and glorifying God in each of every thing and not filling yourself with sadness or a little bit of remorse because it's not quite what it could be.

But I'm going to ask you: Where is the correction? What is correction? Why it's a miracle. It's a sudden shift of perception, isn't it?

But a sudden shift of perception that isn't identified by correction is not miraculous and it is not a miracle.

Now, what if this alteration in growth appears to be happening to a child—your child, perhaps your grandchild, your niece or nephew? Do you commit yourself to helping them have the best life they can under the circumstances? Do you maybe, do the two-step and say, "Father, what is the truth here?" And if you experience an influx of clarity, an influx of the comprehension of the truth as an experience within you, and it is so clear to you that, let us say, you aren't fooled by the appearance even though the appearance hasn't changed, and you feel grateful and perhaps you think that is miraculous and that is a miracle—that that is all there is to a sudden shift of perception.

I'm telling you that it's not.

There's something called, "Follow-through." And that's what I want to address tonight because most everyone doesn't really comprehend the miracles that A Course In Miracles is about.

You tell me what on earth it could possibly mean for you to take steps which constitute the Bridge to the Real World that we're going to be talking about. You tell me what on earth Meaning there can be to practicing the holy instant and not seeing evidence of God's laws prevailing?

If you're not seeing the lengthening of limbs, if you're not seeing the symmetry of a plant restoring itself, you haven't tapped A Course In Miracles!

And you know what? You sort of glide along in a sense of hope and a sense of confidence and general uplift, not a spectacular uplift, but a general uplift that's a little bit better than what everyone else is experiencing. And you think that's all that it's about. You think that's all you deserve. You think that's all that you can have. Because, of course, A Course In Miracles is about something else: It's just about a head-trip—a shift of perception.

Your misperception is always a misperception of the Kingdom of Heaven. Your misperception is always a misperception of Reality—God's Reality—the Presence of God illuminating Itself, manifesting Itself infinitely, gloriously, flawlessly, indivisibly without conflict, polarity or anything unlike Itself.

If you're not seeing it, there's a need for correction. The need for correction practiced, and I'm going to say, accomplished, is going to be you seeing the Kingdom of Heaven, seeing God's Creation right here, right in front of you—the hand at the end of your arm, the limb of your granddaughter or grandson that's shortened, you're going to see correction of it. Why? Because you're going to see Reality, you're going to see what God is Being right there, flawlessly, eternally, unchangeably, beautifully.

Hey, if there isn't a Real World to see, then there's no need for a bridge to a Real World, is there?

And so, here's the point: When you are observing things that call for correction and you're sort of giving a cursory blessing to it, or even a blessing that is a little bit more diligent, with a little bit more conscious intent, if you're not sticking with it until you have experienced the shift of perception that constitutes the miracle, you will not see the correction and you're still going to be asleep! You're still going to be dreaming.

"Well, you know, I've been studying the Course, . . . you know. We have problems from time to time, in fact there's a problem going on right now and I'm doing my best to live the Course relative to it. I really don't know what to do . . ."

Well, we've been talking about what to do. What I'm bringing up tonight is, that when you do the two-step and you don't see the correction, then there's still a call for correction, isn't there . . . a call of correction for what? Your perception!

And so it's not time to put it down. It's not time to abandon it. It's not time to say, "Well, that's going on out there, and it's part of God's Creation and I've done my best to bless it, but of course, you know there are circumstances that are contributing to it and they complicate things. And I don't have control over all of those things. Hey, maybe the plant doesn't want to be healed. Maybe it's part of that child's karma to have a shortened limb . . . maybe it was part of the lesson-plan for this lifetime." BULLSHIT!

You must be alert and you must not let yourself be sucked into lackadaisical, irresponsible, lazy, slipshod patterns of behavior and think that you're practicing A Course In Miracles or getting what it means.

"Well, Raj, you say, 'The only right use of will is not to use it.' I love that phrase, Raj . . . 'The only right use of will is to choose not to use it . . . to not practice self-will . . . to abandon willfulness.'"

Oh, indeed, yes. But I didn't say sit down and sog like a lump of silly putty, or bread-dough that just flattens out and becomes sluggish and useless.

No. The only right use of will—meaning human will—is to choose not to use it. When you choose not to use human will, you do find yourself moving into a place of, for lack of better words, willingness . . . will-ing-ness . . . willing to be present with, to cooperate with, to not assert yourself instead of something else and to let yourself fit in with the something else. And when that expression of intense self-will is abandoned, something spontaneously happens, like harmony is experienced and you don't feel at odds with everything. And you begin to feel the meaning of everything and how you fit into it. And you find that in the absence of your willfulness, it becomes very clear to you how to be . . . how to be, not how to sog . . . how to be—a verb, a vital active verb: to be. To be what? To be perfect . . . to be perfectly appropriate. And so that means you're going to do something.

You are going to do things. You are going to be the movement of appropriateness. And so, you will act. But the action will not come out of self-will, it will not come out of the orphan mindset. It will arise in you because the Something that you have let yourself be part of—to blend with, to fit in with—is the rest of you, which really means it's all of God.

And so, what God is Being becomes reflected in your actions. Will is expressed. This must be understood. You will not end up doing nothing. You will be the fullness of the expression of God in all appropriateness, at every given moment. Which means that everything you engage in will be ultimately meaningful, ultimately valuable, divinely Real.

And so, you know what? Since this is what happens when you practice the holy instant and go into the silence and un-separate yourself from your Source you will come into the fullness of your Being. And your actions will, in every way, correct or allow for the correction to become visible to you. Because you're not going to give up your attentiveness to the Father's Perspective until every last speck of illusion is gone, until every last thing calling for correction is corrected . . . you know.

It's also said that everything is Love or a call for Love.

Well, what is a call for Love?

It's a call for correction. And the correction must be Love expressed . . . Right?

So you don't put down the Love until the correction is accomplished. You persist, in other words. What does that mean? You persist in control? No, you persist in preparing your mind to have the true perception. You persist in bring your attention to that place where God's laws prevail and where therefore, His perfection is available for you to experience and where your capacity to be utterly and perfectly appropriate—because the Father's Will is what is finding expression in you—allows healing to be experienced by others.

This is extremely important.

The Bridge to the Real World is the natural next place to bring yourself to—the holy instant. Why? So that you might be happy in your illusions? So that you might continue to see something else right where the Kingdom of Heaven is? No! But so that you can see Reality as it is right here, right now. That's the whole point.

Now the new section: The Bridge To The Real World, begins:

The search for the special relationship is the sign that you equate yourself with the ego, and not with God.¹

Why does it say that? Because it's the orphan, it's the independent authorizer who has gotten a divorce from his Father, who seeks and values the special relationship because its existence or its seeming existence as a viable entity independent from the Father can only be experienced that way when there's a mutual agreement to that misperception. It's the only way. And so a special relationship is essential.

For the special relationship has value ONLY to the ego.

To the orphan mindset.

To the ego UNLESS a relationship has special value it has NO meaning, and it perceives ALL love as special.

Now:

To the ego UNLESS a relationship has special value it has NO meaning, . .

. . . that's because it's only when it has special value that it contributes to, reinforces and seems to substantiate the actuality of an independent agent, separate and apart from God, his Father/Mother. You see?

Yet this CANNOT be natural, for it is unlike the relationship of God and His Son, and all relationships that are unlike this One MUST be unnatural.

What does that mean "unnatural"? It means it doesn't fit in with the laws of God. It calls for correction. It calls for specific, disciplined, consistent hanging in there, desiring to know the truth, see the truth, feel the truth, have an experience of Reality right where your conditioning is blocking you from it.

For God created love as He would have it be, and gave it as it IS.

Simple, pure consistency . . . uncomplicated . . . doesn't change as it goes down the road becoming something else a little bit different, not quite like its original. No . . .

. . . God created love as He would have it be, and gave it as it IS. Love has no meaning except as its Creator defined it by His Will. It is impossible to define it otherwise and UNDERSTAND it.

No other mutual agreement that anyone comes to about it can change it from what it is. And any attempt to redefine it and agree to believe the misunderstanding will cause you not to understand what Love is. And it calls for correction, persistent intent to answer the call for Love, to answer the need for correction until you have the transformative experience of it that can be photographed and recognized by all.

And, you know what? Reality is photographable. The Kingdom of Heaven is experienceable. And the Kingdom of Heaven is everything you're experiencing without flaws, without having any misuse assigned to it, without being capable of harm in any way. You see? Identifying fulfillment totally.

"Oh, well you know, I didn't really know that I was supposed to look forward to an actual healing. I didn't know that I wasn't supposed to just settle for three-quarters of the fulfillment or some fulfillment that just slightly skewed—beautiful but recognizably not perfect. I didn't know that I wasn't supposed to be happy with that."

That's like saying, "I didn't know that a call for correction was really a call for correction!"

Now I'm not making fun of anyone. I am conveying to you that a call for correction is a call for correction that takes you all the way to the conscious, tangible experience of the Kingdom of Heaven . . . here . . . in this lifetime . . . now. That's what this is about. There are laws of God. There are principles. There are ways to behave.

And you know what? The Ten Commandments and the Beatitudes are very helpful, but you know where I want you to go to get the laws of God? I want you to go into the holy instant. I want you to go into the silence of your Being where you have abandoned being willful, where you have abandoned determining the meaning of everything for yourself, where you have abandoned commitment to the meanings that everyone else has given you, that you have accepted without once having had a direct, inner experience of the law of God, which is Love and the laws of God that fulfill the law of Love in infinite ways.

Don't go to the list in the book. Go within. "Oh, I think that's called the two-step. And I think that's the way you practice the holy instant." And now it's clearer than ever before why you're practicing the holy instant. Not just so that you might experience the fact that here is where God's laws prevail. But the fact that because here in that inner altar of your Being, God's laws prevail, you see the evidence of the Kingdom of Heaven come to view and it looks like transformation of the world. Because all it really is, is a shift of perception in which your misperceptions yield to what everything originally was and has continued to be in spite of the fact that you've insisted on overlaying your own definitions upon it all and, as a result, have blinded yourself to the perfection of Being, which a sudden shift of perception, called, "a miracle" uncovers to you as your conscious experience.

Now, we're still talking about the two-step. We're still talking about the holy instant. We're still talking about abandoning the special relationship. And we're still talking about shifting from body-identification to Mind-identification.

And I trust that I have been talking about it in a way that has crystallized even further for you how things work, so that you are less confused and so that you are able to bring willingness rather than willfulness into play with greater consistency, so that correction will occur and correction will mean something more than just a new idea in your head that makes you feel temporarily more comfortable. Uh-huh.

You deserve an experience that will be eternally satisfying because it will be the truth experienced without there ever being an alteration of it again.

Now I may not have talked as long as usual tonight, but I have given you about three times as much as I have ever given before in longer periods of time.

I bet it's going to be a great week for you. And I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 20th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

I have one thing I want to discuss tonight. And so, our Gathering will be brief.

Paul is afraid I'm going to sound "cutesy" because what I'm going to talk about tonight, I'm calling, "A Thanksgiving recipe." I'm not meaning to be cute or amusing. I'm going to be talking about a recipe for Thanksgiving. A recipe for thanks giving. And the reason I'm bringing it up is because there are simply too many people entering this next week—a week at least in the United States where Thanksgiving is a holiday being, we'll say, consciously celebrated . . . a day set aside for it.

And the likelihood is that a great many people will enter into this holiday not feeling any thanks at all, finding it very difficult to feel gratitude for anything. And yet, it is not anyone's birthright, it's no one's obligation to be entering into this week of holiday and thanks giving without joy, without gratitude.

And so, I'm going to suggest that you start Thanksgiving Day tonight or whenever you happen to be listening to these words, so that you consciously bring your attention to those things for which you are able to feel gratitude. I encourage you to do this so you don't haphazardly arrive at Thanksgiving Day and we'll say, at the last minute, find yourself bereft of joy, of gratitude, of thanks for anything.

Prepare to be grateful by being grateful ahead of time and finding the means to get past the justifications you have for being ungrateful, for being angry, for being hurt.

Now, we read last time that:

. . . God created love as He would have it be, and gave it as it IS.¹

In other words, pure. The gift of Love that finds expression in every act of God embodies Love. And because it embodies Love, it's function is to be Love. Every act of God is an act of Love. You are an act of God. Right at this moment, you are an act of God. You are Love and your function is Love. You can't change that. You can believe differently, but you can't change it. And because you can't change it, you can change your belief when you're believing the opposite.

In fact, you can do better than just have a better belief. You can abandon believing—believing things that you made up. And that is what the holy instant is for. That is what the two-step is for, for making a conscious choice to abandon what keeps you in bondage, what covers over any justification you might feel for being joyful and for experiencing what God is Being right where you are right now.

Love has no meaning except as its Creator defined it by His Will.
It is impossible to define it otherwise and UNDERSTAND it.

Well how could you define it otherwise?

Oh-h, . . . yes. Love is when someone treats you well. Love is when no one violates the mutual agreements that you have come to. Love is when no one violates a special relationship. But woe unto you and woe unto anyone else if a special relationship is violated or a mutual agreement is not lived up to.

I say, "woe unto you and whoa unto the one who doesn't live up to it" because if you are hooked into expressing judgment because someone hasn't respected you by violating a special relationship or breaking a mutual agreement or anything else, you have bound yourself to a call for justice—not a call for correction . . . a call for justice. A call for justice always brings into play the guilt of the one from whom justice is called for. You suffer from binding yourself to the task of extracting justice where disrespect has been expressed. And you eat yourself up by those actions.

"Oh, yes . . . my children don't respect me. Oh-h, yes . . . my partner doesn't respect me. Oh-h, yes . . . my children or my partner have . . . aww gee . . . decided to take advantage of me—not just disrespect me—but take advantage of me at my expense! This is unbelievable and intolerable. IT B-U-R-N-S M-Y A-S-S!"

And how many of you today are leading into a week of thanks giving with these feelings? And how many of you are unaware of the fact that in this inner business, you aren't noticing that gratitude is missing—the joy is missing? I mean, you know you're miserable, you know you're not happy, but it doesn't occur to you that something is absent that it's your Birthright to be experiencing and you are experiencing something that it is not your Birthright to be experiencing.

And so you're not questioning it. And you'll go through the week and you'll be miserable and you will ache inside and you will feel the injustice, and it might even end you up in bed, immobilized. And then you'll arrive at Thanksgiving Day. And because that's all anyone's talking about, as though they had nothing to worry about themselves, you know, they're so inconsiderate as to be happy when you're miserable, that day will come and you will be aware of how bereft you are of your joy.

And so I'm heading off that result at the beginning of the week. Why? Because I think the Thanksgiving holiday is so important? No. It does serve as a focus for answering the call for correction that's happening in you. And so I'm using it for that. But you know what? Whether it's today or next Thursday, you deserve to be relieved because it's your Birthright not to be caught in an illusion in something that you are suffering needlessly from.

Now, it says here:

Love is FREEDOM. To look for it by placing yourself in bondage is to SEPARATE yourself from it.

Well, what does that mean?

To look for it by placing yourself in bondage is to SEPARATE yourself from it.

Well, when you enter into a special relationship with someone, when you feel that they have an obligation to you, whether they're your children or whether they're your partners or whoever, you are confirming and substantiating a union . . . well, I'm going to say, a union of orphans: A union of those who are sourceless. And the result is that you become bonded—in bondage—as two separated miserable souls who are using each other by one means or another to be able to have experiences of joy.

Now, when you abandoned your Father and you joined with a Brother or a Sister and that becomes your primary relationship, that's a special relationship. It's not a holy relationship. And you will bind yourself to misery and the misery will be amplified. Why? Well, it's like trying to be a light-bulb lighting up without being plugged in. And it takes a lot of effort to try to light up and be illuminated when there's no juice. And actually, illumination never occurs but boy does the stress occur. You see?

Love is FREEDOM. To look for it by placing yourself in bondage is to SEPARATE yourself from it.

What is Love? Well . . .

. . . God created Love as He would have it be, and gave it as it IS.

It's the very substance and essence and purpose and function of you—of your Being. That's what it is. But you forget that when you get into special relationships and obligations to not violate mutual agreements and to live up to them because after all, the whole purpose of the mutual agreements is to arrive at a point where you have proof of your respectability as an orphan—as someone who is fatherless and motherless, who has no inheritance and therefore, who has no intrinsic worth. And the more you all hold onto each other to get proof and verification of one's value, it can only bring misery.

And you know why? It's because special relationships were never meant to be able to perform that function. You're already the Act of God—God in the act of Being Himself right now, right where you are—is which constitutes You, your Being and your function. And so your value and your, I'm going to say, respectability is not only intact it is awesome.

And so, when you say, "Father, I'd rather not pay any attention to that. I'd rather look at it fresh, all by myself without Your Perspective. And I want to look at it with Joe over there or Mary over there and we're going to mutually come to agreements and understandings and definitions of meanings that will prove to each of us our intrinsic value and worth." You see?

R-r-r-i-i-p-p . . . the plug got unplugged, the juice is no longer flowing and there's no way for any acts of these unplugged ones to have a Real experience of freedom and of love emerge . . . or joy.

What would you say . . . what would you say the fundamental element is that causes the spontaneous experience of joy and gratitude and thanksgiving? It isn't what anyone does or doesn't do. It's the experience of freedom. It's simply that: The experience of freedom. The experience of not being in bondage. The experience of not being governed by anything less than that which is in the act of being you at this moment, which is an act of Love because it's God Moving.

For the love of God, . .

. . . in other words, to find the love of God.

For the love of God, no longer seek for union in separation, . .

. . . you know, . . with other orphans—other sourceless ones, other miserable ones—who have this incredible inspiring task of working together by creating definitions and meanings and mutual agreements that allow each of them to begin to feel valuable and worthwhile without having to connect with their Source. You see?

Again:

For the love of God, no longer seek for union in separation, nor for freedom in bondage! As you release, so will you be released.

Okay, key words there:

As you release, so will you be released.

So, you see, I want you to arrive on Thanksgiving Day in a state of release. And so I'm saying start tonight. Start now to release, so that you can be released.

Oh, what does that mean . . . "release"? It means: Release your other orphan friends that you have special relationships with exclusive of the Father. Release them from your expectations. Release them from your expectation that they had better express greater respect for you by withdrawing their willingness to violate the special relationship or break the mutual agreement. Stop requiring them to be respectful.

Now let's be careful. There's a need for respect to be expressed. But here's the thing: Stop requiring others to be respectful before you will allow yourself to feel the joy of your Being that the Father is placing in you at every moment by virtue of His act of Being right there where you are. You see?

That's manipulation and control. "Oh, you'll be the death of me yet. Oh, you're making me miserable. Oh, you'd better stop making me miserable because we have an agreement to treat each other well." You see?

You have a technique available. You have a tool. It's called the two-step. It leads to the experience of the holy instant, where union with God is experienced and where the laws of God prevail no matter what other jerks are or are not doing. That's freedom. And out of that freedom comes joy and love and thanks or gratitude.

As you release, so will you be released. Forget this not, or love will be unable to find you and comfort you.

“Oh, but I don’t want love to find me and comfort me, I want Joe to find me and comfort me. I want Mary to find me and respect me and stop all this bullshit! I want my children to find me and treat me with respect.”

Well, you know what? They may not. And you had better stop preferring to have them find you and respect you or to have them find you and love you. You had better stop preferring that over your willingness to remember to engage in the holy instant . . . practice the two-step and say, “Father, what is the truth here?”

“Well, the truth is, that you are My beloved Son, you are My beloved Daughter in whom I am well pleased. I’m withholding nothing of what I Am from you. You are free.”

“Oh-h, well, I really think I want to seek union in separation a little bit longer. I think I still want to try to get . . . you know, my jerk partner or my jerk children or my jerk parents to . . . you know, just simply recognize that I am worthy and respectable. You know, I’m going to hold out for that a little bit longer.”

Well, then go ahead and ruin your Thanksgiving Day. But remember, you don’t have to . . . remember that you don’t have to!

You’re not here to carry out the mutual agreements or the penalties for breaking the mutual agreements. That’s not what you were created for. That is not what you are here for. That’s not what the act of God, that God is engaged in right where you are right now, is supposed to mean. It means freedom.

But you know what? You’re going to have to start using the recipe for Thanksgiving.

There is a way in which the Holy Spirit asks your help, if you would have His.

Well, again the question is: Is it the Holy Spirit’s help you want, or is it the orphan you’re having such a hard time with that you want help from. You want to extract from him or her or them an acknowledgement of respect—it’s only right that you have it, after all, you raised them, didn’t you? . . . or you’ve given your life to your partner, didn’t you? . . . for a certain number of years, long enough . . . long enough to justify good treatment.

But, you see, you're looking in the wrong place and you're trying to extract the experience of freedom from something that can't give it. And most of all, your engaging in it blinds you to the fact that you are already in possession of infinite freedom because no matter what you've come to believe, you are still the result, the evidence of God in the act of being Himself. And the love that constitutes your being has no meaning except as it's Creator defined it by His Will. You see?

I'm not talking about approaching this coming Thanksgiving Holiday with rhetoric of gratitude. "Oh, I'm so happy to be alive today," when you're not. "Oh, it's going to be a beautiful day today," when you don't think it is. No, I want you to treat this subject of thanksgiving more seriously, not so that you can't feel joy, but so that you recognize that is significant.

Thanksgiving is the natural spontaneous result of the experience of freedom. And freedom is your experience when you withdraw from engaging in manipulating others or in being offended by the attempts of others to manipulate you and instead practicing the holy instant and saying, "Father, in spite of what they are doing, in spite of their malicious intent, in spite of how awful they know it will make me feel, in spite of all of that what is it my Birthright to be experiencing? What is the truth about You and me, and in light of the truth about You and me, about them? What is the truth about it?"

You must switch your focus of attention and stop trying to extract freedom from a place it doesn't exist. And release those who seem unable to give it to you, from the obligation to give it to you, before you're willing to feel your joy.

Go ahead and feel your joy. The call for others to respect you will still be present. But you don't have to use it as justification for feeling really miserable and letting the world know about it in an attempt to get the world to behave differently and treat you nicely with respect so that you can feel your respectability without having to connect with your Father. You see? That's the point.

Seeking freedom without connecting with your Father will not bring freedom. It will bring all sorts and levels of bondage. That's the only way it works.

And so I encourage you to have a wonderful week. And I encourage you to behave in a way . . . you know—using the recipe for Thanksgiving—to arrive at Thanksgiving Day not feeling bereft at all.

Because that's the way it should be.

Okay, I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 27th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

Well last week we covered five lines. And some of you may be feeling some impatience . . . "How will we ever get done with the Book if he takes so long?"

But I want to remind everyone that getting to the end of the Book doesn't mean you'll Wake up. But getting it—getting the point—at any moment along the way, will.

I'm taking time, you might say, I'm valuing the subject matter enough not to gloss over it, but to help bring out the deeper meanings. Why? So that you might get it tonight . . . so that you might've gotten it last week. You see?

How many of you have read a book that was so engaging and so interesting that you read it in one sitting or perhaps just in two days and enjoyed it thoroughly because it was so fantastic? And a month later you couldn't remember very many of the details of what the story was about—just highlights.

That's not learning. That's not really valuable because it hasn't become yours.

So, you don't want to be goal-oriented. You want to be Presence-oriented. So tonight, be with me. Be with me tonight. Be present with me while I'm being present with you. And let that be good enough because in the intimacy of our being together, you might get it. And then, finishing the Book will be irrelevant.

Now, we were talking about freedom last week. And before we move on, I want to ask a question: What is a special relationship? We've been talking about it for a long time. And in many ways, I have described it. But tonight, I'm asking again: "What is a special relationship?"

Well, you think a relationship is something between you and another person. You think you and another person have a relationship. And if you've been listening to what I've been saying the last few weeks, if God fits nowhere into the picture of this relationship you have with another person, it's a special relationship. If you are not experiencing your identity as the Son or Daughter of God while you are in relationship, then you are in a special relationship and you could think that means you're having a relationship with another person and leaving God out of it . . . that a special relationship is constituted of two or more persons relating to each other without being plugged into their Father. Simple.

But it's not true.

What is a special relationship? A special relationship is constituted of . . . and listen carefully . . . a special relationship is constituted of mutual agreements—a structure of mutual agreements. You could say, like a code of ethics, or the laws of the land. They are ideas. They're intellectual concepts which two or more have given meaning to and have agreed have meaning.

But it's this structure of ideas, this structure of ethics, this structure of logic, this structure of concepts that is what constitutes a special relationship.

Individualities or persons cannot have special relationships. And what goes on between persons is not what the words, "special relationships" refer to.

You say, "Well, of course it does. I understand that if I have a special relationship or if I'm in a special relationship, I am behaving in a way that arises out of my need to be special, my need to be acknowledged—recognized—because I don't feel my integrity because I'm not plugged into my Source, I'm not acknowledging my relationship with my Father. And so I understand that whether I'm doing nice things or mean things, it is something that's going on between me and another person. And you know, if that person touches me in a certain way, it's wonderful and if that person touches me in another way, it's harmful—it's hurtful. If this person looks at me "that way" or another person shrugs his shoulders in a certain way . . ."

These are all ways of demonstrating a relationship between persons.

But I want you to . . . I want you . . . Oh-h, I want you to be willing to be honest and take a look. Because the simple fact is, that how a person touches you doesn't constitute an act of a special relationship because you are giving all the meaning to that touch that it has. That touch and how you're experiencing it is governed by some mutual agreements, either in your culture or in your relationship with that person. You have a mutual agreement and when that look is given, it has that meaning.

And so you say, "Well, he looked at me that way—he looked at me meanly. It was meant to make me feel bad."

Well, that makes it look like a person relating with a person is having an effect. But it's not.

The meanings you have given to those looks are constituted of mutually agreed upon definitions. And those definitions are causing you to experience certain perceptions. When the look, the shrug of the shoulder, the tone in the voice in itself had no meaning whatsoever and could, by virtue of mutual agreements, mean something entirely different.

If the practice of mutual agreements, not behaviors between persons, but the practice of mutual agreements constitutes a special relationship, then what constitutes the dissolving of a special relationship?

Well, it's simple. And I told it to Susan the other day. Waking up or breaking the special relationship is accomplished by standing right in the middle of mutual agreements and disagreeing.

You usually think of the word, "disagreement" as being disagreeable and bad—negative. But a disagreement is the way you break an agreement. You see?

Waking up is going to be a little bit more involved than you might have thought because you're going to have to be willing to do the two-step. You're going to have to be willing to practice the holy instant and say, "Father or Holy Spirit, what is the truth here?" And listen for it and then be from that clarity. And when you're being from that reconnection with your Source, what you are involved in is not a special relationship because your behavior is not arising out of mutual agreements and in fact will constitute a disagreement which has the ultimate effect of breaking a mutual agreement and therefore, a special relationship.

This is important to understand. Special relationships are constituted of structures of mutual agreements.

Write that down: Special relationships are constituted of structures of mutual agreements.

Waking up will be disagreeing with those mutual agreements—breaking the mutual agreements—breaking them not for the purpose of substituting them with a new mutual agreement, but by bringing into play the clarity that comes from one's connection to his or her Source, one's remembrance of his or her divinity and the willingness to be from there which does constitute being in disagreement with the mutual agreements that are in practice, in play.

Now, let's go into the Book here. Last week we ended with this sentence:

There is a way in which the Holy Spirit asks your help, if you would have His.¹

Now we're talking about accessing one's freedom again—breaking the bondage. And if you want the Holy Spirit's help, the Holy Spirit asks for your help.

There is a way in which the Holy Spirit asks your help, if you would have His. The holy instant is His most helpful tool in protecting you from the attraction of guilt, the real lure in the special relationship.

Now, if any relationship you're in is occurring without your conscious experience of your divinity, of your connection with your Father, then no matter whether it's a pleasant experience or an unpleasant experience, it is a special relationship and constitutes bondage that you need freedom from—that you need release from. And as we also talked about last week, if you want release, you must release others whom you keep in bondage. And the Holy Spirit helps you but asks something of you: The two-step, the holy instant.

The holy instant is His most helpful tool in protecting you from the attraction of guilt, the real lure in the special relationship. You do not recognize that this IS its real appeal, for the ego has taught you that FREEDOM lies in it.

See? The very thing we're talking about your experiencing: Freedom. But what is freedom? Freedom is Love. Love is the absence of special relationships. Love is the absence of exclusivity. Love is embrace—wholeness. You see?

Now that means that whether you're having a happy day, a pleasant day, a pleasant time with others or not, guilt is in play. And when we talk about guilt, when this is brought up, it doesn't make you feel happy or comfortable. You would rather that we hurried on through the Book and gotten past this so we could get to something inspiring . . . right?

But do not be afraid to look. It's important to see how guilt works. You see, the means by which you enforce, . . . the means by which everyone enforces mutual agreements, is by employing the threat of guilt and the consequence of guilt if one violates the mutual agreements.

Guilt is the means by which the enforcement of the imagined good that is to come from a special relationship is effected. You see?

Now, you know, if you're being honest with yourselves, that there are times when you do employ guilt to manipulate others to get them to do what you need them to do so you'll be comfortable and you know there are times that others employ guilt to control you. But you know we're talking about freedom, aren't we. And when you pulled the plug, so to speak, when the Light that you Are pulled the plug from the Socket and you lost your Light . . .

(I'm sorry, this is me, Paul, I lost it there . . . just a moment . . .)

. . . you began to use the mutual agreements as a way of creating a sense of comfort and a sense of worth in yourself and in others. And so guilt became the means by which you secured your comfort or your recognition as being a worthwhile presence. Guilt is always in play. You use it on others—others use it on you. Most of the time, it's direct. You exert it over another for an effect.

But when you lost your connection with your Father, you lost your feeling of wholeness—you lost your feeling of competence. And that's why you use guilt and special relationships to compensate for it.

Now, there's a way that you use guilt when you feel overwhelmed that doesn't feel to you as though it's the employment of guilt: When you're feeling overwhelmed and incompetent, you are feeling as though you are in a position of powerlessness in which you cannot accomplish that which needs to be accomplished, that which is worthwhile, that which is helpful, that which solves a problem, and you feel overwhelmed by the situation and your powerlessness in the face of it. And then in the absence of the freedom that you so dearly need to feel, someone you're in relationship with says something to you and you twist what that person has said so that even if they were listening to Guidance, even if they were joined with the Father or the Holy Spirit, you will hear what they're saying as convicting you of your guilt.

And so you get angry at them and you try to side-track them from the truth that they may be saying by engaging them in defending themselves against your projection upon them of an act that is intended to make you feel guilty.

Now, this is really isn't as complicated as it might sound. You are feeling overwhelmed, you are feeling incompetent, and you are feeling guilty because you're not being able to do what you should be able to do, you're not being able to behave in a way that makes you feel good about yourself.

Now, if someone is trying to help you move out of that space and is pointing out to you that you are not accomplishing what needs to be accomplished, but that it's because you're not joining with the Holy Spirit . . . in other words, if this partner or this other one in your relationship is helping you to look at the very thing we're doing tonight, the meaning of guilt, rather than glossing it over, you use that as an opportunity to get upset with that person and sidetrack the issue, sidetrack the Guidance, sidetrack the positive direction that's being given, so that just as those of you would like to get to the end of the Book and not deal with this, you, in this relationship with your partner, can avoid having to look at what you need to look at. So you suggest that that one is being mean-spirited and trying to inflict guilt upon you and make you feel bad.

And why are you doing it? So that you can get to the experience of freedom which means, so that you can side-track the issue from looking at what needs to be looked at and correcting it, and going off on a tangent—a tangent that has to do with proving to this other one that they are being unloving and trying to lay guilt upon you.

That is not too complex to understand.

The intent to use guilt to gain freedom can be done directly or indirectly—and is. Now you must be very careful when you are feeling overwhelmed that you not use every opportunity that comes up to point the finger at others and say they are making you feel guilty, because you will do it to engage them in a fight that will distract you from looking at the very thing that may cause an [snaps fingers] "A-ha!" and bring clarity into your mind and free you.

Always you use guilt for the purpose of gaining freedom from guilt you are convicting yourself of, because you are feeling incompetent and unable to do what needs to be done in order to bring you into the experience that would equal knowing that you're the Son or Daughter of God with the full conscious experience of it. That's what all of you are after. You're after the original experience of You as the Son or Daughter of God. But you're trying to do it without connecting with your Father.

Simply put: The use of guilt always feels like the simplest way to get freedom from distress, to get freedom from the guilt trip you're laying upon yourself by distracting you from it and getting into a fight with the one you're in relationship with. Stop it! Notice it!

You do not recognize that this . . .

. . . guilt . . .

. . . IS its real appeal, . .

. . . the real appeal of the special relationship is guilt . . .

. . . for the ego has taught you that FREEDOM lies in it.

Freedom from what? Freedom from looking at what you have to look at. Freedom from acknowledging where you're goofing up. Freedom from acknowledging that in this particular moment in your experience of incompetence and fear and guilt, you're called upon to do what actually changes things: Remember your Father . . . and say, "Father, what's the truth here? Father, I want to hear Your Voice. Father, I want Your Perspective. I want to do the one thing that will undo the special relationship that is binding me." And the one thing that will do that is you joining with the Father before you join in relationship with your fellowman. Because when you do that, as I said, you will join with your fellowman minus the structures of mutual agreements that you've been using against each other and which have constituted the absence of Love and therefore, have constituted the absence of Freedom.

Again:

You do not recognize that this IS its real appeal, for the ego has taught you that FREEDOM lies in it. Yet the closer you look at the special relationship, the more apparent it becomes that it MUST foster guilt and therefore MUST imprison.

You see? I want you to be willing to look at the possibility . . . I'm telling you it's the fact, but let's gentle it a little bit and say, look at the possibility that even when you're having a pleasant experience, even when you appear to be doing everything that's friendly and supportive and kind, et cetera, if you're not doing it hand-in-hand with the Father, where the Father's Perspective is reflecting to you the truth about everything you're relating to, then you're in a special relationship and guilt is part and parcel of it. And the kindness is calculated to cause you to find a way to believe that you're feeling good when you're not. That you are succeeding in becoming a real boy or a real girl instead of a puppet. You see? . . . without being connected to your Father.

Now, continuing:

The special relationship is totally without meaning without a body.

You see? I mentioned earlier that a special relationship is believed to be something that goes on between persons. And what does that really mean? It means between this person here: two-arms, two-legs, a head. And this person here: two-arms, two-legs, a head, a body. You see? . . . that a special relationship is going on between bodies.

So, . . .

The special relationship is totally without meaning without a body. And if you value it, you must ALSO value the body. And what you value you WILL keep.

You won't let go of it, you won't let it be released. You won't let others be released from it and you won't release yourself from it, because you value it.

The special relationship is a device for limiting Your self to a body, and for limiting your perception of others to THEIRS.

You see? "You over there in that shape, have an obligation to me over here in this shape and we must behave this way toward each other or I will employ guilt in whatever means of control I can to bring you into line . . . you, that shape over there." But see, special relationships aren't between shapes. Special relationships are the structures of mutual definitions that are employed as that which gives meaning to all actions and all things that you engage in.

The special relationship is a device for limiting Your self . . .

. . . two words . . .

. . . Your self to a body, and for limiting your perception of others to THEIRS. The great rays would establish the total LACK of value of the special relationship, if they were seen. For in seeing them, the body would disappear because its VALUE would be lost.

Now it's very important to understand this. The great rays are the fundamental meanings of Being. You could perhaps, call them the fundamental energies of Being. They can be identified as: Life, Truth, Love, Principle, Soul, Mind and Spirit. These are Meanings. These are Meanings that are embodied in every aspect of Creation.

Now, in moments of illumination—which many of you have had without totally Waking up—you may well have experienced looking at an object and having your experience transformed so that the object, which we'll say, is an inanimate object, becomes an experience of Living Love. It's like that object is illuminated with Meaning of divinity, where it's clear that what you're experiencing right there is the Father, and that the substance of it is Love, and that it's Loving you, and that it is part of you even though it's a distinct experience that you might say seems to be separate from you, at least it's not confusing to you—that it is It, and you are You, all of It, You and It are One and it's all Love.

When that experience of Meaning occurs, the object as you've experienced it disappears.

How you had defined it becomes utterly inconsequential in the face of the experience of the Movement and Presence of God that is infilling you at that moment. It has Meaning entirely separate and apart from your best and worst definitions—mutually agreed upon definitions. The object doesn't disappear, but it's finite meaning does. And instead of appearing to be a rock or a vase, it's an experience of the Presence of God illuminating you. It's God, not a rock god, but God Himself Being the Presence that you had defined as a rock and given other meanings to.

The great rays, when their meanings become obvious to you in Creation which you had defined as matter, will cause the material universe—all the structures of definitions that you had created—it will cause them to, like, vanish in the face of the overwhelming awesome experience of Reality, with a capital "R."

And so, yes, you could say that the body disappears. The rock as a composite of minerals or an aggregate of minerals, et cetera, becomes so meaningless, so empty of meaning in the face of the experience of Love that is being exchanged and which is identified as Oneness, with infinite expression that, indeed, the rock disappeared . . . God appeared . . . Reality appeared right there. You see? This is important.

Do you see? The value here is that in your willingness to abandon special relationships, you are willing to abandon identification with form or body. And it constitutes a release of bondage because you're able to say, "Wow, special relationships aren't something between me and so-and-so. Special relationships are the intertwined definitions that we have decided to employ with each other. They're head-trips, not actualities, not us. You see?"

And in that realization the definitions become released from all of the emotions of persons that you've been employing. And healing can occur between you and the one you were having a special relationship with. You see?

And the opportunity for everything about the forms of you and the one you're in relationship, has the opportunity to begin to register with you as Love . . . Love embodied, you might say, . . . Love being, radiating, embracing, including you with the awareness that the same thing is going on, you could say, in reverse—a Oneness of infinity, where all of the little details of persons vanish in the awesomeness of God, in the awesomeness of what Love really is. And it provides the opportunity for both of you to [snaps fingers] Wake up. You see?

So, . . .

The special relationship is a device for limiting Your self to a body, and for limiting your perception of others to THEIRS. The great rays would establish the total LACK of value of the special relationship, if they were seen.

If you have a glimpse of the great rays or just one of them, it establishes for you the total lack of value of the special relationship, of the way you've chosen to be together unconscious of your Source, and therefore, unconscious of the awesomeness of the Son or Daughter of God.

The great rays would establish the total LACK of value of the special relationship, if they were seen. For in seeing them, the body would disappear because its VALUE would be lost.

Your misunderstanding of what the body is would disappear because the value you were giving to the structures of mutual definitions that constituted your misunderstanding would vanish. They would simply be meaningless in face of the experience of the Presence of God that feels like Love unified and unifying.

And so your whole investment in seeing it . . .

. . . with misunderstanding . . .

. . . would be withdrawn from it. You see the world you VALUE.

It will be very helpful for you to remember that a special relationship is not something that occurs between persons. Special relationships are the structures of mutual agreements that are being employed to give meaning to everything that already has infinite Meaning, because everything is already the Kingdom of Heaven, everything is already Creation as God is Being It.

And so, it's the abandonment, . . . the willingness to abandon the mutual agreements, the head-trips.

This is, at one and the same time, very simple and very important. And don't let your ego try to tell you that this is too complicated [chuckles] to understand. Because the simple fact is that all of you employ it everyday to one degree or another. And that's where the honesty comes in.

Now, be careful, because you could sit there and say, "Well, Raj, you're trying to make me feel guilty. You're telling me that all of my relationships are special relationships. You're telling me that I'm on the wrong track. You're trying to making me feel bad. You're trying to depress me. You're trying to get me to look at something that can't possibly benefit me in any way." You see? And you would if you could divert me from the simplicity that I'm sharing with you that would release you, because it feels like freedom to not have to move in a direction where you're having to look at flaws in yourself.

Well, the simple answer is, that I'm pointing you in the direction of the holy instant, which is the Holy Spirit's most helpful tool in protecting you from the attraction of guilt—the real lure in the special relationship. I'm pointing you in the direction of the holy instant—the practice of the two-step—so that you don't have to try to make me guilty of making you feel guilty by pointing out your flaws. I'm not pointing out your flaws. You see?

The special relationship isn't between persons. It's all in the head-trip. And I'm speaking to you as my Brother, my Sister, as your Brother for the purpose of getting you to not get sidetracked yourself by trying to make me or anyone else guilty and instead hesitate . . . hesitate . . . shut up . . . and in the silence abandon your commitment to your feeling of overwhelm and your feeling of guilt that you're laying on yourself for not being able to be as competent as you ought to be, and have you ask, "Father, what is the truth here? Holy Spirit—that which is nothing more than my right Mind—what is the truth here? I care to join with That which Knows." You see?

So, this coming week don't go on a witch hunt to find all the places where you are doing this awful thing called, "practicing a special relationship" and being an awful representative of Creation. No, rather use your time to remember to practice the holy instant. It's the way you ask the Holy Spirit for help, by helping Him—you help the Holy Spirit by bringing your attention to Him. You help that which is nothing more than your right Mind, by bringing your attention to It . . . you see? . . . and instead of insisting upon your own private mind that you and another have agreed to practice together, as though it could really be done with commitment. You see?

Let this be a grand week. Don't be afraid to look at what doesn't work so that you can acknowledge that it doesn't work and so that you might realize you are really not interested in engaging in what doesn't work. And therefore, you are willing to do something different, instead of trying to make guilty the one who is pointing out the something different that would free you.

And I look forward to being with you next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

November 6th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

So it says in the Bible, *“In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God and the Word was God.”*¹

That’s the description of Being. That is the description of Creation.

But I’m going to play around a little bit and I’m going to say: “But then a mist went up from the ground and a new Creation—a second Creation took place.” And that which describes this second Creation goes like this: ‘In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with Man and the Word was Man.’

This difference describes what could be called, “The Fall.” It describes what we’ve been discussing in terms of one getting a divorce from his Father—one disowning his Source, his Father. And doing it by means of a relationship with another holy Son of God—a relationship in which these two holy Sons of God both decide that they would like to be the deciders of what everything is and what everything means.

Unlike God, however, they had to make decisions and definitions about things that were already made [chuckles]. They were not in a position of creating, we’ll say, from scratch as God does.

And so, in their agreement as to mutual definitions and meanings of everything, they created not a holy relationship, but a special relationship which we’ve been discussing at length but not quite in the way I’m discussing it right now.

“In the beginning was the Word and the Word was with Man and the Word was Man.” And the land of Man was a land of orphanages because all of its inhabitants were and are orphans—at least until they decide to revoke the divorce they put in place. And of course, we're talking about undoing the divorce, aren't we. We're talking about practicing the holy instant. We're talking about withdrawing from the mutual agreement with another Son or Daughter of God and silencing the commitment that each of you bring—the commitment each of you brings to the definitions and meanings you have made up. And in the absence of that commitment, reaching out to the Father, reaching out to the Holy Spirit, reaching out to That which Knows and apparently is beyond you, . . . and enquiring to know what the truth is.

Now, there's something else about this that needs to be illuminated. I have, in the past, shared at some length about the fact that Being—existing—is all mental. That everything that is being experienced is some aspect of Mind. It isn't just that it is mental, it is that every aspect of Creation that you are experiencing has its source in the infinite Mind which is God. And God's capacity to be the bringing forth, be the impetus for the uncovering of unlimited and infinite, vitally interesting things to be conscious of which constitute life, which constitute absolutely everything that is available to you to experience.

And you, as part of His Creation, have the function to fulfill, which amounts to joining Him in acknowledgement of what He has created, in acknowledgement of the Reality of absolutely everything you're experiencing without in any way losing the conscious awareness that all of it is Mind. And everything that is being experienced is an experience of ideas. You are the experience of that Mind in motion in action that is God.

You're not God, but you are the experience of that Mind which God is in action and your function is to confirm it as what It is.

In this experience, you are absolutely infinite. You are not encapsulated or confined in any way to any thing. You are infinite.

But when the mist went up from the ground, when two Brothers, or a Brother and a Sister, or two Sisters joined together and said, "We want to decide what things are. And we want to determine what they're meaning is. And we will join together in agreement about those meanings and definitions and our joining together will constitute a bond that is as absolute as our divinity." You see? Because still, there's an experience of being divine. And then the moment the commitment is brought into play for this mutual agreement, that such-and-such a thing is true that isn't true at all because it's a different meaning and a different definition applied to one of God's Creations, the minute that commitment occurred, something happened . . . and I've said it before, the infinite view was lost, the infinite experience of Being in which all of Creation is fully, constantly and totally available to every single Son and Daughter of God as a conscious experience in which there is no privacy but there is infinite fullness of awesomely utterly meaningful Being, that was suddenly snapped away in that decision to join together—to say that something was true that wasn't true and commit to it.

And suddenly the infinite view was lost.

And because every Idea of God does have that which identifies It—renders It experienceable, that of each of the Sons and Daughters of God that specifically identified them, became to them their abode—the place they occupied. They found themselves not to be experiencing all of Creation within them, but they experienced themselves suddenly to be in a form, even though they were still infinite and could never truly be confined to the form that they found themselves now bound to, which they called their body.

This is very important. It's important because it adds to the meaning of the special relationship and the holy instant. It adds to your understanding.

How? Well, for example, we've talked about how to practice the holy instant. That it's a matter of hesitating in the middle of your daily activities where everything you are experiencing is constituted of meanings you have put in place in your mind, and others have educated you to put in place in your mind.

It's a moment in which you hesitate and abandon validating those meanings and definitions. And you reach out beyond your present mentality, I'll say mode of thinking, mode of identifying yourself, and you reach out beyond that to that which you've come to understand is infinite still, and never stopped being infinite . . . and you ask, "Father, what is the meaning here? What is the truth here from Your Perspective outside of the tininess of the definitions I've created and adopted and confined myself to?" You see?

Now, what I want you to understand at this point, in the exposition of the meaning of the holy instant and of special relationships and getting out of them, what I want you to understand is that it's going to be more than just reaching out to That which is beyond your present finite sense of things, your present sense or experience of suffering that in one way or another you feel is illegitimate even though you feel you have no justification for having any other kind of experience, . . . when you reach outside and say, "Father, what is the truth here?". . . as I've said before, you're not going to get an intellectual answer.

You're going to experience a shift of perception and what that is going to mean is, that you're going to shift from a body orientation, a body identification, to a mind identification. You will find yourself able to abandon the sense of you being inside a body—and specifically inside the head of a body.

Right now as we've talked about excessively, you think all of your conscious experiences are going on inside your skull. When the fact is, that everything that you're having a conscious experience of is occurring in an infinite Mind. And everything is, at this moment, even though you are determining it to be matter—physical—everything is right now an Idea being misperceived as a thing, as an object, as a hunk of matter.

But it's an Idea in Mind. And it's You as Mind, experiencing all of these Ideas, experiencing That which renders them visible and tangible without causing them to become matter, holding them still perfectly in their divine state as an Idea in the Mind of God placed there, maintained there by God's constant attention to everything in His Mind—everything in the Mind that He Is—and which therefore maintains it constantly in you as what you divinely Are and always have been, even though you decided to take this “vacation from Reality” and get a divorce, so to speak, from your Father.

This is important. And the reason it's important is because it makes it clear that it would be impossible to have a special relationship if you didn't believe that you were a body.

Now, what does that do? It introduces something interesting, to say the least. Because now, you not only have the two-step that you can practice in order to promote the holy instant in order to escape the illusion of being an orphan and find yourself in the place where God's laws prevail and nothing else does, you have another avenue. It performs the same function but it's a different way to look at it that you might find helpful.

You know, when I've talked about this mug—this glass—and the water in it, and the fact that it's an Idea in Mind, that it's absolutely non-material, absolutely spiritual, absolutely divine, and I have suggested that you look at it or a vase of flowers or a table and ask, “What is the more that is here of what God is Being than I'm seeing?”

Isn't that the two-step? Isn't that reaching beyond whatever your current definition is?

It isn't like you're saying, “Hm-m...what-is-the-truth-here-in-this-glass-mug? What-is-the-awesome-truth-of-it?” You might, in that approach, frighten yourself off because you are envisioning [chuckles] an excessive degree of spirituality or divinity . . . because you're making it such a profound moment.

And it can simply be a desire, a simple desire: “What is the more of what God is Being here, than what I’m seeing?”

Now understand, that when you say that, you’re opening yourself up to a shift from you as the definer of things, as a body having a mind, a brain and sensory organs capable sensing the glass. You’re stepping beyond that and you’re moving into the arena of your mind, you might say. You’re not trying to force your eyes to see something, you’re not staring at the cup, at the mug, at the glass, at the water with intensity. You have the glass, you see the water, you see the light reflecting off of it, but your attention is moved to your awareness, and you’re feeling for being sensitive to a shift of perception that may go on in your mind. And there you are . . . shifting back from body identification to mind identification.

Now this is very practically helpful. Because you have here a practice—and I know everyone loves practices—and practices can become habits which aren’t helpful, but you have a practice here and you can use it with anything that your eyes fall upon at any moment in the day as many times a day as you feel like it. And at the bottom line, it’s an expression of curiosity, which is a pleasure to engage in.

And you look at whatever you’re seeing and ask, “What is the more of what God is Being right there than what I’m seeing?” And then just be quiet and attentive—present with that thing.

And as I’ve said before, absolutely every aspect of Creation is conscious. Every aspect of Creation has the capacity to communicate its Meaning—the Father’s Meaning—the Meaning the Father has embodied, by means of the Idea which is experienceable, that you’re looking at. It is eager . . . it is eager to have you once again not be blocked from the conscious experience of its Meaning, as was the way you experienced it before you got your divorce—an experience you lost in that moment of commitment to an illusion with a Brother or a Sister.

And so, whenever you ask this question throughout the day or night, you ask, “What is the more of what God is Being right here, than what I’m seeing?” Whatever that thing is, it’s rejoicing, because it knows you’re bringing your attention to it in a way that you haven’t for a very long time. Because always, for a very long time, you have overlaid its Meaning with your meaning—with the definition you and a Brother have made up and applied to It. And you have related to the picture you have projected on something Real and the Reality of that thing has not been able to register Itself with you by extending Itself to you because that’s Its function—the function that was placed in It by the Father—that was placed in every aspect of Creation by the Father.

Creation is living. Creation is alive. Creation is conscious. Creation is Mind. It is therefore, something to be profoundly experienced because it is so full of Meaning.

Now, we will be talking about this more in the next few weeks: Talking about how body identification gets in the way of your experiencing the Reality of your Being—which is that you are Mind in which all forms are being experienced. You are the infiniteness in which all of Creation Be's—I was going to say resides—but all of Creation Lives dynamically, vitally, in that infinite Mind that constitutes your Being and is the presence of God.

Now, going into the Book:

Salvation lies in the simple fact that illusions are not fearful because they are not TRUE.²

What are illusions? Illusions are definitions of things that you and other holy Sons and Daughters of God have defined arbitrarily and creatively in false ways and then have committed to agree to those meanings and definitions. Those are illusions. They are definitions applied to things that are Real and are present because God is present and presenting Himself.

Now, . . .

Salvation lies in the simple fact that illusions are not fearful because they are not TRUE. They but seem to be fearful to the extent to which you fail to recognize them for what they are, and you WILL fail to do this to the extent to which you WANT them to be true.

[Repeats] They [but] seem to be fearful to the extent to which you fail to recognize them for what they are, . . .

. . . you're failing to recognize that they are fabrications of your imagination and that they have nothing to do with what God is Being right there. That's why they seem fearful. They seem fearful because you have applied definitions to them that are inconsistent with what they Are, and therefore, I will say, their behavior, following the original impulse of the Mind which has formed them and is Being them, has not conformed to the definitions you've applied to them. And you have found yourself being injured in your relationship with them or proven foolish by them. And so they seem fearful, you need to always be on-guard to cover yourself when they don't quite behave according to the meanings and definitions of the mutual agreements of the orphans who have created them.

And . . .

... you fail to recognize them for what they are, . .

... to the extent to which you WANT them to be true.

To the extent that you want the illusions to be true, you will block the experience of what they truly are. And boy, you want your definitions of them to be true. Because to the degree that your definitions can be validated, you believe that you can end up validating yourself. And so from an ego oriented standpoint—which is the only one you have as an orphan—you need your illusions to be dependable, to be faultless if possible, so that your integrity as an orphan can be absolutely defined . . . it's very important for these illusions, the false definitions that you have created to be true.

And to the same extent you are DENYING truth, . .

. . . in other words, you are denying what that thing actually is as God is Being It as an Idea in this very moment. You're denying That.

And to the same extent you are DENYING truth, and so are making yourself unable to make the simple choice between truth and illusion; . .

. . . if there is no difference between truth and illusion, there's no awareness of choice, there's no awareness of option. And if you've created a meaning for something and in the creation of the meaning, you've even written a manual that explains how it works and what its purpose is, and you've written it very specifically and very intelligently and very logically so that no one can possibly misunderstand the perfectness of this creation of yours, it is going to be imperative that this illusion be real—that it truly is what you say it is, else you are discredited. That's what it boils down to.

And to the same extent you are DENYING truth, and so are making yourself unable to make the simple choice between truth and illusion; God and fantasy.

You see? The solution to all problems, or as it says here:

Salvation lies in . . .

. . . your capacity to distinguish between truth and illusion, so that you may make the choice for truth. It seems to be much more complicated than that. It seems as though you have to in your daily life, manipulate circumstances and people and mindsets, because they're all interlocked together in such complex ways that there can't possibly be a simple answer providing a solution to all of the problems locked in by the complexities. And yet, the complexities you have designed and developed so that you might have a creation that will give you great credit when it is proved to be incredible.

Oh-h, . . .

Remember this, . . .

. . . that the answer to all problems lies in the simple choice between truth and illusion.

Remember this, and you will have no difficulty in perceiving the decision as just what it IS, and nothing more.

. . . as a simple choice between truth and illusion, as a simple choice between being in a body, being a mind trapped even in a body, or being Mind in which all experience of form is going on, because all forms are Ideas which are perfectly tangible to the Mind that formed them. That's the simplicity of it.

The simplicity of it also, is your hesitation and your silencing of your human will and your withdrawal of your commitment to the meanings you have applied to everything and confined yourselves to, and reaching beyond them and saying, "Father, what is the truth here? What is Your perspective about this glass, and the water in it, and the light reflecting off of it? What is the more of what You're being there than what I'm seeing?" That's the way you make the choice, the simple choice between the only two choices there are: Truth and illusion. And the fact that of the two choices, one is Real and one is itself illusion, makes it even less complicated, makes it even simpler.

The core of the separation delusion . . .

. . . you know, what we've called the human experience, the orphan experience.

The core of the separation delusion lies simply in the FANTASY of destruction of love's meaning.

Now, of course, we've discussed the fact that the meaning of Love can't be taught. But you can understand that Love involves extension, Love involves giving. Here's a big clue: Your function as the Son or Daughter of God is to acknowledge what God is being, to join with Him in recognition of His Handiwork of what It truly is, what Its actual meaning is. Your function is to give acknowledgement. Your function is not to get anything. God's function is not to get anything. Getting is foreign to the divine equation of Being. It's part of the illusion.

The core of the separation delusion lies simply in the FANTASY of destruction of love's meaning. And unless love's meaning is RESTORED to you, you cannot know yourself who SHARE its meaning.

You see? Because sharing is not part of the equation of the orphan mentality, even though in your divinity you share It's meaning—that's your function.

Separation. . .

"I'd rather do it my way, Father. I'd rather see it my way. I want a divorce. I'm getting a divorce. I have divorced you. Mary and I are joined now. We're taking charge of things." [chuckling] Oh-h-h . . .

Separation is only the decision NOT to know yourself.

It's the decision to forget that you're the Son or Daughter of God and that you have an inheritance and a Birthright and that you're incapable of experiencing sin, disease and death. It's your Birthright to be free of them . . . transformed by what? Fixing up your body? No, transformed by the renewing of your mind, because it's all Mind. You see? The very statement, "transformed by the renewing of your mind," states the fact that all is Mind and that is where one must be from as one embraces the world and universe.

Separation is only the decision NOT to know yourself. Its whole thought system is a carefully contrived learning experience, designed . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . to lead AWAY from truth and into fantasy. Yet for every learning that would hurt you, God offers you correction and complete escape from ALL its consequences.

Now, again, what is this escape from? It's escape from all of the effects of special relationships—relationships entered into in which any reference to a prior connection with your Father is never spoken of, where no connection of any sort with God is allowed the slightest entrance into the orphan mindset.

Yet for every learning that would hurt you, God offers you correction and complete escape from ALL its consequences. The decision whether or not to listen to this course and follow it is but the choice between truth and illusion.

Now, you could read this as though it were referring to this course, A Course In Miracles, but it is actually referring to a course of procedure, a course of action, where you're making a decision, you're making a choice between truth and illusion.

The decision whether or not to listen to this course and follow it is but the choice between truth and illusion. For here is truth, SEPARATED from illusion, and not confused with it at all.

And I would say, and not confused with it at all, any more.

I promise you that if you will engage in this practice of asking, "What is the more of what God is Being right there in that thing, than what I'm experiencing . . . than what I'm seeing? What is the more of what it is as an Idea in the Mind of God?" . . . you are making a choice for truth and you are abandoning commitment to tininess, your limits, your experience of suffering, sin, disease and death.

As you begin to get glimpses of the Meaning the Father is embodying, that goes beyond your present sense of a thing, your present definition of a thing, the clarity you experience constitutes itself, separation from the illusion, an invalidation of the illusion, something which makes the illusion not in the least bit interesting any more and gives you greater impetus to ask with further interest about everything, "What is the more of this? What is the more of what God is being here, than what I'm seeing?"

How simple does this choice become when it is perceived as only what it is.

You see? It's just a choice between seeing what's Real, what's true and what isn't. It's not the complex choice of, "How am I going to get her to change her mind? She has her mind set. She grew up in a culture in which, if this wasn't allowed, now she's living in a culture where it is allowed. It is going to be very difficult . . ." You see? Blah, blah, blah. And you argue yourself into a complexity that I promise you is an illusion—an illusion that you deserve to be free of, an illusion which we are uncovering the path out of.

How simple does this choice become when it is perceived as only what it is. For ONLY fantasies made confusion in choosing possible, and they are totally unreal. This year is thus the time to make the easiest decision that ever confronted you, and also the ONLY one.

You know, so you're confronted with a woman who grew up in a culture that disallows for things that are allowed in this culture, and which her not taking hold of and embracing is causing her difficulty in this new culture. And you say, "This is very difficult. This is going to be impossible." Well, stop saying that! And instead say, "What is the more of what God is being right here than what I'm presently seeing?" You see? Abandon this little brain inside a body that you think is your abode, your dwelling and your identity, abandon that and ask beyond it. And then listen from beyond it.

Listen for the answer in the Mind that you Are that in which all of Creation is being experienced by you right now because you are infinite and you are the Mind in which the body is being experienced, rather than the body in which the Mind resides. Very important. But very simple, a very simple easy practice of curiosity.

You will cross the bridge into reality simply because you will recognize that God is on the other side and nothing AT ALL is here. It is impossible NOT to make the natural decision as this is realized.

Now there's a lot to contemplate here. Simple though. Not so simple that it does not deserve your consistent disciplined practice of it frequently, because you are so committed to making and maintaining your definitions in order to prove your integrity and actual independent presence. You see?

So, we will talk more about this. It's wonderful. Bring it into play all week this week. And I look forward to being with your next week.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

December 4th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're really at an important juncture in the teaching in A Course In Miracles, because you're beginning to grasp (because I'm sharing it with you) the fact that special relationships aren't between persons. That special relationships lie between the multi-leveled complex structures of definitions that have been concocted by those who are not in touch with who they Are or their Source and, as a result, are being governed by the chaos that comes from operating out of ignorance.

Why is this important?

It's important because if you're going to work on special relationships, you don't want to miss the point by working on each other. You see?

"Oh-h, let's work on our special relationship. Oh-h, let's develop a holy relationship. And we can point out to each other where the flaws are in our special relationship . . . we don't want to have a special relationship."

And you see, it seems like because there's dialogue going on and there's involvement going on between you and whoever it is you're going to work with to get rid of your special relationships, that you're doing something, when you're simply bumbling around still within the special relationship and absolutely nothing is happening to free you from it.

The reason is, you're working on the wrong thing. You see?

Many individuals have spent a number of years working on their special relationship and translating it into a holy relationship and all the time they're doing it with each other. I mean by that, that they are finessing each other, they are manipulating each other according to their best current concepts of what constitutes a holy relationship. But you see, the best current concepts of a holy relationship are still definitions or meanings that have been concocted by those who are not in touch with their Source and who are unaware of who and what they truly Are. You see?

It's time for the delay caused by working on the wrong things to be abandoned. And the way they are abandoned is by engaging in what works.

And so if you want to work on special relationships, stop letting your partner—stop letting the other or others that you are in relationships with—stop letting them be the focus of your attention. You see?

What will get you out of the effects of special relationships is to abandon what causes them. And what causes them are definitions and meanings that you have given to everything that stand opaquely in the way of your discerning what is really there covered over by the definition and meaning you've applied to it.

It's an inside job because the special relationships are a head-trip.

Now you have negative affects in your relationships with others as a result of behaving on the basis of ignorance rather than a Real connection with each other. And so it does seem as though you or the other one are causing the problems. And that's why you need to work on each other. It's very misleading.

So, if you want to work on abandoning the special relationships—I'm going to say, the uncomfortable, impractical unfulfilling relationships—you're having with others, you've got to back off from them and go within.

Now don't go within and start examining things and analyzing them, because this will still be a private process. It will not be a process in which union is occurring, or reunion is occurring. It is not the result of the two-step, where you abandon your isolation and you say, "Father what is the truth here?" or "Holy Spirit, what is the truth here? That which is nothing more than my right Mind, what is the truth here?" You see? That's when you break the isolation. That's when you abandon the arena in which all of the definitions were developed and in which agreements with others to abide by them occurred.

In that abandonment of your privacy, your separation, not from your Brothers and Sisters, but from your Source—from your Father—in that abandonment you experience the holy instant. And you're in a position where you experience the influx of the Father's Perspective, which is your true perspective.

From that new connected unified vantage point, you will relate to your Brothers and Sisters in a way that is free of the special relationship. You will relate to your Brothers and Sisters in the context of the holy relationship. But it won't be a holy relationship that is fulfilling concepts or definitions you think define a holy relationship.

The holy relationship will be the result of your Knowing the truth right in your inter-actions with your Brothers and Sisters, and in fact, with all Creation which you are in relationship with.

Now, do you realize that since this is the case, there is nothing . . . there is literally nothing that stands in the way of your Waking up. You don't have to wait for your Brother or Sister to do anything. They don't have to change. You can at any moment say, "Father, speak to me . . . Holy Spirit speak to me . . . any one of the Awakened Brothers, speak to me" and you can make the connection. You can experience the union as a living conscious experience. You see?

And your Brother won't have had to change. And you won't have had to try to change your Brother. All you will have needed to do is go within and abandon your aloneness. That brings you into the conscious experience of God's laws prevailing, of God's Perspective being the uninterrupted conscious experience you are having.

And it's like pushing the first domino in a long line of dominoes . . . and you didn't even touch a domino. You just stopped doing what held the dominoes up. You were willing to abandon your best judgments, your pet peeves, your greatest habitual fears, your personal private unique style of playing "poor me" because all orphans play "poor me."

If you're not Awake, you're playing "poor me"—one way or another. If you weren't playing "poor me," you would Wake up and find yourself experiencing the fullness of Being empowered, you might say, to exist without fear ever again . . . you see? . . . without ever feeling poor, without ever having to manipulate others by playing "poor me."

So this holy instant that we've been talking about which is the means of abandoning the special relationships, is the bottom line important topic, subject, practice—whatever you want to call it—that the Course teaches.

Let's go into the Book and I am going to back up one sentence from what I announced:

You see the world you VALUE.¹

You value playing, “poor me.” You see the world through the eyes of a “poor me.” And you play all the games that a poor orphan plays. And you play those games with gusto! And you hold others to playing those games with gusto. And you require everyone that you have special agreements with to abide by them and not violate them. And you’re constantly busy manipulating others or being afraid of them.

That’s the miserable state of existence of an orphan . . . of a “poor me” . . . of one who has forgotten who he is . . . doesn’t realize he’s part of a family, a divine family which has absolute cohesiveness—every part with every other part. All of the details, all of the miniscule awesome aspects of Creation, they constitute a family that every one of you are inseparable from.

You see the world you VALUE.

Now, do you value the truth? As we discussed last week, are you willing to abandon everything else and go for the truth because the truth means more to you than anything else? Well, not so far.

But it’s time for that shift to occur. It’s time for commitment to that to occur. It’s time for you to decide that it’s more meaningful to inquire as to what the truth is and bring your full attention to the answer to it that will be forthcoming because you are desiring it and the Father withholds nothing of what He is from His Creation.

You need to simply become willing to do that instead of anything else. It’s a simple thing. But you’re addicted to thinking fearful thoughts. You’re addicted to that which produces anxiety. You’re addicted to that which gives an emotional high while you’re unconscious. You see?

On this side of the bridge, you see the world of separate bodies, seeking to join each other in separate unions, . .

. . . in other words, “poor little separated me wants to join with poor little separated you, and us two poor little separated entities can join together in a bond that makes us one.” You see? Sounds good, but not the way I said it. But the way you perceive it and the way you approach it sounds good . . . and the promise you have imagined is there, makes it seem worthwhile going for. But . . .

On this side of the bridge, you see the world of separate bodies, seeking to join each other in separate unions, and to become one by losing . . .

. . . losing how? Losing by still not remembering who you Are and still not joining with your Source that would uncover to you your already existing wholeness and divinity that doesn't need to be arrived at through any process engaged in by "two little poor orphans."

When TWO individuals seek to become one, they are trying to DECREASE their magnitude.

How? You decrease your magnitude by magnifying your tininess: "Poor little me joining with poor little you . . . you know . . . us two poor little things are gonna make something of ourselves out of tininess . . ." But with great hope and great faith and great trust and great willingness that really amounts to willfulness to accomplish what can't be accomplished.

So, putting all that effort into making incompleteness more complete by joining it with more incompleteness is insane and useless.

When TWO individuals seek to become one, they are trying to DECREASE their magnitude. Each would deny his power, . .

. . . you see . . . the power of the Presence of God that constitutes them.

Each would deny his power, for the SEPARATE union excludes the universe.

"Poor little me over here and the big universe over there . . . poor little me over here gonna join poor little you over there . . ." You see? ". . . and we'll stand up to the whole world if we have to!" You see? No unity. It excludes the universe.

Far more is left outside than would be taken in. For God is left without, . .

. . . outside. You know? "Father, I'd rather do it my way. Father, I'd rather define things myself." So . . .

. . . God is left without and NOTHING taken in, . . .

. . . at least not yet. Littleness, trying to join with littleness and make littleness a better experience. No interest in or attempt to abandon littleness.

If ONE such union were made . . .

. . . here's the key words . . .

. . . in perfect faith, the universe WOULD enter into it. Yet the special relationship which the ego seeks does not include even one whole individual.

You see? That's why you can't work on each other. That's why the special relationship isn't between individuals. You see?

But when you hesitate and do the two-step and enter into the holy instant and desire to know the truth and it's revealed to you, your wholeness is revealed to you, the Presence of God is experienced in you as You. And you're not at all confused. You don't suddenly think, "Oh, little me is God!" No. It's like, "Oh, God is all there is of me . . . the awesomeness and allness of God, wow! . . . constitutes the wholeness of me. Man, I'm happy to defer to the awareness that God is all that is here Being all that is here . . . where I used to say, "It was just poor little me joining with poor little you . . ." You see?

Yet the special relationship which the ego seeks does not include even one whole individual. For the ego wants but PART of him, and sees ONLY this part and nothing else.

You see? What's the part of him that the ego wants to see? It's the part that has nothing to do with God. It's the part that seems to be an independent agent, fully empowered to become something on his or her own in his or her own right. You see? That's the part.

"Oh, don't talk to me about my being connected to God, don't talk about yourself being connected with God . . . don't give me any of that holy shit! That doesn't fit, that's not practical . . . that isn't going to help me become a success in the world."

You see?

. . . God is left without and NOTHING taken in, . . .

Now, we've just talked about what it's like on this side of the bridge. And you could say, that the bridge is your decision to get a divorce from the Father, or your decision to attempt to exist in your own right all by yourself. You see, that's what's being abandoned here.

Across the bridge, it is so different! For a time the body is still seen, but not exclusively, as it is seen here.

Meaning, as you see it now when you experience no union—no actual union with God—on any kind of an ongoing basis. You may have had momentary glimpses that remain with you that do not ever leave you feeling actually totally isolated as you had thought you were before the experience. And the experience will never leave you feeling unconscious of your divinity, or of the fact that God's Love embraces you unconditionally.

For a time the body is still seen, but not exclusively, . .

. . . meaning, not absolutely separated off from everything else, being unlike everything else, being itself in its own right. You see?

For a time the body is still seen, but not exclusively, as it is seen here.

When you have the experience, the insight, the revelation of the Presence of God right where you are, or right where any object is in your experience, as I said last week, God appears. It's clear to you that what's there is God in all the fullness of the Meaning that embodies and expresses God fully. And what you thought it was escapes your mind, the definitions you had given it that were so limited and which were as fearsome as the fear with which you looked at it disappears because you're having a new experience of it. You are not having an experience of it disappearing, of it vanishing, but the small minded way in which you had been experiencing it does vanish—subsumed by and fully infinitely expressive of all the wholeness and fullness of God, no matter how small it seems to be. It's whole and it's also inseparable from you. It's part of you and you are part of it because Creation is One even though it is infinite in expression.

So:

For a time the body is still seen, . .

. . . for a time you can still see what you had been defining it as. For awhile it still has an afterimage, you might say, of the overlay that you had applied to it—or that you had applied to something else. The overlay you had applied to it and perhaps the way you had felt about it will still linger as it fades. But what you're looking at with the new experience is what you had been looking at but now seen not through a glass darkly, with the scales having fallen from your eyes.

For a time the body is still seen, but not exclusively, as it is seen here.

. . . or now.

For the little spark which holds the great rays within it is ALSO visible, and this spark cannot be limited long to littleness.

The experience of God there cannot long remain without completely devaluing the definitions you had been using and applying to it. You see?

Once you have crossed the bridge, . . .

. . . once you've engaged in the holy instant, once you've said, "Father, what is the truth here? . . ."

. . . the value of the body . . .

. . . the definitions and meanings you had applied to it . . .

. . . is so diminished in your sight, that you will see no need at all to . . .

. . . what? . . .

. . . to magnify it.

. . . to make something out of it . . . to make it better, bigger, greater, more effective, stronger, a better agent for manipulation and control. You will see no need to magnify it. It simply isn't there for that reason, or those reasons, even though you had used it for those reasons.

For you will realize that the only value which the body has . . .

. . . as a separate thing, as an isolated thing amongst other isolated things, which it never has been . . .

. . . you will realize that the only value which the body has is to enable you to bring your brothers to the bridge WITH you, and to be released TOGETHER there.

Okay, what does that mean? It means that the only value the body can have . . . no, the only value the definitions of the body can have—the definitions you've made up and everyone else has made up about it—is to provide a point of connection with another at the moment when you are experiencing the holy instant, so that in that experience and the spontaneous expression of truth that you are experiencing can be communicated, so that the very thing that I'm doing right now can occur.

And the fact that there are not individuals or persons engaged in special relationships can register. And you can see that the special relationships are, as I am saying, nothing more than complex arrangements of meanings and definitions that you've made up and agreed to abide by.

That can be popped like a bubble!

And the two of you can enjoy the result of having done what works . . . abandoning the inner intent to believe in and operate according to made up definitions and meanings in favor of going into the Living moment of union with the Father, in which in that moment you are experiencing, I'm going to say, the current Perspective of the Father, the current awareness of the current divinity of all of Creation. You see? But you must be willing to get out of linear processes and let yourself into the Movement of Being in its spontaneity. You must be willing to abandon control so you can participate in the Movement of Creation in which everything that happens is a surprise.

The bridge itself . . .

. . . here's the key.

The bridge itself is nothing more than a transition in your perspective of reality.

[repeats] . . . a transition in your perspective . . .

. . . you already are the Sons and Daughters of God. You already are the incredible Presence of God. You already are divine. You already are incapable of sin, disease and death and everything that seems to accompany them.

And what you divinely Are is present at each moment as long as time seems to be in play, at each moment to be perceived as instantaneous healing, instantaneous transformation of everything you're in relationship with, whether it's what you call the body or a table or a glass or a nose or a tree. And suddenly God will appear and you'll understand what a tree Is, and you will understand what your Brother Is. And you will feel the true meaning of God right there in those things that you had poorly defined as the effect of Godlessness—the effect of the absence of God.

The bridge itself is nothing more than a transition in your perspective of reality. On this side, everything you see is grossly distorted and completely out of perspective.

You don't think it is because you think it's normal to be born, to grow up, to have problems, to experience diseases and hopefully survive them and ultimately to begin to get old and die. You don't think that's completely out of perspective because you think that's the way it is. And I'm telling you it's not. That's not the way it is. There is an alternative. There is an absolute truth that is the nonexistence of this “out of perspective vision” you’re all suffering from. And you need to stop blindly, ignorantly accepting the status-quo. That’s what the holy instant is for. It’s your means of stepping out of ignorance, truly . . . really changing, experiencing transformation. It’s that simple.

What is little and insignificant is magnified, . .

. . . on this side of the bridge . . .

. . . and what is strong and powerful cut down to littleness.

What can you expect when you’ve abandoned the infinite of your Being by saying, “Father, I want a divorce . . . I am going to become an orphan?”

Now:

In the transition . . .

. . . as you do the two-step, as you make the connection, as you experience union and your vision is transformed and what is of value to you begins to change . . .

. . . there is a period of confusion, in which a sense of actual disorientation seems to occur.

It’s important to understand because otherwise you’re likely to think that something is going wrong and you will stop saying, “Father, what is the truth here?”

But fear it not, for it means nothing more than that you have been willing to let go your hold on the distorted frame of reference which seemed to hold your world together.

The only reason you hold on to your mutually agreed upon definitions is because they were developed for the purpose of freeing yourself from chance, freeing yourself from being the victim of unwanted change. You see?

And so it . . .

. . . seemed to hold your world together.

And as you stop doing these things that give you control by saying, “Father, aside from my being in control, aside from everything I’ve been doing, aside from everything I’ve believed, what is the truth here? Not just intellectually, ‘What is the truth here?’ . . . but as an experience, ‘What is the truth here?’”

And as you abandon your control willingly and let something else in, you do feel some disorientation and insecurity.

But the question is: Do you value truth? Do you value Reality more than everything you've been experiencing? If you do you will persist. If you do you will persist.

This frame of reference . . .

. . . the one that seemed to hold your world together . . .

. . . is built around the special relationship. WITHOUT this illusion, there can BE no meaning you would still seek here.

Now:

Fear not that you will be abruptly lifted up and hurled into reality. Time is kind, and if you use it FOR reality, it will keep gentle pace with you in your transition. The urgency is only in dislodging your minds from their fixed position here. This will not leave you homeless, and without a frame of reference.

It won't!

The period of disorientation, which precedes the actual transition, is far shorter than the time it took to fix your minds so firmly on illusions. Delay will hurt you now more than before, only because you realize it IS delay, and that escape from pain is really possible.

You know, as this transition occurs it will seem to you as though the leash is getting shorter, the time between your doing something that doesn't work and the [snaps fingers] effects of it not working will seem to be quicker, shorter. You will not seem to be able to do what is impractical for a long period of time before you're brought up short.

And so, in some ways it seems unfair. And others are still being able to do stupid things and you are not. But that's because [chuckling] you're realizing at some level that the truth is available to you and that you're experiencing it and that it's more available to you than ever before because you're not resisting it as much, and therefore, it's pouring in on you.

What you truly want is actually happening.

You know what? Hang in there. Persist . . . because it's the way it works. It's the way Waking up feels and seems to be.

Now this coming week, I want you to read over what we've talked about tonight. It's not discouraging. And you need to be reminded of the simplicity of this.

You will have feelings of disorientation that don't feel simple. But when you let go of what you thought gave you balance and you let yourself lean into that which is your balance, there is going to be some fear—what you would call a lack of equilibrium. It's natural. And it's good. It's good for you to be losing the faith you have in that which never really gave you balance, as you lean into that which is your balance because of Who and What you Are.

If these things seem to be hard to look at or not particularly inspiring or as though they are in some way hard work, don't shy away from it, because you deserve to be freed from what hasn't been fulfilling you.

I love you all and I look forward to being with you next week.

The fact is that we are at a point in the teaching where giant strides can occur, where great release from false bondage can be escaped from . . . can be experienced. Let there be anticipation. Let there be expectancy. And let there be a willingness to rejoice!

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

December 18th 2010

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet.

We're not going to go into the Book tonight. And in fact, our get together will be relatively brief. But there's something I want to illuminate for everyone.

There was a sign I observed today that said: "The first gift of Christmas was a Savior." Indeed, it is appropriate, it's on the mark to recognize that I was and am, a Gift. But it's not enough to know that. You must also know that you . . . and all of you are a Gift.

And what was it about me that made me a Gift? It was the fact that I did the two-step. It was the fact that I practiced the holy instant. It was the fact that I constantly said, "Father, what is the truth here?" And that is what I gave expression to.

When I did that, God's laws prevailed—the dead were raised, the sick were healed, the lame walked, the withered were made whole.

But more than that, I did not join with everyone in their ignorance of who they were. I did not join with them in the belief that they were just an organism—a product of a physical interaction of a sperm and an egg, a fluke a nature. I did not join with them in that. I did not join in mutual agreement with their definitions. And I gave Voice to contrary perspectives. Not just contrary, not just different by design, but contrary and different because when I opened my mouth, I gave utterance to the Father's Perspective. I gave utterance to the Father's Intent in that moment, in that place, relative to myself and relative to everyone else.

As a result, God's laws prevailed—transformation occurred.

Again, the most significant teaching, the most significant learning that occurred as the result of the Gift that I was and the Gift that I gave, was that much of mankind became significantly and deeply aware of the fact that they weren't orphans, that indeed, they were the offspring of a Father, not chance, not happenstance, not evolution, but a divine God—the Governor of all, the Creator of all—and that as the Sons and Daughters of God, as the offsprings of God, their Birthright was just like mine and their Birthright was far greater than their poor concepts allowed them to believe about themselves.

And as a result, they kept themselves bound to lack, limitation, sin, disease and death.

Now, here it is what is called Christmastime. And you have the opportunity to be the Gift. You have the opportunity to practice the holy instant. You have the opportunity to engage in the two-step. But you know, although the first Gift of Christmas may have been a Savior, a secondary or by-product type of gift that seems to be associated with Christmas now, is depression.

In fact, when Christmas is discussed intellectually as a time of year and as an event, almost always depression is brought up as associated with that event.

And so what happens? Because it's incorporated into the conversation about the event of Christmas, a teaching is occurring. And those who listen, say, "Wow, I wasn't aware of that . . . gee, ever since I was little I always had fun with Christmas, but maybe it's right . . ."

And so, through insinuation and beliefs being expressed, a mutual agreement is arrived at. And people thoughtlessly agree, "Why yes, you know, now that I stop and look at everyone, I see that not everyone is so happy," and you know that people are talking about the stress of Christmas and, "Oh, black Friday shopping," the horrible shopping day in which the best deals can be gotten, but which causes depression in the midst of engaging in the act of being thoughtful and giving. You see? And slowly, in one way or another you find yourself becoming depressed at Christmas all because of a false education arising out of ignorance that amounted to a teaching that formed a mutual agreement.

Well you know what? This year, this Christmas, be disagreeable. Disagree with that. Disagree with your willingness to indulge in depression. And don't allow the idea that, "the stresses of doing good" are bound to cause you to be depressed and have a miserable holiday.” Disagree! Challenge it! Don’t embrace it! And engage immediately in the two-step.

You want to know something? Depression is never something initiated within you, by you. Depression is always the result of an invitation presented to you to agree to something. And what is it that you’re invited to agree with? Another’s declaration of his or her misery, another’s invitation to you to understand their problem.

Well, I’ll tell you something . . . the invitation to understand a problem is the stickiest wicket you could ever involve yourself with. It will never constitute part of the correction of a problem.

Now, on the other hand, I really challenge each and every one of you this Christmas holiday, this Hanukkah holiday—this celebration time of year—I challenge every one of you not to employ the invitation of understanding your problem, to someone else. If you are going to engage with any one else relative to a problem, let it be for the sole purpose of wanting to get to the correction of the problem, to get to the answer of the problem.

If you are going to be talking about a problem, let it be entirely in the context of the dawning in you of the clarity that causes the problem to become a non-problem, a practice of the two-step that constitutes a joining with your Father, with your Source, in the act of which you demonstrate who you Are and what your Birthright is. And as a result of which, clarity dawns on you that moves you into the area where God’s laws prevail—into the arena where correction, transformation, healing occurs.

Do not waste one moment of the rest of this Season trying to get others to understand your problem. The saying is, “misery loves company.” That’s just another way of saying, “mutual agreements are the modus operandi of life.” You don’t want to be involved with others in a mutual agreement as to a problem and why it’s real, and why you must feel miserable, and why you can’t possibly take any steps to alter the situation because the misery of it immobilizes you. You see?

When you feel yourself just becoming depressed, don’t just accept it! Don’t just say, “Oh, I’m getting depressed, it’s the stress of the holidays.” No! If you find yourself becoming depressed, [snaps fingers] immediately realize someone is making an invitation—you are being invited to understand a problem and commiserate with that one about it, even though there’s been no outward communication whatsoever. If you realize that it’s an invitation and not an actuality, you won’t get sucked into it, and you will find that the initial stages of depression will simply dissolve—they will leave—because you haven’t been fooled into the distraction of thinking that you're depressed because you're stressed. You see?

No. You're depressed because someone is inviting you to engage in an activity you don't want to engage in. You don't want to engage in the mutual agreement that a circumstance—a set of circumstances—are in actuality depressing and that you have no choice but to be depressed until the depression lifts. No!

So, I'm giving you a big heads-up, because you can spend the rest of these holidays not suffering from depression, when you realize that all that's happening is an invitation is extended that you cannot accept, that you can refuse to accept, that you can write on "return to sender," period, done.

Commiserating with another in a mutual agreement as to the reality of suffering does not constitute the two-step, and it does not constitute the practice of the holy instant. And it does not bring into play in you what was brought into play in me: Which was not to agree, but to disagree with the mutually agreed upon definitions, and from a connection with my Father, and you with a connection with your Father, share the truth. You see? It isn't just a matter of being disagreeable. You are disagreeing and replacing what you're disagreeing with, with the clarity of truth.

Put others in the position of practicing the holy instant.

Put others in the position of engaging in the two-step.

Don't just agree with them. Disagree and point them in the right direction, bring into play that which is healing, whether they follow through with it or not.

This is a time of gifting. You are the Gift that the Father gives constantly. Now you be that which makes a constant Gift of the Father. It's your function and it's the way you Wake up. It's the simplicity of the Christmas message. And this should be the last Christmas that any of you spends not knowing who you Are.

I love you all, and I look forward to being with you next time.

A COURSE IN MIRACLES

STUDY GROUP

WITH RAJ

January 1st 2011

THIS IS A ROUGH TRANSCRIPT.
THIS COPY IS NOT IN ITS FINAL FORM
AND WILL BE UPDATED

Good evening. And welcome to everyone who's joining us on the Internet and Happy New Year.

Has a nice ring to it doesn't it . . . Happy New Year . . . Happy New Year . . . Happy New Year.

Everybody likes thresholds: The changeover of a Millennium, the changeover of a decade, the changeover of a year. And in almost all cases, each of you brings an expectation of newness to these things. And you also bring an expectation of the breaking of boundaries, the breaking of bondages—release from that which has held you. And you're even willing to consider that the breaking of those bonds can happen by extraordinary means.

What is a shame, is that you only do that when you come upon a change-line—what I'm calling a change-line—a point that you call a threshold. And you do not energize or activate that attitude every moment of conscious awareness.

Many of you make resolutions . . . you're going to turn over a new leaf.

Well, this is good. Because it calls into play an act on your part: "I am going to do something in a new way. I resolve to . . . blah...blah...blah...blah...blah."

You're not saying, "Wow! I can't wait for something new to happen to me" and sit there passively. You bring yourself into play. And this is good.

But I'm going to ask how many of you, on any New Year that you have experienced, how many of you have said, "I resolve to let the impossible happen to me? I resolve to let that which I am confident cannot possibly happen to me, happen. I resolve not to bring any resistance to the impossible happening . . . like Waking up . . . like having a total radical healing . . . like youthing—in other words, having the experience of not just old age, but aging disappear.”

How about resolving to let go of a long-standing enemy? And not be bound any longer from your own growth by your commitment to being angry and enjoying the satisfaction of it?

It's a wonderful time. It's a wonderful attitude for all of you to be embracing at this moment. It's a wonderful attitude to never abandon.

Now, how . . . how do you effectively resolve to experience change? How do you effectively resolve to be made new?

By stepping out of the mindset you're currently using. By stepping out of the mutual agreements you have entered into with everyone else. Even the ones that say the words “Happy New Year” always have a pleasant connotation. That's a mutual definition. It's a mutual agreement. It's a tradition which simply means that it's a mutual agreement and a mutual definition of long standing . . . right?

Hey, how about “Happy New Instant? Happy New Instant, Happy New Now” now...now...now...now? How about bringing an expectation of newness constantly into play as part of your act of observing—as part of the activity of being conscious, of being alive?

And how about making commitment to letting your new Vision be supplied to you because you have said, “Father, what is the truth here? Holy Spirit, what is the truth here? That which is nothing more than my right Mind, not my deluded mind, but that which my right Mind knows is the truth?” You see?

Now, I'm going to take advantage of your belief system about New Year. And so I'm going to use this demarcation in time to provide an intent—I'm not going to call it a goal . . . an intent—an intent to embody the meaning of the statement, “Why in the hell should I wait another moment to Wake up? Why in Heaven's name should I not let Heaven in now?”

You know, for how long have you been studying A Course In Miracles? Is it just a pleasant past-time that is relatively helpful to you in your journey from birth to death? Is there nothing more to it than that? Is there not something about it that is supposed to cause Awakening and release from illusions and dreams?

Is it not about making a transition from ignorance to understanding, from confusion to clarity, from a distorted experience of Reality to the direct experience of the Kingdom of Heaven that you're having because you have allowed yourself to realize that you are indeed the Son or Daughter of God, absolutely divine and never were some poor piss-ant orphan, never were some result of a physical process that in fact, all that you had been calling physical processes were simply experiences of Reality being perceived unclearly. You see?

Everything that you're in the middle of, everything that you're experiencing is the ultimate, is the Kingdom of Heaven seen through a glass darkly, seen through confusion, seen through a reluctance on your part to let go and see what It truly Is. You see?

You have this safety valve, this gap of safety between how you experience things now and how you will experience things if you keep your resolution, if you allow something new to happen, if you allow yourself to be made new. You see? You resolve to change, you resolve to Wake up . . . "Oh, won't it be wonderful to Wake up in 2011 . . . before Christmas of 2011? Won't that be wonderful?"

But, you know, it might not happen. And so you don't have to worry about what it might involve. And after all, you have, you know, twelve months and twenty some days before you find out whether you met your expectation or not, whether the resolve was committed to and enacted. So you're safe. If you don't do it . . . nah-h, . . . no big deal. You see?

The simple fact is, as we've talked about . . . well before I say it, let me ask a question: "Why aren't you experiencing the ultimate? Why aren't you Awake? What is keeping you from seeing things as they truly Are? What is keeping you from seeing yourself as the Daughter of God and nothing else? What is keeping any of you from unfettered, unlimited good?"

It's the fact that you're fighting for the right to not have It.

Now it isn't that you're fighting for the right not to have your good, but what you're doing is fighting for the right to have your bad. You're fighting for the right to hold on to your limitation. You're saying, "This is impossible." Instead of saying, "I expect to see the impossible happen. I am curious to see the impossible happen. I am curious to see that which goes beyond my ability to comprehend, register with me in a manner I can comprehend."

But no, you say, "I can't have this and I can't have that. So-in-so's behavior is keeping me from it. So-in-so's behavior has been atrocious and it's really offended me. And I can't just let go of my offense—of my offendedness. If I did that I would certainly not show that I had any respect for myself." You see?

Oh, the crazy arguments that everyone brings up to hold onto their limits and to not see the impossible happen that would render the justice you think you would get by holding on to your limitations, so utterly irrelevant, because the fulfillment that would replace it would be so utterly meaningful and so outside of the scope of the petty small-mindedness of the orphan mindset.

You're going to find me this year, pushing for actual change. Pushing you not to settle for flowery phrases and wonderful statements of A Course In Miracles. I'm going to push for you to arrive at a point before the year is up where you're not even going to bother to pick up the Course again because its Meaning has registered with you and you have been transformed and you're now experiencing all of the Meaning embodied in that book and more.

I'm going to be pushing for you not to be satisfied with no particular change occurring but a capacity you have to somehow be half-way happy in spite of the lack of change. I'm going to push for you not to miss the point.

If Awakening is not supposed to occur then put down this book and go out and live life the best you can.

If Meaning . . . if change is supposed to occur, if transformation is the promise, then demand the transformation, demand to have the evidence and don't put it down until you do have the evidence—not evidence of your having a capacity to be in charge and make things happen, but evidence of perfection that before you lift a finger, before you think a thought, it is your Birthright to be experiencing.

You need to learn to demand to have the experience without yet having done anything to deserve it, without having earned it through some orphan act. And then when you don't have the experience yet, don't stop feeling into it. Don't stop being attentive for it. Don't give up on expecting to see this evidence of the Father's Dictum, "Behold I make all things new."

"Happy New Year—Behold I make all things new. Happy instant! Happy New Now! Now...now...now."

If you're not experiencing ultimate good right now, it's because in one way or another, you're arguing against it. And you are winning the argument. And the solution is simple! Abandon the argument. Stop reinforcing it. Stop rehearsing it in words. Stop telling everybody about your problem. Stop talking about the impossibility of the situation and how unfair it is without ever bringing into the conversation one iota of curiosity about how the problem might be solved and how it might be solved easily and quickly and how it might be solved, because at the bottom line, it just might be an illusion. It just might be the way you're perceiving things because of the bias you're applying to your line of vision.

See, it's nice to have the truth that's expressed in the Course to read and to contemplate because it does stimulate new perceptions. But when it moves you to a place where you expect what you've read to be true and to register with you in your life and it doesn't happen, you get discouraged and you give up.

You give arguments against it: "Well, I don't have what it takes. I know it's the truth. Man, the minute I picked up the book and started reading it, I knew it was the truth. There's just something in me that isn't quite getting it."

You see? And there's your argument against Happy New Now—Happy New Instant! Happy New Not ever having to wait again for my Good!" You see?

Because when you dare to believe what you're reading and you dare to go into the holy instant and you dare to abandon your privacy and you say, "Father, God or Holy Spirit, what is the truth here? What is your divine Perspective that I have been told it is my Birthright to be experiencing as mine because no other perspective was ever given to me?"

When you do that two-step and you don't hear the answer and the problem isn't resolved and in fact it seems to be getting worse, you tend to throw in the towel, you agree with all the arguments against hearing the Father's Answer—experiencing what it is your inherent Birthright to be experiencing because of what you divinely Are. And you make a big thing out of your discouragement. You blow up your discouragement bigger and bigger until it's billowing all over the place and proving to you how overwhelming it all is and how unreasonable it is under the circumstances for you to expect "Happy New Instant!" You see? "Happy New Now . . . Now . . . NOW." You see?

And here is where you must persist. Here is where you must go against the meanings that you as an orphan and all of the orphans in the orphanage have agreed upon together is a circumstance that there's no way out of, and that indeed, your sorrow and your frustration and your anger are absolutely justified and they are what should be magnified. You see? It's just a silly mutual agreement—it's nonsensical.

But, you know what? If you want to see the evidence of the Father's Will, if you want to see the evidence of everything as the Kingdom of Heaven instead of the evidence of a material world that you see, you're going to have to plough right into that experience of failure. "I'm practicing the holy instant, I'm doing everything Raj said and it's not working. And it's not working and it never has worked. And I don't . . . you know, if I stop and think about it, I really don't know very many people, even those studying the Course or even those listening to Raj . . . I don't really know very many people who have ever had the experiences Raj is talking about.

Wow, and you heap argument upon argument against the holy instant. You heap argument upon argument against letting yourself into that void where you're no longer asserting your definitions and meanings and your so-called authority, and you're inviting God's authority in so that you can find yourself in that place where God's laws prevail and nothing else does, and you experience the enlightenment you need.

"Well, I know, you know a few people who have had maybe a little taste of what Raj has talked about, but nobody's Woken up yet . . . look at Paul, he hasn't Woken up yet" . . . argument upon argument upon argument.

Happy New Year! Happy New Year! Don't let those words be hollow words.

Well, here's another threshold for you, a bigger one than New Years: It's the Second Coming! Wow, . . . millions of people look forward to that. Well, in some ways, A Course In Miracles is a part of that. It's the clarity of the Christ entering into the human picture again. And I have to say again, that it hasn't happened so that you can have pleasant words to make life more pleasant between birth and death without ever altering that illusory experience that seems to begin with birth and seems to end with death and simply constitutes, for lack of better words, a period of confusion which none of you need to be suffering from and it's time for everyone to Wake up out of . . . that's why. And yet, you may have been studying the book for twenty-five years already.

Well, let me ask you this: If I appeared . . . if the Second Coming happened and I appeared on your globe, do you think that it would be so that all of you could take another two thousand years to absorb and assimilate and wonder about, and be amazed at everything I might say and everything I might do?

No! The point would be so that the dream, the illusion of mortality and the ignorance of your divinity might cease. When? Over a long drawn out period of time? No! [snaps fingers] Instantly! This isn't a tease [points to ACIM]. And it isn't just an accommodation to the human condition. And isn't it wonderful that God has given us these inspiring teachings.

So, here we are, New Years Day with change on everyone's mind, newness, the turning over a new leaf, the becoming new, the being made new to whatever extent any of you might allow, even though the majority of you will only allow just a little bit.

Hey, what about great abundance, regardless of the economy? Can't happen? Oh, okay. But you lie. And you believe your lie. You believe the mutually-agreed-upon-definitions. Why you can't possibly experience your holy Birthright until the "gray men" are dealt with, until the great financial families who are really governing things behind the scenes somehow die off or kill each other, or a great act of God wipes them out. We lie. That's not the truth. You see?

Holiness is not circumstantial . . . wholeness is not circumstantial. Put that under your belt this New Year Day.

Your wholeness is not circumstantial.

It doesn't depend on anything else or anyone else doing or not doing anything. But in order to experience it, you've got to abandon the orphanage activities and you've got to join in the holy instant and say, "Father, what is the truth here? What is the true perspective? I am willing to give up my confidences about what everything is and how everything works in favor of letting in Your Perspective which is the truth because it is the Perspective about Creation, which You are the Source of. And I am going to stop turning to any other apparent resource to gather the facts about life." You see? That's how you stop doing what constitutes an argument against being aware of the truth. You see, it isn't so much something that you need to do, it's something that you need to stop doing. That's where the simplicity of it is.

And so I'm going to keep pointing your nose in the direction of the simplicity and I'm going to keep saying, "Are you seeing the evidence?" And if you say no, you're not seeing the evidence, and if my asking you if you are and you're saying no that you aren't makes you feel incompetent and discouraged, well just remember that's a ploy of the ego, it's a ploy of the orphan, it's part of the mutually agreed upon appropriate behavior. You see?

Oh-h-h . . . but if you look at it simply and honestly, you'll see that it's just a ploy, it's a tactic to distract you from engaging in what will actually make a difference. It is a tactic that immobilizes you and makes you uninterested in looking for the evidence, looking for "Happy New Now"! You see?

And so, you could say that you find yourself in the attitude of somebody in the nineteen fifties, you know, halfway between the change lines . . . the "Happy New Millennium," . . . you see? . . . the time when real changes can occur and when you'll allow for the changes to register with you because you're not saying that the impossible can't happen. "Oh, but in the nineteen fifties, you know, they're sort of the doldrums, you know, sort of a place of ignorance, not a whole lot of new ideas and blah...blah...blah, you know . . . well . . . yep . . . so . . .”

Don't let any part of your day be halfway between change lines. Don't let them be a place where it really is an important thing to be a dumb shit-head, to just lays around in immobility and lack of interest and play stupid.

Now, we're talking about getting out of special relationships. And special relationships are, if you'll remember, relationships you enter into with people or things when you don't know who you Are. In other words, when you, thinking you're an orphan, enter into a relationship with another or some thing absolutely confident that there's nothing more than a happenstance effect right there where you are . . . born to die and to struggle in between.

When that happens, that's called a special relationship. And you get out of special relationships, not by improving them, but by doing the one thing that will re-illuminate in your mind your awareness of what you divinely Are.

Now, continuing in the book, I'm going to back up to the beginning of the paragraph that I said we would be reading from. And it says:

Fear not that you will be abruptly lifted up and hurled into reality.¹

See? See, that's what I want to make clear with you. You come to this day, "Happy New Year" . . . but you're confident that you won't . . .

. . . be abruptly lifted up and hurled into reality.

Or abruptly hurled into whatever it is you've resolved to be. You're not afraid of that. You think that can't possibly happen. And so you're safe. But you have the right intent, correct?

Fear not that you will be abruptly lifted up and hurled into reality. Time is kind, . .

. . . New Year or not . . .

Time is kind and if you use if FOR reality, it will keep gentle pace with you in your transition.

Well, I'm saying, allow for it not to be a gentle pace. Allow for the possibility that you might possibly be able to be hurled into and abruptly lifted into Reality. You see? Because all that's happening is you're letting yourself be returned to your right Mind, you're letting the Holy Spirit register with you, which is nothing more than your right Mind, your divine Mind, your inseparability from the Father.

So although you need . . .

Fear not that you will be abruptly lifted up and hurled into reality.

Realize that it can happen as quickly as you'll allow it. And why delay? That's what I'm saying. That's the thrust or the intent that I will be sharing this year and hopefully not for very much of it because you'll get it. You see?

The urgency is only in dislodging your minds from their fixed position here.

Meaning, here in your definitions, here in your ignorance of who you Are and the definitions you have developed about who you are as an ignorant one.

This will not leave you homeless, and without a frame of reference.

Waking up and becoming free from all of the little mean-spirited small-minded rules that you've bound yourself by won't cause you to be homeless. You know what? It won't constitute going insane. It's the return of sanity. And to any degree that any of you have ever let any of that in, you have experienced groundedness that was unbelievable. And yet the groundedness was of something infinite, something huge: You, you in a much larger experience of yourself a more infinite experience that didn't cause you to feel as though you were floating around but rather more firmly anchored in invulnerability.

So:

The period of disorientation, which precedes the actual transition, is far shorter than the time it took to fix your minds so firmly on illusions.

You see? Happy New Now! Happy New Instant! You see?

The period of disorientation, which precedes the actual transition, is far shorter . . .

. . . it can be shorter than anything you're expecting. You can let it be quick. You can let it be happy, now!

Delay will hurt you now more than before, only because you realize it IS delay, . .

. . . well, does that mean that what I'm going to be pushing for this year is going to cause you to feel more hurt because I'm not going to be letting you forget that it's a delay for nothing and you'll be aware that you're delaying when you don't have to? I guess you could use it that way. But don't. I guess you could use it and your subsequent attempt to get into the holy instant and experience the transformation without experiencing it, you could use that as a means of justifying abandoning the task, because you don't want to be in that place where you're feeling totally incapable. But you're going to have to be willing to go there and stand there with the intent to be at odds with it, to not agree with it in order to move through it, in order to watch it simply give up its bluff and dissolve.

And so, you might feel during this coming year that I'm going to be pushing you into an uncomfortable place and asking you to do something that you don't feel at all like doing. But that's the way it works. And that's the way Waking up occurs. And that's the way the purpose of the Course is fulfilled. And that's the way the function of the Holy Spirit accomplishes its task of returning you to your right Mind.

Find hope and comfort, rather than despair, in this: You could no longer find even the ILLUSION of love in any special relationship here. For you are no longer wholly insane, and you would recognize the guilt of self-betrayal for what it IS.

You see? But then you say, "Okay, but I'm doing what Raj is saying and it's not working and I'm not getting anywhere and nothing is happening and everything is the way it always has been, therefore these words are about me in another time in another place and in another frame of mind."

You could no longer find even the ILLUSION of love in any special relationship here.

"Well, I seem to be and I don't seem to be able to change it, so you must be talking about when I'm Awake or something that doesn't relate to where I am right now." No, it talks about where you are right now and the fact that you must stand in that place of feeling incompetent, where it seems nothing you are doing to practice the holy instant is having any effect. And you must stand in the face of your discouragement and watch its bluff dissolve.

So it's not totally fun. But you know what? You're not ignorant of the process now. And I'm going to be behind you, in front of you, saying, "Come on . . . go on . . . this is the way."

Find hope and comfort, rather than despair, in this: You could no longer find even the ILLUSION of love in any special relationship here.

In any relationship that you're in without knowing who you Are divinely speaking.

For you are no longer wholly insane, and you would recognize the guilt of self-betrayal for what it IS.

It's like, maybe for the first time you know what the purpose of a New Year resolution is, and what a Real New Years resolution is: Practice the two-step, engage in the holy instant and stand there in the face of all that seems awful until it dissolves, because you are no longer wholly insane.

I've shared the truth with you.

Happy New Year! Happy New Now! Happy instant!

And I look forward to being with you next time.

Raj ~ January 8st 2011 Meditation:

Well, we're at a really interesting point in the Course. It's a forward step that seems to have a backward step to it, or a blessing with a cursing accompanying it.

You're all familiar with the phrase, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free,"¹ but what if the truth is going to make you free of something you don't want to let go of? You see, in a way that's a two-edged sword: It feels good and it feels bad—it blesses you and curses you.

We've talked about special relationships at some length. What is the one thing you have the most special, special relationship with?

Your thoughts . . . your thoughts . . . YOUR THOUGHTS! The ones that make you the qualified, wonderful, credible, valuable person that you are, the thoughts you've had that no one else had, the thoughts that changed the world, perhaps.

But if you had those thoughts all by yourself, you had them in an arena where you were in a state of self-defense. Because when you separated yourself from your Source, you immediately felt fear and guilt. And you immediately began to live in the middle of Reality—the Kingdom of Heaven—as though it was Something that you had to protect yourself against. And you lived as though the one that you Are, was an orphan—somebody not with a Birthright—someone without a Birthright. You see? And so everything you did was done as a defense against your lack—a defense against your incapacity. You see?

And so your thoughts did not come from a place of connectedness with truth or Reality. And they came forth, not as an expression of Love, but as an assertion of self-protection.

There's no way to have a Meaningful idea—I'm going to use the word "idea"—when you don't know who you Are and you don't know where you Are. And your life is being lived on a false basis.

Now, no matter what comes up during the day, your first inner response to it should be, "Well I don't know what this means, but I'm going to immediately listen. Not listen for my best judgments, not listen for my most creative ideas, but I'm going to listen for what the Holy Spirit would reveal to me as the simple divine truth about what is going on . . . or what the meaning of this, that or the other thing is.”

You can count on it, . . . that if you think you know the answer, if you, off the top of your head [snaps fingers] think you know the answer, you’re experiencing a special relationship with your thoughts. And you’re not in the holy instant. And you therefore, are not in that place where God’s laws prevail.

And so, no matter how wonderful the thought or idea or response is that you come up with, it’s still going to be fundamentally an act of self-defense. That’s not love. That’s not caring. That’s not communion with your fellowman. That’s an adversarial external interplay with another.

Now this is very important to understand. If you think you know what the answer is, you don’t.

But if you do the two-step, you go into the Silence. You stop assuming what the answer must be. You stop valuing what your best judgments are, based upon your fantastic experience. And you find yourself moving into a gentle peace—a quietness that isn’t full of thinking, but is full of a presence of stability that it will seem is not yours even though it is.

In this place you will find yourself Knowing what needs to be known. And you will express it from that peace. You will not express it from an egotistical, thrilling, exciting self-expression.

When you abandon your special relationship with your thoughts, you bring yourself into the “not-knowing place” that we’ve talked about quite some time ago—a place to be valued within you. It’s the quiet place of peace where the Altar is in the very center of you. And there, the Father’s Will, the truth, the conscious experience of what is Real is had by you.

Very often what you experience there won’t have anything to do with what you thought you needed to know and act upon when you were thinking for yourself, [snaps fingers] coming off the top of your head.

This is very important because you don’t want to be going down side-trips that are fruitless, seeking to accomplish what doesn’t need to be done but you thought needed to be done because of your devotion to your best thinking. That’s not how you will Wake up, that’s how you will delay Awakening.

Paul gave himself a very difficult time today. There were many things to do . . . many things to do right up to the minute the meeting tonight started.

There was no time for him to prepare by getting his mind in the right place, by getting control of things so that he wasn't interfered with.

You see, if he had had his way, he would've been able to take control of the day and have it be the way he knew (because it's a false knowing) "it needed to be" in order for him to be where he needed to be mentally to listen to me this evening. If he had been able to get control he would've changed the things that were getting in the way.

Well, he did. [chuckle] He spent a good part of the afternoon asking me how to change things, how to get others to change their expectations so that he might have a certain modicum of peace and quiet in which to ease into the evening.

But you see, I couldn't accommodate him because the answer, if he had really shut up and stopped his thinking and his devotion to his best thinking, he would have heard me say "You're trying to prepare for this evening and the only way to be prepared for the evening is to be totally unprepared. The only way to be prepared for the evening is for you to be in that place where you have no expectation upon yourself. It doesn't matter to you if anyone else has an expectation upon you. All you need to do is to know that in the peace of your Being, you will be utterly appropriate. In the peace of your Being where there's nothing to live up to, that which is meaningful will come forth."

Oh-h, but he wouldn't of had that this afternoon because that's not the way. If it had happened that way, he would have been able to take credit for something that no one should take credit for. He would've taken credit for an experience that wasn't representative of the truth.

It's a hard thing for all of you to grasp, that practicing the two-step, going into the holy instant, literally has nothing to do with being in control better than you have ever been in control before.

The only reason you ever thought you needed control was because you thought chaos was real and that your perceptions of what would correct it were themselves correct. And you attempted with strength and bravado to make things happen when that which would have corrected the chaos that you were experiencing would have been to go into the Silence—to relax, to give up trying to be in control . . . you see? . . . and do something that you couldn't possibly take any credit for: Listen for the truth, let the truth in so that it might infill you and, for lack of better words, give you a rudder, give you a direction, give you an expression to give, an intelligent one, a meaningful one, a harmonizing peace generating one. You see?

Not anyone really wants that because you value authority and control so much, because it is tied in with your sense of worth.

So, ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free and it will make you free of things you don't want to let go of.

You must know this so that you will engage in the work it takes to move past your insistence upon valuing the special relationship you have with your very excellent thoughts.

In the book:

Nothing you seek to strengthen in the special relationship is REALLY part of you.²

When you want to strengthen your ideas, when you want to strengthen your thoughts by acting them out and causing them to be a means of enforcing good in your world, you're trying to strengthen something that's not a part of you.

As I said, it's thinking that arises out of a misunderstanding of the nature of Being, which causes your thinking to be false and any actions that arise out of it to be detrimental.

Nothing you seek to strengthen in the special relationship is REALLY part of you. And you cannot keep part of the thought system which taught you it was real, and understand the Thought that REALLY knows what you are.

In other words, you're not going to be able to hold onto your dearly beloved best concepts that have so much to say about "wonderful you." You're not going to be able to hold on to them and still experience the . . .

. . .Thought that REALLY knows what you are.

That you are the holy Son of God, that you are here to bear witness of God by listening and reaching for—listening to and reaching for—God's Perspective. Because as His Son or Daughter, as His Offspring, His Perspective is what is embodied in you and that's the way you will discover what It is that's embodied in you. You will discover It by seeking It of your Father . . . of It's Source.

You HAVE allowed the Thought of your reality to enter your minds, and because you invited it, it WILL abide with you.

Now, . . .

You HAVE allowed the Thought of your reality to enter your minds, . .

. . . you could say it was sort of a sneaky trick to get you to become inquisitive about a holy instant where you could, through its practice, connect with God. Because, you know . . . literally, if you're told ahead of time that you're going to have to sacrifice who you think you are, you're going to have to sacrifice the picture you have of yourself and the behaviors that you have adopted based upon the false picture you have of yourself, so that you might learn who you really Are, which is incredibly, fantastically different from who you think you are, you would've said, "No way, I'm not going to touch that holy instant!"

In a positive way, it is the reverse of taking a first puff on a cigarette or using a drug. Because you have the experience and you're hooked. You have the experience and it's one that you really will not put down.

The minute you experience the holy instant and you experience the Father directly, you have an influx of the Father's Perspective, it's Something you will never forget and it's Something you will never let go of again completely. You may try to ignore It, but you will not be able to let It go, and It will abide with you and It will grow within you. And whether you're attending to It or not, It will sooner or later cause you to become more and more dissatisfied with "the human condition," as you call it, as you see it, as you have generated it out of the fear and guilt. It came into play when you said, "Father, I'd rather see it my way. Father I'd rather say what things are."

So, it sets you on an irrevocable path of Awakening.

Again, it sets you on an irrevocable path of Awakening—a feeling one—one that is going to cause you to be less and less content with "the human condition," with the way things seem to be, with a life between birth and death filled with sin, sickness and ultimately death. Ways that you have dealt with others will seem less satisfying.

And if you haven't actively been nurturing the practice of the holy instant or the two-step, it's going to seem like the world is against you because everything is turning to sour grapes for no reason that you know of. And yet, the reason is, you had a taste of truth. You had a glimpse of the Father's Perspective. Revelation in some form occurred. Inspiration occurred. And it won't leave you alone.

Now, Paul got arrogant this afternoon and he felt like, "Well, if nobody is going to respect him, if life itself is not going to respect his need to be in that place where he needs to be to listen to me, then he's going to be depressed, he's going to be unhappy . . ." and he caused himself to be very drowsy and felt like cancelling the meeting, [slight chuckle] like he was just too exhausted because of the demands of the week to follow through. [sigh] You see?

Now mind you, I've not talked with him about any of this before we began this evening. We did not discuss this to put him in a better frame of mind so that he could relay it to you second hand. He's learning this first-hand right now. But what does that mean? It means that at some point this afternoon, late this afternoon, he arrived at a point where the distress—the disturbance he was experiencing—was not tolerable.

And so he sat down finally and he did a meditation. He sat down and abandoned all of the thoughts that he so loved that made him feel so righteously indignant all afternoon and which, because he was practicing them, caused him to become more and more limited, more and more incapacitated, more and more unwilling to be the Presence of Love. You see?

And so in his insistence, whether he felt like it or not, whether he thought it would be the answer or not, he became still. He did the first part of the two-step. "It wasn't fair," he said. He shouldn't have had to do it. Everything and everyone should have recognized what he needed in order to have the Course In Miracles Study Group tonight in order to hear me. And it was all bullshit. Because all he needed to do to hear me was to abandon his special relationship with his great thoughts that determined that something was wrong and everything and everyone needed to change. You see?

And there's not a one of you that doesn't value your thoughts enough to become devoted to them even though the thoughts you are devoting yourself to are diminishing your Spirit, diminishing your hope, confirming your doubt, aggravating your fear, and making it perfectly clear that something is terribly wrong that you must get control of.

You hang crepe all the time in one way or another and you love the process of the negative forecast that you're absolutely confident in even though that confidence is a confidence in some thoughts that you have devoted yourself to. You see?

That's the interesting place we are in the Course—I don't mean in the book—I mean in the place in you where the Course moves you, grows you, heals you and causes you to be a new man or a new woman.

Again, . . .

You HAVE allowed the Thought of your reality to enter your minds, and because you invited it, it WILL abide with you.

And I mean, it WILL ABIDE with you. It will never ever go away again. And its Presence permeating you will, in so many words, cause your days to be uncomfortable if you're insisting upon living them as though your ideas about the day are true and you live with great devotion and love for your ideas. In other words, you magnify the special relationship you have with your ideas.

Your love for it . . .

. . . the Thought of your reality . . .

. . . will not allow you to betray yourself, and you could not enter into a relationship where it could not go with you, for you would not BE apart from it.

Now you may be able to fool yourself into thinking that, yeah, you'd like to be apart from it again and you're going to ignore it for a while and you're going to try and push it out. But I'm sorry, listen to the words:

Your love for it will not allow you to betray yourself, . .

. . . by abandoning it totally again . . .

. . . and you could not enter into a relationship where it could not go with you, for you would not BE apart from it.

You see? You had that first drag on a cigarette. Nobody's going to like that example but I've got to use it because it means something. You can relate to it. You can relate to having a single experience that addicts you to it. And the experience of truth, when you let it in, is like that. It will not leave you and it will not leave you where it found you. It will move you forward. And in effect, it will force you to abandon what you have wanted to hold onto. In other words, the truth . . . you shall know the truth—have the experience of it—and the truth will make you free, whether you want to be free of it or not. You see?

So, . . .

Be glad you have escaped the mockery of salvation which the ego offered you, . .

. . . you know . . . through all your special relationships, with your own great ideas . . .

. . . and look not back with longing on the travesty it made of your relationships. Now no one need suffer, for you have come too far to yield to the illusion of the beauty and holiness of guilt.

Guilt has been used by everyone to make a better self out of you than you have been before and to honor the better self that you've made. But you're not going to be able to continue to do that successfully without increasing difficulty. That's the wonder of healing. It heals! The Revelation of Truth, the experience of truth heals! It changes you! And if it weren't for your devotion to your special relationships you would embrace it whole-heartedly without resistance. And the fact is, that the growth of truth in you will successfully move you to the place where you do abandon what no longer serves you. That's just the way it works.

Only the wholly insane could look on death and suffering, sickness and despair, and see it thus . . .

. . . as beauty and holiness.
