Out & About

There are still many events to keep all of you antiquers busy. Please let our advertisers know where you saw their ad, this way it let's them know their advertising dollar is working for them. Advertisers, remember with the holidays around the corner and everyone getting busy, get your ads in to us early. This gives our readers time to plan, so they can attend as many shows, sales, shops, malls and auctions as they can. Halloween is just around the corner, so get to the store for those bags of candy.

Mekenzy said it snowed in Bemidji, Minnesota, it didn't stick to the ground though. She has been busy with her committees and teaching Learn to Skate again. She is excited that Tia will be visiting in a couple of weeks. Todd and I spent the day with Tia for Homecoming. Her science building was celebrating 50 Years. So, some of the students were giving demonstrations and presentations. Tia was doing a presentation on her research. We then went to lunch in the tent next to the football field. They served brats, hotdogs, hamburgers, pasta salad, chips, beans and cookies. We talked and then watched the football game together. She had to leave a little early to meet with some school donors. Her professors and the board have her meeting with the school donors because she is so spirited about the school and can talk about the school in depth, as she has taken the time to learn the history of all the buildings and such. She is also a Dean's List student. Brandon has been working the oil change lane and getting his hands dirty so to speak, he enjoys it. He had homecoming this last weekend, along with Tia. He went to the game but wasn't much for the dance. The kids opted to have a bon fire at the farm, they talked a lot.

When Out and About this weekend, be sure to check out:

Columbus Antique Mall is having Customer Appreciation week Now thru Sunday, October 7th. Located at 239 Whitney Street in Columbus, Wisconsin. See their ad in this weeks issue of Auction Action Antique News.

The National Museum of Cambridge Glass

On April 3, 2002, the National Cambridge Collectors, Inc. proudly opened a premier glass museum in downtown Cambridge, Ohio. It houses a superb collection of Cambridge glassware produced by The Cambridge Glass Company from 1902 to 1958.

The museum is located at 136 South Ninth Street, one block south of the main street of Cambridge, and is open April through October with hours of operation shown at the bottom of this page.

At right, you can view an interview conducted with Cindy Arent, one of our NCC Board Members who is the chairperson of the Museum Committee. Click on the arrow to start it. Here is a chance to hear first-hand about our world-class museum. If you'd like to see it a little larger, click on the picture while it is showing and you will be taken to the YouTube page where it is presented in a larger size.

The year 2002 marked the 100th anniversary of the making of the first piece of Cambridge Glass (the Big X pitcher, shown below and to the right). The Museum Grand Opening celebration took during NCC Convention week on June 27, 2002. We're easy to find - here's a map of the Cambridge area.
Museum Contents

Big X Pitcher The museum features over 6,000 pieces of glassware made by the Cambridge Glass Company, with an interpretive area demonstrating how glass was made from gathering, shaping, etching, and engraving.

The Sample Room features the door and shelving from the original factory, and a dining room display features a table setting arranged on period furniture much as it would have appeared in the early 1900s.

Guests can do their own rubbings from original etching plates in the Education Center, and view a movie made in the 1940s by the Cambridge Glass Company.

Pieces of Cambridge Glass and jewelry made from Cambridge Glass are available for sale in the gift shop, along with books and other items throughout the museum.

The National Association Of Milk Bottle Collectors, Inc.

The National Association of Milk Bottle Collectors is incorporated as a 501 "not for profit" organization whose purpose is the research and dissemination of information in the furtherance of the international hobby of milk bottle collecting. The study and documentation of the history of the fluid milk industry is a defined goal.

LIST OF BENEFITS/CLUB ACTIVITIES:

The Milk Route a newsletter published monthly since October 1980, is the official publication of the National Association of Milk Bottle Collectors. It contains a wide variety of articles, dairy histories, illustrations, members classified ads, mystery bottles and show calendar.

An Annual Convention held in Hershey, Pennsylvania provides an opportunity for members to buy, sell and display bottles and related memorabilia. A general meeting, program, auction and banquet play a part in the convention.

Educational and Service Activities - A nationally recognized slide/video presentation, illustrating the development and variety of milk bottles and go-withs, is available to members. A membership directory is included as part of the membership fee.

MEMBERSHIP INFORMATION:

Dues: $20.00 per year for an individual, Canadian funds: $22.00, Overseas (Air Mail): $25.00. This includes a subscription to the The Milk Route and membership directory. Two year memberships accepted.

APPRAISING: THE KEY TO FAIR DIVORCE SETTLEMENTS

by David Federman

Has a once-married friend ever told you they got a raw deal in their divorce settlement? At the time, you probably chalked off their sour feelings to “sour grapes.” But now that you are about to become, or thinking of becoming, an ex-spouse, do you suddenly fear the same fate? This time, you know the fear isn't just based on emotions; it's based on economics, too. What do you do to get a fair, rather than a raw, deal in your divorce settlement?

Start by finding a good lawyer--but then take one extra giant step. For those who are parting ways to ensure an equitable division of marital property, find a professional appraiser. They are the key to fair divorce settlements.

Given the importance of a professionally prepared divorce settlement appraisal, you would think there would be an abundance of professional appraisers and that it would be easy to find one. Think again. The average person's chances of obtaining such a report are almost as slim as their chances of winning the lottery.

Worse, there is even less trustworthy information available about divorce-settlement appraisals. Take it from me. I've been writing about personal property appraising since 1982 when I wrote “The Seven Deadly Sins of Personal Property Appraising.” Needless to say, the article stirred up a hornet's nest. Nevertheless, the information vacuum persisted. In 1993, I finally took matters into my own hands and wrote a book on the subject. Twenty-two years later, my book is long out of print and consumers are as much in the dark as before about the true nature of appraisals and appraisers.

It's time to shed some light on the subject. But be warned, it's a harsh light.

PERSONAL PROPERTY APPRAISING: A PRETENSE NOT A PROFESSION

Here's the lowdown about the scandalously high number of raw-deal divorce settlements: Personal property appraising is an unregulated profession. Indeed, it isn't even a profession. How could it be when anyone has the right to call themselves a personal property appraiser? You heard right. With little or no training and experience, any person can hang out a shingle as a personal property appraiser.

This isn't the case with real estate appraisers. In the domain of buildings valuation, a person must be educated and tested--just like an attorney or a doctor. In the field of real estate, there is no excuse allowed for the lack of formal, rigorous appraisal training. To lack such an education would be the equivalent of letting someone who drives an ambulance or is versed in first aid call themselves a doctor.

Alas, personal property appraising is another matter. Believe it or not, banks and mortgage companies that wouldn't dare allow an uncertified appraiser to put a value on a house will allow untrained hacks to put “values” on personal property accepted as backing for loans. If I told you how many banks are sitting on worthless collateral because they accepted incompetent and inflated personal property appraisals by no-nothing appraisers, you would be horrified. Yet financial institutions do nothing to correct the situation. Don't ask me why. I've been puzzling over this paradox for decades.

Meanwhile, personal property appraisers who feel under no obligation to seek training and testing by professional schools and associations, parade a number of meaningless credentials in front of clients seeking some basis for trusting their abilities and hiring them. Don't laugh, but I have seen resumes for divorce-settlement appraisers that listed everything from Fine Arts degrees to membership in the 4-H Club as proof of skill and accreditation. Just citing such irrelevancies shows profound ignorance about professional appraising by those who use them. This is like having a tattoo artist say he is a doctor because he is versed in needle use.

If you learn nothing else from this article, learn this: experience buying and selling the kinds of property one appraises does not make that person an appraiser. Often people in the tumultuous throes of a divorce will seek out auctioneers to appraise their marital property. They figure that no one will know the worth of their belongings better than someone who regularly sells items like it. This assumption is wrong and potentially ruinous.

Unfortunately, the belief that experience liquidating marital property makes one an appraiser is encouraged by auctioneers who believe their experience qualifies them to write divorce-settlement appraisals. It doesn't. Auctions are only one type of market for the disposal of martial property. There are many others and an appraiser must be aware of them in order to determine correct value. That's why calculating correct appraisal values for personal property takes as much training as it does for valuing real estate.

In short, being an auctioneer doesn't make one an appraiser.

AN OUNCE OF PREVENTION IS WORTH A POUND OF CURE

Many men and women cheated out of a fair divorce settlement by an unfair appraisal think they can take their grievances to court and get a more just settlement. And, in theory, there is always a second chance for fair play. However, it's a poor one. The fact is, it is hard to contest an appraisal once it has been completed. Worse, it is hard to realize that one has been the victim of appraiser incompetence and suffered financial harm due to them. You'll need to find an expert who can challenge and shred the content of a poor appraisal-as well as impeach the appraiser's abilities and credentials.

No, a good offense is your best defense against a raw-deal appraisal. So find the expert before the divorce is final--not after. A professional appraisal assures a fair shake the first time around. So the job of the ex-spouse is to find the right person right off the bat. That isn't as hard as it sounds--but only if you seek an appraiser with the same care and caution you would a surgeon. With a surgeon, your physical well-being is at stake; with a surgeon, your fiscal well-being is just as much at stake..

Whether you are selecting the appraiser or your attorney is recommending one to you, begin your search by asking for the appraiser's professional profile. As I said before, scrutinize closely every credential. Make sure they have direct bearing on appraising.

Once you examine a resume, and are satisfied with the appraiser's qualifications, don't take the appraiser's word for them. Vet the candidate by calling the associations to which they say they belong and verifying their membership and any titles conferred by the group. If the appraiser says he has a degree or diploma or has completed courses, check these claims, also.

SOME APPRAISAL BASICS

Put simply, appraising is putting a value on something. But the process of valuation is hardly simple. It is complex, determined by the needs of the client. The appraiser's value-conclusions will vary according to those needs. In this case, you are seeking a divorce-settlement appraisal. However, definitions of value differ from state to state. Indeed, every major component of the divorce-settlement appraisal, including the effective date, is regulated by law. Those laws vary by locality.

So never forget this: Appraisals are legal documents that must comply with laws governing their preparation.

Most appraisers lack the mandatory legal knowledge and training to write divorce-settlement appraisals that adhere to prevailing law. It goes without staying that their ignorance can cost their clients dearly. Let's review the steps of professional appraisal preparation.

STEP 1: EVALUATION. Before one can assign a value to a piece of property, they must be able to fully and accurately identify it. This first phase of an appraisal is called “evaluation.” If it is botched, determining the property's correct worth will be botched.

STEP 2: VALUATION. After “evaluation” comes “valuation,” assigning a dollar-worth to the property that fulfills the client's needs. This requires training in valuation methodology. That training can only come in a classroom where accepted procedures and standardized techniques are taught.

Untrained appraisers usually treat value as an arbitrary or hypothetical concept. Often they will give seat-of-the-pants estimates of value based on their personal experience buying and selling. But value is far more concrete and composite, as well as factual and fluid. That's because it is a function of market activity requiring research of transacted prices for identical or comparable items. Value is based on knowledgeable sampling of markets not best-guess hunches about them. An appraisal offers a reasoned, researched opinion of value as of a given date (specified by law), supported by facts gathered in the appropriate marketplace.

In short, appraising is an academic research and computation discipline requiring academic training. That makes it a profession, like accounting, where performance is taught and tested.

PICKING AN APPRAISER: RULES OF THE ROAD

With so much riding on the appraiser's expertise and qualifications, you must conduct a job search for an appraiser. Start by requesting and thoroughly examining a written professional profile or resume of any job candidate. That means making sure it gives a verifiable history of the appraiser's education and experience.

Many so-called professional profiles are designed to bamboozle and deceive. So watch out for an “alphabet soup” of titles, designations and affiliations. Find out what they mean and how they were earned. Many designations have absolutely nothing to do with appraising. Even college degrees are very often irrelevant to personal property appraising. The sad fact is this: few colleges in America have degree programs in personal property appraising. So while college degrees may be evidence of general intelligence, most are worthless as appraising credentials. The same usually goes for certificates that prove attendance at seminars and conferences--unless they relate directly to personal property appraising. Even then, these hardly prove in-depth training or eligibility to appraise property.

BEWARE OF QUACKS

Your search for a bona fide personal property appraiser may lead you to meetings with quacks. Quacks are good at impressing prospective clients with supposed bona fides. Indeed, they would be insulted if you called them fakes or phonies. A case in point: Patriot Paul Revere was arguably the best silversmith of his time. But when business was bad, he doubled as a dentist, filling teeth with the silver he used to make bowls.

Now ask yourself: Would you want your cavities filled by a silversmith? Of course not.

Well, neither would you want your marital property appraised by someone with no formal training valuing in it.

THE MYTH OF EXPERIENCE

Time may heal all wounds but it doesn't necessarily heal all heels. Most appraisal quacks have been plying their trade for decades and use years on the job as sole, or primary, proof of expertise. But doing something the wrong way for 25 years doesn't make it the right way. Your job is to find out if the appraiser has been practicing the right or wrong way.

Many quack appraisers believe that experience alone makes them appraisers. As I said before, these tradesmen they will cite long experience buying and selling goods from marital estates as proof of appraisal competence. It isn't.

Appraising is vastly different from putting a price tag on or frequently buying goods at an auction or a liquidation sale. Don't get sidetracked by false qualifications. Question each appraiser about their aptitude and skill as appraisers. Don't allow yourself to be fooled into believing experience in sales of property is the same, or good, as appraising it. It isn't.

When interviewing an appraiser, keep in mind that the quack is often a smooth talker who throws the prospective client off guard by using professional-sounding, but irrelevant, jargon. For example, beware talk about federal IRS definitions of “fair market value” in connection with divorce-settlement appraisals. Many ignorant appraisers use a one-definition-fits-all approach to fair market value. In actuality, the IRS has three definitions. Ironically, none of them are valid for divorce-settlement appraisals since divorces are handled on the state and not on the federal level.

THE LITTLE MISTAKES THAT LEAD TO BIG LOSSES

Ignorance of the law leads appraisers to make many procedural and technical errors that invalidate their reports in the eyes of the law. Something as seemingly inconsequential as an “effective date” (the date as of which the value conclusions apply) can cost an appraisal its legitimacy. Believe it or not, “effective dates” vary with the type of assignment. For an insurance casualty loss, it is the date of loss; for estate tax it's the date of death. And for a dissolution of marriage appraisal, there are 5 “effective dates” to choose from--none of them the commonly-used date of preparing the report.

As you can see, an appraiser is a kind of paralegal. Indeed, in France, where appraisals are considered binding legal documents, appraisers must take state examinations and be certified to practice their trade. American lawmakers are far more short-sightedness about the importance of appraisals than their French counterparts. Consequently, you, the client, must give appraisers the far-sighted examination they too often fail to receive. Your future and fortunes depend on it.

About the author: David Federman is a business journalist who has written extensively about personal property appraising. His book, “The Professional's Guide to Jewelry Insurance Appraising,” published in 1993 by Vance Publishing Corp., was the first of its kind.

The American Bar Lip Decanter- Form and Function

By Bill Morrison

The cultural history of material objects can reflect events and industrial processes in unexpected and interesting ways. They were often created to cater to specific social trends or phenomena, became part of the fabric of everyday life, but then disappeared almost as quickly as they appeared, to be replaced in turn by improved versions and styles.

The bar lip decanter is one such object, and its history offers a fascinating glimpse of the social and economic development of America's first 100 years, as well as the evolution of glass manufacturing in this country. It appears that the bar lip decanter was an exclusively American form. While catalog illustrations confirm that they were manufactured elsewhere, foreign-made examples appear to have been specifically made for export to the US, as bar lip decanters do not appear to have been used elsewhere in the world.

The 1830s witnessed radical changes in the interior design of bars and saloons. The traditional layout had placed the keeper "behind bars," in a caged area with an opening to the taproom, to protect him and his inventory from unruly customers. However, as bars became more open, the ironwork disappeared and shelves were fitted to a wall behind the tender's back for displaying his range of liquors.

Bars and saloons continued to store large quantities of liquor in barrels, but a means was required to house liquor at the counter in a manner that helped project a suitably refined image. Pottery stoneware jugs were old fashioned and suffered practical disadvantages.

By 1845 new-style city bars had begun to resemble their modern descendants, fitted with elegant trappings and comfortable furniture, intended to attract more discerning customers than old-fashioned saloons.

Newspapers began to describe some as "drinking palaces," with long rows of decanters behind the bar. On the other hand, sleazy bars and saloons were referred to as "barrel shops" because they still poured directly from barrels, not decanters.

With most liquor during the period remaining colorless, sophisticated establishments would have required decanters of differing shapes, sizes and designs to assist the bar tender in identifying specific brands. Blown molded and engraved bar lip decanters first appeared between 1830-1840 to meet this specific need.

By the late 1850s the blown decanters were being replaced by pressed versions in numerous patterns and sizes.

The bar lip decanter enjoyed a heyday spanning just 45 years, between circa 1830-75, during which decanters in countless patterns, shapes and sizes, were being manufactured by dozens of American glass houses. Two factors, one technical, one sociological, combined to cause its ultimate demise.

The first technological advance was the development of lime-based glass, which was around sixty-percent cheaper to produce than lead-based equivalents. The increased workability of lime glass allowed more efficient manufacturing methods and encouraged the introduction of cheap, labeled bottles.

The associated cultural change was rapid "nationalization" of American drinking preferences. Soldiers who had traveled the country during the Civil War returned home having newly acquired tastes for particular brands that had previously been unknown in their hometown or state. The smoother and more flavorful liquors developed by some distillers, notably in the south and east, proved particularly popular. Early Times (1860) and Jack Daniels (1866) are only two of several brands established at the time of the civil war and reconstruction. Bar owners were quick to recognize the commercial potential that "added value" brands brought to their business, and the explosive expansion of the railroads provided the routes of national distribution.

Advances in bottle-making technology encouraged the manufacture and the distribution of new "branded bottles" embossed with the type of the liquor, or branded and decorated with logos identified with specific brands. The first "bar bottles" appeared in the McKee catalog of 1871, and within four years bar lip decanters had all but disappeared from glass catalogs.

Bitters-sized decanters survived longer as they were adapted for use as sauce bottles, with examples illustrated in catalogs into the early part of the 20th century.
