

To wear a golf glove or not?

FootJoy offers new WeatherSof durability

Golfers of all skill levels have asked the question “should I wear a glove or not?” While wearing a golf glove is not a requirement, it is highly recommended.

There are some pro players – Fred Couples and Lucas Glover, for example – who do not wear gloves. They are very rare, however, and golf pros will always recommend the use of a glove.

The reason is that the human hand simply isn't as tacky as the material used in golf gloves. Especially when sweating or when grips are wet. A golf glove will provide a more secure grip.

The FootJoy Men's WeatherSof Golf Glove, worn by top professional Henrik Stenson, Adam Scott, Zach Johnson, Hunter Mahan, Marc Leishman and others, offers golfers an advanced synthetic glove with a long-lasting difference.

A soft cabretta leather palm patch and thumb offer a soft feel and added durability in key stress areas, and breathable elasticized PowerNet mesh creates cool comfort while improving fit and flexibility.

FiberSof microfiber along the fingers blends seamlessly to offer extraordinary fit, while the three-directional tab elastic closure ensures improved palm fit and comfort.

The glove is very soft and you don't even notice you're wearing one. Gives the club a great feel in your hands with no slipping. And for those that don't use a coin to mark your ball, the WeatherSof has a neat little ball marker built in.

If you're a no-glove golfer, stay with what feels nature to you. However, if you are looking for a glove the new FootJoy WeatherSof golf glove provides the consistent feel and long-lasting durability you may be looking for. Try it out. Experience the soft feel and revolutionary performance of the Footjoy weather soft gloves.